The PENGUIN companion to American literature; ed. by Malcolm Bradbury, Eric Mottram and Jean Franco [Eng title: The Penguin companion to literature: USA]. 381p $9.95 McGraw

810.9 American literature—History and criticism
SBN 07-049277-8 LC 70-158062

The editors have attempted to provide "a broad coverage of the most important names in American writing from the early period of settlement through to the immediate present, including figures of historical as well as directly literary interest [with] emphasis on . . . writers of the century and . . . of the immediate present. . . . [There are also some] subject entries designed to suggest important features of American literary thought and experience [and] important publications."

The Latin American section . . . is intended for the general reader who may have little or no previous knowledge of the continent. . . . The section concentrates [mainly] on writers of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries [with] short entries which refer to indigenous literatures in Maya, Náhuatl and Quechua and there are also biographical entries which cover representative writers of the colonial period." (Editorial forewords) Bibliographies.

Am Lit 44:183 Mr '72 40w

"[This book] must be one of the few reference tomes that include enlightening editorial judgment along with carefully classified information. And the 'Penguin' manages to touch an occasional light note too. Its editors have delved back into colonial days, reached forward to the '70's, and dealt with the years in between in a competent dictionary form. . . . Its scholarly contributors come from both sides of the Atlantic."

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 28 '71 90w

Economist 242:51 Ja 15 '72 170w

"A solid reference work having a definite place in libraries of all sizes and types. Arrangement is alphabetical, the focus almost wholly on critical biographies which frequently include plot outlines. Subject and title entries are few but well chosen; there are no entries for fictional characters. The well-written biographical narratives vary in length, with major figures receiving more extended treatment. Although authors of less stature are presented more concisely, their number is impressive. Each entry is followed by a bibliography of best editions, translations where available, and selected biographies and critical studies. Recommended readings conclude each volume." C. R. Andrews

Library J 97:2077 Je 1 '72 40w

"The central defect [of this volume is that] with the exception of a few figures like Wright, Ellison, Baldwin, black authors are lumped together into a section entitled 'Negro Literature.' . . . Others are badly treated, too: Why 24 lines on John Cage and nothing on Virgil Thomson. . . . On the positive side: a large number of contemporary poets are given shelter, and the short bibliographies and recommended reading summaries are helpful."

Richard Plant

N Y Times Bk R p31 N 5 '72 250w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon

Sat R 54:47 D 4 '71 60w

The PENGUIN companion to classical, Oriental & African literature; ed. by D. M. Lang and D. R. Dudley. 359p $9.95 McGraw

809 Classical literature—History and criticism. Oriental literature—History and criticism. African literature—History and criticism

SBN 07-049282-4 LC 78-158064

This work covers Greek literature from Homer to the fall of Constantinople in 1453. Latin authors are included up to around A.D. 476. The Oriental and African sections seek to provide a "Who's Who" of the most significant writers of Asia and Africa, from ancient times to the present day. . . . Where no outstanding authors occur, short surveys of certain lesser known national literatures have been [included]. . . . Many famous Eastern epics and ethical classics are anonymous, and these, will be found under their respective titles." (Editorial foreword) Bibliographies.

"One learns far more about the achievements of modern African writers from this series than from any African reference book, but in a few cases one does not learn, for example, that they are already dead. The African entries appear, perhaps understandably, to be the most out of date."

Economist 242:51 Ja 15 '72 170w

"A solid reference work having a definite place in libraries of all sizes and types. Arrangement is alphabetical, the focus almost wholly on critical biographies which frequently include plot outlines. Subject and title entries are few but well chosen. . . . The well-written biographical narratives vary in length, with major figures receiving more extended treatment. Although authors of lesser stature are presented more concisely, their number is impressive. Each entry is followed by a bibliography of best editions, translations where available, and selected biographies and critical studies. Recommended readings conclude the volume. . . . In addition to figures of the classical period, Byzantine writers are covered. . . . Such information can be difficult to locate in smaller collections. The 139

remaining pages are devoted to Oriental and African biographies, much in demand today." C. R. Andrews

Library J 97:2077 Je 1 '72 40w

"The Greek titles are given in English, the Latin ones are left as such. . . . The discussions of epic poetry and drama can not be faulted. . . . Altogether, Penguin doesn't do badly in Greece and Rome. When it comes to the Orient, [there is] . . . one basic fault: It excludes too many things. . . . The chief Chinese poets are presented, as are several Turkish and some modern Indian poets. The volume has an inexplicably large coverage of some abstruse literatures such as Minangkabau and some Sumatra writings. This, I would think, reflects a certain British bias. . . . However, there do not seem to be any glaring errors." Richard Plant

N Y Times Bk R p31 N 5 '72 250w

"The general excellence of the writing in [the] Classical section seems to bear out Evelyn Waugh's remark that learning Latin at school, even if most of it is forgotten afterwards, has a bracing effect on one's prose. . . . The short Byzantine section is interesting mainly in creating awareness of its role. The same might be said of the Asian section, apart from the treatment of China and Japan. . . . The fascination for most readers, of this, as of the Byzantine and African sections, will be that of exploring a terra incognita."

TLS p780 J1 7 '72 750w

The PENGUIN companion to English literature [Eng title: The Penguin companion to literature: Britain and The Commonwealth]. 576p $10.95 McGraw

820.9 English literature—History and criticism
SBN 07-049275-1 LC 77-158061

This volume includes in one alphabet biographies of writers in any language within the British Isles, others using English in Commonwealth countries, and representatives from French Canada in an alphabetically arranged compilation of biographies. The entries include descriptions of pertinent literary and social movements and groups. Bibliography.

"Entries, by a catholic collection of specialists (with a fair preponderance of Sussex dons) are limited, almost entirely, to authors, which means that they are usually long enough to rise well above the hagiographical blandness of reference prose. . . . Since literature has mushroomed, the general rule appears to be that non-fiction writers have a better chance of inclusion if they lived before 1800: Hume succeeds but not Wittgenstein, Hobbes but not Marx. . . . [The] book comes well up to the end of the 1960s. The choice of modern authors is good."

Economist 242:51 Ja 15 '72 170w

"A solid reference work having a definite place in libraries of all sizes and types. . . . The focus [is] almost wholly on critical biographies which frequently include plot outlines. Subject and title entries are few but well chosen; there are no entries for fictional characters. The well-written biographical narratives vary in length, with major figures receiving more extended treatment. Although authors of lesser stature are presented more concisely, their number is impressive. Each entry is followed by a bibliography of best editions, translations where available, and selected biographies and critical studies. Recommended readings conclude each volume." C. R. Andrews

Library J 97:2077 Je 1 '72 40w

"Although listings on authors are useful, the notations on schools, genres, movements are thin. Inconsistencies occur. Graveyard School, 'Spasmodic School' are there, but no 'Romantic Movement,' no 'Metaphysical Poetry.' . . . The Penguin does list many minor British and Commonwealth writers, even minor minors, and is therefore nice to have around." Richard Plant

N Y Times Bk R p31 N 5 '72 250w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 54:47 D 4 '71 90w

"[Professor Daiches] has opted for unduly tolerant comprehensiveness rather than unduly rigorous selectivity. His foreword is a model of good sense and modesty. . . . But, regretfully, this first and, to British readers, most important volume in this series is not what it might have been. Above all else, a reference book should be accurate, and the number of errors of fact . . . is alarmingly high. Some are minute—wrong dates, misspellings of names, and so on. Others are much more serious, and suggest that some contributors have simply failed to do their homework. . . . Plain errors of fact . . . can be put right in a later edition (though, meanwhile, how reliable a handbook is this for the undergraduates or sixth formers who may buy the paperback?)"

TLS p780 J1 7 '72 750w

The PENGUIN companion to European literature; ed. by Anthony Thorlby. 907p $11.95 McGraw

809 European literature—History and criticism
SBN 07-049280-8 LC 74-158063

This book is meant to provide answers to such "questions about European literature since the fifth century A.D. [as] Which are the more important European authors? Which are their main works? What . . . are these about? What editions and translations are available? What critical commentaries are to be recommended?" (Editorial foreword) Guide to entries by language and country.

Economist 242:51 Ja 15 '72 170w

"A solid reference work having a definite place in libraries of all sizes and types. Arrangement is alphabetical, the focus almost wholly on critical biographies which frequently include plot outlines. Subject and title entries are few but well chosen; there are no entries for fictional characters. The well-written biographical narratives vary in length, with major figures receiving more extended treatment. Although authors of lesser stature are presented more concisely, their number is impressive. . . . The preponderance of contributors, whose initials follow each entry, are British scholars." C. R. Andrews

Library J 97:2077 Je 1 '72 40w

"While often too British and occasionally somewhat arbitrary, the Penguin is a good companion to European literature. My main complaint: no system in translating titles. One has to guess which one is Lorca's 'Blood Wedding,' while all of Kafka's listed stories are given in both German and English. . . . Why notes for expressionism but none for impressionism, naturalism, or the picaresque novel? . . . [However] you can look up Croatia and Iceland, Old Bulgarian and Medieval Dutch and Polish legends. I liked this European pharmacopeia which, with its three companions, fits in a box on a modest bookshelf. A good box to have around before you really get involved."

Richard Plant

N Y Times Bk R p31 N 5 '72 250w

"Probably the three European writers most widely read and loved in England are Chekhov, Tolstoy, and Dostoevsky. The articles on all three are fine pieces of biographical and critical compression. Cavafy (Kavafis) hasn't a large following in this country, but he has what might be called a special popularity. The entry on him is excellently compact with a very good short bibliography. . . . [The volume will] find its . . . audience among the kind of English reader who has an imperfect knowledge of a number of European languages, and a fairly wide knowledge of European literature in translation."

TLS p780 J1 7 '72 750w

The PENGUIN companion to world literature. See The Penguin companion to American literature

The PENGUIN companion to world literature. See The Penguin companion to classical, Oriental & African literature

The PENGUIN companion to world literature. See The Penguin companion to English literature

The PENGUIN companion to world literature. See The Penguin companion to European literature

PENNAR, JAAN. Modernization and diversity in Soviet education; with special reference to nationality groups [by] Jaan Pennar, Ivan I. Bakalo [and] George Z. F. Bereday. 395p $20 Praeger

370.947 Education—Russia
LC 70-105285

"This book traces the development of Soviet education since the end of the Czarist regime, particularly in regard to its contribution to modernization and to the assimilation of the many ethnic groups in the federation. The authors discuss general, specialized, and higher education; fiscal support of the schools; the training and position of teachers; and Communist concerns in the education of the young. They examine the educational programs of the ethnic areas (Russia, the Ukraine, the Baltic countries, and the Caucasian, Central Asian, and Moldavian republics) and devote a chapter to the educational position of the Jew in Russia today." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by J. J. Schwartz
Am Pol Sci R 66:665 Je '72 450w

"The text is flooded with figures in addition to 102 tables—nearly all drawn without critical scrutiny from Soviet publications. . . . The authors . . . find significant variations among the republics, with the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic usually leading. Instruction in local languages has been customary . . . but Russian retains many career advantages. Rural schools . . . are of lower quality than urban ones, and attempts at preferential admissions for children of proletarians have not been too successful. . . . The authors conclude . . . Soviet education today . . . is in its obsolescence as well as in its modernity a typically Soviet product." Thornton Anderson

Ann Am Acad 400:193 Mr '72 430w

"[This book] is probably too detailed to be of much use to any but specialists in Soviet or comparative education. . . . Recommended for large university libraries."

Choice 8:1230 N '71 130w

"The authors are experts in the field, and Bakalo, who compiled most of the descriptive and statistical material, has lived and taught in the Soviet Union. The book, based in large part on primary source materials, is thoroughly documented, with many tables scattered throughout and an appendix of supplementary tabular material. Highly recommended for subject collections." S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 96:3320 O 15 '71 140w

PENNINGTON, D. H. Seventeenth-century Europe. 486p maps $7.95 Holt

940.2 Europe—History—1492-1789
SBN 03-084883-X LC 71-115980

The book gives an "account of new lines of investigation and argument concerning . . . topics of seventeenth-century European history. . . . [There are chapters] on social and economic developments . . . science, from Galileo to Newton . . . and the arts seen in their social as well as in their intellectual context; the effect of both scientific and artistic evolution on the spirit of the seventeenth century is also assessed. . . . Political and diplomatic history . . . is covered in the second part of the book." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Considering the difficulties, and the requirements of a series [A General History of Europe] that leans more towards the encyclopaedic than the exploratory, it is hard to see how anyone could have done a better job [than Pennington]. . . . My own [reactions] were that the scientific chapter was superb, the one on education and the arts a very fine effort which tried to get too much in at the end (was a page and a half on seventeenth-century music really worth it?), and the one on religion really a bit too quirky. . . . [The] chapters on political ideas, government, rebellion and war [are] admirably designed, and given unity and sharpness, in default of general theses, by an Orwellian determination to stick up for the common man against a multitude of fakes, profiteers, bureaucrats and other parasites." John Bossy

Engl Hist R 86:300 O '71 650w

"In assessing the significance of the seventeenth century in European history, Pennington's book, unlike earlier studies, no longer views this period in terms of successive events, dynastic affairs, and territorial changes, but rather as a time of dynamic change, outstanding achievements in many areas, and profound transformation in thought. In this excellent summary of the century, he has availed himself of the most recent historical findings and scholarship."

Social Studies 63:188 Ap '72 100w

"[This book contains] a vast array of topics, each dealt with deftly in its own chapter or sub-section, but each adding to that kaleidoscopic effect which makes the uninitiated reader wonder what the little bits add up to, and where the 'story' in History went. . . . An enviable amount of energy has gone into the making of [the volume]. Extremely careful writing has produced a [book] with remarkably balanced judgments and almost no direct factual errors. No major topic of the age has been omitted. . . . Despite this, it is clear that Mr. Pennington is not really at home in Europe. He writes as an English academic who knows his English and some of his French sources. But for the rest of Europe he makes no use of any of the major work done by Italian, Spanish or German historians."

TLS p1070 S 25 '70 400w

PENROSE, SIR ROLAND. Miró. 215p 11 col 11 $7.50 Abrams

759.6 Miró, Joan
LC [74-511583]

This "review of Miró's contribution to contemporary art [also includes an account of his life]." (Economist) Bibliography.

"[The author,] Miró's friend for 35 years, has not given us a sentimental reminiscence, but a graceful, lucid, and solid essay which may well be the best piece of criticism on the artist. It has all of the considerable virtues of his fine study on Picasso, [Picasso: His Life and Work BRD 1959], notably scholarship and authority without tedium or ponderousness; thus, it is in the best English tradition. . . . [The book] has a fine selection of reproductions but they are smallish and most of the color ones are grainy and garish. There is a chapter on the sculpture of Miró."

Choice 8:824 S '71 110w

Economist 235:53 Je 27 '70 130w

"[This] biographical study enhances the essential facts of the artist's life with numerous accounts of moments of change and decision. [The] book is compact with good plates . . . a book of value in any collection on art." P. S. Andersen

Library J 96:2759 S 15 '71 70w

"Of the illustrations in [this] book, only about one in seven is in a public collection, and the great majority of these are in America. . . . The book reproduces canvas after canvas which is fundamental to our understanding of twentieth-century art. . . . It would be pointless to discuss Surrealist painting, and still more the Surrealist object, without reference to works by Miro which Sir Roland reproduces. . . . The colour could not be called faithful, but as a guide to work which might otherwise be written off as invisible [this] volume has a steady utility."

TLS p1264 O 15 '71 250w

PENROSE, ROLAND. Picasso. See Picasso, P.

The PENTAGON papers; the Defense Department history of United States decisionmaking on Vietnam. The Senator Gravel ed 4v $45; pa $20 Beacon press

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- . Vietnam—Foreign relations—U.S. U.S.—Foreign relations—Vietnam. Vietnam—History
ISBN 0-8070-0526-6; 0-8070-0527-4 (pa)
LC 75-178049

This edition contains "2000 pages of narrative, about 700 pages of documents [and] some 200 pages of public statements by government officials justifying the Vietnam War and defining its purposes." (Library J)

"A massive, official, largely anonymous compilation . . . [this] is the most complete version of this historical record now available. . . . While the historian's task of analysis and interpretation largely remains to be accomplished, the publication of this archive should contribute importantly to an historical appreciation of the origins of American policy in Indochina."

Choice 9:263 Ap '72 170w

"Senator Gravel became involved with the Papers under extraordinary circumstances. When the Federal government temporarily stopped newspaper publication of the Papers last June, Gravel convened a special night-time meeting of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds. In a bizarre, emotional, and dramatic scene, he entered into the public record the 2900 pages that now appear in The Senator Gravel Edition. . . . [This work contains] a short glossary prepared by Gravel's staff. (A fifth volume will be added in April: edited by Noam Chomsky and Howard Zinn, it will include commentaries on the Papers, analyses of the various editions, and an index.) . . . Many documents in . . . [this] edition are not in the Defense Department's, but are in the Times's [The Pentagon Papers, New York Times edition, BRD 1971]. . . . The Gravel edition is deficient in a number of crucial respects. . . . the sections dealing with the Tonkin Gulf affairs have been hopelessly butchered either by technical or human error (only odd-numbered pages are included); materials dealing with the Truman Administration are neglected . . . and documents from the Eisenhower years are missing. . . . [The Papers] must be used with special care and with a sharp critical eye. Even so, the interested, untrained reader can learn a great deal about the war and about the way the United States government makes war." H. J. Steck

Library J 97:872 Mr 1 '72 700w

"I actually read the entirety of these papers; it took five weeks, and never was bedtime reading more soporific. How naive the mass of our fellows must be, if they find in them something . . . surprising. For they include nearly every conceivable opinion, contingency plan, fanciful scenario, rock-hard statistical abstraction, rambling bureaucratese-(or militarese-) mumbo-jumbo. . . . Is this the 'true, complete history of America's involvement'? Not at all. These papers are parts, fragments, some sides of a more than pentagon-sided matter, a legitimate source, but only a source, not the whole truth and nothing but, which an historian would be obliged to consider when writing a scholarly history of the war. . . . Those . . . people in America who will actually read the entire Pentagon Papers will, I firmly believe, find in them no revelation." David Brudnoy

Nat R 23:1417 D 17 '71 800w

"[This] set has almost all the narrative of the original and excludes no censored portions, but omits several thousand pages of documents. . . . [including] hundreds of documents from the Roosevelt and Truman years." Jonathan Mirsky

Sat R 55:23 Ja 1 '72 1700w

PENTECOST, HUGH. Don't drop dead tomorrow. 182p $4.95 Dodd

ISBN 0-396-06389-6 LC 79-163073

Public "relations expert Julian Quist . . . is intrigued by rumors that the fabulous Jeremy Trail, who owns millions on millions, has not been seen for years and may be only an 'image' used as a front for a criminal syndicate. Trail, he is told, will be highest bidder for the about-to-be-retired luxury liner S.S. Queen Alexandria; but other bidders hoping to make it a sea-travel museum see their only hope in discrediting the elusive Trail. Gossip columnist Myra Rudolph winds up dead, after first asking where the real Mr. Trail is." (Best Sell)

"[This story is] all most complicated and more than a little incredible."

Best Sell 31:431 D 15 '71 120w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:4033 D 1 '71 80w

"[The] author's name is a guarantee of smooth writing, an ingenious story-line and convincing characterization. . . . Possibly the solution may be too big a surprise for the purist; it is dragged out of thin air in an over-complex plot. But nobody can say that 'Don't Drop Dead Tomorrow' is anything but entertaining." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p42 Ja 16 '72 90w

New Yorker 47:87 Ja 8 '71 110w

"This engrossing novel of murder and suspense introduces Julian Quist (and his staff of beautiful women), a character worthy to take his place beside the author's other crime fighters, John Jericho and Pierre Chambrun. Quist may be all slick invention, but he's fun to have around."

Sat R 54:31 D 25 '71 120w

PENTECOST, HUGH. For other books by this author see Phillips, J.

PENTONY, DEVERE. Unfinished rebellions [by] Devere Pentony, Robert Smith [and] Richard Axen. 315p $9.50 Jossey-Bass

378.794 California. State College, San Francisco

ISBN 0-87589-095-4

LC 72-148658

"A sequel to R. Smith, et al, By any means necessary [BRD 1971] which described 'The revolutionary struggle at San Francisco State College' [in 1968-1969]. . . . [this book] focuses 'on the many issues raised by the multiple roles that colleges and universities in the United States have been attempting to play.' Against the background of the San Francisco experience, the authors present . . . discussions of the student initiative for radical reform; radical ideology and strategies; the problems of minority education; . . . the administration of student justice; challenges to faculty governance; professional and unprofessional ethics; and public reactions." (Choice)

"This volume reinforces the recommendation of the earlier one: . . . eventually higher education must develop a new faculty ethic and professional practice consonant with our times.' This series in higher education is one of the most significant continuing examinations of American higher education under way, and this volume adds to the series' distinction. Pentony and his colleagues have given academe the best analysis of American higher education's winter of discontent, and have masterfully provided cogent delineations of the strategies of reform. An essential acquisition."

Choice 8:1070 O '71 200w

"The writing of contemporary history is an extraordinarily difficult undertaking even under the best of circumstances. To attempt to reflect upon current events with a reflection on history and a prediction for the future is even more difficult. The San Francisco State trio who wrote this volume . . . deserve large credit for their effort, even if one does not agree completely with their conclusions and observations. . . . There is a centrist position with criticisms of excesses by both the left and the right."

This reviewer found the latter sections of the work, dealing with the impact of developments, far more satisfying and provocative than the earlier sections: radical reform, ideologies, and strategies. These matters appear to be dealt with more satisfactorily in other works. The latter half is the strength and that which makes their effort worthy of special note." S. R. Levy

J Higher Ed 43:329 Ap '72 600w

PEPE, PHIL. Come out smokin': Joe Frazier—the champ nobody knew. (An Associated features bk) 224p il $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

B or 92 Frazier, Joe. Boxing

LC 70-172628

"In the first section, Pepe supplies background information about Frazier's childhood and an account of his rise from the obscurity of a South Carolina dirt farm to the position of a serious contender for [Muhammad] Ali's vacated crown [of Heavyweight champion]. Pepe emphasizes the qualities that set Frazier apart from other boxers: 'spiritual qualities' such as dedication and a desire for hard work and sacrifice. The second section is climaxed by an account of the . . . showdown with Ali." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 31:509 F 15 '72 400w

"Boxing fans will want to read this book in anticipation of a possible rematch between Frazier and Muhammad Ali later this year. . . . Pepe handles the Big Fight skillfully and sustains reader interest throughout. He is especially successful in contrasting the two fighters' personalities and boxing styles." M. E. Nunn

Library J 97:1032 Mr 15 '72 130w

PEPE, PHIL, jt. auth. A view from the rim. See Reed, W.

PEPINSKY, HAROLD B., ed. People and information. 336p $13.50 Pergamon

029.7 Information sciences. Technology and civilization

ISBN 08-015624-X

LC 73-93756

"The contributors to this volume have tried not to answer the question [of whether or not man can control technology,] but rather to consider the information sciences in relation to human activities. . . . Bibliography." (Library J)

PEPINSKY, H. B.—Continued

"[This volume] does not constitute a concerted attack on any one identifiable topic. Even the relatively diffuse announced theme of 'aspect(s) of information processing in which humans are saliently involved . . . under scientific, professional, and managerial auspices' is only partly adhered to. Yovits and Ernst provide a system-theoretic model of a 'generalized information system.' Zimmerman and Pollner, in a paper on 'The Everyday World as a Phenomenon,' provide an enriched version of the standard ethnomethodological critique and program. . . . [Pepinsky] provides a largely phenomenological interpretation of the symbiosis between each of several competing schools of 'psychological help-giving' practice, and the group of scientists who provide its scholarly legitimation. . . . His account is illuminating and provocative. . . . Other chapters, while less systematically worked out, contain valuable elements." Herbert Menzel

Contemp Sociol 1:167 Mr '72 600w

"Several of the essays are technical and will be of interest primarily to students of information theory. Seven others, while varying in readability, offer the layman views of information theory applied in several fields: psychology, sociology, political science, law, managerial education, writing, and architecture. The book's intended readers are scientists, technologists, managers, and as the editor puts it 'intelligently concerned lay audiences.'" Harold Fruchtbaum

Library J 95:2930 S 15 '70 100w

PEPPER, ADELINE. The glass gaffers of New Jersey, and their creations from 1739 to the present. 330p il $17.50 Scribner

748.2 Glassware

SBN 684-10459-8 LC 70-123831

"This book is organized [around] known New Jersey glassworks. Considering the artistic objects as well as mass produced vessels each firm made from the end of the 18th century through the beginning of the 20th century, the book [describes techniques] . . . and brings glassmaking history up to the introduction of machine processes." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Invaluable for glass collectors. . . . [The author] offers much information about the social history of the craft and creates an excellent survey of New Jersey glass types, glass-makers, and factories. It will be a standard reference on the subject. Loose organization and awkward paragraphs make the book hard to follow. [There are] 259 illustrations. . . . Pieces illustrated are not always discussed in the text, but the pictures alone form a comprehensive survey of New Jersey glass types. Extensive bibliography. Important addition to a library of American decorative arts." Choice 9:960 O '72 180w

"Any library concerned with American glass will want Pepper's documented and copiously illustrated book. . . . The author has visited every town in the state where master blowers, the 'gaffers,' have worked and has talked to them or to their descendants; thus she has been able to close many a gap in the history of American glassmaking. Her book, a solid achievement, is of far more than regional interest." S. C. Gross

Library J 96:4000 D 1 '71 120w

PEPYS, SAMUEL. The diary of Samuel Pepys; a new and complete transcription; ed. by Robert Latham and William Matthews; 2v; v4, 1663; v5, 1664. 465;386p pl maps set $20 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714—Sources. Great Britain—Social life and customs

ISBN 0-520-01857-5 v4; 0-520-01858-3 v5 LC (70-96950)

"Volumes Four and Five of the Latham-Matthews Pepys take us through the years 1663 and 1664. Both in Pepys' own personal life and in the life of the capital . . . they are years [of] tension and unease. . . . In Pepys' own case there are spells of ill health, . . . marital conflict, . . . family worries, . . . office routine and rivalries. In the life of the nation they are years of deepening conflict at Court and in Parliament, . . . of growing bickering with the Dutch, of a drift to war that in the last months plunges Pepys into a . . . round of late nights and overworked days, preparing the Navy for what lies ahead." (Va Q R) Glossary. For volumes one, two and three see BRD 1970 and 1971.

"[The editors] must have spent years designing an edition with a bulk small enough and print large enough to be read comfortably in bed and with just the minimum apparatus of footnotes and cross-references which is needed to make the text intelligible to an enthusiastic but inept Pepysian. . . . I suspect I was not the only reader of the old standard edition who was frequently baffled by the language and the dramatic personae, whether Pepys's friends and relations or the high-ups in Whitehall, not to mention the whereabouts of the streets, theatres and coffee houses he frequented. In this new edition one can check one's memory by a handy reference to the lists at the end of each volume and nine times out of ten the information is there." Richard Crossman

New Statesman 82:622 N 5 '71 650w

"The new volumes show us the young Clerk of the Acts to the Navy emerging decisively as a man of business, increasing in confidence and beginning to exercise considerable influence on naval affairs. . . . As with the earlier volumes, the annotation is commendably succinct and relevant, telling us almost invariably just what was needed."

TLS p1603 D 24 '71 1450w

"[In these volumes the Diary] loses some of its earlier freshness and charm . . . [but] Pepys being Pepys, there are marvelous days of mirth and enjoyment amid the trouble and turbulence. . . . The Diary also records less innocent amusements. In June, 1663, Pepys first relieved the tension generated by Elizabeth's absence in the country by making 'a bad use of my fancy with whatever woman I have a mind to.' . . . More interesting than this routine bedroom comedy is the light the two volumes throw on the general problems of Restoration England. . . . As before, the labours of Latham, Matthews, and their collaborators have provided us with a perfect text and informative . . . annotation. Pepys himself would have been mighty approving." David Underdown

Va Q R 48:311 spring '72 1200w

PERCIVAL, JOHN. Experimental dance. 160p pl $7.95 Universe bks.

793.3 Dancing

ISBN 0-87663-148-0 LC 77-159566

The associate editor of Dance and Dancers Magazine discusses the contemporary dance scene and its use of "new techniques and choreographic styles, new attitudes and approaches, and . . . new relationships with other arts—music, painting, sculpture, film and theater. . . . He sees the roots of current experimentation in the work of such pioneers as Isadora Duncan, the Denishawn school, and Michel Fokine. . . . [He discusses the works of] Ashton, Balanchine, Béjart, Cranko, MacMillan, Robbins, Tudor, . . . Cunningham, Graham, Halprin, Nikolais, Taylor, Tetley [and others]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"In experimentation, the only constant is change and the author has a happy facility for verbalizing his view of these changes and what he feels they are all about. This is a profitable introduction to the avant-garde in the liveliest art. The work contains an unusual feature, 'Sources of quotations,' which substitutes for a bibliography. There are a few misceptions in the . . . photographs."

Choice 9:386 My '72 170w

"The coverage here is international in scope, with special attention paid to American dancers and companies. Happily, the author sticks to the limitations of his title and discusses the works which really are experimental. Better still, though the discussions are brief, Percival is a perceptive and enlightening observer. There are over 60 pages of photographs—many of which are unusual—and they have been well reproduced on good, glossy paper. Quotations from writings and from interviews with dancers and choreographers are all fully identified by source and date. A worthy addition to any collection containing books on the dance." G. L. Mayer

Library J 96:4105 D 15 '71 90w

"Mr Percival is one of our most conscientious critics in that he will travel any distance, venture into any dark cellar, to see what is happening in the dance world, but he has not been to the United States and it is there that experimental dance is happening at the moment. . . . Consequently, Mr Percival for much of the time is reporting on events he has not witnessed and so cannot comment on them. . . . Some sections will be useful as quick capsule references. The section on Merce Cunningham is predictably good. . . . But quite a lot of other people slip by in a passing reference. . . . There is little new in this book for the serious student of dance."

TLS p1358 O 29 '71 400w

PÉREZ LÓPEZ, FRANCISCO. Dark and bloody ground; a guerrilla diary of the Spanish Civil War; ed. and with an introd. by Victor Guerrier; tr. by Joseph D. Harris. 275p $6.95 Little

B or 92 Spain—History—Civil War, 1936-1939—Personal narratives
LC 71-175472

The author "describes his part in the Ebro River campaign of 1938, his internment in a Nationalist prison camp, and his escape to become a notorious mountain chieftain who raided fascist strongholds." (Library J)

"[The story] is short in time and limited in scope, simple in concepts and construction, and yet so plainly factual, so obviously unexaggerated as to fascinate the reader. It is presumably based on transcriptions of personal-code records kept on 'books' of cigarette papers. Consequently, and very naturally, it is not elaborate, nor is it broad in its depiction of 'guerrilla' warfare of its particular time and place." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 32:66 My 1 '72 390w

"Francisco Pérez López . . . is either the most accomplished guerrilla or the whoppiest liar of our day. The introduction by Victor Guerrier—assuming that is a real name and not a 'Victorious Warrior' nom de plume—provides a few morsels of information about Pérez, though these may be lumpy in some digestive systems. . . . What part Guerrier had in this composition is by no means clearly defined. . . . Without access to Spanish police reports—not readily obtainable—absolute confirmation or rejection of the memoir is impossible. The editor includes no photograph of Pérez, no facsimile page of the journal, no proof of his existence. Call it a dark and bloody yarn, but it is not history in its present format." Or if history, then Hesiod not Thucydides." Cecil Eby

Book World p7 Ap 23 '72 700w

"As an aged veteran reminiscing about his adventures as a guerrilla fighter with the Republican army during the Spanish Civil War, the author provides a graphic account of the brutality of partisan warfare. . . . Particularly instructive are his pithy comments about the combat tactics and the survival techniques utilized to outwit the enemy. A final chapter about his harrowing march into the sanctuary of the Pyrenees concludes this fascinating diary." R. L. Blanco

Library J 97:1706 My 1 '72 100w

PERIN, CONSTANCE. With man in mind; an interdisciplinary prospectus for environmental design. 185p $7.50 MIT press

301.3 Man—Influence of environment. Environmental policy. City planning. Regional planning
ISBN 0-262-16042-0 LC 76-123251

The author 'outlines a new organizing principle for the conduct of work in environmental design, intended to overcome the conceptual gap between what we do to make and change the environment and what people require from it. The book suggests a theory of human nature for environmental design, at the most abstract, and it suggests . . . approaches to environmental research that can be put to use now.' (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The fact alone that [Perin] recognizes that indeed the environmental designer is not necessarily playing a relevant role in the design process makes this an important book. . . . Simply put, Miss Perin wants the designer to substitute his intuition—his own personal biases—with objective data garnered from the human sciences and translate this into form. To illustrate her thesis, she draws on a variety of studies of the inception process. Unfortunately, at least for me, she also draws upon the somewhat obtuse vocabulary of the behavioral sciences and tries to translate it into the also somewhat obtuse vocabulary of the designer. The result is heavy reading. . . . Nevertheless, the book is relevant if only to raise questions concerning program input that designers must start asking and setting answers for if they are to presume to play a role in shaping our environment." Samuel Kaplan

Arch Forum 135:16 D '71 1000w

"[Perin] comes up with some very sensible suggestions. Her plea for 'a theory of human nature' from which environmental design principles might be evolved sounds a bit abstract at first; but once she stops hiding behind all those long and learned quotations and starts to write of her own perceptions, experiences, and hopes, she can be quite convincing. A most helpful book for students and practitioners of the thriving new urban research industry." Wolf Von Eckardt

Library J 96:624 F 15 '71 190w

PERKINS, MAXWELL EVARTS, jt. auth. Dear Scott/Dear Max. See Fitzgerald, F. S. K.

PERLMAN, JOHN. Kachina. 78p Ohio state univ. press

811

SBN 8142-0163-6 LC 72-157718

"The Hopi word 'kachina,' meaning 'supernatural,' is the basis of the word 'katchina,' which refers to the ancestral spirit of the tribe, or the impersonator of that spirit, or its image. . . . [Thus the author of this collection of poems.] while attempting like most young poets to define himself, is concerned not merely with his consciousness, but with the self in relation to family, geological time, American Indian myth, and current events." (Choice)

"The quiet, gentle, sometimes surprising, frequently humorous poems in Kachina present the spirit of humanity as that spirit moves from Perlman's forebears through him and into his daughter. . . . The poems lack the intensity of the very best poetry, but are never diffuse. In any case, intensity does not appear to be the poet's chief concern. The words seem justly chosen, the patterns of sound effortless, the images surprising yet natural, the 78 poems superbly well placed. . . . Highly recommended."

Choice 9:816 S '72 190w

"Perlman, winner of an American Poets Award and a Vandewater Prize, writes well of his personal life. His language is subtle, his metaphors are apt. Since he seems to lack any notion of how change works in a poem, he is at his best in the static haiku or the ironic biographical sketch in which much gets told quickly on several levels. His longer, mythic poems fall flat, being extended too far beyond the original conceit. . . . Kachina is a lightweight volume, but as Perlman himself admits, 'there are lesser/gifts/of some/ value.'" P. I. Fanning

Library J 97:1019 Mr 15 '72 190w

PEROWNE, STEWART. Rome; from its foundation to the present; phot. by Edwin Smith. 246p $17.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

945 Rome (City)—History
LC 71-171205

A survey of the history of the city of Rome from the eighth century B.C. to the present day. Index.

"By a miracle of intelligent condensation, Mr. Perowne has reduced 2500 years of history, plus descriptions of the artistic works of the period, to a short, lucid, pleasantly readable text. As guide for the newcomer or nostalgia for the veteran traveler, this is a lovely book and beautifully illustrated." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:129 Ap '72 50w

"[The book is] illustrated by 204 plates of which 24 are in superb color. . . . Although wide and deep scholarship is evident, there is not the heaviness so often associated with such works." R. F. Grady

Best Sell 32:21 Ap 1 '72 60w

"The span of years is prodigious, and specialists will naturally find details in the text with which they will be inclined to quarrel. The Roman Senate, in the time of the Republic (509-49 B.C.), was never a legislative body, and slavery had little if anything, to do with the decline either of the Roman Republic or of the Roman Empire. There are few places, however, to which the general reader can turn for so comprehensive an account of the history of Rome. . . . It would be helpful if the location of the more obscure objects or sites were specified."

PEROWNE, STEWART—Continued

Va Q R 48:cxlix autumn '72 200w

PERRAULT, E. G. The twelfth mile. 256p $5.95 Doubleday

LC 77-157616

Skipper Christy "Westholme agrees to take the tugboat Haida Noble on a routine assignment—towing a British-American oil drilling rig into [the port of Vancouver]. A deadly hurricane and tidal wave test the skill and courage of the Haida Noble crew, but what awaits them is even more demanding. Where the drilling rig should be they find debris, one life-raft, and, in the distance, a stricken Russian 'research' vessel. The unfolding action involves the governments of Canada, Russia, and the United States." (Library J)

"[This book] will provide good reading. Just don't ask too many questions about what makes some of the characters tick." R. B. Wathen

Best Sell 31:516 F 15 '72 190w

"If continuous action and adventure appeal to you, then make all efforts to read this exciting novel. . . . The ending, as the entire story, is memorable not particularly for its uniqueness but for the superb technique of the author. Excellent adventure which should be available for all readers." J. E. Buck

Library J 96:2545 Ag '71 120w

Reviewed by Carol Coon

Library J 97:1626 Ap 15 '72 100w [YA]

"Perrault writes [about the seal with knowledge and awe. His description of a seagoing tug caught in a hurricane and tidal wave is fearfully vivid, and one aches for the battered vessel. . . . Perrault has written an exciting story that never once loses its taut line. Not many mystery stories have the sea as the locale, and even fewer have this feeling of concentration plus knowhow." Newgate Calendar

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 12 '72 170w

PERROT, JEAN. The organ; from its invention in the Hellenistic period to the end of the thirteenth century; adapted from the French and tr. by Norma Deane. 317p il pl $27.50 Oxford

736.5 Organ

ISBN 0-19-318418-4

LC 77-27072

This history of the "hydraulic organ of the kind which was popular for a long time in the Greco-Roman world, and cultivated by that famous classical musician, the Emperor Nero, [is based on texts as well as on] . . . iconographical and archaeological data." (TLS) Index. Originally published in Paris in 1965

"This book, by no means a popular treatise, ends in the 13th Century—and the organs of the 19th Century and today sound quite different. But as a scholarly treatment of the epoch presented in an interesting manner and backed up with plenty of data it is incomparable." W. J. Deakyne

Library J 96:3762 N 15 '71 100w

"The book remains a highly imperfect work, yet when one considers its vast scope, the great difficulty of the subject matter, how bad previous efforts in the field are and how much of an improvement it is, one must acknowledge it to be an important and impressive scholarly achievement. It is obviously the standard work on the early organ and in all probability will remain so for some time to come. One can accept its general conclusions with confidence while exercising independent judgment on matters of detail. Perrot always makes the latter possible by a conscientious and precise indication of sources." J. W. McKinnon

Music Lib Assn Notes 29:49 S '72 500w

"Dr Perrot's [book is a] fresh presentation of the whole of the evidence [about the hydraulic organ] as it is known today, together with a reappraisal of the opinions of many of the earlier commentators on the subject. . . . But [he] offers no evidence at all for his sensational final claim that 'the organ has been largely responsible for the development of polyphonic writing, which is the prime distinguishing feature of Western music.'"

TLS p1457 N 19 '71 1050w

PERRY, HAMILTON DARBY. A chair for Wayne Lonergan. 290p il $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

345 Lonergan, Wayne. Trials
LC 70-160082

"In 1944, Canadian Air Force cadet Wayne Lonergan was tried and convicted of the murder of his socialite wife Patricia in New York. Did he really get a fair trial, or did the pre-judging of the case by the press preclude this? And was he actually guilty of the slaying? Perry's book is . . . a brief for the defense—■ critical review of the trial and the evidence designed to shed reasonable doubt on Lonergan's guilt." (Library J) Index.

"Perry doesn't venture to name the real murderer, but he does suggest some interesting possibilities. Lonergan, now out of prison, would become heir to several million dollars should his conviction be reversed. An outstanding true-crime book, perhaps even an Edgar candidate." J. L. Breen

Library J 97:512 F 1 '72 120w

"[The author] candidly admits that his highly readable book offers 'a biased presentation.'"

Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:104 Mr 25 '72 90w

PERRY, HUEY. "They'll cut off your project": ■ Mingo county chronicle. 256p $7.95 Praeger 309.2 Economic assistance, Domestic. Mingo County, West Virginia
LC 72-75692

"The author was executive director of the Mingo County (West Virginia) Economic Opportunity Commission, a nonprofit community action corporation funded by the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964. [He gives here an account of the years (1965-1971) during which he served in that capacity]." (Library J)

"This book could be considered a handbook of guerrilla tactics for the war on poverty. . . . Perry developed a progressive program that became a model for other antipoverty organizations in the nation. In order to implement his programs, however, he had to lock horns with the county political machine which was bent on siphoning off much of the OEA funds for its own nefarious uses. Perry organized the poor people of Mingo County into politically active groups. . . . Through a fair-elections committee (which cleared up machine-instigated voting irregularities), school boycotts protesting inadequate hot lunch programs, and investigations of the local political patronage system, Perry and his followers demonstrated the effectiveness of 'poor power.' The author pulls no punches in this informative and highly readable book and proves to this reader at least, that good leadership and willing troops can win the war on poverty." Mark Neyman

Library J 97:2372 J1 '72 160w

New Repub 167:31 N 18 '72 460w

"[This] is as vivid and personal a book as one could ask for. . . . [It] may well become a casebook of what really went on during those heady days of the War on Poverty. Perry's achievement is to give flesh to the familiar abstractions—we learn not only that there is corruption but who's responsible and how they do it. . . . Perry has information, a personal concern and a natural storytelling ability that makes his book come alive in ways one might never have expected. He draws the reader into a celebration of small victories and can make us feel a sense of energy and hope when a poor man finally stands up at a public meeting and speaks his mind. It is in many ways a dramatic story, often surprisingly funny and, remarkably, it never sinks into despair." Joseph Kanon

Sat R 55:50 S 2 '72 480w

Reviewed by Edward Magnuson
Time 100:101 N 6 '72 700w

PERRY, RITCHIE. The fall guy. 191p $5.95 Houghton

ISBN 0-395-13941-4

LC 72-574

In this novel, Phillis is a British expatriate living in the red-light district of Santos, Brazil. "Pawson, head of SR (2), the hush-hush adjunct of British Intelligence . . . blackmails him into working for them. . . . [Philis] is elected to break up the international drug-smuggling ring based there." (Sat R)

"Tough, exciting reading."

Best Sell 32:314 O 1 '72 100w

"On the whole, this novel . . . is conventional stuff, awkwardly written." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p45 S 17 '72 100w

"This is a first novel that, except for a sagging middle, is nicely paced. Philis is a sufficiently maverick operative to launch a new series, and Pawson, the man at the helm of SR (2), is the apotheosis of charm. When Philis returns to England, bloody but unbowed, all he gets for his trouble is a nasty test. True to form, heads of intelligence packs have bites even worse than their barks." O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:79 S 30 '72 140w

TLS p135 F 4 '72 50w

PERSE, ST.-JOHN. Collected poems; with trs. by W. H. Auden [and others]. (Bollingen ser. 87) 682p $15 Princeton univ. press

841

ISBN 0-691-09858-1 LC 70-100357

A bilingual edition of the work of Alexis Saint-Léger Léger. This volume includes the texts of On Poetry, Eloges (BRD 1944); Anabasis (BRD 1950); Exile (BRD 1949); Winds (BRD 1953); Seamarks (BRD 1958); Chronique (BRD 1962); Birds; Poem for Valéry Larbaud, and Dante. Bibliographical note.

"This beautifully printed . . . text brings together for the first time all the major works. . . . The translations, which have been revised for this edition and approved by Perse, are excellent. . . . Also included is a short poem, never before published in book form. . . . It can then only be regretted that, although the volume . . . contains Eliot's prefaces to the original and revised editions of the English translation of Anabase and Louise Varèse's preface to the original translation of Eloges in an appendix, it lacks an introduction, bibliographical and textual notes, and a critical bibliography." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 97:202 Ja 15 '72 170w

"The stately, enumerative poetry of St-John Perse, which appeals to translators if not always to readers, now appears in a one-volume anthology . . . with the French on the left and the English on the right. The volume includes Eliot's very superior version of Anabase and Auden's translation of St-John Perse's Nobel Prize oration of 1960."

TLS p541 My 12 '72 60w

PERUTZ, KATHRIN. Marriage is hell. 181p $5.95 Morrow

301.42 Marriage

LC 70-183358

An exploration of marriage and its legal, historical, sexual and psychological aspects. Viewing the institution, as we know it, to be an anachronism, the author catalogs ills and suggests solutions.

Reviewed by I. C. Schick and Tom Schick
America 127:214 S 23 '72 270w

"The author touches many . . . bases in this polemic against society and what it has done to marriage. Her work is discouraging for its somewhat flippant style at points, its absence of hope, and its lack of insight into the creative potential of the individual to overcome difficulty. Furthermore, its ad-hoc, simplistic solutions could be potentially dangerous to someone encountering the frustrations she pictures." Charles and Barbara Kefauver

Best Sell 32:85 My 15 '72 500w

"A rather glib and gifted phrasemaker tosses off opinions against marriage, ten or 20 per page. Lively enough, the book offers little that has not been said more seriously—if also a bit less memorably—often before."

Christian Century 89:523 My 3 '72 40w

Reviewed by Doris Grumbach
Commonweal 97:305 Ja 5 '73 700w

"This volume will surely be compared with Nena and George O'Neill's controversial Open Marriage [BRD 1972]. . . . Like the O'Neills, Perutz regards contemporary marriage as an anachronism based on absurd expectations which, unsatisfied, produce frustration and bitter disappointment. . . . Without promising a prescription for salvation, Perutz considers such options as trial marriage, trial separation, homosexual marriage, and communal living. She also calls for . . . an end to laws which perpetuate artificial and irrelevant differentiations between the sexes. . . . While generally committed to a feminist position, the author regards Germaine Greer's attitudes toward child-rearing apart from parents as 'absurd romanticism.' . . . Her provocative, well-written reflections should be shared." Janet Freedman

Library J 97:1821 My 15 '72 180w

PESNOT, PATRICK, jr. auth. Satan's needle. See Alfonsi, P.

PESSOA, FERNANDO. Selected poems; incl. poems by his heteronyms: Alberto Caeiro, Ricardo Reis [and] Alvaro de Campos; as well as some of his English sonnets and sels. from his letters: tr. by Edwin Honig; with an introd. by Octavio Paz. 170p $8 Swallow press

869

ISBN 0-8040-0520-6 LC 75-150758

A "selection of 48 poems by the modern Portuguese [poet]. . . . They include the lengthy . . . Maritime ode, as well as several uncollected poems and 10 sonnets which the multilingual Pessoa wrote in a . . . neo-Elizabethan English. Honig also includes three prose writings of Pessoa which help to explain the poet's several heteronyms or identities. . . . Honig includes his translation of an . . . essay by Mexican poet Octavio Paz: 'Pessoa or the imminence of the unknown.'" (Choice) Chronology.

"Translator Honig's selection . . . printed in 1971 and thus contemporaneous with F. Quintanilha's selection of Pessoa's Sixty Portuguese poems, provides the English reader with very little overlapping. Honig's translations are excellent and no less sensitive than Quintanilha's. . . . Missing from this edition and included in Quintanilha are a list of Pessoa's works, of translations, and a selected critical bibliography. General libraries need obtain one of the two editions; however, specialist libraries in Luso-Brazilian studies should invest in both."

Choice 9:821 S '72 250w

"The poems collected under 'Alberto Caeiro' are the least satisfactory, both in the original and in the often awkward translations. Those by 'Ricardo Reis,' unfortunately fewer in number, are superior. The selections by 'Alvaro de Campos' form the largest part of the book; their irreverence, cynicism, and defensive homosexuality culminate in 'Salutation to Walt Whitman' and in the seemingly endless 'Maritime Ode,' with its echoes of 'Ahoy' and 'Yo-ho-ho and a bottle of rum.' The poems under Pessoa's own name appear last. . . . The book's most important contributions, however, are made via Pessoa's explications of his literary identities and via the incisive introduction by Paz." Robert Lima

Library J 97:74 Ja 1 '72 130w

"Pessoa [was] unmistakably one of this century's major poets. . . . [His] diversity is such that no selection can do any kind of justice to him, but that is not a reason for being ungrateful for [this] English version. . . . [Honig] keeps slipping into modern slang, and sometimes into tired jargon ('go through the motions'). . . . [His] selection is thin and eccentric, and the book itself is marred by misprints, duplicated lines, and bad grammar. . . . It has an introduction by Octavio Paz which Honig must have translated in his sleep, so full is it of errors and missed nuances and idioms. . . . Still, the qualification for complaining seriously about translations is being able to do better yourself: I've tried, and I can't. . . . [Honig has] a high number of successes in [his] renderings, and it would be absurd to insist on [his] failures." Michael Wood

N Y Rev of Books 19:19 S 21 '72 1550w

PETER, LAURENCE J. The Peter prescription; how to be creative, confident, & competent. 224p il $5.95 Morrow

817 Satire
LC 70-182953

The author attempts to provide guidelines for achieving happiness in our private lives and satisfaction in our careers through the use of his "prescriptions."

"I am sorry to report that, for me, at least, [this book] is two-thirds disappointment. The first sixty-some pages are amusing . . . but the Peter Prescriptions—there are sixty-six of them,—seem repetitious and overly extended." R. F. G.

Best Sell 32:176 J1 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 2
'72 550w

"[This] is not at all what one would expect from the highly competent author of that marvelous satire The Peter Principle [BRD 1969]. It is for the most part a collection of platitudes, tired generalizations, and exhortations of the Dale Carnegie variety; and while it does manage to contain a few of the effective mannerisms of its predecessor, it is nonetheless a disappointing sequel." A. J. Anderson

Library J 97:2195 Je 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri
Library J 97:2974 S 15 '72 100w [YA]

"Peter's editor, or someone, has sold him on the idea of larding his text with inept, and often misleading, quotations. . . . The quotes, the layout, the 32 illustrations, the blank pages—all show padding. . . . There can be only one explanation. Peter has reached his Level of Incompetence!" Michael Olmert

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 13 '72 800w

PETERS, CHARLES, ed. Blowing the whistle; dissent in the public interest; written and ed. by Charles Peters and Taylor Branch. 305p $8.95; pa $3.95 Praeger

351.9 U.S.—Politics and government—1961—Corruption (in politics)
LC 72-185763

This book discusses the muckrakers of today who "expose corruption and mismanagement from the inside of government and corporations. Sometimes they blow the whistle while on the job, sometimes after resigning or being fired. . . . [Included are accounts of] Otto Otepka, . . . Daniel Ellsberg, . . . [James] Boyd, . . . Charles Pettis, John McGee, and . . . Jacqueline Verrett. . . . [as well as] what happened to the OEO's 'poverty lawyers.'" (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 9:1205 N '72 230w

"Peters, editor and founder of Washington Monthly, and Branch, comanaging editor of that journal, do their whistle blowing in a refined way. They speak the truth as they see it and do not editorialize. Whistle-blowers, the authors point out, should not expect job security. On the other hand, they hope that this discussion of issues affecting the public's health (FDA standards), pocket-book (C-5A scandal), and right to know (Pentagon Papers) will help rebut William Rehnquist's contention that 'a government employee . . . is seriously restricted in his freedom of speech with respect to any matter for which he has been assigned responsibility.' A well-balanced, sane account of frightening things happening in government and to those who try to speak out. Recommended." Renate Hayum

Library J 97:1796 My 15 '72 150w

"A unique collection of essays, . . . some of which are original (including especially valuable ones by co-editor Taylor Branch), but most of which appeared originally in The Washington Monthly, that indispensable ombudsman whose exposés will, in the long-run, probably save the taxpayer as many dollars as any Congressional budget-cutter. . . . I don't wish to be the one to blow the whistle on the editors, who are frank and modest in their claims, but it should be noted that [some of the] essays . . . really have more to do with protest [and analysis] than whistle-blowing. . . . Such quibbles are, of course, irrelevant to the dominant theme of this volume, which is studded with precedents proving that you can fight City Hall, even if you work there." V. S. Navasky

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 30 '72 1200w

PETERS, F. E. The harvest of Hellenism; a history of the Near East from Alexander the Great to the triumph of Christianity. 800p maps $15 Simon & Schuster
939 Near East—Civilization. Hellenism
SBN 671-20653-3 LC 74-116509

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Zeph Stewart

Am Hist R 77:1098 O '72 1250w

Choice 8:1627 F '72 160w

Va Q R 48:xxxii winter '72 230w

PETERSON, BILL. Coaltown revisited; an Appalachian notebook. 230p pl $6.95 Regnery 309.175 Appalachian region—Social conditions. Mountain life—Southern States
LC 74-163254

"A journalist with the Louisville Courier-Times examines the past 12 years in Appalachia and attempts to evaluate the effect of the War on Poverty on that region. Aside from a great deal of activity and movement, the author has found that there has been little impact. . . . [He] does not place all the blame on the federal antipoverty programs. In a major portion of the book, he takes the United Mine Workers to task for literally deserting thousands of miners in central Appalachia." (Library J)

Reviewed by Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 32:35 My 15 '72 350w

Choice 9:687 J1/Ag '72 260w

"We suppose that it would be hard to revisit Appalachia frequently enough or to retell its story too often, if we are to hope that someday its plight will reach the American conscience. Strip mining country laid bare."

Christian Century 89:488 Ap 26 '72 40w

"[Peterson has found] that in 1970, 'Appalachia's three million poor are again forgotten. Despair still grips their isolated hollows and grimy coaltowns. The old patterns of life continue, and a new generation of welfare recipients is being born. On the eve of a new presidential campaign the people of coaltown await a new call to the nation's conscience.' . . . Although this book lacks the passion and depth of H. M. Caudill's Night Comes to the Cumberlands [BRD 1963], it is nevertheless recommended as an updated analysis of a major American problem."

Mark Neyman

Library J 97:670 F 15 '72 160w

"Peterson's book shows that the efforts of the New Frontier and the Great Society . . . dodged the real issues and avoided tax reform, environmental ruin caused by strip-mining, and proposals to organize labor co-ops that might have put miners to work in their own pits. They aimed at helping Appalachia's poor without inconveniencing any of Appalachia's rich. . . . Peterson, a reporter for the Louisville Courier-Journal, describes a disastrous flop on the domestic front. [His work] is a small book and quickly read." H. M. Caudill

N Y Times Bk R p[8] My 7 '72 1050w

PETERSON, HAROLD L. Americans at home; from the colonists to the late Victorians; a pictorial source bk. of Am. domestic interiors with an app. on inns and taverns. unnp $14.95 Scribner

917.3 Interior decoration. U.S.—Social life and customs

SBN 684-12344-4 LC 75-143956

The illustrations in this volume "indicating the use of objects or room arrangements between 1659 and 1876 [consist of] . . . paintings, engravings, and contemporary photographs." (Am Hist R) Index of artists.

"Because he does not explain or interpret and because he is not concerned with esthetic matters, Peterson's book is limited in its usefulness. As a source book, however, it serves a function. . . . [The furniture pictured] with its essentially middle-class orientation and lack of fine craftsmanship, was . . . readily discarded and, therefore, with the alternations of fashion has disappeared. Since our only knowledge of many of these objects must come from such painted or photographed illustrations as Mr. Peterson includes here, we can only be grateful to him for collecting such a vast number of them and making them available to us in this useful collection." L. B. Miller

Am Hist R 77:583 Ap '72 400w

"This 'pictorial source book' will overthrow many cherished ideas about 18th- and 19th-century interior restoration—amazingly much restoration is based on modern taste rather than facts. . . . Many fascinating tidbits of information and perceptive comments invite the reader to delve further. While lacking color plates, the work forms an excellent contrast to picture books of 'Early American' decor and will be helpful for any scholarly concern with the American home. Appendix of inns and taverns . . . rounds out an excellent documentary source which is highly recommended."

Choice 9:960 O '72 180w

"Peterson, a military historian and a professional museum curator . . . [offers] comments and explanations of individual pictures [that] are pertinent and call attention to details that the average viewer might overlook. Locations of the originals, duly provided, will aid those who might wish to study them in greater detail. A handsome volume that will interest all concerned with American social history and the decorative arts. For all art and history collections that can afford it." M. L. Blackwell

Library J 96:3119 O 1 '71 100w

PETERSON, MARY BENNETT. The regulated consumer. 271p $7.95 Nash pub.

353.03 Consumer protection
SBN 8402-5002-9 LC 71-153200

"This study addresses itself to the 'question of whether the Government in the name of consumer protection should increasingly regulate society.' Peterson, a contributor to the Wall Street Journal, examines seven regulatory agencies—the Food and Drug Administration, the antitrust division of the Justice Department, the Federal Trade Commission, the National Labor Relations Board, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Civil Aeronautics Board, and the Federal Communications Commission." (Library J) Indexes of names and of subjects.

"[Peterson] sees most 'current regulation' as 'inherently uneconomical and ironically anticonsumer and ultimately posing a threat to a free society.' She views regulation as economic intervention, interfering with free enterprise and ultimately tightening control over the activities of the consumer himself. This is a controversial book—the growing public demand for consumer protection argues against its point of view. However, it adds dimension to the consumer-protection question by examining in depth activities at the agency level of the federal government." H. M. Burns

Library J 97:1802 Ap 1 '72 220w

"[The author] has marshaled a convincing case that government regulation on behalf of the consumer frequently turns out to have the opposite effect. . . . What the book sorely lacks, and what Milton Friedman attempts to provide in his short introduction, is a rigorous, and consistent framework for explaining why regulatory agencies are established and why they function as they do. Unfortunately, Friedman's essay and Mrs. Peterson's essentially descriptive study fail to provide the needed antidote to the confusion and misinformation which people such as Nader are sowing with such abandon. But at least The Regulated Consumer is a respectable start." J. B. Burnham

Nat R 24:170 F 18 '72 240w

PETRARCH, FRANCESCO. Lord Morley's Tryumphes of Fraunces Petrarche; the first Eng. tr. of the Trionfi; ed. by D. D. Carnicelli. 270p il $12 Harvard univ. press

851

ISBN 0-674-53916-8 LC 72-164690

"Petrarch's Trionfi [was] originally published between 1553 and 1556. Morley's is not a literal translation of the original. . . . [He] expanded the text from approximately 2000 lines to 2750 with additions of his own. . . . In this critical edition of Morley's text, Carnicelli provides . . . [an] introduction in which he discusses Morley's life and works, the origins and development of the Trionfi, Renaissance editions and translations of the poem, and the influence it exerted upon Renaissance iconography and English literature. His . . . notes explain difficult passages and allusions, as well as point up Morley's departures from Petrarch's text. . . . [Included also are] 16 plates which trace the iconographic impact of the Trionfi during the 15th and 16th centuries." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] edition of Petrarch's Trionfi . . . will be welcomed by students of the history of translation and literary theory. . . . Morley rendered Petrarch's terza rima by heroic couplets . . . [but] his translation abounds in errors, omissions and additions, all painstakingly catalogued in Carnicelli's copious notes. But even Morley's mistakes are instructive. . . . (Carnicelli provides) a glossary. . . . Some further discussion of the structure of the poem, and its relation to the Canzoniere, might have made this fine volume even more useful."

Choice 9:808 S '72 260w

"Morley misread some lines [and] substituted phrases of his own when the Italian eluded him. . . . He did [however] manage to capture the flavor of the poem for his audience. . . . This is an exemplary editorial performance which should prove of significant value to students of the Renaissance." W. J. Roscelli

Library J 97:1328 Ap 1 '72 250w

PETRARCH, FRANCESCO. Trionfi. See Petrarch, F. Lord Morley's Tryumphes of Fraunces Petrarche

PETRAS, JAMES F. Cultivating revolution; the United States and agrarian reform in Latin America [by] James F. Petras and Robert LaPorte, Jr. 469p maps $10 Random house

338.1 Agriculture—Latin America. Agriculture—Economic aspects. Agriculture and state. Land tenure

ISBN 0-394-46789-2 LC 70-140722

This is "a study of agrarian reform in Latin America, examined through three cases—Chile under Frei (1964-1970), Peru under the military (1968-), and Cuba under Castro (1959-)." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Virginia Freehafer

Ann Am Acad 400:203 Mr '72 280w

"This is an excellent and highly readable [study]. . . . [It] is a polemical book, but one well substantiated with data and refreshingly free of political science jargon. Recommended for academic and large public libraries." Mark Falcoff

Library J 96:2521 Ag '71 270w

PETRIE, GLEN. A singular iniquity; the campaigns of Josephine Butler. 317p $7.95 Viking

B or 92 Butler, Josephine. Prostitution. Woman—Social conditions

ISBN 0-670-64711-X LC 76-162662

"Before England's Contagious Diseases Act of 1864 was repealed in 1886, suspected prostitutes in garrison towns were required to submit to examinations for venereal disease upon pain of imprisonment. . . . The situation aroused the concern of Butler, a young, beautiful member of the aristocracy, who until her death at 78 in 1906 organized opposition to 'white slavery,' organized prostitution, and the . . . double standard of morality. This biography, based largely on letters, journals, and unpublished manuscripts, details the . . . conditions she found in England and the Continent [and] her fierce battles for reform and equality of the sexes." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Though much of the material in this book must of necessity be 'sensational,' the treatment is not. Here is a sound, well-written, lively study of a remarkable woman who overcame personal reticence and public scorn to remedy one of the evils capitalism encouraged. Proponents of licensed prostitution in the United States today should read this biography for an historical perspective on the problem. This book deserves wide reading; not merely cultural historians and legislators, but mothers, teachers, and anyone interested in the relationship of the family to society will find [it] revealing but also quietly inspiring." Eileen Kennedy

Best Sell 31:488 F 1 '72 450w

"Petrie, novelist turned historian, has written a sympathetic account of Butler's campaigns against regulated prostitution in Victorian England and on the continent. . . . This is a book which the general public will understand. It is written with a flare combining the factual with the dramatic and sentimental. . . . At times Petrie misuses terms, i.e. assuming that 'liberal' and 'radical' are synonymous. Less than adequate index."

PETRIE, GLEN—Continued

Choice 9:123 Mr '72 120w

Reviewed by R. R. Gambee

Library J 97:1007 Mr 15 '72 120w

N Y Rev of Books 17:40 D 16 '71 250w

N Y Times Bk R p18 D 19 '71 60w

"When ruffians set fire to the building in which she was holding a meeting, Mrs. Butler refused to retreat. She visited brothels alone. . . . She plotted successfully to expose the traffic in fresh country girls and its links to men in high places. These episodes are refreshing oases amid Glen Petrie's relentlessly chronological, minutely detailed record of Mrs. Butler's political struggles. In his laudable respect for facts, mustered by zealous research, his human subject tends to slip through his fingers. Petrie's rather conventional judgments, and his quite unconscious male bias, keep her further at a distance. . . . He reproaches her previous biographers for hailing her as a feminist. She was not, he asserts, save 'in the broadest sense,' an opinion that calls into question his own comprehension of the term."

Muriel Haynes

Sat R 55:28 Ja 1 '72 800w

TLS p1470 N 26 '71 600w

PETRONI, FRANK A. Two, four six, eight, when you gonna integrate? [by] Frank A. Petroni and Ernest A. Hirsch; with C. Lilian Petroni. 270p $9.95 Behavioral publications; pa 258p $2.75 Liveright

370.19 Segregation in education. U.S.—Race relations

SBN 87705-014-7; 87140-053-7 (pa)

LC 77-130912

"The title of this book is taken from a school cheer at Plains High School, pseudonym for the school at which the interviews reported took place. This cheer illustrates one of the premises of the book: that although the school is overtly integrated with about the same proportion of blacks and whites as live in the community, the actuality is that segregation is the dominant mode of life in the school. . . . A total of sixteen blacks, twenty-three whites and five Mexican-Americans was interviewed, using similar questions. Interviews were conducted in small groups of similar students, and the groups were categorized using a system of classes generally prevalent in the school: elite blacks, militant blacks, white racist, white conservatives, white hippies, white peaceniks, others." (Ann Am Acad)

"The authors, or editors—since the book is predominantly verbatim reporting of interviews with Plains High School students—have produced a view of integrated education which is unusual and enlightening, though not surprising to those who are in urban education. . . . The compelling part of this work is in the words of [the] students. . . . They clearly show that they are the mirror and microcosm of their society. . . . The authors' comments at the beginning and end of the book are rather well done, but the heavy-handed, foreshadowing comments interlaced among the students responses presume that the reader cannot understand the usually lucid statements of the students. The value of this book lies in the open expression of opinion that the interviewers apparently were successful in stimulating."

J. L. Nelson

Ann Am Acad 398:202 N '71 440w

"The professional and nonprofessional alike interested in race relations will find the material presented in this book both novel and highly readable. . . . Unanimous agreement is expressed among all the students interviewed that definite differences exist between them and their parents and grandparents in feelings about racially different people. . . . Despite such sentiments, however, we find in the interviews repeated stereotyping of racially different people. . . . Such stereotyping naturally leads the reader to question the sincerity of the interviewees in their expression of racial tolerance. In sum, the book is not—and the authors would not claim it to be—a major contribution to the sociology of race relations. It suffers from a lack of scholarly analysis of the intergroup relations reflected in the interviews. To serve any useful purpose it should be used in conjunction with a standard text on race relations since it was not intended to be a text." A. M. Padilla

Contemp Sociol 1:466 S '72 900w

"There is a great potential for a book of this type, but here the authors fall short. Instead of really analyzing what is said and why in their commentary, they often only reiterate. Whenever a student interviewed expresses an unfounded opinion about a racial group, the authors insert a comment stating that it is a myth, but give no evidence proving or disproving it. There are times, also, when the reader suspects that the students are saying only what they feel is expected of them. This title may interest educators who might want to use it as a teaching text; however, public libraries will not find it helpful." I. F. Dillon

Library J 96:2530 Ag '71 150w

PEYTON, K. M. The Beethoven medal; il. by the author. 185p $4.50 Crowell

ISBN 0-690-12846-0 LC 71-175109

Teen-aged Ruth Hollis, heroine of Fly-by-night, (BRD 1969) develops a crush on Pat Pennington, hero of Pennington's Last Summer, (BRD 1971) 'a nineteen-year-old delivery boy, despite his surly attitude and apparent indifference. As they become better acquainted she discovers the complexities of his character: he has had an unhappy home life, served a jail term for assault, and displays a promising musical talent.' (Library J)

"[Pat's] really a temperamental piano genius, a quality which seems to redeem him in all eyes, even those of the police, who release him temporarily from a second prison term in order to play in a local concert. The book closes with our heroine vowing to wait, and our hero sulking off to serve his sentence, leaving his good-luck (what a misnomer!) Beethoven Medal as a sign of his love. Shades of the soap operas. One note does ring true in that many young lovers do believe themselves capable of handling impossible problems, blind to obvious pitfalls. For this reason, our teenage readers will keep the book circulating, though gaining little but 'pastime' from it." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 32:284 S 15 '72 140w [YA]

Horn Bk 48:475 O '72 190w

"[A] sensitive British novel about young love. . . . The believable conclusion in which Patrick is again remanded into custody nevertheless leaves hope that things might work out for the young couple at some future time. Peyton accurately captures the insecurity of adolescence and the roller coaster emotions of first love. The realistic dialogue . . . shouldn't deter libraries from purchasing this compelling novel which mirrors life as adolescents know it." A. D. Ehler

Library J 97:3462 O 15 '72 140w

"It will be a pity if [this book does not] find its way into the hands of 15- and 16-year-olds who rarely read because they can't find books that mean anything to them."

New Statesman 82:661 N 12 '71 40w [YA]

TLS p1318 O 22 '71 270w

PFEFFER, J. ALAN. Basic (spoken) German dictionary for everyday usage; grunddeutsch. (Pittsburgh. Univ. Inst. for basic German. Publication, no 4) 350p $5.95 Prentice-Hall

433.2 German language—Dictionaries—English

SBN 13-367755-9 LC 73-116147

This "dictionary contains: (a) over 3000 of the most common German words spoken or printed today, (b) almost as many everyday patterns based on these words, and (c) about 8000 sentences which illustrate the most familiar meanings of both." (Introd) English-German Index.

"While the inclusion of terms dealing with modern means of travel and communication is expected, one wonders about the many varieties of fish, trees, and flowers, particularly in view of the lack of terms for insurance, taxes, and other governmental situations, which one encounters in daily discussions. On the whole, a helpful volume for students, but not a necessary library acquisition."

Choice 8:204 Ap '71 120w

"A dictionary has finally reached the market which can be recommended as the auxiliary for any text required of students as long as they are concerned with mastering the complexities of German. . . . [It] would be a tremendous help already in the first year. Its effectiveness is enhanced in advanced conversation and composition courses during the third and fourth year of college study. For the unique feature of this dictionary is that it gives the student the closest thing available to realistic priorities in vocabulary acquisition. . . . The 'English-German Index' (90 pages) alone, which also lists the basic vocabulary, would indeed be very helpful." E. A. Metzger

Mod Lang J 56:61 Ja '72 600w

PFEFFER, ROSE. Nietzsche: disciple of Dionysus. 297p $12 Bucknell univ. press

193 Nietzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm
ISBN 0-8387-1069-7 LC 76-178041

"Pfeffer's effort to find unity in Nietzsche's thought focuses on his tragic (Dionysian) world view, and the correlated repudiation of the other-worldliness of Platonism, Christianity, and Romanticism." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This study] has a number of insightful emphases: the 'eternal recurrence of the same' as central to Nietzsche's thought, the importance of art to his ontology, the tragic spirit as basic to his vision. But the discussion is limited by a logical and existentialistic humanism, and is repetitious as well as badly written at times, though, contrary to most dissertations, there are also many felicitous passages. . . . Pfeffer also has a disconcerting habit of either finding 'rapprochements' between Nietzsche and almost everybody else (Aristotle, Kant, contemporary scientific indeterminacy, Spinoza, Goethe, etc.) or nitpicking and sometimes wrongheaded criticism. . . . Partial index, good notes, somewhat confusing bibliography. Recommended only for libraries with larger-than-average holdings in philosophy."

Choice 9:1142 N '72 180w

"[The author's] repeated and unqualified characterization of Spinoza as a pantheist must be questioned; nonetheless, she provides a lucid and thought-provoking discussion of Nietzsche's debt to him and to Goethe in the development of a 'strong pessimism' combined with an affirmation of this world with all its contradictions." C. R. Thomas

Library J 97:2736 S 1 '72 150w

PFEIFFER, DOUG. Skiing. . . the Killy way. See Killy, J.-C.

PFLUG, WARNER. The UAW in pictures. 194p $10; pa $4.95 Wayne state univ. press

331.881 United Automobile, Aerospace, and Agricultural Implement Workers of America
ISBN 0-8143-1432-5 LC 71-138492

"Archivist Pflug has selected some 300 photographs from the files of Wayne State University's Archives of Labor History and Urban Affairs, and has combined them with a brief text outlining the union's growth and development to produce this pictorial history." (Library J) Index of illustrations. Index of names.

"As Pflug notes, pictorial histories can usually illuminate 'what, when, and who,' but not 'why.' Unfortunately, only a few of the photographs are of potential interest to students and scholars. (These show factories, assembly lines, and labor-management clashes and other UAW crises.) Most illustrations will interest only those personally involved in the photographed episodes. Pflug supports the photographs with a text, but the latter is uncritical and undocumented. . . . Not recommended for acquisition."

Choice 8:1223 N '71 120w

"Typography and layout are excellent; the text is adequate. Although there is a definite pro-union slant, the compilation is of considerable interest in showing the union leadership as people rather than as demigods or devils. Of particular interest to this reviewer were the photos of early assembly lines, the well-known picture of the 'battle of the overpass,' and pictures of the young Walter Reuther. Suggested for labor history collections." William Gibelman
Library J 96:3324 O 15 '71 120w

PHEBUS, GEORGE. Alaskan Eskimo life in the 1890's as sketched by native artists [by] George Phebus, Jr. 168p $15 Smithsonian inst. press

970.4 Eskimos—Art. Eskimos—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-87474-114-9 LC 70-172514

"In 1967 a storage unit of the Smithsonian Institution turned up a collection of drawings that had been done by students at various schools in western Alaska under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Education at the end of the last century. . . . The drawings (pen and ink, pencil, and crayon) are the work of young adult Eskimos rather than children. Eskimo life, in all its aspects, is depicted. The 123 black-and-white drawings have been grouped for this book according to their subjects, e.g., food collecting, transportation, ceremonials, reindeer breeding. For each drawing, its size in inches, the method used, and a title are given (either the artist's own or, if lacking, one assigned by the author). A short description of the picture and the activity shown is given, often with a quotation from other sources describing this same activity about the time the drawing was made." (Library J) Bibliography.

"This large collection of Eskimo paintings would be a beautiful addition to the libraries of artists and anthropologists. But for anthropologists who are not specifically interested in art, the text suffers from a lack of chronological and geographical specificity, i.e. it is not known exactly when and where the paintings were produced. The black-and-white drawings are, however, accompanied with brief interpretative texts extracted from various ethnographical accounts. . . . Phebus has put together an interesting book but the task of compiling a definitive source on Eskimo art (sketches) is still open."

Choice 9:803 S '72 250w

"The collection gives an exquisite and often charming insight into the day-to-day lives of the Eskimos living on the shores of the Bering Sea, at a time when they were in the first throes of acculturation. This is a book that can be enjoyed by layman and expert alike."

N. T. Corley

Library J 97:2567 Ag '72 280w

PHILIP, JOHN. Every other inch a lady. See Lillie, B.

PHILIP, LOTTE BRAND. The Ghent altarpiece and the art of Jan van Eyck. 255p pl col pl $35 Princeton univ. press

759.9493 Eyck, Hubert van. Eyck, Jan van
ISBN 0-691-03870-8 LC 73-113007

The author attempts to reconstruct the original appearance of the Ghent altarpiece and to determine the authorship and meaning of the work. She also seeks to reevaluate the criteria for judging Jan van Eyck's other works. Bibliography. Index.

"An acceptable solution to the enigma of this great painting. . . . has eluded generations of scholars and, despite this present herculean effort, it is destined to do so for some time, if not for eternity. . . . Philip's book is a major contribution, elucidating several of the darkest corners of the Eyckian morass. The final chapter, assessing the role of the Ghent altar in northern painting, is nothing short of brilliant. But, in the course of this entertaining journey, the reader is conducted through such a complex web of surmise, conjecture, and hypothesis, that it is often difficult, if not impossible, to determine the exact boundaries between art and reality. This publication will doubtless elicit strong criticisms, necessitating the rethinking of much hallowed ground, and, if only for that reason, it is an important achievement."

Choice 9:500 Je '72 170w

"Philip clearly sets forth a revolutionary interpretation of the 'Ghent Altarpiece.' . . . Her new solution to the thorny problem of separating respective contributions of Hubert and Jan van Eyck is brilliantly argued on the basis of a new reading of the quatrain found on the frame. . . . This scholarly study, a lucid model of sound art historical methodology, will take its place with Erwin Panofsky's Early Netherlandish Painting [BRD 1954]

PHILIP, L. B.—Continued

■ one of the basic works not only on Jan van Eyck and the Ghent Altar but also on 15th-Century painting (and sculpture). The plates are excellent." Jaroslav Folda
Library J 97:2178 Je 15 '72 250w

"Throughout the first two chapters Dr Philip's dialectical method gives some cause for concern. What is presented as a hypothesis in one paragraph is used as a firm basis for a further hypothesis in the next, and a number of far-reaching claims are presented without supporting evidence. The later chapters, though they make many interesting points, contain a strong element of fantasy, which must in turn react on the proposed reconstruction of the altarpiece. The fact that Dr Philip can write so freely about these little paintings does not, of course, mean that her analysis of the Ghent Altarpiece itself should not be taken seriously. If we disregard much of what she says about its iconography . . . it is still possible that some of her observations on the structure of the painting and on the inscription may be correct."
TLS p1356 N 10 '72 1300w

PHILIPS, JUDSON. Escape a killer. 186p $4.95 Dodd

ISBN 0-396-06313-6 LC 70-156861

"At any moment the lunatic up above can throw a switch, and the air supply will be cut off in the old bomb shelter where Peter Styles and two companions are trapped. Can the trio escape the 'unescapable' cellar, the madman's murderous employees, the killer dogs roaming the grounds, and the electric fence surrounding the Connecticut estate?" (Sat R)

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:2675 S 1 '71 70w

"[This book] is turgid, conventional and artificial. A modern Gothic, it has . . . little suspense; the plot can be figured out a quarter of the way through. And the writing! One reads things like 'Oh my God, Peter!' she whispered. 'What have I done to you?' and begins to suspect that Philips is not a supreme stylist. Later, one reads, 'What have I done to you, Carole? Oh, my God, what have I done to you?'" Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p36 O 3 '71 100w

"The build-up, the dilemma, and the solution are all cliff-hanger stuff that in retrospect smacks of Pearl White, but Judson Philips makes the yarn credible while you read it; even if later a loophole or two come to mind." Haskel Frankel

Sat R 54:38 S 25 '71 90w

"In the first part, lamed journalist Peter Styles goes characteristically a-gooding, with startling Poe-ish ending. Second part is a tough get-me-out-of-here; third is high melodrama, with helpful hint on how to call the bluff on a gun. Nice reading."

TLS p612 My 26 '72 40w

PHILIPS, JUDSON. The vanishing senator. 181p $4.95 Dodd

ISBN 0-396-06579-1 LC 72-721

"A Senator and a famous political columnist had been kidnapped, and the President had been roused in the White House and presented with an ultimatum. A million dollars was a part of the demand; the release of a score of criminals from jails all over the country and safe passage to Cuba or Algiers for them, another part. The President must respond immediately or the Senator and the columnist would be found dead . . . and two new hostages, men of national importance, would be seized and the ransom demands increased." (Publisher's note)

Best Sell 32:282 S 15 '72 100w

"[This] political thriller . . . aimed at readers with liberal tendencies, is a little simplistic and emotive; what excitement there is gets drowned in the extreme complication of the denouement." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3186 O 1 '72 90w

"[This story] has the makings of a cracker-jack suspense novel, tied in with a highly newsworthy subject. But Phillips—who is equally familiar under his pen name of Hugh Pentecost—has neither the imagination nor the style to raise the situation to epic proportions. His characters are stereotypes, and his writing can best be described as workmanlike." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ag 20 '72 150w

"[Philips] novell renews our acquaintance with Peter Styles, the crusading reporter for Newsday magazine, whose wooden leg (caused by two hoodlums out to 'get' him) scarcely impedes his progress as newshound-cum-amateur detective. . . . Styles's ingenuity in solving the case is greatly reinforced by two blacks, Rocky Jackson and Duke Richards, who get into the act for their own ends. . . . [They] are portrayed with enough savvy to make us want to see more of them. [This] is one of the best Peter Styles mysteries to date." O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:74 S 9 '72 250w

PHILIPS, JUDSON. For another book by this author see Pentecost, H.

PHILLIPS, ROBERT, ed. Aspects of Alice; Lewis Carroll's dreamchild as seen through the critics' looking-glasses, 1865-1971; il. by Sir John Tenniel and Lewis Carroll. 450p $15 Vanguard

823 Dodgson, Charles Lutwidge—Alice's adventures in wonderland. Dodgson, Charles Lutwidge—Through the looking glass and what Alice found there
SBN 8149-0700-8 LC 70-178822

This is a collection of poems and essays on "Alice" and on her author. Writers "whose comments appear in this collection [include] W. H. Auden, Walter de la Mare, Edmund Wilson, and J. B. Priestley." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by Julian Moynahan

Book World p26 D 5 '71 650w

"Two of the essays are new—one on the child in Victorian literature and another ■ Jungian analysis. . . . Aspects of Alice is most clearly set up for comparisons of critical approaches. Recommended."

Choice 9:507 Je '72 200w

Economist 245:45 D 23 '72 300w

"More than half of the selections provide material that increases a reader's understanding and pleasure (for example, reprints of the once universally known poems which Carroll parodies, and reviews of events and allusions familiar to Carroll's mid-Victorian audience). Nevertheless, much of the remaining criticism is wildly tangential to Carroll's work. It is heavily weighted with preconceived theories—Freudian, Jungian, and allegorical—and with forced applications to Carroll's text and to his life. . . . The anthology omits recent studies on Carroll's contributions to the fields of linguistics and semantics." W. P. Baker

Library J 96:4095 D 15 '71 190w

Reviewed by Gillian Tindall

New Statesman 84:520 O 13 '72 1000w

"The book is handsomely designed—plenty of white space, lovely paper that can accommodate both the type and the drawings by Carroll and Sir John Tenniel. Also included are some of Carroll's photographs of the real Alice, plus photographs of Carroll and Sir John. But the reader can tell from the front matter what a pudgy book this will prove in the end: a ponderously clever title, a dedication page too embarrassing to quote and a foreword that begins (with violins and French horns): 'She has survived the Victorian Age, several wars and depressions, the Age of Anxiety, and when last seen . . . One feels one has stumbled on a book about Alice by the Water Babies.' John Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p3 Ja 30 '72 1000w

"Phillips has edited and introduced ■ remarkable book. . . . It is a book that bears witness as few others do to the human need to name and explain. There is a fury behind this book, a rage for Ordnung, Ordnung. . . . There are some selections . . . that would tire the patience of the White Knight. . . . The Alice books are deep, but they are not bibles, nor case histories to be analyzed as though Dodgson himself were on the couch in front of us, nor elaborately veiled political documents. Certainly, many of the essays here are eye-openers, reminders that Lewis Carroll demands the reader's full attention." William Heyen

Sat R 55:42 Ja 15 '72 700w

PIAGET, JEAN. Mental imagery in the child; a study of the development of imaginal representation [by] Jean Piaget and Bärbel Inhelder; in collaboration with M. Bovet [and others] tr. from the French by P. A. Chilton. 396p il $12.50 Basic bks.

155.4 Imagination. Child study
ISBN 0-465-04498-0 LC 79-150811

The authors discuss the role of imagery in cognition. "In a review of the history of the problem, the authors arrive at two contrasting hypotheses: one that views knowledge as copy, thereby attributing primacy to the image; the other, held by the authors, that regards knowledge as assimilation. In this latter view, the role of imagery is symbolic, indispensable, yet subordinate to the operational dynamisms whereby the person acts upon the image. Cognition is thus achieved only when the image has been subjected to an intellectual operation." (Library J)

"[This book] is comparable in theoretical importance and format to Piaget's Mechanisms of perception [BRD 1970]. The book is valuable reading to deepen understanding of Piaget's basic notions only if the reader has a firm grasp of the distinction between figurative and operative knowing—see Piaget, Genetic epistemology [BRD 1970]. Teachers of Piaget will find assistance in understanding imagery as active internalized imitation as contrasted to the old view of imagery as the prolongation of perception. . . . Students will find the replication of the simple experiments an avenue to understanding Piagetian concepts and procedures. A very useful book." (Choice 8:1252 N '71 120w)

"The experimental data are ingeniously derived and rigorously controlled. . . . The study has philosophical implications and will greatly interest a wide range of professionals in child development, psychology, and related fields." J. H. Di Leo

Library J 96:2524 Ag '71 150w

PIAGET, JEAN. Science of education and the psychology of the child; tr. from the French by Derek Coltman. 186p $7.50 Orion; for sale by Grossman pubs.

370.15 Education. Educational psychology
LC 70-106302

"In the first section Piaget describes the evolution of education and teaching between 1935-65. The second section deals with innovations in education which stem from new discoveries in child psychology. Piaget points to the need for a better translation of psychological findings into materials for teacher training and practice." (Choice)

"In this modestly sized book Piaget looks at the educational enterprise from a broad historical and international perspective. . . . His discussion of the implications of his own work for educational practice is a model of what needs to be done for psychological research generally. In this programmatic book, as in his research studies and his theoretical writings, Piaget is an innovator who should be heeded by all who are looking for new directions in education." (Choice 8:1252 N '71 180w)

Reviewed by L. B. Stevens

N Y Times Bk R p40 S 20 '70 70w

PICASSO, PABLO. Picasso [by] Roland Penrose. 15p col pl $5.95 Phaidon; for sale by Praeger

759.6
ISBN 0-7148-1484-9 LC 70-141064

The forty-eight color plates of Picasso's work are preceded by a thirteen page introductory essay.

"This is a series that can be highly recommended to libraries from the high school level upward and to students and amateurs of art." Best Sell 31:306 O 1 '71 10w

"The prefatory essay . . . [is] perfunctory and the color reproductions . . . are deplorable. Granted that the asking price is minimal for art books today, the prospective customer is not receiving a bargain. . . . Not recommended." (Choice 9:50 Mr '72 30w)

"The choice of Picassos is good."

Economist 240:53 Ag 7 '71 10w

"Phaidon Press is living up to its long-standing reputation as a pioneer of haute vulgarisation in art history. The quality of the colour reproduction is almost uniformly good. . . . [This] would make [an] excellent Christmas present for the ordinary man or woman (or child) who is interested enough in art to spend an occasional afternoon at the Tate or the National Gallery." (TLS p1598 D 24 '71 90w)

PICASSO, PABLO. Picasso's posters; comp. by Christopher Czwiklitzer. vp il col il $60 Random house

741.67 Posters
ISBN 0-394-47222-5 LC 75-163490

This is "a translation of a revision of Czwiklitzer's original French book published in 1968 (290 affiches de Pablo Picasso). The revised edition has two parts. . . . First come 310 large illustrations of both original and reproductive posters. . . . The second part of the book is a catalogue raisonné, with 377 small reference reproductions and . . . physical, chronological, and edition data." (Library J)

"Two new factors greatly enhance this . . . visual presentation: the enlargement of many illustrations to full-page format and the reproduction of 72 posters in reasonably faithful colors. . . . [The] catalogue eliminates two listings from Czwiklitzer's 1968 edition, but adds 36 new ones. It also reproduces many more of the variations, even of the old listings. On the whole, then . . . this new edition of Czwiklitzer's book is definitely the most comprehensive and faithful presentation of all posters by or connected with Picasso. Thus, in spite of its high cost, the book is recommended to all art collections." Andrew Robison

Library J 96:4085 D 15 '71 190w

"[This] is a fine art book because the reproductions look very much like the actual posters and because it is a definitive catalogue of both the original posters for which Picasso made the design and those that reproduced an existing piece of art. The cumulative effect of the variations of smiling suns and satyrs, of bullfights and doves, of lettering that becomes an integral part of the illustrative effect, and of the striking economy of line is marvelous." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 78:103 D 13 '71 100w

PICKARD, R. A. E. Dictionary of 1,000 best films; il. with phot. from the archives. 496p $12 Assn. press

791.43 Moving pictures—Dictionaries
ISBN 0-8096-1805-2 LC 70-129433

This work includes "films produced in the United States and abroad since 1903, the year the first feature film The Great Train Robbery was released. Listed in alphabetical order, each film is briefly described critically and its plot given in synopsis, followed by credits for studio production, direction, screenplay, photography, authorship, art direction, music, editing and members of the cast." (Publisher's note)

"One questions some omissions (Breathless, Rules of the Game, Shame, Forbidden Games). And some of the critical statements (Mankiewicz's Julius Caesar is 'far superior to Olivier's three Shakespearean adaptations' and is 'arguably the greatest Shakespearean film ever made') are highly personal value judgments that don't belong in a reference work of this kind. The descriptive information for each entry isn't consistently inclusive (e.g., some Oscars are mentioned others aren't), and the absence of cross references or an index is rather sad. . . . This 'dictionary' is pleasant to browse through, and there's nothing else quite like it; but it's not much of a reference book." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:1003 Mr 15 '72 120w

"Film enthusiasts will not want to pass up . . . [this] unusual reference work. . . . It is not hard to see—flipping through the book—the many changes that the movies have rung in the period between the starving 'Gold Rush' Chaplin, cooking his shoes, to the dispossessed Midnight Cowboys roaming 42nd Street. The selections are broad, the synopses succinct, the credits thorough." Nona Balakian

N Y Times Bk R p33 N 5 '72 200w

Reviewed by D. M. Glixon
Sat R 55:75 My 6 '72 50w

PIEKALKIEWICZ, JAROSLAW, Jr. ed. The Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia: its effects on Eastern Europe. See Czerwinski, E. J.

PIEL, GERARD. The acceleration of history. 369p $8.95 Knopf

901.94 Civilization, Modern—1950-. Science and civilization. Technology and civilization
ISBN 0-394-47312-4 LC 71-171118

"A collection of recent addresses and essays by the publisher of Scientific American dealing with some . . . conflicts—political, economic, ethical—that flare along the boundary of science and society." (Nation)

"[This] is a splendid book, devoid of scientific jargon, that deserves to be widely read and discussed. Although Piel notes, 'Progress in science and technology has outrun the pace of evolution in our social institutions, he nonetheless concludes, 'Science is the ultimate source of value in the life of mankind.' He is an optimist, but considers carefully the problems of poverty, pollution, population growth, unemployment and disemployment, etc., and offers some thought-stimulating proposals for their solution. His essay 'On Recollection' is about the best thing I have yet read on the use of computers in libraries. It is essential reading for all librarians, and indeed for all literate and thinking men." Jack Goodwin

Library J 97:888 Mr 1 '72 130w

"Of particular interest: 'Economic Development by Democratic Planning,' 'Second thoughts on Birth Control' and 'The Treason of the Clerks,' an excellent statement of the consequences of financing scientific research by funds from so-called mission-oriented agencies." Carey McWilliams

Nation 214:828 Je 26 '72 70w

"Because the author expounds in a pure form the position of the moderate and progressive liberal humanist Establishment he represents, it is worthwhile to examine his arguments. . . . [He argues that] in the advanced societies, which have passed through the industrial revolution, we have entered an era of abundance. Despite this we still behave as if our lives were ruled by scarcity, the traditional lever of behavior. . . . In order fully to remake society so that all its members are able to fulfill themselves and the present unconscionable inequities are cured, [he feels] much greater use of public funds is necessary, but is withheld because of outmoded ideological blinkers. . . . There are a number of comments that can be made about Mr. Piel's thesis. Just how rich we are is a matter of dispute. . . . [Further,] the idea that societal relationships are basically determined by economic relations is familiarly associated with the name of Marx." Jeffrey Marsh

Nat R 24:855 Ag 4 '72 1000w

PIERRE, GEORGE. American Indian crisis. 216p $8.95 Naylor

970.5 Indians of North America—Government relations. Indians of North America—Canada
ISBN 0-8111-0411-7 LC 71-158081

In this "explanation of the Indian situation . . . the chief of the Colville Confederated Tribes of Washington . . . describes how they live and how the present situation developed, proposes remedies intended to bring Indians into the mainstream of American life, and places the responsibility for improving the situation equally on the federal government and on the Indians themselves." (Library J)

"A paradoxical book: Pierre's propensity for 'I sing America' boosterism creates a kind of folksy style of 'bootstrap' reiterative writing which too frequently detracts from the force of his message. Since the book is written for the general reader, it contains none of the usual scholarly paraphernalia such as footnotes, bibliography, or index which would help make it a useful reference work. Yet, Pierre . . . does have 'his people' in mind as he writes, and he does attempt to speak the truth as he sees it as to the severity of the crisis in both Canada and the U.S. Furthermore, his prescriptions as to possible means of alleviating these problems are cogent and compare favorably with the recommendations of other Indian leaders." Choice 9:142 Mr '72 170w

"This is a calm, reasoned [account]. . . . Recommended." H. E. Smith
Library J 97:80 Ja 1 '72 130w

PIERRE, JOSÉ. Gustave Moreau through the eyes of succeeding generations. See Paladilhe, J. Gustave Moreau

PIKE, DIANE KENNEDY. The wilderness revolt; a new view of the life and death of Jesus based on ideas and notes of the late Bishop James A. Pike [by] Diane Kennedy Pike and R. Scott Kennedy. 385p $7.95 Doubleday

232.9 Jesus Christ
LC 72-171311

Extending the radically revisionist views of Christ and the historicity of the Gospel narratives that led to charges of 'blasphemy' against Pike in the 1960s this study, based on research Bishop Pike was conducting in the Judean wilderness at the time of his death, explores and amplifies the notion of Christ as a tragic leader of a band of Jewish Zealots engaged in guerrilla warfare against Roman power in Judaea. Bibliography. Index. The authors are the widow and brother-in-law of the late American religious leader.

"A widow may be forgiven much when she tries to immortalize her husband's memory. That's the only excuse I can think of for publishing this volume. It isn't much of a reason. The 'real' author's conviction seems to be an old one, namely that Jesus was a real, zealous revolutionary. Starting with that presumption, everything in the New Testament is twisted to give substance to the view. Jesus was the Che Guevara of his day. Nonsense! . . . This Jesus is a teacher, a preacher and an unsuccessful prophet. Messiah he is not, and hardly divine. . . . The kindest thing that could have happened to Bishop Pike's notes would have been to give them to some nice, quiet archive." Charles Dollen

Best Sell 32:19 Ap 1 '72 290w

"There is a tendency to overwork the hypothesis that the wilderness covenanters of Qumran (producers of the Dead Sea scrolls) were either closely associated with the Zealots, or were in fact Zealots. . . . As the next step, the authors trace many of the teachings of John the Baptist and Jesus to Qumran. It is to their credit that they put forward such debatable positions with scholarly reserve and that they with candor document extensively the disavowal of such positions by most New Testament scholars. However, to discover this, the reader will have to give very careful attention to the extensive notes at the close of the volume. Bishop Pike's interest in epiphenomena and parapsychology is reflected in the handling of the Resurrection narratives." R. V. Ritter

Library J 97:1027 Mr 15 '72 300w

PILCHER, GEORGE WILLIAM. Samuel Davies: apostle of dissent in Colonial Virginia. 229p $9.75 Univ. of Tenn. press

B or 92 Davies, Samuel

ISBN 87049-121-0 LC 77-134737

This is an account of Davies's "career as evangelist, pastor, educator, hymn writer, and fund raiser. . . . [Included also are his] work in educating Negro slaves and Indians, [his] influencing Patrick Henry's fiery oratory, and in his 4-month tour of Great Britain raising funds for the College of New Jersey (later, Princeton University) which he eventually headed, following Jonathan Edwards." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by S. E. Mead

Am Hist R 77:330 Je '72 600w

"The general purpose of the book is to provide both a narration of the events in Davies's life and an appreciation of his achievements. This is competently done. But the biography is not without serious weakness. The discussions of Davies's poetry, sermons, and intellectual achievement are unsatisfactory. There is no critical analysis of the poetry and no examination of a complete poem—merely long quotations, generalized appreciation, and an attempt to place Davies in the meditative tradition. Mr. Pilcher claims that Davies's greatest significance in American literary history is that he wrote hymns—but not a single hymn is discussed. No sermon is examined as a whole. The basic general fault is that Mr. Pilcher relies upon and follows the traditions of Davies's hagiographers as found in nineteenth-century local histories and partisan religious accounts." J. A. L. Lemay

Am Lit 43:657 Ja '72 550w

"Having edited The Reverend Samuel Davies abroad [BRD 1968], Pilcher is eminently qualified to write this first biography of Davies, a man who dominated the Southern branch of American Presbyterianism for most of his life. The biographer correctly places him at the center of the Hanover Presbytery in Virginia. . . . Excellent bibliography and appendices. Necessary for religion and early American history departments."

Choice 8:1462 Ja '72 130w

"A long-overdue first biography of a colonial religious giant, Pilcher's is a careful historical work that seeks to elevate Davies to near-Jonathan-Edwardsean status."

Christian Century 88:1029 S 1 '71 30w

Reviewed by William Kenney

J Am Hist 58:996 Mr '72 390w

"Standard accounts of the Great Awakening of the eighteenth century generally devote most of their attention to Jonathan Edwards or George Whitefield. Rarely does Samuel Davies receive more than passing notice. Pilcher has attempted to correct the neglect of Davies and to present him as a leading exponent of New Light Presbyterianism in Virginia. . . . The author avoids the pitfall of giving too much credit to Davies and the result is a judicious biography of an important figure in eighteenth-century Virginia."

Va Q R 48:x winter '72 110w

PILLITTERI, JOSEPH. Two hours on Sunday. 256p $5.95 Dial press

LC 77-150406

"The trouble began in the fourth quarter of the Jets game" when Gentleman Johnny Tiehor, starring quarterback of the Normandy Hawks, suffered a knee injury, sidelining him for the season. With 70 seconds to go and a six-point Hawk lead, veteran backup Alex Lincoln wraps up the game. . . . Slated to lead the team against Kansas City the following Sunday, Lincoln knows his future rests on the outcome. Off-field he has to cope with the problems of a second marriage, a father failing in business, and a weak brother whose wife pushes him into debt." (Library J)

Reviewed by Rev. J. M. Murphy

Best Sell 31:359 N 1 '71 400w

Reviewed by C. R. Andrews

Library J 96:2545 Ag '71 220w

"This is a knowledgeably written novel about the game of football itself and about a man who plays football. The author skillfully depicts the freedoms and responsibilities of Alex's job, his personality at home and on the field, the stresses, strains and tensions of everyday living for him. The book is so vividly and sensitively written that even non-football fans will be fascinated." A. B. Masters

Library J 96:4206 D 15 '71 120w [YA]

"Mr. Pillitteri reveals what goes on under the player's helmet without stinting the tension on the field. Sunday's hero emerges as no locker room caricature, but a living, breathing and frequently bleeding human being who commands constant attention." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p34 O 17 '71 160w

PIMSLEUR, PAUL, jt. auth. Poems make pictures. See Rimanelli, G.

PINARD, MAURICE. The rise of a third party: a study in crisis politics. 285p $7.95; pa $4.50 Prentice-Hall

329.9 Social Credit party. Political sociology. Quebec (Province)—Politics and government

ISBN 13-781286-8; 13-781278-7 LC 72-130375

This book examines the "emergence of The Social Credit Party, a third party protest movement, in the province of Quebec in Canada. . . . [The book also; examines the relevance of Marxist theory, mass society theory, theories of collective behavior, recent theory and research in political sociology, diffusionist theory, and other important branches of sociological thought. . . . [It] takes into account such movements as McCarthyism, Goldwaterism, farmers' movements, as well as Social Credit, and CCF/NDP movements elsewhere in Canada." (Publisher's note) Index.

"While at first glance Pinard's book may appear cluttered—a smorgasbord of mass society, diffusionist, Marxist, and psychological theories of human behavior—a closer examination reveals a coherent and tightly knit analysis which remains faithful to the initially posited paradigm of collective behavior. Perhaps the section of the book most interesting to political scientists is the one dealing with Pinard's model of one party dominance. . . . [This] is an exceedingly valuable contribution to the field of Canadian political sociology and stands as a model of sociological research." M. S. Whittington

Ann Am Acad 400:204 Mr '72 410w

"Very detailed sociological study. . . . Pinard has done a creditable job in gathering together some fascinating information about the party's candidates and supporters. The emphasis on survey research is heavy, the jargon at times is tiring, and this is clearly a specialist's book. . . . Should be of use to all Canadian specialists and to all who study the history and functioning of third parties."

Choice 8:1248 N '71 140w

"The weakness in the work, I find, is that while the theory in this book is quite provocative, the data to support it are suggestive rather than convincing. . . . The problems [this study] attacks and the answers it provides are worthwhile. It held my attention throughout. Perhaps the greatest indicator of the book's value to me was that the questions which were constantly being raised in my mind as I read it were the same as those Pinard proceeded to answer. That's quite a good test of a book's logic and relevance."

I. S. Foladare

Contemp Sociol 1:137 Mr '72 750w

"The work is of general interest because of its theoretical rigor, in terms of interpretation, there is not much that is new on the causes of the Creditiste emergence, but the author has established empirically much that previously had been only conjecture. For the sociologist, the major interest will be Pinard's use of survey data and his persuasive reformulation of the theory of mass society. . . . For the historian, the major point is the establishment of the conditions under which the rise of a third party is likely. Here some serious questions must be raised. Pinard slides too easily over cases in Canadian history which do not fit his generalization. . . . [This] is indeed an extremely important book, in Canadian political history and in the sociology of politics generally." M. S. Cross

Library J 96:2338 J1 '71 250w

PINCHOT, ANN, jt. auth. Weep no more, my lady. See Deans, M.

PINCKNEY, ELISE, ed. The letterbook of Eliza Lucas Pinckney, 1739-1762. See Pinckney, E. L.

PINCKNEY, ELIZA LUCAS. The letterbook of Eliza Lucas Pinckney, 1739-1762; ed. by Elise Pinckney; with the editorial assistance of Marvin R. Zahniser and an introd. by Walter Muir Whitehill. 195p $9.95 Univ. of N.C. press

B or 92

ISBN 0-8078-1182-3 LC 76-174733

Eliza Pinckney's "business and personal letters . . . cover agriculture, social life, and the education of her children as well as her joys and sorrows. The letters begin when . . . [Eliza] was 16 and already managing her father's Carolina plantation. After her marriage to Charles Pinckney, there are a dozen or so letters written during her active life in England. . . . The final section of this collection, about half of the volume, deals with the death of her husband, the management of the estate, and her 'poor fatherless boys' who are attending school in England." (Choice) Index.

"This remarkable lady's Letterbook preserves much of her correspondence, now printed for the first time. Obviously only a fragment of her writing is here and one wishes to read more of this cultivated and fascinating woman's [letters]. . . . No brief summary can do justice to the style and content of this valuable series of letters."

Choice 9:1037 O '72 170w

"The correspondent, the mother of Thomas and Charles Pinckney, illuminates the shadowy middle period of South Carolina's eighteenth-century history. The reader gets a different view from that of the usual politically and commercially oriented male penman. . . . Mrs. Pinckney was not apolitical. Her comments on the fearful wars for empire in which her beloved were engaged are cogent, and observations on the Cherokee War, in which she reflected provincial dissatisfaction with British conduct of that conflict, possibly mark the transition of this Englishwoman of Carolina toward Americanization. But the work ends in 1762, and that is the only fault with the volume." Richard Walsh

PINCKNEY, E. L.—Continued

J Am Hist 59:690 D '72 350w

"Crisply edited, the letterbook is clear to the modern eye yet retains its eighteenth-century flavor. Both as source material and as delightful reading it is a welcome addition to the library of anyone interested in colonial America."

Va Q R 48:lxviii summer '72 150w

PINKNEY, ALPHONSO. The American way of violence. 235p $7.95 Random house; pa $1.95 Vintage

301.18 Violence, U.S.—Social conditions
ISBN 0-394-46173-8; 0-394-71700-7 (pa)
LC 71-174712

"Pinkney, author of several books on blacks and the civil rights movement, [describes] his views on violence. He accepts conclusions established by Presidential Commissions and others that 'violence has been an integral component of the American experience' and that a change in the general climate of violence can only emanate from substantive changes in society itself." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The author knows better than to represent violence as a unique American invention, but he neglects to ask why millions of, by implication, relatively nonviolent and not dehumanized persons should have come to this country and submitted to such extreme alteration of their characters. His proposed panacea is socialism. He never compares crime statistics in any socialist country with those of twenty years ago in that same place." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:108 Mr '72 100w

"[This] pat and one-dimensional book is less written than compiled; it gives every sign of being crudely tacked together from standard sources, with the hot sauce of indignation used to disguise the deficiencies of thought and research. . . . [The author] glorifies the youth culture without mentioning Manson or Altamont; he indicts America while playing down or blandly glossing over bloodbaths in the Third World." Karle Meyer

Book World p6 Mr 12 '72 350w

"Although well-written and generally accurate, the book does not present any new thoughts or startling conclusions. So much has already appeared that another general book based on secondary sources, rather than on primary sources or new research, adds little to our store of knowledge." E. K. Welsch

Library J 97:1731 My 1 '72 90w

PINKNEY, ROBERT. Ghana under military rule, 1966-1969. 182p $6.75; pa $3.50 Barnes & Noble

320.9667 Ghana—Politics and government
SBN 416-75080-X; 416-75090-7 (pa)
LC 72-191216

The author is concerned with "such questions as: What were the goals of the military regime and how were they accomplished?; and What means were used by the regime to perform the various functions of government? He investigates . . . the rulers of self-image and the reactions to it by the civil service, the chiefs, and business interests." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A succinct and perceptive study, free from jargon, based on a wealth of interviews as well as secondary materials. . . . Suitable for all libraries with an interest in political science and African studies."

Choice 9:1335 D '72 140w

"With thoroughness and efficiency, the author has produced an excellent case study. . . . The book is well researched and well-written, but the style is not for general readers. Academic libraries will especially be interested in this seemingly impartial study." J. J. Grotzinger

Library J 97:3587 N 1 '72 100w

"[The author] rightly describes the story of the National Liberation Council as a success story 'in the sense that it attained its most important objectives'. . . . He describes the tensions and differences of view which developed among the military leaders of government themselves. He is particularly interesting on the philosophy underlying the return to civilian rule, and perceptive on the issues which had to be faced. This is an excellent, comprehensive, but succinct account of an episode in Ghana's history which has great significance in a far wider African context."

TLS p1046 S 15 '72 230w

PINSKER, SANFORD. The schlemiel as metaphor; studies in the Yiddish and American Jewish novel; with a pref. by Harry T. Moore. 172p $5.45 Southern Ill. univ. press

809.8 Characters and characteristics in literature. Yiddish fiction. American fiction
ISBN 0-8093-0480-5 LC 77-132487

This is a study of the literary "character plagued by ill fortune which is usually the result of his own ineptness. However, rather than being defeated in his comic victimhood, the schlemiel sustains himself by a series of ironic quips and shrugs, suggesting the human frailties of us all. . . . Pinsker points out that it was from out of the Yiddish literature of the East European ghettos in the late nineteenth century that the schlemiel emerged as a key figure. . . . [He] concludes his study with a consideration of the schlemiel as he reappears in American Jewish literature after World War II." (Publisher's note) Index.

"One difficulty inherent in essays gathered together and published as a monograph is that the author is liable to seem uncertain or inconsistent. A second difficulty is that proportion is liable to be sacrificed to convenience. The first of these difficulties can be seen in the rather different accounts given of the origin of the term 'schlemiel' in Mr. Pinsker's second and fifth chapters. . . . The second difficulty—the problem of proportion is unmistakably present in the five-page chapter, 'The Schlemiel on Main Street,' in which Mr. Pinsker rushes through the work of Abraham Cahan, Samuel Ornitz, Michael Gold, Henry Roth, and Nathanael West. Still another aspect of the book which some readers will find objectionable is Mr. Pinsker's attempt at humor. . . . The essays on Singer, Malamud, and Bellow are thoughtful and generally persuasive analyses." Allen Guttman

Am Lit 43:488 N '71 300w

"The scope of the work is an inroad into the literature of Yiddish- and English-writing Jewish authors: Mendele, Shalom Aleichem, I. B. Singer, Malamud, and Bellow. . . . The book on the whole is interesting and frequently insightful, though it is marred by numerous historical and linguistic inaccuracies and by an often forced or obtuse use of the schlemiel notion. It also gives the impression of an unfortunate ignorance of the literature in the original Yiddish, despite the author's frequent intrusions of household Yiddish words into English sentences. Recommended (with reservations) for its occasional good insights and despite much falseness and ringing false."

Choice 8:1020 O '71 170w

PINTO-DUSCHINSKY, MICHAEL. jt. auth. The British general election of 1970. See Butler, D.

PIPES, RICHARD. Struve, liberal on the left, 1870-1905, v 1. (Russian res. center stud. 64) $10 Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Struve, Peter Berngardovich
ISBN 0-674-84595-1 LC 77-131463

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by T. H. Von Laue

Am Hist R 77:1162 O '72 700w

Reviewed by N. V. Riasanovsky

Pol Sci Q 87:521 S '72 600w

Va Q R 48:xiv winter '72 120w

PITT, PETER. Surgeon in Nepal. 225p 11 maps $10 Transatlantic

617 Surgeons—Personal narratives. Nepal
SBN 7195-2191-2

The experiences of an army surgeon who, in 1966, was stationed at a hospital in "Nepal's Dharan cantonment, located in the foothills of the Himalayas, a British recruiting and resettlement depot for Gurkha soldiers. . . . Although the hospital had been established to serve the military personnel and their families, in actual practice it provided care, without charge, for patients from all over Nepal. A day's work for the surgeon might include plastic surgery on a child whose face had been severely mauled by a bear . . . surgery on a broken jaw, and the difficult delivery of a baby." (Library J)

"Pitt writes in an informal, readable style. The superb illustrations by George Douglas, himself a resident of Nepal, add much authenticity and detail to the portrayal of Nepalese life and customs. Recommended for general as well as subject collections." S. L. Hopkinson
Library J 96:4003 D 1 '71 150w

"[The author could have had similar experiences] in many comparable villages of South Asia. His report tells little more about the Nepalese than that they are poor, backward and sometimes superstitious. Most of the time he delves into the most gory details of his work." Werner Levi
Pacific Affairs 45:304 summer '72 200w

PITTSBURGH. UNIVERSITY. Anthropology department. Essays in comparative social stratification. See Plotnicov, L., ed.

PIVEN, FRANCES FOX. Regulating the poor: the functions of public welfare [by] Frances Fox Piven & Richard A. Cloward. 389p $10 Pantheon bks.

301.45 Poverty. Public welfare. U.S.—Social policy
ISBN 0-394-46038-3 LC 70-135368

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Thomas Blau
Am J Soc 78:444 S '72 1600w
Economist 244:50 Ag 5 '72 450w

Reviewed by Henry Cohen
Pol Sci Q 87:631 D '72 500w (Review essay)

PLACE, FRANCIS. The autobiography of Francis Place (1771-1854) ed. with an introd. and notes by Mary Thale. 308p $19.50 Cambridge

B or 92
ISBN 0-521-08399-0 LC 78-174265

"Place, 'the radical tailor of Charing Cross,' is an important figure in the history of the English reform movement. He was a member of the London Corresponding Society (considered subversive in its time), an active Chartist, and a disciple and associate of Jeremy Bentham, James Mill, and John Stuart Mill. In his autobiography, he . . . describes the life of the London working class of his time—their education, the working conditions of the apprentices, the secret organization of journeymen's strikes, housing, children's clothes, games, the bawdy songs workers sang, the pubs they frequented, the hunger and despair they suffered." (Library J) Index.

"This is a well, but modestly, edited initial publication of the complete autobiography augmented by some other manuscript materials in footnotes and about 30 pages of editorial introduction. As such it is an interesting and useful work for the study of English social history and radical politics, and it is well deserving of a wide audience. Yet it is by no means a necessary purchase for smaller libraries, and the price may dissuade all but the larger research libraries from buying it." Choice 9:870 S '72 130w

"Thale presents a carefully annotated edition of Place's autobiography, up to now available only in manuscript at the British Museum. . . . Entirely self-educated and a lifelong Londoner, Place has left a record of London common life as authentic as Mayhew's classic works. Because the account is so detailed, even pedantic, some of it is tedious; but it is an invaluable primary source for the history of the English working class." F. M. Blake
Library J 97:2181 Je 15 '72 180w

"A great deal of Place is very vivid and dramatic. If he is sententious he had the gift of wonder at himself as a piece of social history. . . . He is not anything like as good as Pepys, nor as sunny, but he does bring the anxious, violent, picaresque artisan's London to life. This is a profoundly London story and told in the flat London way. Although Place's position as a working-class reformer is more important to the historian, and fully discussed in Miss Thale's carefully edited book, it is his self-congratulatory and busy Londonishness that remains amusingly in the mind." V. S. Pritchett

New Statesman 83:352 Mr 17 '72 1450w

"[The editor] notes that the reason Place's son Francis did not publish [the autobiography] soon after his father's death in 1854, as he set out to do, remains uncertain. He went through it carefully, like a good mid-Victorian, cutting out a number of passages which he thought were indelicate. Perhaps he felt, long before historians were directly concerned, that his father had outlived his time and that the book would have very little appeal. Dr Thale's edition, intended to be a faithful transcription of what Place wrote, will have considerable appeal if only because Place, who prided himself both on his rationality and his soundness of judgment, has become a figure of controversy for the first time since his death. She recognizes this herself and is at pains to point out the inadequacies of the autobiography. Throughout she discharges her editorial responsibilities in a critical spirit."

TLS p575 My 19 '72 1500w

PLATE, KENNETH H. Management personnel in libraries; a theoretical model for analysis; introd. by Robert Presthus. 100p $7.95 Am. Faculty press

658 Management. Libraries, College and university
LC 72-22809

The purpose of this study "was to define a composite professional personality profile of librarians in supervisory positions, not only to determine their own characteristics, but their attitudes toward library directors and their influence in affecting professional attitudes of personnel under their supervision. The profiles include such factors as institutional loyalty ■■ contrasted to larger professional loyalty, attitudes toward 'controversial' questions within the library, attitudes toward the library director as well as supervisees, job satisfaction, and professional development of the staff supervised." (Col & Res Lib)

"This study is based upon a carefully constructed, written questionnaire followed by structured interviews with eighty-nine persons holding middle management positions in fifteen libraries. All libraries were Association of Research Libraries members and located in the Northeastern part of the country. . . . Plate's book derives from his doctoral dissertation. . . . While the composite profiles of the eighty-nine middle managers are interesting, they are not in any way surprising. Like too many doctoral dissertations in library science Plate's study perhaps only proves the obvious. The scope and size of this slender volume raise a question as to whether or not it deserved publication as a monograph." K. R. Shaffer
Col & Res Lib 32:398 S '71 260w

"Within the limitations of geography and numbers the study seems to have been fairly carefully conducted. . . . It attempts to apply theories developed in other disciplines to librarianship. Typically, it also treats with disdain the quality of the literature of librarianship and deplores the lack of 'research' in the field. There is certainly something to be said for the latter view and much of the work being done in other fields, such as public administration and sociology, can undoubtedly be applied to librarianship with much profit. It points up, however, a serious question. Can doctoral students in library schools attempting to apply the work of other disciplines to librarianship obtain the breadth and depth of knowledge of those fields that is needed to do so successfully? . . . Unfortunately, this study also reflects one of the major weaknesses of most theoretical research studies of this kind—an inability to perceive how a situation is changing." N. D. Stevens

LRTS 15:418 summer '71 850w

PLATH, SYLVIA. Crossing the water; transitional poems. 56p $5.95 Harper

811
ISBN 06-013366-X LC 71-138756

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Peter Davison
Atlantic 229:105 F '72 1000w

Reviewed by Paul West
Book World p8 Ja 9 '72 1200w
Va Q R 48:xxii winter '72 140w

PLATH, SYLVIA. Winter trees. 64p $5.95 Harper

811
SBN 06-013367-8 LC 75-184376

Twenty-four poems from those composed in the last year of Sylvia Plath's life are gathered here, as well as a radio play, Three women: a poem for Three Voices, known in England under the title Close to Life. Some of the poems have appeared previously in such publications as Poetry, Mademoiselle and Encounter.

"When a poet's life ends suddenly and self-destructively, as did Sylvia Plath's, there is a temptation to read her poems in retrospect: to see a premonition in every dark image. . . . [The poems here] lend themselves to this kind of reading. They are drawn from the same batch out of which the 'Ariel' poems were chosen. They were all composed in the last year of Sylvia Plath's life. . . . They deal in night-terrors, ambiguous shrieks, questions without answer. . . . They are replete with violent images, fantastic, surreal, hallucinatory notions. . . . And yet to read Sylvia Plath's oeuvre as if it were a protracted suicide note . . . is probably to misread that work. It is arguable that all literary productions should be read as if written anonymously. . . . [Then we] might understand her poems as tugs-of-war between toughness and vulnerability, and try to read them as dramatizations, not autobiographical fragments. Sylvia Plath deserves this kind of reading. Her gifts were rare and imaginative, and speak for her as no review can hope to," Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 4 '72 550w

"The tenderness of [Sylvia Plath's] despair is expressed in 'Child' or 'By Candlelight,' elsewhere, the mood is that unique, peculiarly savage elegiac exclamation, questioning, triumphantly inventive, and yet, though the mood embodies an almost staggering sense of hurt or grievance, the exact specification of why that should be is never yielded. It is the mood—collectively, of all the poems—that is so impressive; this generalisation of experience deflects the reader from the autobiographical data behind the poems, the reasons why they were written. Life is absorbed into Art, yet remains active in the poems, raw and enigmatic." Douglas Dunn

Encounter 38:67 Ja '72 350w

Reviewed by J. C. Oates

Library J 97:3595 N 1 '72 550w

"A note states that the poems in Ariel [BRD 1966] were 'more or less arbitrarily chosen,' with the implication that the poems in the new book could be given equal status with them. Yes, with a few exceptions they can: some . . . are so familiar from anthology publication that one hunts the indexes of the previous Plath volumes convinced that they have appeared before. All of which argues the overriding need for a Plath 'Collected' which sorts out all the extant work into chronological order . . . and enables the reader to grasp something more of the extraordinary creative process which led to the last poems. . . . Nearly all the poems here have the familiar Plath daring, the same feel of bits of frightened, vibrant, indignant consciousness translated instantly into words and images that blend close, experienced horror and icy, sardonic control." Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 82:446 O 1 '71 450w

Reviewed by J. C. Oates

N Y Times Bk R p7 N 19 '72 390w

Sat ■ 55:83 O 28 '72 250w

"It is the precise control over language which sustains the idiosyncratic, perfectly balanced tone: a symbiotic relationship between lyricism and a carefully judged version of common speech. The startling thing about the poems is that the control over language scarcely ever falters. . . . The world constructed by these poems is a mutable one, amorphous almost; a world in which, behind the apparent permanency of natural objects, things are breaking up; what makes it compelling is the shock of surprises which comes with recognition—the way in which deeply personal themes are transmuted into poems which look intuitively outward for their effect. These last poems map out a territory which is unique, harrowing, yet always controllable; and which breeds its own distinctive landscapes."

TLS p1602 D 24 '71 460w

PLATNICK, KENNETH B. Great mysteries of history. 224p il $6.95 Stackpole bks.

001.94 Curiosities
ISBN 0-8117-0754-7 LC 72-162444

Sixteen chapters each concern one mystery such as the events surrounding Sir Edmund Godfrey, Jack the Ripper, Louis XVII, Grand Duchess Anastasia, Czar Alexander and the mysteries of Stonehenge, and the Loch Ness monster. "Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"All of these old chestnuts have long since lost their savor, and this volume does nothing to restimulate the taste buds. There is some slight value in the sketchy bibliographies appended, but not enough to justify purchase." Dem Polacheck

Library J 96:2769 S 15 '71 70w

Reviewed by Regina Minudri

Library J 97:295 Ja 15 '72 80w [YA]

"'Mystery' is such a catchall word that it can encompass—as this book's covers do—the disappearance of Judge Crater, the riddling tracks of the Abominable Snowman, the death of Dag Hammarskjöld . . . the sinking into the sea of the lost continent of Atlantis, and that Elizabethan puzzler: who broke the neck of Robert Dudley's wife so he could freely court the Queen? The perfect gift for the budding detective."

Sat R 54:31 D 25 '71 80w

PLATON, NICHOLAS. Zakros; the discovery of a lost palace of ancient Crete. 345p il coi il maps $19.95 Scribner 913.39 Excavations (Archeology)—Crete.

Zakros, Crete—Antiquities
SBN 684-31103-8 LC 70-123855

The author, an archeologist, describes "his discovery and excavation of a 3,500-year-old Cretan palace. . . . The palace, which had about 250 rooms, was built in 1600 B.C. for the local ruler at Kato Zakros, a harbor town on the rugged eastern coast of Crete. It was uncovered . . . by Platon in a series of excavations begun in 1961 and still in progress. . . . Besides the account of the discovery, . . . the book includes a description of the palace and the . . . objects it contained, as well as a discussion of the archaeological importance of the find." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"This is the report that every stay-at-home archaeology buff has been waiting for. . . . The author describes with sober precision what must actually have been a tensely exciting operation. The sections on the detective work involved in locating the ruin and on the reasons for believing that Cretan power was destroyed at one swoop by volcanic eruption on the neighboring island of Thera are particularly interesting." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 227:113 Mr '71 100w

"Professor Platon (of the University of Thessaloniki) has written an excellent study . . . with many color plates, more monochrome plates, and many maps of the various parts of the excavations. . . . [The palace] has not been previously plundered. . . . The story of the excavations and of the finds unearthed there occupies the major portion of the text, together with reasonable theories about the use of the various quarters, royal chambers, kitchens, workshops, wells, drainage systems, religious shrines, and the relationship of the palace to the nearby town. . . . This is a fascinating book for any reader." R.F.G.

Best Sell 31:421 D 15 '71 250w

Reviewed by K. E. Meyer

Book World p5 My 7 '72 230w

"Students and scholars will study this [report] until the final reports appear, and will continue to refer to this volume thereafter. Public libraries of all sizes will find [it] an excellent addition to their archaeology sections, as Platon presents a highly readable 'archaeological mystery' and a direct, nontechnical discussion of a major archaeological excavation."

Choice 9:417 My '72 240w

"The present popular description of the find will be greeted with enormous interest. Platon provides a very readable account of the work at the site; but, in his description of the excavation, one suspects that he tends to minimize the active role of his collaborators in the work. . . . Some of the color plates, unfortunately, have turned out rather pale. The book ends with a lengthy discussion of the tidal-wave theory of the destruction of Cretan civilization."

... Here Platon fails to indicate the scope of the controversy that has been raging on this subject." J. R. Bram

Library J 97:197 Ja 15 '72 170w

Reviewed by Bernard Goldman
Natur Hist 81:88 Ap '72 600w

PLATT, ANTHONY, ed. The politics of riot commissions, 1917-1970; a collection of official reports and critical essays; ed. and introduced by Anthony Platt. 534p $8.95 Macmillan (N Y); pa $3.95 Collier

301.18 Riots. Governmental investigations
LC 79-150069

The editor's intent is to analyze and criticize the investigations of riots. "The collection includes selections from the final reports of riot commissions from 1917 to 1970 as well as critical essays by . . . persons not connected with commissions. The general failure of riot commissions is traced to a number of specific causes." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by A. D. Grimshaw
Ann Am Acad 403:220 S '72 600w

Reviewed by Brother Benedict Wengler
Best Sell 31:448 Ja 1 '72 450w

Reviewed by Michael Wallace
Commonweal 97:66 O 20 '72 800w

"Readers will be interested in Platt's analytical essay, the selections from previous riot reports, and the analysis that accompanies each official account. The editor is not an admirer of the work of riot commissions and seems somewhat suspicious of mission-oriented social science research in general. Although I do not fully share his evident skepticism about the accomplishments of various commissions, his comments balance the overly optimistic view too many have had. . . . Public libraries may find Platt's work useful." E. K. Welsch
Library J 96:3629 N 1 '71 100w

PLATT, D. C. M. The Cinderella service; British consuls since 1825. 272p maps $12.25 Archon bks.

354.42 Great Britain—Diplomatic and consular service
ISBN 0-208-01209-5 LC 73-28777

"After a brief description of British consuls before 1825 Platt handles his subject under four divisions: The General Consular Service in the 19th-century, and in the 20th-century, the Levant Service, and the Far Eastern Service." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by H. D. Hall
Am Hist R 77:789 Je '72 400w

"The book is a scholarly (based on extensive primary source materials), readable, and entertaining treatment. Should be added to all libraries that have significant holdings in 19th- and 20th-century British history. Valuable bibliography, full index."

Choice 8:1503 Ja '72 130w

"Until the 1943 reforms of the foreign service, the gentlemen who represented Britain abroad did not care to concern themselves unduly with trade. The British consul, whose duty was precisely this, was therefore a good deal despised (and extremely ill-paid) for his pains. Mr Platt labours the point a bit, but the presentation of his case is coherently documented and the conclusion implicit in his irrefutable title."

With impeccable restraint, Mr Platt has avoided imperial nostalgia and mythology in favour of a balanced and readable account of official reports and recommendations that were either shelved and ignored, or implemented too late and with effects contrary to their intentions."

Economist 239:60 Je 26 '71 350w

Reviewed by Geoffrey McDermott
New Statesman 81:710 My 21 '71 850w

"The Levant and Far East provide most of the entertainment in [this account]. Otherwise the combined effect of a pedestrian prose and a melancholy subject is rather depressing. . . . [Platt] documents, for example, the low rates of pay and the blocks in promotion at a length which many may find excessive. His approach is statistical, in the manner of a Diplomatic Service Inspector, rather than anecdotal."

TLS p71 Ja 21 '72 550w

PLATT, JUNE. June Platt's New England cook book; with an introd. by James Beard. 239p $8.95 Atheneum pubs.

641.5 Cookery—New England
LC 73-108829

This cookbook is arranged in sections such as soups and chowders, poultry and a few egg dishes, griddle cakes and their relatives, and jellies, jams, preserves and wines.

"The publication of a cookbook by June Platt is always a happy event, and this new one, really more modern than traditional, is a delight. Along with some of the more usual New England recipes—such as clam chowder and dandelion wine—she has included a number which, by her own admission, are not associated with New England at all—for example, baked chicken breasts and poached leg of lamb with sauce Béarnaise. Instructions are clear and easy to follow, ingredients are for the most part readily available, and the finished products—at least, those actually kitchen-tested by this reviewer—are mouth-watering. What more can one expect of a cookbook?" Lola Dudley

Library J 96:2772 S 15 '71 110w

Reviewed by Nika Hazelton
N Y Times Bk R p33 D 12 '71 40w

PLATT, RUTHERFORD. Water: the wonder of life; line drawings by Stanley Wyatt. 274p $8.95 Prentice-Hall

574.92 Marine biology. Water
ISBN 0-13-945808-5 LC 73-146045

The author of The River of Life (BRD 1956) "describes the theories on the origin of water, its forms and chemical and physical properties, and the ways in which it influences life. Most of the book is devoted to animals that live in water—their development, senses, and habits. There are sections on salmon, eels, and the plankton animals. The last part . . . describes the destruction of the environment, with a separate chapter on thermal pollution." (Library J)

"In his attempt to describe scientific facts in simple language, [Platt] has often bent the truth considerably and has sometimes destroyed it altogether. . . . The first six chapters . . . provide a reasonably cohesive story. Chapters 7 to 18 deal with various aspects of organic evolution in a disconnected manner and the final two chapters are devoted primarily to examples of man's destructive effect on his environment. The style of writing, being enthusiastic and colorful, makes for easy reading. The book is obviously intended for a very general audience but its usefulness is reduced by its lack of cohesiveness and accuracy."

Choice 9:78 Mr '72 180w

"Platt's writing is smooth and lucid, and he makes a judicious use of enlivening anecdotes. The photographs are not unusual. This survey should be useful for school and public libraries." J. S. Robotham

Library J 96:2783 S 15 '71 140w

PLESUR, MILTON. America's outward thrust; approaches to foreign affairs, 1865-1890. 276p $12.50; pa $3 Northern Ill. univ. press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations. U.S.—History—1865-1898
ISBN 0-87580-019-X LC 76-137882

The author "maintains that in the period under consideration there was an increasing interest in the United States in outside activities that helps to explain the eruption into the dynamic diplomacy of the last decade of the nineteenth century and first of the twentieth. In support of his thesis, [he] traces discussions of the need for foreign markets, . . . the growing interest of Americans in the Pacific Islands and Asia, and Africa, the expansion of naval and merchant marine tonnage, the resurgence of American missionary activities, the growing sensitivity . . . of the United States [to] the operations of European nations in Latin America, and the increasing belief that an Isthmian canal was inevitable." (Ann Am Acad) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Meaty footnotes, conveniently located at page bottoms, which list secondary works, editorial opinions, mission archives, and congressional and other governmental documents,

PLESUR, MILTON—Continued

attest the writer's knowledge of the literature of the field as well as his industry. Scholars and students will be deeply indebted to him for a twenty-eight page chapter on bibliography. . . . As useful as these listings seem to be, they might be regarded as a little repetitious in view of the footnotes already mentioned. . . . The style is light and easy to read. Although it is not likely that this volume will be considered a landmark in diplomatic historiography, the author makes his point, and the book will be very useful." Cecil Johnson

Ann Am Acad 398:180 N '71 330w

"This is a clear, readable, and useful survey of American international contacts in the Gilded Age. Throughout the book, Milton Plesur refers to 'expansionism' and 'imperialism,' but he does so unsystematically and stresses rather that this was a time of 'outward thrust' or at least of preparation by the United States for subsequent events. Little objection can be taken to his quarrel with the tired assumption that the Gilded Age was an era of doldrums; he is not always convincing on his other themes, however, in part because he skims quickly over a large number of topics. The book also lacks rigor in analysis. . . . This book nevertheless is sprightly, wide ranging, and undogmatic. It provides a good introduction to the subject and should help to spur further work." P. S. Holbo

J Am Hist 58:1036 Mr '72 500w

PLOSKI, HARRY A., ed. The Negro almanac; comp. and ed. by Harry A. Ploski and Ernest Kaiser. 2d ed 1110p il maps $27.95 Bellwether pub. co.

301.45 Negroes
LC 77-151237

This new edition "is also published under two other titles in two different formats: a large print one-volume deluxe edition titled Afro-USA: Reference Work on the Black Experience in America lists for $43.95, and a five-volume edition entitled Reference Library of Black America has a list price of $69.95. Both are distributed by Afro-American Press, Inc., 13 Boden Avenue, Valley Stream, New York 11580. . . . [The Almanac] has been expanded from 27 to 32 sections. . . . derived in large part from the section in the first edition called 'Famous Negro Personalities' which has been deleted from the present edition altogether. . . . The Bibliography . . . lists more than twice as many books as the bibliography in the first edition and is presented in one long nonclassified format arranged alphabetically by author." (Booklist) For first edition see BRD 1963.

"The illustrations in the revised edition are generally not as sharp and clear as those in the first edition. . . . One noticeable change is the use of the word 'black' in the major section headings instead of 'Negro,' although 'Negro' is still used rather profusely throughout the text. . . . [The new edition] contains a few inaccuracies and some incomplete information. . . . [But it] lives up to the editors' claim of a new revised edition with some articles revised to include events as late as 1970 and early 1971. The few factual inaccuracies and evidences of some editorial carelessness do not negate [its] usefulness. . . . The Almanac is the most comprehensive single source available on black Americans, and as such it is recommended."

Booklist 68:569 Mr 15 '72 1600w

"A thorough revision of the most important reference tool on black Americans. Every chapter shows additions, deletions, rewriting, and updating. There are 100 more pages; many new photographs illuminate current events; and new lithographs are used for historical information new to this edition. Where illustrative material is repeated the copies are usually clearer. . . . [Many tables] have been omitted. The questions most frequently asked in public libraries are on current events, organizations, history, education, and biography. And it is precisely in these areas that the new edition shows the greatest amount of revision. . . . The chronology contains nine additional pages. However, many tables on school enrollment and educational attainment have been eliminated. (The first edition should be retained as the information it contains is still valuable.)" Lillian Tudiver

Library J 97:863 Mr 1 '72 220w

PLOTNICOV, LEONARD, ed. Essays in comparative social stratification; Leonard Plotnicov and Arthur Tuden, editors. 349p $12.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

301.44 Social classes
ISBN 0-8229-3188-5 LC 79-81666

"This volume is the result of a series of public lectures presented at the University of Pittsburgh on 'Emerging Patterns of Social Stratification in Developing Nations.' . . . [The essays range] from studies of pluralism (Benedict, Smith, Kuper, and Glick) to historical perspectives including papers by Cohn on elite recruitment in India, Marsh's analysis of change in China's stratification patterns, Norbeck on Japan, and papers by Cohen, Silverman, and Southall. The book concludes with [an] essay by Bendix on 'Tradition and Modernity Reconsidered.'" (Am Anthropol)

"While this volume is a valuable contribution to our expanding knowledge of comparative social stratification, there are at least two areas of omission. . . . It is difficult to believe that a volume of eleven essays in the field of social stratification should fail to produce at least one Marxian oriented study. This is especially so when even the editors point out that societies with widely differing social and cultural heritages share a common form of stratification by social class and that of hierarchy of occupational evaluation exists in so many disparate areas of the world. . . . Secondly, this book ignores, short of lip service and despite the inclusion of two sociologists, the very real contributions that have been made in this area in other disciplines notably sociology." Frances Henry

Am Anthropol 73:1312 D '71 800w

"[This] is rather a heterogeneous collection, characteristic encouraged by the admittedly eclectic approach of the editors who 'made no attempt to suggest any particular theoretical position.' . . . One central concern that emerges from this book has to do with the utility of the concept of 'plural society' and the associated critique of the Parsons-Weber view of the relationship between stratification and the dominant value orientation. . . . Another theme has to do with the change in systems of stratification over time, especially in developing societies. . . . In particular Southall's essay of Africa is an outstanding attempt to bring together the old and the new in a single conceptual scheme." Jack Goody

Am J Soc 77:1259 My '72 190w

"This is a largely anthropological collection on stratification in assorted places and times. . . . The issues that would be central to any serious study of comparative stratification are not explored here at all. What conditions give rise to different systems of ranking? What makes for more dispersed or more concentrated rankings (greater or lesser differentials in wealth, prestige, power)? What factors influence the amount of mobility—and the type of mobility—within structures? None of these questions are raised anywhere in the volume." Andrea Tyree

Contemp Sociol 1:435 S '72 650w

PLOWMAN, STEPHANIE. My kingdom for a grave. 239p maps $4.95 Houghton

ISBN 0-395-12429-8 LC 71-147903

"The story of Andrei Alexandrovitch Hamilton, begun in Three Lives for the Czar [BRD 1970], is concluded in this . . . historical novel. As a Russian officer during World War I, Andrei witnesses the defeat of the Russian armies and the demoralization of the country which culminates in civil war and the imprisonment of the Czar and his family. Andrei has remained close to Olga, the oldest daughter of the Czar, and after the deaths of the Imperial family he aids the investigators who piece together the details of their murder and discover their burial place. . . . Grade seven and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by J. F. Smith

Christian Science Monitor p7 F 24 '72 170w

"The compelling sweep of historical events is heightened by the realistic depiction of the Russian landscape and convincing characterization, especially that of the peppery hero through whose eyes all events are seen. Collections that include Three Lives for the Czar will want to add this more effective sequel." Susan Stanton

Library J 96:3479 O 15 '71 150w

"In fairness, I must say that others have found Miss Plowman's turgid account of the fall of the Romanovs more enthralling than I did; but I felt that she had been peculiarly unlucky in her choice of a narrator, who is one of those ubiquitous gentlemen who always happens to be on hand, with pen and perfectly endless paper, when the protagonists decide to be at their most tediously informative. I don't think you can really make history live by putting research—however scrupulous—into inverted commas." Leo Garfield

New Statesman 80:610 N 6 '70 140w

"[This book] blows the most stirring of trumpets to herald a new imprint: Bouley Head Books for New Adults. What is clear beyond question is that this is a book for old adults too. . . . [It is] a magnificent historical novel on the grand scale. . . . It all happened a long time ago, but it is still important that the suffering of innocent people should matter to us. This, in fact, is not a novel for neutrals. It demands of the reader total involvement. . . . One of the difficulties of an historical novel based entirely upon known events is that the chronicle is beyond the narrator's control. One looks in vain for a message of hope in the appalling story. . . . For a few books in each decade criticism seems irrelevant, praise an impertinence. All that is called for is gratitude."

TLS p1251 O 30 '70 750w

PLUMLY, STANLEY. In the outer dark; poems. 53p $4.50 La. state univ. press

811

ISBN 0-8071-0427-3 LC 70-119113

This is the author's first book of poems.

"[These poems show the author] more polished and profound than many better-known poets. Plumly sees from odd angles. He can understate or etch deeply, report or imagine. His poems to his father are intensely personal without sentimentality. [He] fiddles a bit too often with familiar symbols: there's excessive play of light and shadows and such. But this is a versatile book, informed by compassion and craft." Daniel Jaffe

Sat R 54:46 Ap 3 '71 120w

"These poems seem essentially unfeeling and unfeared. The strain for philosophical or psychological import is more stance-taking than a search for the import of observed or remembered phenomena."

Va Q R 47:1x1 spring '71 70w

PLUMMER, ALFRED. Bronterre; a political biography of Bronterre O'Brien, 1804-1864. 292p il Can$11.50 Univ. of Toronto press

B or 92 O'Brien, James Bronterre. Great Britain—Politics and government—19th century
ISBN 0-8020-1802-5

This is an account of the life and political career of "Bronterre O'Brien, the Chartist leader and Radical agitator. . . . As editor of the Poor Man's Guardian he was involved in the Reform Bill struggle and the fight to abolish taxes on the press; his . . . articles under the pen-name 'Bronterre' soon made him into one of the Chartists' leaders and heroes." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This useful work will be of value to all students of 19th-century British social and political history and will be a necessary acquisition where graduate work in this field is offered."

Choice 9:271 Ap '72 90w

"The copious quotations here reveal [O'Brien] as a powerful writer, passionate advocate, and capable thinker. His theories were more radical than his program, much of which is now commonplace. The author, who can write well, chose to provide a fact-packed, heavily documented biography. In one sense this is unfortunate, since O'Brien, because of his nationality and his interest in radical reform, might win many sympathetic readers today if a more popular portrait had been provided. However, it appears that little personal information on O'Brien is available. This book is useful and informative, but is chiefly for scholars and specialists." Dorothy Sinclair

Library J 97:1008 Mr 15 '72 150w

"In the absence of a major study, students have for many years been consulting Alfred Plummer's unpublished thesis. This he has now revised and published—a welcome and long-overdue acknowledgement of the value of the patient research and collation of scattered material which have gone into the work. . . . Dr Plummer's book is not, however, the full study which is still needed. A great deal is missing—not least a careful study of the few personal documents which have come to light in more recent years. . . . [The author] shares with many other historians a preoccupation with the reasons for the 'failure' of Chartism."

TLS p992 Ag 20 '71 1150w

PLUMMER, MARK A. Frontier governor; Samuel J. Crawford of Kansas. 210p il maps $7.75 Univ. press of Kansas

978.1 Kansas—History. Kansas—Politics and government. Crawford, Samuel Johnson
SBN 7006-0080-9 LC 72-161656

This is an account of the political career of the man who "was elected Kansas's youngest governor in 1865. His contribution during his two terms [are described]. . . . He was involved in Reconstruction politics, the post-Civil War land rush, and the building of Western railroads. In 1868 he resigned as governor to lead a regiment of Kansas troops against the Indians. . . . In his later career, he won wide-spread fame as a lawyer by prosecuting claims against the national government on behalf of the state, numerous Indian tribes, and individual claimants." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Plummer provides much information on the little known period of Kansas history between the territorial years and the Populist era. . . . The reader is not provided with a thorough understanding of Crawford's motives and character in relation to the period. Recommended for libraries with strong holdings in American Western history. Well indexed; good footnotes; adequate bibliography."

Choice 9:574 Je '72 160w

"Even though Crawford was a secondary figure, his life was worth writing. Plummer has written a straightforward, admiring account, weak in analysis, and wooden in style. The biographer was apparently handicapped by a sparseness of personal papers, and both Crawford the man and the politician remain obscure. Local historians and specialists will find the book useful." J. A. Rawley

J Am Hist 59:157 Je '72 450w

POCOCK, J. G. A. Politics, language and time; essays on political thought and history. 290p $10 Atheneum pubs.

320 Political science
LC 73-139322

"The first and last of these eight essays were written especially for this volume; the other six have been published previously in periodicals. Pocock . . . covers such subjects as the political meaning of ancient Chinese philosophy, civic humanism in Anglo-American thought, Burke, Hobbes, and Machiavelli. The connecting theme is that language sets limits of political dialogue." (Library J)

"As the author points out, 'there are still striking discoveries to be made by scholars prepared to look empirically at the language, rather than immediately at the theory or philosophy, even of thinkers whose works have been the subject of centuries of discussion.' Recommended for the college library." S. D. Nerboso

Library J 96:1990 Je 1 '71 120w

"The essays reflect various facets of their author's style and interests and are clearly based on wide reading and hard thought. And they reveal three main types of concern. First there is the suggestion that the student of political ideas is, or ought to be, involved in analysis of the different 'languages' of political discussion and persuasion that have been current from time to time. . . . Secondly there is the specific attempt to study one or more such styles of discourse. . . . Finally, there is [an attempt] . . . to relate the use of paradigm analysis to some issues of current interest. Here, although Professor Pocock's comment is stimulating and invariably apt, the attempt to be in the mode strikes an irrelevant note and derogates from the historical emphasis and balance of the discussion elsewhere."

TLS p666 Je 9 '72 950w

POEMS on affairs of state; Augustan satirical verse, 1660-1714; v6, 1697-1704; ed. by Frank H. Ellis. 330p il $25 Yale univ. press

821.08 Satire, English. Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714. Religion in literature. English poetry—Collections
LC (63-7938)

"About half of this volume is given to the early poems of Defoe . . . but among the other poets represented are Dryden, Sedley, Tom Brown, Blackmore (A Satyr against Wit), Garth (The Dispensary, with a text variorum), Tutchin (The Foreigners), Walsh (two poems printed for the first time), William Shippen (Faction Display'd), and Addison, to whom is attributed a poem called The Play-House." (TLS) For volumes one and two see BRD 1964, 1967.

POEMS on affairs of state—Continued

"One must emphatically add that no self-respecting academic library will fail to acquire this fifth-to-appear of the projected seven volumes of this Yale series which in the consistency of its intelligence, authoritative commentary, impeccable editorial procedures, and taste bids fair to become a model of how a modern scholarly series ought to be conducted."

Choice 8:392 My '71 190w

"Admittedly many of these topical satirical pieces are rough and crude and, without the assistance of the editor, would remain hopelessly obscure; but they help to illustrate the development of satirical forms, and they constantly illuminate the political and religious issues of the period. . . . The poems do not all deal with affairs of state, but most of them do, either directly or by implication. . . . The annotation of seven long poems by Defoe is itself a major achievement. . . . The printer is to be congratulated on a handsomely produced volume, and the illustrations are well chosen and well produced. Poems on Affairs of State will probably become a collector's item: it is not often that fine printing and sound scholarship are so evenly matched."

TLS p374 Ap 2 '71 1250w

"The years [1697-1704] were not the most rewarding ones for the publication of satirical poetry within the dates of the series (1660-1714). . . . The most important work in this volume is Samuel Garth's 'The Dispensary,' a work that was extremely influential in initiating new mock-heroic effects in poetry. The annotations [are] predominantly political. . . . High standards of editing and printing . . . prevail."

Va Q R 47:lxii spring '71 120w

POHL, FREDERICK J. The Viking settlements of North America. 339p il $7.95 Potter, C.N.

973.1 America—Discovery and exploration. Northmen
LC 72-169051

The author contends that the Greenland saga and the Iceland saga are both "valid, and synthesizes them into a . . . whole. At the beginning, there were three inextricably interrelated problems: to find Leif Ericson's Vinland campsite; to discover how far the Vikings penetrated the continent of North America; and to ascertain how the two sagas meshed together. Both sagas were written by mariners so Mr. Pohl began with the assumption that they were accurate guides for mariners. In researching the geographical details, Mr. Pohl made . . . archaeological discoveries and identified eighty-nine geographical observations in the sagas. [He] also discusses the Vinland Map of 1440." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Likely as it may seem that Vikings cruised and lived along the shores of eastern America, it is quite another thing to prove that they did. . . . But if 'The Viking Settlements' cannot be read as a creditable scientific work, it is good reading for all that. Though Pohl evidently lacks the cool skepticism of the research scholar, he lacks nothing in researched audacity. Historical landlubbers or literary readers may almost flounder at times in the choppy arrangements of the book's documentation. All explanatory data, identifications, and other records pertaining to the text are safely harbored in the back of the book, and it takes a zigzag course to get it all in." Guernsey Le Pelley
Christian Science Monitor p11 My 10 '72 480w

Reviewed by M. E. Kaups

J Am Hist 59:675 D '72 500w

"The author of The Viking Explorers [BRD 1966] . . . is convinced that Leif Ericson landed at Cape Cod and neatly interprets the Vinland sagas to support his theory. . . . He goes on to picture the Vikings reaching Albany, sailing up the James River, and wandering as far afield as Oklahoma. His narrative is entertaining and superficially plausible. . . . With all its onesideness (even the bibliography is heavily weighted in favor of the author's theories). . . . [this] is an interesting, if not particularly reliable, book on a subject which is still wide open to speculation." J. F. Husband

Library J 97:2094 Je 1 '72 180w

POIS, ROBERT A. Friedrich Meinecke and German politics in the twentieth century. 164p $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

320.924 Meinecke, Friedrich. Germany—Politics and government—20th century
ISBN 0-520-02045-6 LC 70-157818

Friedrich Meinecke was "Germany's leading twentieth-century historian. . . . This volume is an attempt to describe Meinecke's reactions toward the major problems that haunted his country between 1900 and the end of World War II and to explain why Meinecke reacted as he did. Mr. Pois shows how Meinecke's adherence to Rankean historicism and its particular view of the state had great influence upon his personal political attitudes and decisions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Meinecke] exerted a far-reaching influence in the field of the history of ideas. He enjoyed also a great deal of respect among German intellectuals as a proponent of liberal political ideas. Pois has examined Meinecke's personal papers and writings, especially those dealing with German politics during the Weimar Republic of which Meinecke was a loyal, if not enthusiastic supporter. The evidence Pois offers concerning his subject's political outlook, somehow adds to our understanding of Meinecke's basic attitudes. But this reviewer feels that no full picture of Meinecke's many faceted personality emerges. . . . Nonetheless, larger academic libraries will wish to have this monograph." F. E. Hirsch
Library J 97:2186 Je 15 '72 200w

"Mr Pois's cool, astringent essay . . . not only provides a long overdue corrective to the uncritical admiration meted out to Meinecke in recent historiography but also enables us to see why his Historism, for all its prodigious learning, is in the end so unsatisfying a book."

TLS p1047 S 15 '72 200w

POLATNICK, FLORENCE T. Zambia's president: Kenneth Kaunda, by Florence T. Polatnick and Alberta L. Saletan. 188p $4.50; lib bdg $4.29 Messner

B or 92 Kaunda, Kenneth David. President Zambia—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-671-32498-5; 0-671-32499-3 (lib bdg)
LC 76-176378

The authors describe Kaunda's boyhood, his "election as president when Zambia gained its independence from Great Britain in 1964 [and his years off] . . . effort for political, social and economic reform . . . [which] finally resulted in an independent Zambia. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

Reviewed by Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 32:99 My '72 120w [YA]

"Somewhat romanticized biography. Under Kaunda's leadership, Zambia has enjoyed a stable government and has so far weathered the crises stemming from close proximity to, and dependence upon, white-dominated Rhodesia and South Africa. The book contains a number of minor factual errors . . . but the style is interesting and the book should be especially appealing to junior and senior high school students doing a unit on Africa. Recommended for secondary school libraries."

Choice 9:864 S '72 170w [YA]

"The author's admiration for Kaunda, whom they represent as 'a political leader who lives in the service of his fellow man,' interferes somewhat with an objective presentation of Zambia's current internal power struggles, and opposition to the one-party system is viewed as hampering national progress. Still, Kaunda's ideals and techniques serve as an admirable model of an alternative to warfare and racism." Anitra Gordon
Library J 97:2966 S 15 '72 160w [YA]

POLISENSKY, J. V. The thirty years war; tr. from the Czech by Robert Evans. 305p maps $10 Univ. of Calif. press

940.2 Thirty Years' War. 1618-1648
ISBN 0-520-01368-0 LC 77-89894

The author, professor of history at the Charles University of Prague "highlights three separate but related themes: the international relations of states ruling over seventy million Europeans . . . a history of the war as it affected the four million subjects of the Crown of Bohemia and . . . the one thousand inhabitants of Zlin, a town in Moravia." (TLS) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Fills a very real gap in the literature about the Thirty Years' War. Poliřensky does not deal with the conflict itself. Rather he examines in depth the role of Bohemia and Moravia. . . . Making full use of Czech sources, Poliřensky enlarges both our vision and our interpretation. In his introduction the author attacks C. V. Wedgwood's The thirty years' war [BRD 1939] for being merely a portrait gallery of rulers, statesmen, and diplomats. The present book cannot replace Wedgwood's classic, but can serve as a valuable companion piece to it."

Choice 9:1032 O '72 150w

"Professor Poliřenský gives an explicit Marxist interpretation of the war. He sees it as an ideological struggle between the opposed models of the Dutch and Spanish civilizations which were adopted by England and France during the war. . . . Any interpretation that seeks to explain the war in terms of a single theme . . . is open to one obvious objection: several different major issues became caught up in the war, no one of which was predominant for long. If this introductory account of the Thirty Years War is not convincing enough to replace the several inadequate ones already available in English, it does provide the more advanced student with a unique mine of informed comments based on research by the author and by other modern scholars. . . . The chapters on the social consequences of the war and on Bohemian history in the century before 1618 are particularly valuable."

TLS p610 My 26 '72 550w

"Professor Poliřenský's account of the war of 1618-1648 [is] . . . thorough, incisive, and wise."

Va Q R 48:xcvii summer '72 100w

POLITICS & the press [by] George Gallup, Jr. [and others] ed. by Richard W. Lee. (Contemporary issues in journalism, v 1) 191p $6.95 Acropolis bks.

070 Journalists. U.S.—Politics and government

ISBN 0-87491-132-X LC 72-118670

"This collection of papers is based on the 'Distinguished Lecture' series presented in 1969 at the University of Maryland department of journalism. The essays [are] concerned with the . . . relationship between politics and the press." (Library J)

"The articles, not lacking the usual criticisms of controversial public officials, dispel any hope of a permanent rapprochement between journalist and politician. Too many truisms . . . make for a rather bland work. The book is, however, an essential purchase for comprehensive journalism collections." Edward Mapp

Library J 95:2255 Je 15 '70 150w

"[In this book] the everlasting complaints and countercomplaints of politicians and newsmen are dissected and explained. . . . The inevitable tension between government official and reporter is pinpointed by David S. Broder, political correspondent of the Washington Post, as a 'manipulative relationship' on both sides, and he is frank to give the reporter his due as a 'commodity' seeker after information and not necessarily nobler than the news-managing source." S. W. Little

Sat R 53:56 Ag 8 '70 110w

POLLACK, JACK HARRISON. Dr. Sam; an American tragedy. 247p pl $6.95 Regnery

B or 92 Sheppard, Samuel H. Trials
LC 70-183801

"The 1954 murder of Marilyn Sheppard precipitated a trial which ultimately resulted in a redefinition of the rights of the press versus the right of a defendant to a fair trial. Indicted after a brutal newspaper campaign against him, Cleveland osteopath Dr. Samuel Sheppard was found guilty of his wife's murder and spent a decade in prison before F. Lee Bailey secured a Supreme Court hearing which resulted in Sheppard's retrial and subsequent acquittal. . . . Pollack focuses his attention primarily on [the] effects on Sheppard himself, reviewing the events from the murder through the second trial and examining Sheppard's attempts to pick up the pieces of a shattered life before his early death." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by I. R. Hill

Best Sell 32:176 J1 1 '72 550w

"Recommended as a supplement to Paul Holmes' The Sheppard Murder Case [BRD 1961], which covers the first trial, and Sheppard's Endure and Conquer [BRD 1967]." D. W. Harrison

Library J 97:1822 My 15 '72 140w

"Sheppard could not put his life together again. He tried to re-establish a medical practice, divorced a second wife, remarried, engaged in professional wrestling, drank heavily and died of a liver ailment. It's a sad story, and one feels for Dr. Sam. As for the jacket's promise of new information on the crime, there is precious little of that."

N Y Times Bk R p[29] My 21 '72 100w

POLLAK, ISIDOR. Kafka and Prague. See Bauer, J.

POLLET, MAURICE. John Skelton: poet of Tudor England; tr. by John Warrington. 302p pl $10 Bucknell univ. press

821 Skelton, John
ISBN 0-8387-7737-6 LC 73-124443

This "biography and study of ideas in [Skelton's] poems . . . includes elegies, satires, allegory, and poems in 'Skeltonics' in surveying attitudes, feelings, and values consistent in this . . . poetic personality. Emphasized are his sympathy with the great feudal lords, opposition to the New Learning and Protestantism, appreciation of beauty, and contempt for ugliness. Pollet [also discusses] Skelton's feud and reconciliation with Wolsey and . . . the poet's thirst for fame." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This is] the best basic book on Skelton. . . . The 'merry Skelton' tradition is disposed of as a bit of folklore that grew up after his death based on scattered insults by his enemies. There is not contemporary evidence of Skelton's immorality, nor were there charges of immorality. Good bibliography."

Choice 8:1454 Ja '72 130w

"[To subject Skelton] to a full-scale scholarly investigation . . . is a little as though an elephant were to try to pick up a pool of quicksilver. . . . Pollet sees to it that in the process we learn almost everything about Skelton except why anyone reads him. The poet's longer works are painstakingly paraphrased, his every allusion listed and classified, his origins discovered, his influence traced, his posthumous reputation explained. For all this we must be grateful, while regretting that the solemnity of the procedure is calculated to quench completely Skelton's outrageous genius."

TLS p415 Ap 9 '71 900w

POLLINS, HAROLD. Britain's railways; industrial history. 223p il $11 Rowman & Littlefield

385.0942 Railroads—Great Britain—History
ISBN 0-87471-059-6 LC 78-29569

This is a study of "the economics of British railways from their origins to the present." (TLS) Bibliography.

"[The author] has spent a vast amount of time and effort researching the original sources and secondary works on British railways in order to cull the statistics and arrive at conclusions about the general trends in the industry. . . . The latter part, especially the section since the 1920's, is the more valuable. This is traditional rather than 'new' economic history. It will be of considerable interest and value to scholars in transportation economics and industrial relations as well as to economic historians. . . . Larger university libraries and special collections should purchase it."

Choice 8:1622 F '72 120w

"Pollins has produced a useful book. . . . The text is concise but meaty, and is supported by twenty-two tables and four maps. Some of the statistical information, for example on promotion and construction, railway employment and operating receipts and expenditure per train-mile, is not easily come by and is particularly valuable in elucidating the exact nature of the railway's operating problems. . . . The work's strong point is its presentation of a great deal of unusually precise material in a brief compass. . . . Readers will gain insights from the careful examination of financial considerations, particularly those concerned with the relationships between costs, traffic and revenue, and the problems of achieving, and indeed of assessing, efficiency of operations."

POLLINS, HAROLD—Continued

TLS p451 Ap 21 '72 400w

POLLITT, J. J. Art and experience in classical Greece. 205p il $10.95 Cambridge

709.38 Art, Greek
ISBN 0-521-08065-7 LC 74-160094

Treating the period from c. 480-323 B.C. Pollitt "sees a constant endeavor to impose order in a chaotic world—shown in architecture, sculpture, and painting, as well as in philosophy, literature, and events of history. In conclusion, the author suggests that artists of the Classical period produced work that by intention made the beholder aware of both the 'ideal' and the reality of a less than perfect world." (Library J) Annotated chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The volume is profusely and well illustrated, each art example is clearly labelled and dated, and a superb 'supplementary references for illustrations' and a 'supplementary suggestions for further reading' are added to complete the study. The text is well written for both laymen and scholars, and should become an important basic volume to every public and educational (college and university) library."

Choice 9:638 JI/Ag '72 140w

"The author of this excellent book is an associate professor in the department of classics at Yale. . . . The text is gracefully written, with quotations mostly in Pollitt's own translations. The footnotes are fascinating. Anyone interested in the visual arts of a country and period that has so greatly influenced Western civilization will find this book worth reading and pondering. It is well printed, with the illustrations near the text discussion. Items which are not illustrated are listed and cited in a supplementary section." Julia Sabine

Library J 97:1701 My 1 '72 160w

"Experience—intellectual, political, sociological experience—as it affects art is the real subject of this new study of classical Greece. And how salutary it is to have these things set out in a forthright way, as background for the changes that took place during the fifth and first half of the fourth centuries, B. C. Although the increasing knowledge which helped the craftsmen and artists to produce increasingly flowing and able works of art is largely ignored, many valid insights are gained from Mr. Pollitt's text."

Va Q R 48:cviii summer '72 80w

POLLOCK, ADAM, jt. auth. Bangwa funerary sculpture. See Brain. R.*POLLOCK, JOHN. George Whitefield and the great awakening. 272p $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Whitefield, George
ISBN 0-385-03466-0 LC 72-76198

This is an account of the life and career of George Whitefield who "was only 22 . . . when he first began to preach. . . . Together with his friends John and Charles Wesley, he became a founder of Methodism. . . . He brought his message to America . . . crossing the Atlantic thirteen times . . . to become, with Jonathan Edwards, a prime mover in the Great Awakening. . . . [Pollock] describes the difficult obstacles Whitefield faced, his continuous struggles to develop an entirely new form for preaching Christ's gospel, and his occasional excesses of zeal." (Publisher's note)

"This is an uncritical but very readable biography of the great Anglo-American evangelist, the Calvinist counterpart of John Wesley."

Christian Century 89:1078 O 25 '72 20w

"[Pollock] succeeds in providing a fast-moving, anecdotal, if coy account of Whitefield's life, emphasizing his preaching and its effects. Pollock has a good grasp on the usual sources, which he quotes but does not cite. . . . Most libraries should have . . . Pollock's [book]."

Joseph McDonald

Library J 97:2722 S 1 '72 120w

POMERANTZ, CHARLOTTE. The day they parachuted cats on Borneo; a drama of ecology; play by Charlotte Pomerantz; scenery by Jose Aruego. unp col il $4.50 Young Scott bks.

574.5 Ecology—Juvenile literature. DDT (Insecticide)—Juvenile literature. Natural history—Borneo—Juvenile literature
SBN 201-09166-7 LC 74-25526

"This is a true story about the strange and unexpected effects of DDT on the faraway island of Borneo. Sprayed on the farmers' huts, DDT . . . killed the malaria-infesting mosquitoes. But it also affected the huts' other inhabitants—the caterpillars, cockroaches, lizards and cats. When . . . there were no more predators left . . . the rats moved in . . . until a corps of parachuting pussycats came to the rescue. [The narrative is] written in verse and illustrated as a play that children can perform." (Publisher's note) "Grades three to six." (Library J)

"Charlotte Pomerantz, who merrily introduced genetics to grade schoolers in Why You Look Like You Whereas I Tend To Look Like Me (BRD 1969), scores again with this zany little play. . . . Aruego provides his usual clever pictures of animals, plus small illustrations showing how children can design costumes for the various roles. Unique in approach, the book's sure to win fans for its inclusive, funny rendering of ecological interrelationships." D. G. Stavn

Library J 97:777 F 15 '72 290w

"It's a complicated chain superbly presented in an amusing verse-play format and excellent illustrations." Randolph Hogan

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ag 15 '71 80w

POMEROY, WARDELL B. Dr. Kinsey and the Institute for sex research. 479p il $10 Harper B or 92 Kinsey, Alfred Charles, Indiana. University. Institute for Sex Research. Sex—Research ISBN 0-06-013397-X LC 75-138757

This is an account of the life and career of the scientist, Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey and his work in the field of sex research "in the forties and fifties. . . . [Included are] renderings of the many trips, lectures, interviews, visits to prisons, gay bars, and whorehouses that enabled Kinsey to collect his data. The book also contains . . . portraits of Kinsey's co-workers . . . as well as [an] . . . analysis of the institutional and financial arrangements that made the research possible. Two . . . chapters are devoted to Kinsey's relations with the press, and there is [an] . . . account of the role of Dean Rusk, who, on becoming president of the Rockefeller Foundation, brought its support of the project to an abrupt end." (Atlantic)

"Although an official biography, and a sympathetic one at that, this is also an admirably candid book. No attempt has been made to disguise Kinsey's failings. Pomeroy characterizes him as warm, persuasive, enthusiastic, yet at the same time driven, authoritarian, and totally intolerant of criticism. Above all he emerges as a man of great passion, who at one point in his life seriously hoped to become a concert pianist, and whose tastes in literature and music were deeply Romantic. . . . I am inclined to question Pomeroy's judgment that [Kinsey] belongs with the scientific immortals. Whether because of inherent intellectual limitations, or because he was forced to devote so much of his energy to the monumental task of gathering the facts, he left almost nothing in the way of concepts with which to interpret those facts." P. A. Robinson

Atlantic 229:99 My '72 800w

"[This] biography of Alfred C. Kinsey cannot really be reviewed. Like Boswell's Life of Johnson, it must simply be described. [Pomeroy] has written the sort of book that . . . somewhat gushy, [is] fairly disorganized, occasionally awkward, and altogether invaluable. It is probably the best picture we will ever have of a quite remarkable man. The book should be a best seller. It has enough raw meat. . . . It is curiously reticent on some aspects of Kinsey's life—after a brief initial appearance, Mrs. Kinsey virtually vanishes—and egocentric enough to blur the setting of Kinsey's work in the context of his times." Edward Edelson

Book World p3 Mr 5 '72 800w

Reviewed by Barry Gewen

Commentary 54:91 S '72 2100w

Economist 244:51 J1 15 '72 750w

"[Pomeroy] tends to damn with faint praise. Kinsey comes through as a petty tyrant, scornful of critics, and determined to let nothing interfere with his goal of 100,000 sexual histories. He is reported to have been a good teacher and so ingratiating that his subjects revealed all to please him. . . . Although there are many quotations, mostly from letters, there are no specific references to source documents and no bibliography. I hope this will be the last story about Kinsey and his associates at the Institute for Sex Research. Let his work stand or fall on its own merits." A. J. Sprow

Library J 97:1332 Ap 1 '72 150w

"Pomeroy is often hilarious, sometimes deliberately and occasionally inadvertently. . . . [This] memoir is vivid and newly informative about . . . Kinsey's personality, the techniques of interviewing, the sampling problem, the pioneering work in prisons, the close-knit staff who regularly took each other's sex histories. It is based on documents at The Institute for Sex Research at Bloomington, Ind., and interviews with significant figures in Kinsey's career. But it must be read with caution. Pomeroy deals subjectively and therefore ineptly with the controversy [over Kinsey's project and books]." N. G. Hale

N Y Times Bk R p4 Mr 26 '72 1100w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:94 Mr 13 '72 500w

Reviewed by George Krupp

Sat R 55:105 Mr 25 '72 1950w

Reviewed by F. A. Beach

Science 177:416 Ag 4 '72 2600w

POMORSKA, KRYSZYNA, ed. Fifty years of Russian prose; from Pasternak to Solzhenitsyn. 2v ea $10 278;354p MIT press

891 Short stories—Collections. Russian fiction

ISBN 0-262-16937-4 LC 70-12263

This two-volume anthology brings together twenty-six translated selections from twenty Russian authors.

"[The pieces are] translated by assorted hands (a few for the first time). This deprives the collection of stylistic consistency. Disclaiming any intention of providing a representative group of Russian works, the editor defines her criteria for selection as verbal experimentation and freedom from 'realism.' This explains the omission of such standard authors as Fadeev, Fedin, Prishvin, and Sholokhov. Why Bulgakov, Olesha, and Zoshchenko were excluded is not so clear. Their absence makes the collection somewhat humorless. . . . Whether the high quality of each selection justifies the price is open to question."

Choice 9:653 J1/Ag '72 250w

"Some of the finest examples of prose published in Russia under the Soviet régime [are gathered here]. . . . The selections vary in length from five to over a hundred pages; all, however, are polished works which have been skillfully translated. Some will be familiar to all students of belles-lettres—e.g., selections by Boris Pasternak and Alexander Solzhenitsyn. Those less familiar with modern Russian prose will be delighted to find stories by Isaac Babel, Alexander Grin, Bulat Okudzhava, and a number of other major figures who are still relatively unknown in the West. Two sets of introductory essays on biographical notes by Pomorska, while unfortunately brief, help to acquaint the reader with the authors and their works."

Va Q R 48:cvi summer '72 150w

PONTING, KENNETH G. The woollen industry of South-west England; an industrial, economic and technical survey. 214p pl $20 Kelley

338.4 Woollen manufacture and trade. Great Britain—Industries

ISBN 0-678-07751-7 LC 77-78616

This "introduction to the West of England woollen industry consists of a historical narrative, illustrations of extant evidence and artifacts, a collection of documents, [and] a list of surviving buildings." (Am Hist R) Textile glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"I consider the concept of such an integrated survey excellent but wish that the imperfections in its execution were less numerous. The historical account is unbalanced since over a third is devoted to the conflict in 1802-03 between the shearmen and clothiers over the introduction of machinery. . . . Second, there are too many slips for [this book] to be regarded as a wholly reliable introduction; for example, mistakes in patent dates on pages 47, 48, 55, and 66. Third, the documents suffer from irregular editing. . . . Finally, the American price is outrageous." D. J. Jeremy

Am Hist R 77:786 Je '72 350w

"Ponting is well known for his valuable work on the history of woollen textile manufacture, but prospective readers coming to this book . . . will find a strangely unbalanced collection of essays, observations, and addenda. . . . Ponting is at his best when dealing with the technical history and industrial archaeology of his subject, which provide the most valuable sections in the book. We are shown clearly and in detail what is meant by carding, combing, and fulling; and the implements used in these processes, as also in spinning, weaving and dyeing, are described in non-technical language; there are more than fifty well-chosen illustrations, mostly of mills and machines. Of particular merit is the analysis of innovations and inventions in spinning, carding, and weaving during the period of the Industrial Revolution. But . . . the author occasionally shows a lack of appreciation of its place in the wider historical context."

TLS p1584 D 17 '71 460w

POOLE, FREDERICK KING. The Philippines. 90p il $3.75 Watts, F.

919.14 Philippine Islands—Juvenile literature

SBN 531-00739-1 LC 79-139483

This book covers "aspects of life in the Philippines including history, geography, natural resources, education, social conditions, ethnic groups, heroes, and government. [Index.] Grades four to six." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:190 J1 15 '71 40w

"The clearly written, factual presentation here provides an adequate introduction to the country and the comparison of the political situation in the Philippines and the other Southeast Asian nations as of 1970." L. L. Clark

Library J 97:284 Ja 15 '72 90w

"[One of a] new series [entitled First books, this] volume is attractively illustrated."

Social Studies 63:140 Mr '72 40w

POPE, CARL. Sahib; an American misadventure in India. 176p $6.95 Liveright

301.32 Birth control, India—Population, U.S.

Peace Corps

ISBN 0-87140-553-9 LC 70-184099

An account by an American Peace Corps volunteer who worked "in a program of education for family planning sponsored by the Indian government . . . in the Barhi block, or township, in the southern hill district of Bihar. Pope and his wife, Judy, began their assignment with enthusiasm, but this enthusiasm soon turned to frustration and disillusionment as they confronted the red tape . . . on the part of the Indian bureaucracy; the apathy, even hostility, of the Barhi residents; etc." (Library J)

"After a year and a half, [the Papes] gave up, deciding that, as foreigners who were still associated with the British raj, they would never reach the Indian masses. While this was only one project, which may or may not have been typical, it does bring up many points which must be considered by those concerned with family planning programs anywhere in the world." S. L. Hopkinson

Library J 97:2422 J1 '72 200w

"As I read . . . Pope's narrative . . . I began to wonder just what in hell Pope studied while he was majoring in 'Problems of Emerging Societies' at Harvard. Obviously, English and American literature, not being 'relevant,' was scanted. I wonder if, somewhere along the way, perhaps during his Peace Corps training prior to his arrival in India, lessons in Hindi were spelled with chapters from Passages to India [by E. M. Forster, BRD 1924]. I see no sign of such reading anywhere. . . . Because Pope's narrative is drawn from his own immediate experience, it is both fascinating and relevant, and hopefully will be included in many freshman syllabi. . . . [However], unleashing Pope's immaculate innocence on the interior of India was . . . but another version of the incredibly innocent imperialism of President Kennedy." John Seelye

POPE, CARL—Continued

New Repub 166:27 Je 24 '72 1900w

POPE-HENNESSY, JAMES. Anthony Trollope.

400p il $10 Little

823 Trollope, Anthony
LC 74-183856

This account of Trollope's life and literary career also contains twenty-five illustrations from the original editions of his best known novels. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Grover Cronin
America 126:656 Je 24 '72 800wReviewed by V. S. Pritchett
Atlantic 229:94 My '72 2150wReviewed by E. M. Casey
Best Sell 32:220 Ag 1 '72 500wReviewed by Paul Theroux
Book World p6 Ap 2 '72 500w
Choice 9:816 S '72 170w

"How good is Trollope? Are his novels readable today? Very good, according to [this study]. Very readable. And [the] biography is crammed with plot summaries, character analyses, and long, teasing vistas into Trollope territory to prove it. . . . [This biography] reads like a novel. In [the author's] hands, Trollope lives again, bringing with him his great sagas of the usual, his impoverished curate . . . his scheming Mrs. Proudie, his matrimonial Arabella Trefoil, Mrs. Hurtle, Mr. Prong, Lady Monk of Monkshade, and the millionaire, would you believe, Plantagenet Palliser, Duke of Omnium. Trollope Redux? Who can tell? . . . If Mr. Hennessey has his way, tomorrow may belong to the . . . mad, methodical master of Barsetshire, Anthony Trollope." Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72 650w

"In spite of the many pages spent on the novels and their backgrounds, there is little critical evaluation to be found in this study. Trollope's status as a highly successful delineator of Victorian society is emphasised by the many reproductions of contemporary illustrations to his books, and these add a good deal to the reader's enjoyment of a notably well-produced volume. But for all Mr. Pope Hennessey's labours, he never manages to account for the peculiar charm that the best of Trollope's novels still are able to exert."

Economist 242:57 F 5 '72 200w

Reviewed by Barbara Hardy
Encounter 38:48 D '71 240w

"There is a real fascination about Trollope, and James Pope-Hennessy has clearly succumbed. He has done research on both sides of the Atlantic and has gotten up the novels with obvious delight: this breezy critical biography is the result. Although the book amounts to the first modern biography of Trollope, it adds little to the historical record and, like all studies of Trollope, draws extensively on the marvellous Autobiography. The criticism—and there is much of it—is appreciative rather than analytic; serious readers of Trollope will find it somewhat superficial. . . . [This book is] as genial and as lacking in complexity as its subject."

Keith Cushman

Library J 97:1315 Ap 1 '72 190w

New Repub 166:24 Mr 25 '72 400w

Reviewed by Louis Auchincloss
N Y Times Bk R p49 My 21 '72 1100wReviewed by W. H. Auden
New Yorker 48:102 Ap 1 '72 1100wReviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 79:79 Ap 3 '72 700wReviewed by Leon Edel
Sat R 55:59 Jl 8 '72 750w

"Since Mr Pope-Hennessy is a writer of energy, tact and charm, [his book] is readable. . . . [But it] is deficient in scholarship and even in keeping to proper levels of mere accuracy. Documentation is haphazard or absent altogether. Mr Pope-Hennessy's principal biographical source is [T.] Escott's notoriously gossipy and unreliable memoir [Anthony Trollope BRD 1913]. . . . [M.] Sadleir's work [Anthony Trollope; a commentary, BRD 1927] receives scant and patronizing mention. There appears to be no new research embodied in [this work] though surely a new biography should represent more than a new synthesis, especially when primary sources remain to be examined in details. . . . Mr Pope-Hennessy [does not] appear to have examined Trollope's library catalogue, a copy of which is in the Victoria and Albert Museum. Most extraordinary of all is the fact that the extant manuscripts of the novels have evidently not been scrutinized. . . . [It is a] disappointment that so talented a biographer should not have risen more creditably to the challenges of Trollope's life and work."

TLS p1605 D 24 '71 1000w

POPE-HENNESSY, JOHN. An introduction to Italian sculpture; 3 pts; pt 1, Italian gothic sculpture. 2d ed 284p pl $25 Phaidon

730.945 Sculpture, Italian. Sculpture, Gothic
ISBN 0-7148-1465-2 LC 70-125304

This is a revised edition of the first volume, published in 1955, of the author's three-part series, "An introduction to Italian Sculpture. It covers a period 'bounded at one end by the pulpits of Nicola Pisano and at the other by the bronze doors of Ghiberti. It comprises a general introduction, in which the stylistic development of Italian Gothic sculpture is presented as a continuous whole, 112 plates offering a representative cross-section of each sculptor's work, almost a hundred textual illustrations, biographies of the artists whose work is discussed, and detailed notes on the works illustrated." (Publisher's note) Index of places. Index of sculptors. For the first edition, see BRD 1955. For the second volume see BRD 1959 and 1972.

"[This volume] remains today the standard text treating the subject of Italian Gothic sculpture. . . . The works of individual artists . . . are treated chronologically, a scheme that still suits Pope-Hennessy's generally accepted thesis that Gothic sculpture in Italy, unlike the relatively anonymous sculpture of Gothic France, 'was the outcome of a personal, strongly defined will-to-form' and therefore 'partakes of the nature of Renaissance art.' This edition includes double the number of figures-in-text (now placed at the back) printed fewer on a page so that they are virtually equal in visual usefulness to the plates themselves. . . . The most important and valuable change occurs in the notes to the plates which are considerably expanded and include up-to-date bibliographies."

Choice 9:638 Jl/Ag '72 250w

"In the present work . . . Pope-Hennessy says that 'a number of revisions or interpolations have been made, and the section on Giovanni Pisano is in large part new.' One or two substitutions have been made among the photographs, and four plates have been added. . . . Wherever possible, the scale of the smaller illustrations has been enlarged."

R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2174 Je 15 '72 100w

POPE-HENNESSY, JOHN. An introduction to Italian sculpture; 3 pts, pt 2, Italian Renaissance sculpture. 2d ed 365p pl $27.50 Phaidon

730.945 Sculpture, Italian. Sculpture, Renaissance
ISBN 0-7148-1464-4 LC 70-125304

This is a revised edition of the second volume, first published in 1959, of the author's three-part series, "An Introduction to Italian Sculpture". It "covers a period bounded at one end by Donatello and at the other by Bambaia, Riccio and Tullio Lombardo in North Italy. It contains 144 plates, 165 illustrations in the text, biographies of the artists whose work is discussed, and detailed notes on the works illustrated. The text gives an account of the style of the Great Renaissance sculptors, and traces the growth of the art forms in which they worked." (Publisher's note) Index of places. Index of sculptors. For the first edition, see BRD 1959.

"When [this study] originally appeared . . . it was acclaimed as the most important contribution to the study of Italian Renaissance sculpture in three decades, and it is still the only authoritative English work on the subject. The revised edition has few changes. The plates, text illustrations, and introductory text are the same, and it is in the critical survey of the literature for the 39 catalogue entries on the major sculptors of the period and in the notes to the plates that Pope-Hennessy has incorporated the results of his recent research. These changes . . . are important enough to justify the purchase of the revised edition even by smaller libraries which are feeling the pinch of budgetary limitations."

Choice 8:1416 Ja '72 200w

"Sir John has accepted John White's reconstruction of Donatello's Padua altar: he has taken note of recent though not altogether conclusive discussions of the enigmatic San Lorenzo pulpits; he argues convincingly that only three small bronzes can be tied securely to the name of Antonio Pollaiuolo; the personality of Bertoldo appears now richer because the Palazzo Scala-Gherardesca reliefs, recently discussed at length by Chastel and Parronchi, are now included in his oeuvre, to give only a few examples of important new material. The bibliographies [in the Notes on the sculptors and on the plates] have been brought up to date. The plates are again of excellent quality."

TLS p368 Mr 31 '72 100w

PORTAL, COLETTE. The beauty of birth; adapted from the French by Guy Daniels. 26p col il lib bdg $4.39 Knopf

612.6 Reproduction—Juvenile literature. Sex instruction—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-394-92287-5 LC 70-155813

This is a stage-by-stage story of human reproduction, from conception (with description of the ovum, the sperm, then fertilization) through the various stages of development (embryo, fetus) to the birth of the infant. "Age eight and up." (N Y Times Bk R)

"An accurate, beautifully illustrated account of conception and the birth of a baby. The many apt analogies . . . are far superior to similar comparisons in [some other] books." Janet Kuenstner

Library J 97:767 F 15 '72 190w

"Facts of life primer, Gallic style. . . . It's a bit like one of those enigmatically muzzy French movies—metaphoric blurs, glancing allusions, sudden specifics. . . . The watercolors are poetic, pink for girls and blue for boys, full of tentacles, full of mystery. Tucked in is standard information on fetal growth, sexual determination and development of separate components. Like the hand and the ear at various stages. The end product of all this luminousness looks vaguely like Mr. Clean." N. L. Magid

N Y Times Bk R p8 N 21 '71 170w

PORTER, DOROTHY, comp. Early Negro writing, 1760-1837; sel. and introduced by Dorothy Porter. 658p $20 Beacon press

810.8 Negro literature. Negroes—History
ISBN 0-8070-5452-6 LC 71-101325

"Divided into seven sections, [the book] begins with documents from the mutual aid and fraternal organizations . . . [and] the Societies for Educational Improvement. . . . Part III offers documents from the annual conferences and contains . . . the minutes and proceedings of the first annual meeting of the American Moral Reform Society. The fourth section . . . [deals with] the arguments about immigration. . . . [Part V includes a] collection of the addresses made by Negroes on behalf of their fellow citizens. . . . The concluding section is devoted to narratives, poems, and essays. . . . In addition to the writings of Phillis Wheatley, there are poems and essays by Jupiter Hammon, Richard Allen, David Ruggles, Solomon Bayley, and others." (Publisher's note) Index of authors.

"[This volume] gives a first hand account of the concerns and problems of free Northern blacks during the difficult and repressive years when most Afro-Americans were slaves. . . . The selections vary in quality and style. . . . [This] is an excellent source book marred by the uneven value of the selections. Many could have been easily omitted in order to cut both the size and the price of the volume. However, many selections are fascinating, previously unavailable and informative in an important area of American history which is often ignored." J. P. De Marco

America 126:73 Ja 22 '72 500w

"This handsome and useful collection clearly reflects the painstaking research of one of our finest Afro-American scholars; it should prove to be a valuable addition to any library collection. Highly recommended."

Choice 9:713 J1/Ag '72 150w

"There is an author index [but] (scholars will miss a subject index and bibliography). Although Porter's in-depth coverage of the period is valuable, representative selections with more explicit introductory matter can be found in Herbert Aptheker's classic A Documentary History of the Negro People in the United States [BRD 1952]." Janet Freedman

Library J 97:679 F 15 '72 170w

"The very brief introductions to the seven sections of the volume are disappointing. For this segment of neglected history, they do not provide adequate background for the reader. Too often they are simply restatements or quotations from the texts which follow. The convenient topical arrangement gives a sense of cohesion to the whole, but it also raises many questions. How unique are these testaments? How numerous were these Negro organizations created for mutual help? How long did they endure? Mrs. Porter is eminently qualified to have written a succinct critical overview; I wish she had done so." M. L. Fisher

New Eng Q 45:296 Je '72 600w

PORTER, ELIOT. The African experience. See Matthiessen, P. Tree where man was born

PORTER, ELIOT, jt. auth. The tree where man was born, the African experience. See Matthiessen, P.

PORTER, GEORGE, jt. ed. Physical sciences, 10v. See Bragg, W. L.

PORTER, GLENN. Merchants and manufacturers; studies in the changing structure of nineteenth-century marketing [by] Glenn Porter and Harold C. Livesay. 257p $11.50 Johns Hopkins press

658.8 Marketing. U.S.—Commerce
ISBN 0-8018-1251-8 LC 72-156071

"This historical investigation of the physical distribution and wholesaling of manufactured products in the U.S. traces the change from independent merchant and wholesaler dominance of marketing to the assumption of marketing control by manufacturers. The authors attempt to show that this change was brought about by the same forces acting on production: growth of the economy, advancing technology, and the emergence of the large corporation." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Porter and Livesay tell [their] story well, drawing upon the substantial amount of previously published literature on their subject, and adding to it their own research in many collections of business papers. If, for the pre-civil War period they contribute little that is new . . . it remains the case that no one before Porter and Livesay has put the story together, or so carefully delineated the transition from the old mercantile to the new industrial world. The chapter on the decline of the merchant as manufacturer's financier is a contribution to the continuing debate on the economic effects of the Civil War. A good book about an important subject. Recommended."

Choice 9:855 S '72 200w

"Although [the authors] ably use the secondary literature, they have neglected some important studies of the machine tools industry; and when they look (only briefly) at collusion among manufacturers in the pre-1860 period, unfortunately they confine their attention almost exclusively to the textile manufacturers. On the whole their conclusions are persuasive, and economic and business historians will probably adopt the broad functional categories of industries that they have constructed to explain differential patterns of marketing." H. N. Scheiber

J Am Hist 59:719 D '72 900w

"Although distribution histories of many products are traced, the authors' focus on the role of the independent wholesaler in the distribution process is what makes this volume unique among histories of marketing." Elin Christianson

Library J 97:1009 Mr 15 '72 100w

POSNER, DONALD. Annibale Carracci: ■ study in the reform of Italian painting around 1590. (Nat. gallery of art: Kress foundation stud. in the hist. of European art). 2v 183;351p pl col pl $45 Phaidon

759.5 Carracci, Annibale
ISBN 0-7148-1471-7 LC 70-150703

This study of "Carracci's life and work surveys the whole of the artist's activity and analyses the origin, development and significance of his achievements, viewing them against the background of the art and thought of the period. All known paintings and prints by the master are illustrated, as well as many of the drawings made in connection with them, in 346 black and white plates and ten colour plates, and all are . . . discussed in a catalogue raisonné. In addition, 121 text figures illustrate special aspects and the background of Annibale's art." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Indexes to works by, after and attributed to Annibale Carracci. General index.

"An important book: the first comprehensive treatment of a leading artist by an excellent art historian. The book places Carracci first in his native Bologna, where he was the leading reformer of the Mannerist style, then in Rome where he created the famous Galleria Farnese. The text makes important new connections between, e.g. Annibale and his famous contemporary, Caravaggio. The catalogue gives all the pertinent information about each painting by the master. The illustrations are excellent and there are also revealing color plates. Any library with an interest in the history of art must have this outstanding work. Very full indices."

Choice 8:1580 F '72 100w

"It may be questioned whether the general public of our time, fond of the distortions of Expressionism and lately of Mannerism, is able to appreciate the form and composition of this relatively calm art, but this book will certainly contribute to a better understanding."

J. L. Dewton

Library J 97:487 F 1 '72 150w

"A recent student of the Galleria Farnese has gone so far as to describe the frescoes which formed [Carracci's] first commission, for the Palazzo Farnese, those in the Camerino, as 'the first monuments of Annibale's Roman grand manner'. Professor Posner's interpretation of the Camerino frescoes is more subtle and more accurate. He regards them as an extension of Annibale's last works in Bologna, and stresses the broadly North Italian character of the decorative scheme rather than the classical and Michelangelesque motifs that are inserted in it. . . . Some of the best pages in Professor Posner's book describe the heart-searching with which Annibale experimented with the adaptation of a Bolognese frieze system to the decorative requirements of the [Sistine] ceiling."

TLS p1103 S 22 '72 3000w

POSNER, DONALD, jt. auth. 17th and 18th century art. See Held. J. S.

POSNER, ERNST. Archives in the ancient world. 283p $10 Harvard univ. press

930 Archives. Civilization, Ancient
SBN 674-04463-0 LC 79-158426

"The present work is intended to serve as an introduction to the problem of studying the archives of the ancient Mediterranean world. It traces the keeping of records from the earliest Sumerian clay tablets to the late Roman Empire, with addenda on Parthians and Neo-Parthians." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:1023 O '72 140w

"Not only is this volume excellently written with respect to style and content, but it represents a very valid approach to the documents of the ancient world. This volume, however, is designed for specialists and . . . is of interest primarily to archivists, but it will also be useful to graduate students of history. The select bibliographies, index, and illustrations are extremely valuable. Should be purchased by colleges and universities that train archivists and historians."

Library J 97:2593 Ag '72 180w

POSNER, R. Thirty years on. See Jordan, I. An introduction to Romance linguistics [2d ed]

POST, AUSTIN. Glacier ice. 110p il $20 Mountaineers; Univ. of Wash. press

551.3 Glaciers. Ice

LC 75-152334

"Containing 130 black-and-white photographs of glaciers in all stages, [this volume] is the result of some 15 years of photographing and studying the glaciers of western North America. The text describes the numerous glaciological features." (Library J) Glossary.

"The photographs are arranged in groups showing various types of glaciers, features, and the effects of glaciers on the landscape. A brief but clear text accompanying the photographs explains the features illustrated. . . . The book will appeal both to the layman and those interested in the scientific study of glaciers."

Choice 8:1607 F '72 90w

"A very beautiful and very useful book. . . . [The text is] clear and succinct, and the photographs (both aerial and ground) aptly illustrate and amplify [it]. In short, [this] is a most elegant, useful, and interesting glossary of glaciological terms; and it will have a wide appeal—the traveler and mountaineer, the scientist and general reader."

N. T. Corley

Library J 96:4022 D 1 '71 100w

POSTAN, M. M. Fact and relevance; essays on historical method. 187p $8.95 Cambridge

300.72 History—Methodology

ISBN 0-521-07841-5 LC 75-145603

Postan's "essays, dating from 1934 to 1969, . . . [deal] with the relationship between history and the social sciences. His particular concern is with justifying and encouraging scholarly endeavor which can operate on the boundaries between traditional historical emphasis on unique events and the generalizing tendencies of the social sciences. Postan affirms the possibility of 'scientific' history and the value of specialized as opposed to holistic history in the first several essays, and in the remainder [seeks to] amplify and illustrate this point of view. [Of the last two chapters, one concerns Karl Marx. The other is on Hugh Gaitskell]." (Library J) Index.

"It is good to have these fourteen essays. . . . On the whole, Postan deals as comfortably with philosophical abstraction as any economic historian around, and he turns a phrase far more elegantly than most. And it is altogether impossible not to be captivated by a man who can proclaim himself a positivist yet reveal . . . that 'the value of the historical contribution to the science of humanity is essentially the same as that of all the other contributions: small and uncertain.'" Michael Zuckerman

Ann Am Acad 398:193 N '71 500w

Choice 8:1497 Ja '72 150w

"Though these papers are noticeably written in a British milieu, most American academic libraries will find them a valuable contribution to the debate over the function and direction of history." R. C. Hoffmann

Library J 96:1709 My 15 '71 120w

POSTGATE, RAYMOND. The outline of history [rev ed]. See Wells, H. G.

POTOK, CHAIM. My name is Asher Lev. 369p $6.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-46137-1

LC 70-171131

"Asher Lev is the son of Hasidim [living in the Crown Heights section of Brooklyn]. His father, Aryeh Lev, is part of the underground railroad that sneaks Jews out of Russia and founds synagogues in the ruins of Europe. . . . Like all children, Asher drew. The Hasidim do not . . . consider the artist a worthwhile member of society. [But] Asher's art is a compulsion over which he has no control. . . . When the problem is brought before the Rebbe, an artist who has been consulted (a non-observant Jew with an international reputation as a sculptor) recognizes Asher's genius and agrees to take him as a pupil." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Asher Lev] is supposedly a gifted painter. We take his word for it, but he is pretty inarticulate. He never speaks in anything but simple declarative sentences. Other people speak to him only in imperatives. This last I take to be a condition of his heritage, and his heritage is his main problem. . . . In the course of his training . . . Asher drifts away from the ways of his fathers. But not very far. Not far enough to upset any nice Jewish parents who might read this book. Just far enough to cut his sidecurls and paint a couple of nudes—this . . . because he is told to by his teacher. Asher always does as he is told, which is the secret moral of this book. Though Asher becomes a success, his parents will not go to his art shows because of the nudes. . . . We are not meant to think that these are cruel or insensitive parents; they are only trying to cling to their beliefs. Readers will think of their own parents; they will think of their own youthful rebelliousness: they will buy the book." Dione Johnson

Book World p10 My 7 '72 450w

Choice 9:816 S '72 190w

"Why is it no one seems able to write a convincing novel about the life work of a painter? . . . Potok, I'm afraid, is one more name to add to the list of failures. His dull, ponderous humorless account of the rise of Asher Lev . . . cannot convince anyone who [has ever tried to paint] that this is what it's like. . . . Asher never really comes to life, and when we read the descriptions of his pictures, his final success seems unlikely. The break, with his parents comes with the exhibition of a painting of his mother crucified on the living-room window, her head in three: one segment regards the artist, her son, to her left; one, her husband (with briefcase) to her right; and one looks upward. Asher's parents don't like this sort of stuff, and though Mr. Potok plainly intends us to accept it as Great Art, my sympathies lay with Mama and Papa." Anthony Barson

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 14 '72 400w

Reviewed by David Stern
Commentary 54:102 O '72 1400w

Reviewed by Peter Dollard
Library J 97:1461 Ap 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Janet Prince
Library J 97:1934 My 15 '72 120w [YA]

"[At the point that the] Rebbe formally decrees Asher's drawing as his gift from God the novel can either fall into competent treatment of an interesting enough theme, or—as it does—move into a tragedy of terrifying dimensions. Mr. Potok realizes the full power of his story. Art may be acceptable to Hasidic orthodoxy, yet it is an art that belongs 'to the other side.' . . . Potok has a sure sense of how to diagram tragic misunderstanding. He knows that it must happen in a context of faith and love, and that it must be the exercise of faith and love that breaks hearts. . . . [His] novels are deceptively plain. He uses no rhetoric, no ostentation of style, neither of which he needs. One feels that his subject was inevitable and that he is writing with deepest and total understanding." Guy Davenport

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ap 16 '72 750w

New Yorker 48:114 My 27 '72 110w

"In Potok's writing Judaism is a living, complex force. . . . [His] new novel is far superior to his other books. . . . Its Jewish concerns, though just as pronounced as in the previous novels, are not defined by a superior auctorial voice but progressively define themselves in the course of the ongoing revelation provided by action and character. . . . Heartfelt and straightforward in style, [the book] is narrated with a fluent simplicity that belies its intellectual depth and the technical skill of its construction. The story—in every good sense of the word particularistic (Hasidism and painters are both subgroups after all)—deserves and should have wide appeal." R. J. Milch

Sat R 55:65 Ap 15 '72 550w

TLS p1184 O 6 '72 360w

POTTER, BEATRIX. The sly old cat; written and il. by Beatrix Potter. 34p $2.50 Warne
Cats—Stories. Rats—Stories
ISBN 0-7232-1420-4 LC 73-163984

"Invited to dine by Cat, Mr. Rat watches his host's every move, preferring not to be consumed. Rat traps Cat's head in a jug, has a hearty tea, and disappears jauntily. . . . Ages three to five." (Sat R)

"[This story is] every bit as charming as . . . [the author's] better known work." D. K.
Christian Science Monitor pB6 My 4 '72 50w

Economist 241:69 D 18 '71 60w

Horn Bk 48:365 Ag '72 180w

Reviewed by M. B. Mason
Library J 97:2233 Je 15 '72 110w

"[This] book is simple, slight, and ingenuous, but amiable in its good-versus-evil appeal. . . . No moral, but a satisfying finish." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:80 My 20 '72 70w

"Written in 1906 . . . [the publication of the book] was delayed for various reasons and the author never produced finished illustrations for it. It is now published for the first time, illustrated with her preliminary sketches, and we must be grateful that it has been finally brought to light. . . . The pictures, sketchy as they are, have life and character." TLS p1324 O 22 '71 150w

POTTER, E. B. The Naval Academy illustrated history of the United States Navy. 299p maps $15 Crowell

359 U.S. Navy—History. U.S.—History, Naval
ISBN 0-690-57460-6 LC 72-146286

The history of the navy from 1794 to 1971 is written by a professor at the U.S. Naval Academy. Index.

"Perhaps the author digresses into other parts of history, especially in military actions, a bit more than necessary, but it all ties in with the part that the Navy has taken in our nation's development. Navy personnel, past or present, may resent the lack of greater detail in some of the actions, but on an overall basis, Professor Potter has done a wonderful job in presenting the story of our Navy, and certainly has accomplished his stated purpose, to arouse interest. Recommended for every American—required for all Navy families." J. B. Cullen
Best Sell 31:373 N 15 '71 700w

"Potter writes well, and his book is not only good narrative history but also reflects his own considered judgments. The book is doubtless the best brief history of the United States navy available." J. H. Kemble

J Am Hist 59:123 Je '72 200w

"The text is crisp and taut as it must be to encompass so much in the limited space allotted, but there is little new information or fresh interpretations. A fair amount of space is devoted to clear diagrams of many naval actions and to a variety of other illustrations, and these do add to the value of the book. The illustrations selected, however, are all too often those most frequently used to illustrate certain events. . . . Libraries owning The United States and World Sea Power [BRD 1956] edited by Potter and J. R. Fredland and A Picture History of the U.S. Navy [BRD 1956] by Theodore Roscoe and Fred Freeman will not really need this volume since the first-mentioned title covers events through the Korean War, and events since then receive only eight pages in the present work. Other libraries might consider it." R. N. Sheridan

Library J 96:4010 D 1 '71 200w

"The story of the American Navy is a spectacular one. Though the Potter style is cool, even antiseptic, there is a natural drama to the evolution of the scrubby assortment of wooden tubs built or borrowed during the Revolution to the matchless fleet of World War II days. . . . This book is ideal for a naval buff in your family or circle of friends. The illustrations and maps, all in black and white, are adequate though not particularly striking. In all, a good, grey history of a colorful subject. It leaks a little, but it keeps afloat." A. Bakshian

Nat H 24:356 Mr 31 '72 160w

POULIN, A. In advent; poems [by] A. Poulin. Jr. 128p $6.95; pa $3.50 Dutton

811
SBN 0-525-13207-4 LC 70-179846

This book contains "poem-cycles of various sorts of ending and renewal. They celebrate the expectation of the different 'comings'

POULIN, A.—Continued

which affirm life, despite necessary darkness and rage." (Publisher's note)

"[This] young poet who has published widely . . . writes within the Christian tradition of poetry. . . . [His fears are] traumatic and universal. . . . But [he] also has a sense of nature and the moment snatched from oblivion: 'This morning I could/have walked on the eyes/of daisies, my blood/was so bright, my head/a whole swarm of bees.'" J. F. Cotter

America 126:639 Je 17 '72 250w

"This brief volume gathers together poems that were first published in such magazines as Atlantic Monthly, Kenyon Review, and Commonweal. The early poems display a narrow and almost morbid concern with death; coffins, corpses, funerals, and 'leukemia's piranha' taught Poulin 'what it is to burn' like a poet. By the middle of the volume his interest has broadened enough to include constant reminders that the living can be blind to their own mortality. The last part of the book reiterates the bloom/decay motif: pregnancy, a blooming, is a counterpoint to decay. Poulin attempts to transform this spectral vision into something broader by rising to the prophetic tone. . . . Though competently handled, this is meager fare." Peter Dollard

Library J 97:1442 Ap 15 '72 140w

POUND, OMAR S., ed. Arabic & Persian poems in English [Eng title: Arabic and Persian poems]. 80p $7.50; pa $1.95 New directions

892 Arabian poetry. Persian poetry. Poetry—Collections
LC 79-122106

"The editor has translated or, using English poetry, paraphrased the ideas of a few Arabic and Persian poems for this . . . collection of . . . free verse." (Library J)

"[An] often delightful, often funny, sometimes ribald, sometimes thoughtful collection. . . . Helped by comparisons with Western and Asian poetries, the 14-page introduction and 14 pages of biobibliographical notes handily explain the art form and its practitioners. Some 'poems' are utterly incomprehensible (to this reviewer), while the 'paraphrases' have too many allusions from English poetry for the less literary reader. But the book suggests the variety in these literatures and is recommended for academic and larger general collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 95:2812 S 1 '70 90w

"Pound's renderings of classical Arabic and Persian poems . . . is bound to arouse controversy in academic circles. So far from confining himself to pedestrian accuracy, Pound has sought rather to bridge the vast gap between the medieval East and the twentieth-century West by re-creating the poetic inspiration of the originals in modern terms. . . . His versions will be of little use to the student seeking for a quick crib as an aid to examination prowess; but they may well provide him with flashes of insight that will shorten his journey to the center of medieval—and modern—Islamic thought. If they do this, they are fully justified. . . . Pound's poems are a great deal more readable and exciting than the pseudo-Augustan versifications, top-heavy with the Latin elegance of the eighteenth century, that even today seem to be regarded as appropriate to the translation of ancient poetry. The book then is to be welcomed." L. P. Elwell-Sutton

N Y Rev of Books 16:51 Ap 22 '71 600w

POWELL, G. BINGHAM. Social fragmentation and political hostility: an Austrian case study [by] G. Bingham Powell, Jr. (Stanford Univ. Stanford study in comparative politics, 3). 207p $7.50 Stanford Univ. press

309.1426 Halein, Austria—Social conditions. Hallein, Austria—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8047-0715-4 LC 74-83119

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971

Reviewed by Dwaine Marvick
Am J Soc 78:256 Jl '72 900w

Reviewed by Dwaine Marvick
Am J Soc 78:742 N '72 900w

Reviewed by W. B. Simon
Pol Sci Q 87:345 Je '72 300w

POWELL, JOHN DUNCAN. Political mobilization of the Venezuelan peasant. 259p il $8.50 Harvard Univ. press

323.3 Venezuela—Politics and government. Peasantry. Land tenure—Venezuela
ISBN 0-674-68626-8 LC 70-134947

A "study of the political results of agrarian reform programs in Venezuela since 1936. . . . [The book discusses] the development of Acción Democrática (political party) and its . . . political base in the peasant unions." (Choice)

Reviewed by E. J. Blendon
Am Hist R 77:605 Ap '72 440w

Reviewed by F. A. Pinner
Am Pol Sci R 66:1070 S '72 1250w

"Powell clearly shows how both expanding latifundia and attempted commercialization of agriculture in the years 1910-1945 led to peasant restlessness and provided the opportunity for an aspiring urban-based political party to mobilize them. . . . The slowness of the land redistribution program has led to considerable peasant defection, and urban domination of politics—as reflected in the 1964 defeat of Acción Democrática—has further reduced the political role of the peasantry in contemporary Venezuela. The first half of Powell's book, 'History of the Mobilization,' is lively, significant, solid history. . . . [However,] the array of charts, tables, diagrams, and models [in the second half] adds little in the way of either interest or understanding of the Venezuelan problem." Edwin Lieuwen

Ann Am Acad 398:171 N '71 470w

"Carefully researched . . . written for the specialist in Latin America, for specialists in the theory of political change in developing societies, and for those interested in the process of agrarian reform. . . . The chapters of analysis are sometimes difficult to follow; Powell is often uncritically devoted to the fortunes of A.D. and its former leader, Romulo Betancourt; the index is skimpy. Not for the general reader."

Choice 8:899 S '71 200w

POWELL, LAWRENCE CLARK. California classics: the creative literature of the Golden state. 393p il $10.95 Ward Ritchie press

810.9 American literature—California—History and criticism
ISBN 0378-07781-3 LC 75-149085

"These essays on 31 'California classics' are updated from a series which originally appeared in Westways magazine. . . . [They] are arranged chronologically—from one on Bolton's account of Anza's 1776 expedition to one on Raymond Chandler's Farewell, My Lovely [BRD 1940]—and are grouped roughly by geographical area. In each essay, Powell discusses not only the work itself, but also its author's career and the influence of California on his writing. Included are discussions of the works of Twain, Harte, Steinbeck, Stevenson, . . . Idwal Jones [and] Harry Leon Wilson." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

Am Lit 43:508 N '71 70w

"Powell admits to an arbitrary determination of 'classic' and acknowledges that some may disagree with his choices. (The works he treats are chiefly literary, although some are of a historical or scientific nature). . . . [His] enthusiasms are always infectious, and the book is a joy to read." S. A. Haffner

Library J 96:3327 O 15 '71 150w

POWELL, PHILIP WAYNE. Tree of hate: propaganda and prejudices affecting United States relations with the Hispanic world. 210p il $8.95 Basic bks.

301.15 Spain—Foreign opinion. Spain—Foreign relations. Civilization, Hispanic
ISBN 465-08750-7 LC 79-158442

The "imperial achievements of Spain in the 16th Century prompted many Europeans, through fear and envy of Spanish power, to launch calculated anti-Spanish propaganda that systematically denigrated Spain, Spaniards, and Spanish values. The author . . . analyzes the so-called Black Legend, its origins, its major features and fallacies, and its entrenchment in Western history. In transitional sequence, he examines the dimensions of 'Hispanophobia,' the intellectual and religious foundations in the Enlightenment, and the racist ideas of 19th- and 20th-Century Nordic writers, all of which continue, Powell concludes, to have harmful effects on U.S. foreign policy and on American attitudes toward the entire Hispanic world." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This terse study presents an historical explanation for the Hispanophobia still ubiquitous in the U.S. and Europe. It is a well documented work. . . . The author's obvious affection for Hispanic culture actually adds a polemical quality to his critique. . . . Powell's survey of historic Hispanophobia provides an important contribution to Iberian historiography. The myths and truths of Spanish civilization desperately need exposure and Tree of hate examines those topics with evident scholarship. . . . Despite the dustjacket description only two chapters (22 pages) concern U.S. contacts with Spain or Spanish America."

Choice 9:699 JI/Ag '72 200w

"Powell's book appears at a timely stage in United States history, when questions of race and the furor over what slave systems exploited blacks more hold the attention of numerous historians. . . . While [he] writes eloquently and passionately, he often undermines his own thesis. That Spain 'sinned' no more than England, Holland, and other conquerors cannot be questioned; but that Spain 'sinned' less than her fellows, that point appears debatable at best, if not at once totally false. . . . However [this] book deserves careful reading, not only because [Powell] writes with gusto in defense of a minority opinion and of the Hispanic world but also because his own interpretations add more fuel to the old controversy." R. E. Ruiz

J Am Hist 59:401 S '72 700w

Reviewed by W. W. MacDonald

Library J 97:196 Ja 15 '72 100w

POWER, JOHN H. The Philippines: industrialization and trade policies [by] John H. Power and Gerardo P. Sicat [and] Taiwan: industrialization and trade policies [by] Mohuan Hsing; pub. for the Development centre of the Organisation for economic coop. and development. 324p $13; pa $7.25 Oxford 338.9512 Philippine Islands—Economic policy. Philippine Islands—Commercial policy. Taiwan—Economic policy. Taiwan—Commercial policy.

ISBN 0-19-2153330-7; 0-19-215337-4 (pa)
LC 72-22971

This volume, one of six produced by the Development Centre, comprises case studies "concerning the processes, policies, and problems of industrialization in [two of] the less developed countries (LDC's). . . . [The case studies] contain a common core: a description of changes in industrial structure since World War II and an attempt to assess the influence of industrial and trade policies on that structure." (Ann Am Acad)

"The authors [of these two studies] display their individuality—digressing into closer examination of particular sectors, public-sector industry, and the influence of foreign aid—but the methodology is essentially uniform; analytically, it consists of measuring the extent of import substitution in industry and estimating the rates of effective protection awarded by tariff and import-licensing policies. The [argument] is also uniform: . . . although rates of growth of manufacturing have been high, LDC policies have excessively and inefficiently encouraged import-substitution and industry at the expense of exports and agriculture. . . . The OECD Development Centre is to be congratulated, both for stimulating these investigations and for the excellent choice of authors." R. C. Porter

Ann Am Acad 396:120 JI '71 400w

"These three authors are economists of the highest standing in the two countries. Their detailed and closely 'applied' economic findings cannot be discussed in a short review, but in a nutshell both countries have discriminated against imports. Taiwan (receiving, till recently, much aid) did far better in both industrialisation and exports, and continues to thrive in those respects. Manufacturing in the Philippines is very unlikely to become a leading sector, unless the policy discouraging exports is reversed. . . . [This volume] presents a decidedly useful addition to the economic literature on South-east Asia and on economic development generally." Stuart Kirby

Pacific Affairs 45:146 spring '72 150w

POWER, PATRICIA. This deadly grief. 181p $4.95 Doubleday

LC 70-171313

"It seemed a good idea that Daphne Wilder should move in with an old friend of her mother's. . . . It was a good chance to settle down and get her emotional balance after the wedding of her twin. And then too, her mother's friend was so lonely now after her husband's death—lonely in a gem of a house. How could one associate wholesale murder with such a beautiful setting?" (Best Sell)

"This is indeed a thriller—a generator of goose-pimples."

Best Sell 32:47 Ap 15 '72 90w

"The essential clue is withheld until the end, and about the only memorable aspect of this unhappy book is the heroine's deplorable taste in clothes."

Library J 97:88 Ja 1 '72 80w

"[This story] is told in writing of such incredible triteness and turgidity that not even addicts will be able to get through it." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 12 '72 70w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:71 F 26 '72 70w

POWERS, EDWARD. Traveling weatherwise in the U.S.A. [by] Edward Powers and James Witt. 299p maps $7.95 Dodd

551.6973 U.S.—Climate. U.S.—Description and travel—Guide books

ISBN 0-396-06360-8 LC 73-153892

This work "subdivides the country into 12 geographical areas on the basis of weather alone, and allows one to find . . . the information needed for vacation planning, business travel, or retirement. There are over 150 charts, giving the weather characteristics of cities all over the United States, as well as fifty pages of maps discussing weather patterns and local conditions in each weather area. . . . The reader can learn what the given rainfall, temperature, wind speed and general climatic conditions will be in any major city." (Publisher's note)

"This [is a] very practical and nontechnical book. . . . [The authors] provide facts about temperatures, precipitation, storms, pollution, etc. . . . There is no index, but a complete table of contents serves the purpose. Small vignettes on the line-drawing maps add a touch of humor. Seemingly the only book of its kind, this should be in all travel and reference collections." S. L. Steen

Library J 97:3587 N 1 '72 120w

"But the charts are what count [in this book]. In their rows of stately, undoubtedly accurate, printed numbers, they lend us the 'weatherwise' assurances that mercurial nature so often denies."

Sat R 55:101 O 7 '72 200w

POWERS, LYALL H. Henry James and the naturalist movement. 200p $8.50 Mich. state univ. press

813 James, Henry. French fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 87013-156-7 LC 70-121687

In this study, the author "assesses the influence on James of 'the grandsons of Balzac': Edmond de Goncourt, Turgenev, Zola, Daudet, and Maupassant." (Choice) Index.

"[This study is] lucid, closely argued, and well balanced. . . . [It] begins with a Taine-like account of James's literary and social milieu in the 1870's followed by a consideration of naturalist principles. . . . Mr. Powers avoids the snare of trying to see [the novels] . . . as works of 'pure' naturalism. He does well with the Princess and the Muse, less well with the Bostonians. . . . Throughout Mr. Powers makes an overall assumption about development in James that leads to difficulties. Chronology alone, or so it seems, leads him into looking for lines of change which rather easily slip into patterns of continuing improvement. . . . It seems to me more accurate to view James's 'naturalist' years as a long interlude during which he spent a great deal of his time working against his own native grain." George Monteiro

Am Lit 44:493 N '72 650w

"Powers perhaps overestimates James's acceptance of naturalistic philosophy. To Powers, Verena Tarrant in The Bostonians and Hyacinth Robinson in The Princess Casamassima tend to be 'merely passive objects swept on by hereditary and environmental forces. . . . Even Nick Dormer and Miriam Roth in The Tragic Muse make their respective choices as a result of their 'consciousness' of 'forces within and around . . . the dominant passion. . . . Yet Powers' book, with its full notes . . . will aid students of James' middle period. Recommended."

POWERS, L. H.—Continued

Choice 8:1020 O '71 180w

"[This book] takes as its subject an author of admitted complexity but presents the plots of The Bostonians, The Princess Casamassima, The Tragic Muse, and The Ambassadors on the intellectual level of the undergraduate to whom the name of Henry James is a novelty. . . . The résumé of James's responses to the varied statements of aesthetic purpose made by the continental novelists of the 1870's and 1880's is most helpful, as are the distinctions between the way James's attitudes changed between 1875 and 1881. Furthermore, the book's solid core of documentation excites many ideas, however untouched or inconclusively treated they may be within this book." Martha Banta

New Eng Q 44:681 D '71 1000w

POWLEY, EDWARD BARZILLAI. The naval side of King William's war, 16th/26th November 1688-14th June 1690; foreword [by] Sir Arthur Bryant. 392p il $11.75 Archon bks.

942.06 Grand Alliance, War of the, 1689-1697.
Great Britain—History—Stuarts, 1603-1714
ISBN 0-208-01084-X LC 72-178755

"The theme of the book is the naval events between November 16, 1688, when Louis XIV declared war on the United Provinces, and June 14, 1690, when William III landed in Ireland and the French and Allied Fleets began the series of movements which ended in the French victory off Beachy Head on June 30. . . . Naval matters are treated against the general political, diplomatic and military background and include an examination of administrative problems and procedures as well as of operations." (TLS)

"It is likely that Powley's . . . book will long remain the standard account of the naval operations and British maritime strategy during King William's War. . . . Powley has researched the topic with characteristic thoroughness and the result is a text heavy in detail. This book should find its way into libraries with special interests in naval, Irish, and British history."

Choice 9:1192 N '72 110w

"The relevance of the narrative is remarkable. While William III looked towards Europe and neglected his back door in Ireland, another notable Protestant cleric organised the defence of the city against Catholic armies to create the myth which has sustained Orangemen over the past 300 years. As Sir Arthur Bryant says in his introduction, William was a reluctant 'liberator of Ireland because he was solely interested in the prosecution of the war, ending somewhat arbitrarily before the Battle of the Boyne.'"

Economist 243:65 Ap 29 '72 380w

"[This work] is based on a doctoral dissertation which must surely have been one of the more exhausting burdens ever laid on examiners. The range of sources consulted and cited is wide; the information detailed and exact; and the total result quite unreadable with any pleasure. This could be accepted as a secondary drawback if, at the end of his reading, the student could feel that he had extended his knowledge of significant fact or acquired new depth of understanding. Such is not the case. The abundance of detail, the trivial often concealing the important, and the failure to organize the material into any developing pattern of interpretation combine to deaden rather than stimulate."

TLS p1001 Ag 25 '72 410w

PRAGER, ARTHUR. Rascals at large; or, The clue in the old nostalgia. 334p $6.95 Doubleday 813 Children's literature. American fiction —History and criticism
LC 70-158350

The author presents his comments on, and reactions to, children's novels he read when he was between 10 and 14 years old. Among these were a number issued in series and entitled The Hardy Boys, Tom Swift, Frank Merriwell and The Rover Boys.

"This is essentially one man's reminiscences about his own and other children's reactions to the children's novels of the 20's, 30's, and 40's. He considers the famous series . . . (Nancy Drew, Tarzan, etc.) as he recollects them and then from an adult standpoint, commenting on their foibles with wit and insight and evaluating them with regard to their overall quality and merit for present-day young readers. His character analyses are highly amusing, and his tongue-in-cheek assessments of the plots and their sometimes impossible complications are most enjoyable."

B. L. Wimbles

Library J 97:684 F 15 '72 80w

"[Prager] has no thesis. His method is to quote some of the more ridiculous passages in novel after novel, note they are racist, hawkish, prudish, or mildly pornographic, then move on to another example. Not an analysis or even a collection, the book is a heap. . . . Because he read over 400 different children's series novels, Prager surely qualifies as a national resource, a kind of Smithsonian of pop culture. But he's a Smithsonian with no catalogue."

New Repub 165:26 D 11 '71 430w

PRAKASH, VED, jt. ed. Urbanization and national development. See Jakobson, L.

PAZ, MARIO. Conversation pieces; a survey of the informal group portrait in Europe and America. 287p il col il $19.50 Pa. state univ. press

757 Portrait painting

ISBN 0-271-00132-1 LC 76-127380

This volume "surveys group portraiture throughout Europe, seeing Italian developments in relation to Dutch and English, and linking the paintings with bourgeois realism in literature." (TLS)

"The conversation piece is precisely defined as usually a small painting representing two or more identifiable people in informal attitudes or actions which imply communication with each other, against a background which describes their private habitat. . . . The excellent reproductions (32 in color) offer a wide range of examples, from the primitive to the sophisticated, from the familiar to a preponderance of the unfamiliar, from works of excellence to those of mediocre quality, and from early paintings (including some 15th and 16th-century prototypes) to one as recent as 1955. The author's frequent references to literature of all ages add spice to the text."

J. K. Nelson

J Aesthetics 31:138 fall '72 140w

"Praz points to a tradition of bourgeois art running from Chaucer through Defoe and Fielding to Balzac and Dickens—but in the course of the book connoisseurship comes to prevail over criticism: there are so many specimens to hand on the walls of the mental museum that no time is left for discussion of the worth and significance of these rather bad paintings. . . . One of the criteria of the conversation piece, in Professor Praz's definition, is 'privacy (i.e. not a public or official function)'. . . . In making comparisons between the sister arts, the critic must avoid both the facility of the connoisseur, for whom it is enough to liken Pope to Watteau or Monet to Debussy, and the rigidity of the cultural historian, who erases the differences between the arts by yoking them all to economic and social causes. Professor Praz's special way of thinking in parallels is a model of how to proceed. The connexions between the arts which he suggests are neither too loose nor too deterministically tight. They allow for, and stimulate, much further thought on a fascinating subject."

TLS p13 Ja 7 '72 1250w

PRESCOTT, ORVILLE. Lords of Italy; portraits from the middle ages. 366p il $10 Harper 920 Italy—Kings and rulers. Italy—History —To 1559. Middle Ages—History
SBN 06-013412-7 LC 72-79688

A series of biographical portraits selected to provide a narrative about the men who ruled in Italy during the Middle Ages. They range from Pope Leo IX and Robert Guiscard of the mid-11th-Century through Gian Galeazzo Visconti of the late 14th-Century. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson

Best Sell 32:326 O 15 '72 240w

Reviewed by J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p19 N 15 '72 140w

"This is a unique book of great potential. It is marred, however, by a number of amateurish faults: uncontrolled anecdotalism, factual inaccuracies (as, for example, the issues involved in Church-imperial relations before and during the investiture contest), and a fatal attraction toward romanticism and moralizing of a veritably Victorian sort. An entertaining book that recreational reading collections may find popular, but to be approached with great circumspection by academic libraries." R. C. Hoffmann

Library J 97:2593 Ag '72 160w

"Like Orville Prescott's previous volume, 'Princes of the Renaissance' (BRD 1969), this popular history has a spectacular cast—Gregory VII, who became Pope in spite of himself; Frederick I, 'Barbarossa' . . . the ironically named Pope Innocent III. . . . Frederick II, the poet-scholar who liberated Jerusalem. The unending savage violence that characterized the conflicts between Church and State are rendered more vividly than the clash of ideas and personalities. But at all times the author's enthusiasm for his subject, enhanced by his own travels in Italy, keeps the narrative moving. The illustrations are excellent."

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 8 '72 130w

PRESCOTT, PETER S. Soundings: encounters with contemporary books. 331p $7.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

809 Literature—History and criticism. Book reviews

SBN 698-10474-9 LC 73-187146

A collection of reviews and occasional pieces selected from material published during the past ten years in Women's Wear Daily, Look and Newsweek. Prescott deals with authors and their books, as well as the contemporary scene and literary trends of our time. Index.

"[Prescott] is a pretty good book reviewer who almost always writes with facility, demonstrated by these several hundred reviews. . . . His style is clean and brisk, and he deals adequately with Bellow, Percy, Kate Millett, George Jackson, Oates, Solzhenitsyn, Michael Crichton, and E. B. White—really with just about everyone. Although his judgments aren't always convincing, he obviously finds much pleasure in book reviewing and is able to communicate his love of reading. For those who wish to master book reviewing a journalistic technique [this book] may prove useful." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:2188 Je 15 '72 160w

"A collection of reviews by perspicacious, perceptive Peter Prescott. . . . PP is . . . a transcendental reviewer who gives you something more than a quotable quote, who moves like the hummingbird, stings like the bee, and does not labor over the gnat. . . . There are a lot of pleasant surprises in [the book] the biggest of which is how few of Prescott's prophecies were wrong, how accurate his first impressions were. Why not take Soundings along to the beach this vacation, as a sort of reviewer's course in the literary scene."

New Repub 166:28 Je 10 '72 290w

"In general, Mr. Prescott is at his best in reviews of serious, but second-rate fiction, in his demolition jobs on pretentious trash . . . and in his circumspect discussions of books on public affairs. He is at his worst when writing about works based on theory or scholarship, for neither of which has he the patience, and when writing about popular culture. . . . He is unfailingly humane, lively, and considerate of his reader—which is no doubt why 'Soundings' is more fun to read than a collection of old reviews ought to be. To my surprise, in fact, I enjoyed reading this book very much. . . . I enjoyed the book as I might enjoy conversations about literature with a sedulous friend." George Stade

N Y Times Bk R p22 J1 16 '72 1500w

PREST, WILFRID R. The Inns of Court under Elizabeth I and the early Stuarts, 1590-1640. 263p $13.50 Rowman & Littlefield

340.07 Inns of Court, London
ISBN 0-87471-078-2 LC 72-188724

"At the beginning of the 17th Century the Inns served as training centers for law students, as finishing schools for young gentlemen, and as clubs for practising lawyers. The author explains the origins of the membership and the governance of the Inns; he then . . . [discusses] their place within the context of the social and political events leading to the English Civil War. Prest points out that lawyers were as badly split on the issues of religion and politics as were most socioeconomic groups of the time." (Library J)

"[This is] a model study of England's 'third university' during a period which is receiving increased attention as a major transitional era. Representing the only comprehensive treatment of the subject, it is unlikely to be superseded in the near future, given the scarcity of sources. Prest has thoroughly examined the extant information, subjected it to modern statistical analysis, and arrived at some interesting conclusions on such diverse matters as the Inns' changing educational functions in the common law, the social and religious composition of their members, and their relationships to Parliamentary and Royalist circles under the early Stuarts."

Choice 9:1344 D '72 170w

"Prest's detailed study of the Inns of Court examines these professional legal associations from every angle. . . . For those interested in the history of law, this study is of value." K. G. Madison

Library J 97:2593 Ag '72 100w

"Prest's discussion of the part played by gentlemen in the Inns is excellent, and his conclusion that the societies continued to function for the benefit of their professional membership, leaving the young gallants as an 'ornamental but essentially irrelevant appendage' is conclusively made out. . . . One of the pleasantest parts of the book is a fascinating little chapter on student rebellion in the Inns. The final, and in many ways the most interesting section of the book deals with religion, and with the various images the Inns have acquired. . . . [The author] has written a really good book, which will be used as a work of reference by everyone interested in the Inns . . . and a really good book on the social and intellectual history of Tudor and Stuart England."

TLS p898 J1 28 '72 800w

PRESTWICH, MICHAEL. War, politics, and finance under Edward I. 317p il $10 Rowman & Littlefield

942.03 Great Britain—History—Plantagenets, 1154-1399. Great Britain—Politics and government—Plantagenets, 1154-1399. Finance—Great Britain. Great Britain—Armed Forces
ISBN 0-87471-116-9 LC 72-189458

The author "examines the warfare of Edward I of England. He is not concerned with battles and tactics, but with how Edward's armies were recruited, clothed, fed, and paid. In addition, he discusses the effects of Edward's military activities on the internal political and social structure of England." (Library J)

"[This is] a thorough and carefully researched account. . . . From [the author's] investigations there emerges a picture of a nation mobilised for war on a scale which constantly suggests modern parallels. The book as a whole is firmly analytical in its treatment of the wars and their consequences, and gains immeasurably in clarity as a result. Where Dr Prestwich diverges from received opinions his arguments are convincing, and where he accepts them his reasons for doing so are good. His style is lucid, if somewhat staccato, and his book is a genuine contribution to knowledge."

Economist 244:58 J1 22 '72 500w

"Through the use of numerous manuscripts and modern scholarly opinion, Prestwich leaves little doubt that Edward's militarism cost him not only much treasure, but also the respect of his subjects. The impact of the wars was felt by everyone in England by the reign's end. This study helps to right the incorrect view that Edward I was a king with only positive policies." K. G. Madison

Library J 97:3587 N 1 '72 120w

PREVIN, ANDRE. Music face to face, by Andre Previn and Antony Hopkins. 132p $5.95; pa $1.95 Scribner

780.1 Music—Analysis, appreciation
ISBN 684-12846-2; 684-12873-X (pa)
LC 74-38530

The conductor of the London Symphony Orchestra and a B.B.C. broadcaster on the subject of music discuss various topics "mainly autobiographical or aesthetic, including, . . . the meaning of music, the nature of art, the purpose of criticism, the psychology of creation." (TLS)

PREVIN, ANDRE—Continued

"This book, produced from tape recordings made in hotel rooms and airport waiting rooms in Brussels, Bucharest, and Cluj, Rumania, is an extended 'rap' session of only variable interest. The tapes have been edited rather loosely and there are typographical errors throughout; but the major problem is that much of the tape should have been discarded. . . . We listen to two professionals (though Hopkins is somewhat sophomoric in his questions) talk about their favorite subject—music. There are moments of insight, coming almost exclusively from Previn, about composing film scores and about the nature of the creative experience in music." M. A. Silver

Library J 97:1813 My 15 '72 90w

"This book was spoken, not written, but its consequent informality has not made it diffuse, nor has its colloquialism led to loose thinking on the various subjects discussed. . . . They are faced, debated, illuminated from different angles and sometimes concluded with hearty concurrence of view. More immediately, if more superficially, interesting are the accounts the two men give of their careers. . . . The dialogue is a literary form of irreproachable antecedents. Here is a modern example at once vivid and engaging."

TLS p36 Ja 14 '72 130w

PRICE, ANTHONY. The Alamut ambush. 216p $4.95 Doubleday

LC 72-180098

"The story opens with an explosion—a bomb planted in an automobile. It kills a British intelligence man. The wrong man? The search for the answer leads Dr. Audley . . . deep into the waters of Middle Eastern politics and the activities of various Palestinian terrorist groups, and it draws young Hugh Roskill deep into danger and violence which explodes, finally, on the peaceful South Coast." (Publisher's note)

Best Sell 32:149 Je 15 '72 130w

"A competent though undistinguished English story of international intrigue of the stiff-upper-lip school. . . . Unfortunately [it soon gets] bogged down in the morass of Middle Eastern politics; extremist groups of varying shades of opinion are becoming less than fascinating." Henry Veit

Library J 97:2654 Ag '72 100w

"Last year the British author, Anthony Price, delivered himself of a promising first novel, 'The Labyrinth Makers' [BRD 1971]. Now comes [this book which] shows even more expertise. The basic setup is almost old hat by now—an espionage agent working blindly, a puppet manipulated by his superiors, often unable to distinguished the good guys from the bad. But Price, with his unsentimental view of the world, knows how to juggle the most convoluted intrigue and end up making sense."

Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p22 Jl 30 '72 150w

New Yorker 48:135 S 23 '72 180w

"Mr Price's second intelligence novel leaves small doubt that here we have an excellent new story-teller in this field."

TLS p950 Ag 6 '71 130w

PRICE, CHRISTINE. Heirs of the ancient Maya; a portrait of the Lacandon Indians; phot. by Gertrude Duby Blom. 64p lib bdg $5.95 Scribner

970.3 Lacandon Indians—Juvenile literature
SBN 684-12811-X LC 78-37191

"The Lacandons, who are less than three hundred in number, are the descendants of the Maya. Although the Mayan culture collapsed six hundred years before the Spaniards conquered Mexico, the Lacandons still retain old religious beliefs that have been orally transmitted, are aware of the temples of their ancestors, and make pilgrimages to the ruins of the ancient cities. The [photographs and text] record the daily life as well as the individual personalities of the Lacandon Indians, who are present not only in relationship to the world of nature but also in relationship to the architecture and the sculpture of the ancient Mayan culture." (Horn Bk)

"Ages eleven to fourteen." (Sat R)

"[A] beautifully produced book. . . . The text is lyrical and appreciative, but carefully wrought and controlled. Taken as a whole, the book is a highly successful verbal and visual essay in which beauty and humanity are commingled." P. H.

Horn Bk 48:382 Ag '72 200w

"Stunning photographs and a lyric text describe a people who refused to submit to their conquerors: The Lacandon simply withdrew. Civilization has impinged on their pattern of living but not changed it substantially. They worship the same gods, keep to the old ways, and their strong, beautiful faces are the same faces that were carved centuries ago. A moving book." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:75 Je 17 '72 100w

PRICE, CHRISTINE, il. One is God; two old counting songs. unp lib bdg $4.95 Warne

784.4 Folk songs—Juvenile literature
LC 72-100339

"Two traditional counting songs—one British, 'Green Grow the Rushes, Oh!' and one Hebrew, 'Who Knows One?'—are presented with explanatory notes [and] musical accompaniment. . . . Kindergarten to grade three." (Library J)

"Strong, decorative woodcut-like illustrations enhance the volume. . . . All ages." E. M. Graves

Commonweal 92:245 My 22 '70 30w

"A unique contribution to both the picture book and music sections of libraries. The religious symbols of Christianity and Judaism are the bases of the songs and are clearly depicted in the illustrations (e.g. in) 'Green Grow the Rushes, Oh!', three refers to 'the Wisers' or Three Wise Men, represented by a crown; four to 'the Gospel Makers,' represented by an open book. In 'Who Knows One?', one refers to God, pictorially shown by a burning bush; two to 'the Tables of Covenant,' illustrated by the Ten Commandments—inscribed stone tablets; etc. The likenesses of the religions are apparent in these songs, which will also serve to give youngsters a better understanding of the meaning of our religious symbols." L. L. Clark

Library J 95:4340 D 15 '70 190w

PRICE, IRVING. Buying country property: pitfalls and pleasures; il. by Grambs Miller. 173p $5.95 Harper

643 Real estate

ISBN 0-06-013408-9 LC 71-161637

The "author discusses various aspects of rural real estate, including financing, taxes, and utilities, . . . surveys, subdivisions, lake property, farming, country customs . . . and retirement in the country, whether in development communities or otherwise." (Library J)

"The general approach is that of considering what is best for the city slicker who is hankering to join 'em down on the farm. Just as a travel book author tells the tourist how to act and what to expect in a foreign country. Price tries to smooth the way for the urbanite heading for the sticks. . . . Recommended." J. B. Woy

Library J 97:492 F 1 '72 110w

"Lots of good advice in this trim and well printed volume, but I warn every novice searching for a little place 'away from it all'—Mr. Price forgot that one in his sardonic chapter 'The Country Voice'—not to show up with it in a real estate broker's office. Do your homework in the city and keep your expertise under your hat. . . . Better to follow Price's advice than of those helpful relatives who show up shaking their heads just before you sign the contract." M. L. Burnham

Nat R 24:536 My 12 '72 220w

PRICE, MONROE E. Cable television: a guide for citizen action [by] Monroe E. Price [and] John Wicklein; foreword by Everett C. Parker. 160p $5.95; pa $2.95 Pilgrim press

384.55 Community antenna television
ISBN 0-8298-0234-7; 0-8298-0235-5 (pa)
LC 78-186142

This book explains "what cable can do, who controls it and, most importantly, how citizens can influence its development along lines that serve their community interests." (America) Annotated bibliography.

"The authors are misleading when they write as though they are providing a game plan to win control of a franchise; outright control and operation is the realm of big-time financiers and teams of legal experts. But on a more modest level, they are quite practical and concrete when they show how a private organization can obtain time on cable for programs of community interest. . . . Mere availability of channels is not enough; the people must be encouraged and aided to take advantage of the new medium. This book is an attempt to generate such interest. Unfortunately, haste and joint authorship leave their stamp. . . . Without an index, the text, especially the legal documentation provided in 3 of the 6 appendices, is greatly limited in its usefulness. . . . [The authors] are experienced in the field of CATV, but should have decided more clearly the intent of this small but expensive book." R. A. Blake

America 126:241 Mr 4 '72 300w

Christian Century 89:205 F 16 '72 50w

PRICE, REYNOLDS. Things themselves; essays & scenes. 269p il $8.95 Atheneum pubs.

814 Literature—History and criticism
LC 79-190398

This book includes "studies of Milton, James, Faulkner, Hemingway, and Welty . . . [as well as] the author's discussion of his novel A Generous Man [BRD 1966]; some scenes from a screenplay of his first novel, A Long and Happy Life [BRD 1962]; and a . . . meditation on Rembrandt's pictures of Abraham and Isaac." (Library J)

"The study of Hemingway is brilliant, and the essays on Welty and Faulkner are especially thought provoking. . . . This is not a hastily compiled miscellany; the heterogeneous subject matter is unified by Price's own controlling vision of the artist and his role. Most readers will probably be drawn to this collection because of their interest in Price the novelist; they will find, however, that the work of Price the observer and critic deserves attention in its own right." Mary McBride

Library J 97:2188 Je 15 '72 200w

"The habits of [Price's] fiction create most of the flaws in this alert and intelligent book. The subdued poetry of his novels, for example, comes out here as a frequently strained raciness, a reaching for rich, jaunty language. The stripped simplicity that is a form of strength and tact in his fiction too often becomes merely dogged in his essays, a series of eloquent but brutal rejections of complexity. More generally, his self-esteem as a skilled narrative craftsman makes him something of a bully in discursive prose." Michael Wood

N Y Times Bk R p2 Je 18 '72 900w

"[The author] expresses firm, frequently controversial, ideas as to how literature happens, what it does, and how it should be approached. As one might expect, Mr. Price ranks criticism well below creative activity. For him, thinking and talking about literature, art, and life are activities the writer busies himself with while waiting for inspiration to seize him. . . . The 'things themselves' of the title are the author's response to the mechanistic view of art underlying the formalist school of criticism that dominated, until recently, the American scene." S. G. Nichols

Sat R 55:62 Je 10 '72 800w

PRICE, ROGER. The French Second Republic; a social history. 386p $11.50 Cornell univ. press

320.944 France—Politics and government—1799-1914. France—Social conditions
ISBN 0-8014-0686-2 LC 70-173282

This work deals with France in a "period of crisis in the mid-nineteenth century. Describing . . . [the] events from the time of the revolution of February 1848 to the election of Louis-Napoleon in 1852, the author shows how political and social groups in favor of radical change were overwhelmed by conservative and reactionary elements. To test and reassess some preconceptions still held about the nature of French society and institutions of the period, Mr. Price [also] offers a critique of Karl Marx's two . . . essays, The Class Struggles in France, 1848-1850, and The Eighteenth Brumaire of Louis-Napoleon." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"[This] work is complex, careful, and persuasive; for many it will also be very provocative. Essential for its effort to offer answers to long-standing and perplexing problems, valuable for students of French and modern history at every level. Cannot be compared with standard works in the field; it examines arguments from contemporary observers to the most recent works."

Choice 9:568 Je '72 160w

"[The author] has consulted the works of the most important French historians of the 1848 period and has made himself familiar with their researches. He has himself studied some of the relevant archives—particularly those concerning the June insurrection. He has read Marx, de Tocqueville and other contemporaries more carefully than most of those who are apt to quote them. The result is a book which will need to be read by all students of the period. . . . It is difficult to avoid the impression, as one works through these somewhat densely written pages, that one has arrived in the middle of an argument. The student who does not already possess an outline knowledge of what happened between the revolution and the establishment of the second empire is likely to be confused."

Economist 242:50 Ja 22 '72 400w

"Solidly based on contemporary publications and archival sources, this interesting study is buttressed with 29 pages of footnotes and a 22-page bibliography." J. A. Clarke

Library J 97:1433 Ap 15 '72 100w

"[Price] has chosen to write not a narrative history of the period, but rather a commentary on Marx. Marx's is the name, as the index confirms, to occur most frequently in his book . . . [which is] not a general survey but a discussion of controversies and problems, directed mainly at undergraduates specializing in this subject. [The author has] added some interesting original contributions of his own on a few precise points, but his book is essentially a discussion of the effect of modern research on the Marxist interpretation."

TLS p610 My 26 '72 950w

PRIESTLEY, HAROLD. The English home. 216p il $12.50 Transatlantic

728 Houses. Architecture, English
LC [74-593517]

The author describes the "evolution [of the Englishman's home] from stone hut to nineteenth-century back-to-back. . . . Much of the book concerns half-timbered buildings and their construction. . . . Priestley describes how home life was improved by the introduction of glass for windows, brick building, cheaper furniture and cutlery; and altered by the gramophone, radio and motor car. He refers to the effect of by-laws and building regulations on mass housing." (TLS)

"It is difficult to determine why this volume was published or for whom it was intended. One assumes that it is meant to be a popular book on the English house. . . . The text might have been redeemed by its illustrations, but these give the feeling that they were all taken by an amateur photographer using a box camera of the 1930's; and finally, to compound the negation, they are poorly printed. . . . The examples of the contemporary English house show, as English critics have pointed out, that these structures are close to being deplorable. For the historian of popular taste this book may well be of value, but it is not for the general reader." David Gebhard

Library J 96:4002 D 1 '71 140w

TLS p599 My 21 '71 160w

PRIESTLEY, J. B. Victoria's heyday. 296p il col pl $15 Harper

942.081 Great Britain—Social life and customs. Great Britain—History—19th century
ISBN 06-013413-5 LC 79-181638

In this "companion volume to The Prince of Pleasure [BRD 1969] and The Edwardians [BRD 1970] Mr. Priestley surveys the social, political, industrial, religious, literary and artistic life of this decade. The 1850s included . . . the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. They also saw a vast expansion of industry and the consolidation of the middle class, whose social and sexual prejudices and contradictions Mr

PRIESTLEY, J. B.—Continued

Priestley describes, and . . . the violence of religious controversy and the fascination with death, spiritualism and other esoteric experiences [which] were as characteristic of the period as the publication of Darwin's Origin of Species." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by A. J. Hamilton
America 127:372 N 4 '72 160w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 23:92 Ag '72 50w

"The book is a pleasure to look at . . . [but] Priestley by and large tells us little that is new. It is difficult to determine the audience for whom this book is intended. The specialist will certainly be bored but no one without some special interest in Victoriana will care to read the details of politics and minor fiction and religious attitudes that Priestley introduces." E. M. Casey

Best Sell 32:221 Ag 1 '72 300w

Choice 9:1344 D '72 130w

"[This book] reads with the ease and excitement of one of his novels, filled with anecdotes, quotations, and Mr. Priestley's own wit. It's a big handsome book. At first glance I thought it too handsome to be serious. Its splendid glossy reproductions of Victorian masterpieces, prints, and photographs, give it a deluxe magazine coffee-table-volume appearance. But this is one of the occasions when the text lives up to the format. . . . But Mr. Priestley is more than a quoter and a chronicler. Victoria's Heyday should be read for its discussion on books alone (he is masterly on 'David Copperfield'). Besides, his knack for a phrase makes him worth quoting for his own sake." Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 26 '72 430w

"The 1850s . . . were Queen Victoria's personal heyday of happiness. The Great Exhibition (which Priestley brings vividly to life in these pages) . . . was her own shining hour. . . . Much of the zest of the book lies in the original way in which what has to be said is presented, e.g., the central place which the mid-Victorian middle classes occupy in the story. . . . On art and artists—not the Pre-Raphaelites only but the mid-Victorian genre painters as well—he is eloquent and exact. (Here the lavish and beautifully reproduced illustrations match the text perfectly and combine to give the flavour of the period.) . . . On the broad, social front, the writer's innate and essential radicalism gives an extra and characteristic nip to all his judgments." John Raymond

New Statesman 83:604 My 5 '72 600w

Reviewed by Noel Annan

N Y Rev of Books 19:14 N 30 '72 180w

"[This is a] bedside book . . . full of mesmerizing Victorian paintings (the greater number of them unknown except to specialists). . . . Priestley writes with his accustomed authority and style, permitting himself his crotchets and making the time come alive as he concentrates on the figures and events of the decade that are of particular interest to him. . . . [He] casts a wide net, taking the expected giants—from Dickens and Tennyson to Lord Palmerston and Florence Nightingale, about whom he manages to find something fresh to say—as well as the obscure and entirely forgotten. The effect is not unlike a well-thought-out guided tour for intelligent travelers who want to know something about the places they visit, but not to the point of exhaustion." Peter Stansky

Sat R 55:50 Ag 12 '72 1400w

TLS p652 Je 9 '72 370w

PRING, DAVID, jt. auth. Parliament & Congress. See Bradshaw, K.

PRIOR, MATTHEW. The literary works of Matthew Prior; ed. by H. Bunker Wright and Monroe K. Spears. 2v 2d ed 4l $22.50 Oxford

821

ISBN 19-811852-X

In this second edition the "major change is the inclusion of a general index; other alterations include additional editorial commentary, the correction of minor errors, and the revision of the title index." (Library J) For the first edition see BRD 1961.

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 96:3595 N 1 '71 70w

"Prior produced a prodigious amount of verse, easily read and readily forgotten, in the reigns of William III and Queen Anne, when the line between professional and amateur writer wobbled and wavered in a governing society perhaps more effortlessly literate than ever before or since. . . . That a second edition of so bulky a work should be called for a dozen years later is a remarkable tribute not only to the editors' skill but also to the steady appetite of academic libraries in the English-reading world. . . . The scholarly commentary, no less than the nimble-witted Prior himself, provides a feast of most enjoyable browsing."

TLS p528 My 5 '72 260w

PRITCHARD, E. E. EVANS-. See Evans-Pritchard, E. E.

PRITCHETT, V. S. Midnight oil. 271p $6.95 Random house

B or 92

ISBN 0-394-47475-9 LC 76-37074

This second volume of the British author's autobiography follows on A Cab at the Door (BRD 1968) and describes the years from 1921 to 1950, during which he learned his trade, first as a journalist and later as a literary critic, short story writer and novelist.

Reviewed by W. A. S. Dollard

America 127:46 J1 22 '72 550w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks

Atlantic 229:108 Je '72 450w

Reviewed by Jean Stafford

Book World p1 Ap 30 '72 1500w

Choice 9:1132 N '72 100w

"The writing of autobiography tends to resemble chess. . . . France in the early 1920s, Ireland in the civil war, Spain a few years later, his landlady in Paris, an Orange fanatic, Yeats, sympathetic Spanish intellectuals, and, at home war and [his father] . . . all these pieces move smoothly and swiftly across the board to form patterns designed to help [Mr. Pritchett] discover his own qualities as a writer. He is here revealed as a person who teaches himself as he goes along. . . . This book, in the act of being read, seems to change from autobiography to fiction, or rather to blend into the recollection of certain short stories Mr Pritchett has written and which here turn up again . . . in a slightly different form."

Economist 241:68 N 13 '71 410w

Reviewed by J. M. Carroll

Library J 97:1804 My 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by Vivian Mercier

Nation 214:596 My 8 '72 1350w

"If you insist on reading Pritchett's memoir as history it is likely to seem a bit unsatisfactory. But once you reconcile yourself to the fact that it is art, it is fine. . . . [The best parts] seem to me to be the early sections . . . and the later descriptions of the old age and death of his parents: all of these . . . are finely realized and it is neither possible nor profitable to separate in them the elements of authenticity (i.e., the convincing portrayal of an historical situation) and the more personal unverifiable sorts of insight of autobiographical fiction. . . . The less compelling area of the book is the one (Chapters 8 to 10) that covers Pritchett's gradual establishment as a successful writer in the bigger world of Britain from the '30s onwards." Arnold Kettle

New Repub 166:29 My 6 '72 1100w

"[The book] is essentially a Bildungsroman, a portrait of the artist as a young man. . . . Pritchett is only a little older than the celebrated generation of writers of the Thirties. We know a lot about them. . . . His story is quite different. . . . [The whole autobiography] is a rare alliance of skillful composition with transparent candour and truth. Uncommon truth too; for it is also rare to find a writer whose mature career was passed very much in the centre of the literary life who has so much to tell, with so much goodwill and enjoyment, of non-literary life in areas that remain quite uncelebrated in more ordinary records." Graham Hough

New Statesman 82:548 O 22 '71 850w

Reviewed by Karl Miller

N Y Rev of Books 19:12 J1 20 '72 1050w

Reviewed by Wilfrid Sheed
N Y Times Bk R p3 Ap 30 '72 1850w

Reviewed by William Maxwell
New Yorker 48:94 Je 17 '72 3200w
Newsweek 79:102 My 15 '72 600w

Reviewed by A. Alvarez
Sat R 55:67 My 6 '72 2300w

Reviewed by Martha Duffy
Time 99:90 My 8 '72 700w

"It is likely that [the author's] finest imaginative work is contained in these two autobiographical volumes. . . . A Cab At The Door was called in these columns one of the most skilfully composed volumes of autobiography produced for many years. Midnight Oil is just as skilfully composed, although it is sometimes grammatically careless, and contains a distressingly large number of misprints. It is a little less absorbing, because the world in which the severe young man moves is not so fascinating as Edwardian lower-middle-class South London, and because Pritchett senior, who occupied so much of the earlier book, necessarily plays a smaller part in this one. . . . Their relationship was perhaps the most important element in the son's life. It is put down in this memorable autobiography with a tact and skill that it would be hard to overpraise."

TLS p1338 O 22 '71 1050w

PRITTIE, TERENCE. Konrad Adenauer, 1876-1967. 334p pl $10 Cowles
B or 92 Adenauer, Konrad
LC 70-163245

In his survey of Dr Adenauer's life and work, the author traces his "rise from law student to Federal Chancellor: Mayor of Cologne (1917), President of the Prussian State Council (1920), dismissal by the Nazis and temporary imprisonment (1933), Chairman of the Constituent Assembly (1948), and Chancellor (1949). [Prittie focuses on] Adenauer's achievements [and shortcomings]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. J. McAleer
Best Sell 32:123 Je 1 '72 900w
Choice 9:1192 N '72 170w

"Adenauer was already 73 when he became the first chancellor of the Federal German Republic and consequently of importance to the world at large. . . . As the Manchester Guardian's correspondent in Germany from 1946 to 1963, Mr Prittie was an eye-witness of much of the drama of Dr Adenauer's emergence, achievements, setbacks and decline. Prittie's footnotes testify impressively to the authority of the sources of his narrative. The most frequently cited channel of information is 'in conversation with' or 'in a letter to' the author. His biography is scrupulously fair and highly interesting."

Economist 242:51 F 12 '72 310w

Reviewed by B. D. Loynd
Library J 97:2573 Ag '72 160w

"[This biography] is certainly the most informative, perceptive and balanced study of the subject available. . . . [It] underlines the vital fact about Adenauer's approach to governing Germany—that he only took on the job after passing the age of three score years and ten—by painting a full picture of the future chancellor's early life. . . . [Prittie is] right to subtitle his book 'a study in fortitude,' and he shows how this quality, inculcated very early in Adenauer's life, was reinforced by some of the experiences of his mature years. . . . [This work], which is based on a profound knowledge of the century of German history in which Adenauer grew up and worked, . . . is marked by . . . political insight and mastery of both detail and perspective."

TLS p236 Mr 3 '72 900w

PRO QUARTERBACK MAGAZINE. Pro football: the world of the NFL. See Rathet, M.

PROCHNAU, WILLIAM W. A certain democrat: Senator Henry M. Jackson; a political biography, by William W. Prochnau and Richard W. Larsen. 360p pl $6.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Jackson, Henry Martin
ISBN 0-13-123158-8 LC 74-37158

The senator "was once damned on the right for his vigorous opposition to the 'Red witch hunts' of the fifties and is now damned on the left for his steadfast support of a firm military defense posture by the United States. In November, 1970, under fire from the New Left, [he] won a fourth term to the Senate in a tremendous landslide victory. . . . For more than twenty years [he] has been a member of the U.S. Senate. . . . The book delves [into] . . . his relationship with the Kennedys, his showdowns with the late Senator Joseph McCarthy during the fifties and with Senator Eugene McCarthy during the sixties, and his early championship of environmental protection." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by R. R. Lingeman
N Y Times Bk R pl Je 4 '72 220w

"In their skillful study, Prochnau and Larsen see the junior senator from Washington as the last of the Cold War liberals—a man who views the Russians with deep suspicion, while voting steadily for progressive domestic measures." L. W. Koenig

Sat R 55:62 Je 3 '72 320w

PROCLAMATION and presence; Old Testament essays in honour of Gwynne Henton Davis; ed. by John I. Durham & J. R. Porter. 315p $9.95 John Knox press

231.74 Bible. O.T. God
ISBN 8042-0150-X LC 71-85517

"A series of essays, 14 in all, organized into the categories: Old Testament hermeneutics, the Hexateuch, the Former and the latter prophets, and the Psalms. . . . The contributors include . . . Norman Porteous, Roland de Vaux, Otto Eissfeldt, Walther Eichrodt, John Bright, James Muilenburg, and A. R. Johnson." (Choice) Bibliography of the writings of G. H. Davies. Indexes of biblical passages, of authors, and of Hebrew words discussed.

Reviewed by R. J. Clifford
America 125:461 N 27 '71 40w

"Ostensibly [the contributions] center around the theme, 'the element of proclamation and the theology of the presence of God in the Old Testament' as emphasized throughout the teaching of Gwynne Henton Davies. The topics, however, are of a rather narrow scope, of particular interest to the specialist in Old Testament studies. . . . Particularly intriguing were Widengren's, 'What do we know about Moses?', Bright's 'Jeremiah's complaints,' and Muilenburg's 'Baruch the scribe.' Different readers will find different values in a book of this kind. The essays are of unusually high quality and will be welcome additions to divinity school libraries, as well as undergraduate libraries with a strong department in Old Testament studies."

Choice 8:82 Mr '71 190w

PROCTOR, ALEXANDER PHIMISTER. Alexander Phimister Proctor: sculptor in buckskin; an autobiography; ed. and with a foreword by Hester Elizabeth Proctor; introd. by Vivian A. Paladin. 266p il $12.50 Univ. of Okla. press

B or 92
ISBN 0-8061-0912-2 LC 77-108803

Proctor describes his career—training in New York, first . . . commissions at the Chicago 1893 fair, Paris, work with Saint-Gaudens, and the succession of . . . commissions of his mature career. He was one of the . . . late 19th-, early 20th-century sculptors who made Western themes their own." (Choice) Index.

"An unpretentious autobiography, [this] is as much a chronicle of one who grew up in the West (Colorado and California) in the storied 1870's and 1880's as it is the narrative of a sculptor distinguished for catching the spirit and forms of that West in bronze. . . . [Proctor's] impressions of life in the West are described in lively detail—hair-raising hunting adventures, gun battles, encounters with Indians. The volume is illustrated with Proctor's drawings and etchings; a valuable list of his major sculptures is appended, as is a fairly complete set of photographs of his oeuvre. . . . This narrative provides insight into his temperament, adds details to what is known of his professional career, and is, altogether, a delightful piece of Western Americana."

Choice 8:1325 D '71 200w

"[Proctor's] anecdotes are colorful, but they tell us more of the adventurous life of the frontiersman and the hunter of wild game than

PROCTOR, A. P.—Continued

of the artist. Careful editing of the manuscript would have helped the book; it is filled with misspelled proper names, and there are no annotations to inform the reader about the people and places Proctor mentions. . . . [The book contains] a chronological list of his principal works. . . . [It] will be useful in large public libraries and art collections, and in local history collections in the many cities where Proctor's works are public monuments." M. E. Landgren

Library J 96:2625 S 1 '71 160w

PROCTOR, HESTER ELIZABETH, ed. Alexander Phimister Proctor: sculptor in buckskin. See Proctor, A. P.

PROFFER, ELLENDEA, ed. The early plays of Mikhail Bulgakov. See Bulgakov, M.

PROKOSCH, FREDERIC. America, my wilderness. 251p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-10388-7 LC 73-182107

"Pancho Krauss, a half-black foundling, runs away from home after his Uncle Vladimir is murdered. He wanders [about] the United States with the talisman his late uncle has given him, a tiny jeweled fish that keeps 'tugging like a magnet toward a scene of violence or bloodshed.' Pancho sees plenty of both." (Book World)

"Remember those old tales in which the hero, compelled to find a magic ring or get to the castle east of the sun and west of the moon, rambles from point to point with the arbitrary help or hindrance of various monsters and good fairies? Except that the hero is goalless, this novel follows the same pattern. The writing is attractive, as Mr. Prokosch's writing always is, but the book ends, like its hero, by going nowhere in particular." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:112 My '72 90w

"[This book] aspires to poetry, to a mythopoetic conception of the country as something as vast and grand and inexplicable as nature itself, and as violent. All this is a great deal for a novel to take on, and I think that the desperate and often frantic style is an indication that the author is cowed by the task he has set himself. There are moments when he rises to it, but most of the time it's very heavy going." Alan Hislop

Book World p5 My 21 '72 350w

"[Prokosch's hero] wanders through this picaresque adventure in surrealistic wonderment, and terror, searching for the heart of the American land. . . . [The author's] vision of America is a strange mixture of torment and beauty, of perversion and isolation. His standard themes are here: the splendor and menace which nature holds for man; the wanderer in search of unbound truth; awe of the mysteries of life. . . . The characters are the weakest link; they spring to life, only to disappear a few pages later. We never really know them. Yet this is ultimately forgivable for the power of the novel flows from the domination of events, both natural and unnatural, over man. Excellent reading from a versatile talented author." James Heckel

Library J 97:1348 Ap 1 '72 130w

New Yorker 48:130 Je 10 '72 70w

TLS p1235 O 13 '72 400w

Va Q R 48:c summer '72 100w

PROPERTIUS, SEXTUS AURELIUS. The poems of Propertius; tr. by John Warden. 269p $8.50; pa $2.95 Bobbs

874

LC 77-169063

"Propertius' major achievement was his development of the Roman love elegy, in which he evokes the pain and the joy of his ill-fated love for Cynthia. His passion dominates Book 1, but the following three books betray an ever increasing concern with other themes." (Library J) Bibliography. Glossary.

"Not only has [Propertius] been the subject of much commentary and criticism of late, but the full text has been competently translated at least three times: A. E. Watts, The poems of Sextus Propertius; Constance Carrier, The poems of Propertius [BRD 1964]; and now, in this volume by John Warden of Scarborough College. Comparisons are inevitable; the strict rhyming couplets of Watts seem archaic alongside the free, sparkling rhythms of Warden. Bovie's introduction to Carrier's version is more direct and comprehensive than those by Watts and Warden. Students will find Warden's bibliography and glossary superior. All three translators adhere to a high standard of accuracy. They each illustrate the successes and hazards which are met in the course of translating Latin elegy. All three should stand together in the college collection."

Choice 9:1288 D '72 150w

"Warden captures the individualism of the original Latin by employing diverse poetic styles of his own. The result is a very readable translation that does justice to the varying moods and qualities of a poet who is often fraught with difficulties. I only wish that more background had been provided. A brief foreword and notes on Propertius' life and the text are not enough, nor can a select bibliography compensate for the lack of essential information. Who could guess from the varied meters of these renditions that the originals are all in elegiacs? A glossary of names helps with obscure allusions." R. J. Lenardon

Library J 97:3163 O 1 '72 170w

"The four notable Latin elegiac poets of the time were Gallus (whose works have been lost), Tibullus, Propertius, and Ovid, and the tone of all of them was erotic, although other themes do appear in their writings. Of the four, Propertius was the most 'Alexandrian,' by which is meant, among other things, that he was the most given to recondite allusions. Additionally, he was the most free in his use of the Latin language, and so he is the most difficult of the extant three to read in the original. Like Propertius himself, John Warden writes rather good poetry, but there may be some question about the authenticity of the impressions the reader may form of Propertius from these purported translations."

Va Q R 48:cxxv autumn '72 200w

PROUST, MARCEL. On reading; tr. and ed. by Jean Autret and William Burford; with an introd. note by William Burford. 85p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

844 Books and reading

LC 74-165571

"'On Reading,' the essay with which Proust introduced his own 1906 translation of Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies, is now presented in monograph form in both the original and translation, in celebration of the Proust centennial." (Library J)

"Since the essay tells us far more about Proust than about Ruskin, it makes a poor preface to Sesame and Lilies, but a welcome addition to the Proust canon. . . . [It] is not itself easy to read. Proust simply thinks too much. The prose is as complex as any in Remembrance of Things Past, and is further encumbered by footnotes which he couldn't have fitted into the text without rupturing his already overburdened sentences. It is ably translated." Richard Freedman

Book World p4 N 14 '71 600w

"The connection with Ruskin is tenuous and shouldn't be emphasized. And although the title might suggest praise of the pleasures of reading, Proust thinks that excessive reading can be detrimental to creativity: 'Reading is the threshold of spiritual life; it can introduce us to it; it does not constitute it.' Proust's comments on the complexity of his love for Gautier and the relationships between readers and the writers whose works they read prefigure the portions of Remembrance of Things Past that deal with the narrator's obsession with the novelist Bergotte. The essay is brief but not slight, and it is thought out in ways that are clearly Proustian." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:3614 N 1 '71 140w

PRPIC, GEORGE J. The Croatian immigrants in America. 519p il $11.95 Philosophical lib.

301.45 Croats in the U.S.

ISBN 0-8022-2035-5 LC 70-129066

This "volume spans emigration from the Croatian Jesuits who served as missionaries in Spanish America to political refugees from Tito-dominated Yugoslavia . . . [and deals with] individual immigrants who participated in all phases of American life." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This is] the only complete history of Croatian immigrants in America. It is a detailed recording of all of the available sources of information and data on the Croatian immigrants. . . . Evidently it is a labor of love and at the same time a successful effort to preserve a significant portion of our American immigrant heritage. The processes of conflict, accommodation and eventually partial assimilation, at least, are clearly evident in the author's depiction of the Croats. . . . I commend this book to all Croats and their descendants, to historians of immigration, to sociologists of ethnicity, to those Americans who have forgotten our heritage of the past, [and] to the general reader." C. S. Mihanovich

America 126:127 F 5 '72 430w

"[This is] an attempt to cover the entire subject both chronologically as well as topically. . . . At times the listing borders on filio pie-tism especially since Prpic does not consider the interaction of Croats with other immigrant groups and with native Americans. He is too cautious in his discussion of internal disputes within the Croatian community, failing to analyze their impact. . . . However, [he] offers an impressive command of material, especially primary sources in English, Serbo-Croatian, and Croatian. This is reflected in the text as well as in the extensive bibliography. In addition, Prpic's study suggests many opportunities for further research for the student."

Choice 9:276 Ap '72 170w

"The detail about the American Croats overwhelms the reader just as it does the author. A revision of a Georgetown University dissertation, The Croatian Immigrants suffers badly from Prpic's insistence on giving his audience as much as he knows about his subject, which is considerable. . . . Despite the incredible confusing organization of the work. . . . the effort still makes a contribution to immigrant historiography. . . . One chapter entitled 'Literature of the Croats in America' includes a very rich bibliographical listing dating back to the 1890s. . . . Another suggestive chapter traces the diplomatic role of Croatian nationalist groups during World War I, both here and abroad, in attempting to aid their homeland in gaining independence. For an all-too-rare and brief moment of analysis, Prpic leads the reader inside the Croatian community's inner conflicts over the Yugoslav idea." Victor Greene

J Am Hist 59:178 Je '72 400w

"Although the [author's] presentation is quite weak when dealing with the theoretical aspects of 'cultural pluralism' in its most recent phases of re-interpretation, the publication is a definite contribution to our meager knowledge of Slavic immigration." J. S. Roucek

Social Studies 63:339 D '72 170w

PRUFER, OLAF H. Blain Village and the Fort Ancient tradition in Ohio, by Olaf H. Pruffer and Orrin C. Shane, III (Ohio. State univ., Kent. Kent studies in anthropology and archaeol. 1) 287p il $10 Kent state univ. press

917.71 Blain site

SBN 87338-090-8 LC 79-99082

The authors describe excavations in 1966 and 1968 in Ohio "and better than two thirds of this volume is theirs. There are brief chapters by Walton C. Galinat on the sizable sample of corn, by Lawrence Kaplan on the other plant remains (including small samples of pumpkin and beans), by James L. Murphy on the molluscs, and by Paul W. Parmelee on the refuse bone from the 1966 excavations. C. Owen Lovejoy and Kingsbury G. Heiple describe the excavation of the burial mound and give an exhaustive description of the seven skeletons. The Blain site covers about eight acres . . . in Ross County, Ohio. Pruffer and Shane consider it a single component, early Fort Ancient site with a span of occupancy of about a hundred years." (Am Anthropol) Bibliography. Index.

"[Pruffer and Orrin] envision Blain 'village' as a compact settlement of one hundred to four hundred people living in some eighty 'relatively closely-spaced houses bordering a plaza containing a burial mound.' Considering that something less than two percent (6175 square feet) of the eight acre tract was sampled, . . . this is stretching the evidence somewhat. . . . While I would not claim that any of the undecorated pottery now classed as Baum Cordmarked-Incised is actually Woodland pottery, I would suggest, having been given no evidence to the contrary, that a good percentage of it could be. If it is, Pruffer and Shane's interpretation of the Blain site and its place in the development of Fort Ancient culture is apt to be wide of the mark." F. F. Schambach

Am Anthropol 73:1402 D '71 1750w

"Relatively little is known about Fort Ancient and Blain Village is one of the few excavated sites. The new information reported in this book is used by the authors to suggest revisions to the description and [interpretations] presented by J. B. Griffin in his classic study, The Fort Ancient aspect. The book presents detailed descriptions of the features, ceramics, stone and bone tools, shell artifacts, and is well illustrated with photographs and drawings. There are detailed discussions of plant and animal remains by biologists with interesting ecological observations."

Choice 8:128 Mr '71 160w

PRYDE, DUNCAN. Nunaga; ten years of Eskimo life. 285p col il $7.95 Walker & co.

970.4 Eskimos—Social life and customs
LC 75-181349

"At the age of 18 Pryde joined the Hudson's Bay Company and was eventually sent to the Canadian Arctic. . . . He became interested in the life and customs of the Eskimos and started learning their language. He was transferred to Spence Bay for about a year, before going to Perry River as trader. . . . At Perry River he was the only white man. . . . Upon being elected to the Northwest Territories Council, Pryde resigned from Hudson's Bay Company to devote himself to his constituency (which covered several thousand square miles and consisted of some 11 towns and 3000 people at most)." (Library J)

"[The author] is very good on the Eskimo dogs, which to his regret are now being replaced by snowmobiles. In the old days the dogs were indispensable to a hunter; they were also a drag—'having thirteen dogs is like having thirteen people to feed.' He scouts the idea that there is wolf blood in the pack. . . . This book penetrates into the secret places of a primitive people, tells of their shamans, who are really faith healers, of their hardihood and generosity, and of their fundamental Northern traits—patience and acceptance." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 229:108 My '72 550w

"There are fine descriptions of hunting polar bears and caribou. The late autumn fur of the caribou is still the best protection against the cold, the best ever devised. But even more important than his role as a hunter is the fact that Pryde became part of the Eskimo life, even in its most intimate manifestations: wife exchange, the drum dance, the obedience to the shaman. . . . It is important to have an authentic account of their customs, written by one who understands and loves his Eskimo friends. . . . This book is more than an adventure story, or an account of the birds and beasts of the North; it is an important bit of social anthropology. There is a map of the Arctic on the inside cover and fourteen illustrations in color." William Schweder

Best Sell 32:67 My 1 '72 430w

Choice 9:725 J1/Ag '72 260w

"It's hard to believe [that Pryde] is describing conditions he saw less than 20 years ago, harder to conceive that they still exist in remote areas. That they do persist—but won't much longer—is something Mr. Pryde is much concerned about." P. M.

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 20 '72 650w

"This is a most interesting book, written clearly and with wry humor. Pryde's account of the people he met and lived among, his detailed description of a fascinating and fast-disappearing way of life, and his expression of pride in his chosen land (nunaga: my land, my country) make an authoritative and informative story." N. T. Corley

Library J 97:868 Mr 1 '72 230w

PSYCHIATRIC disorder and the urban environment; report of the Cornell social science center [i.e. Seminar] Berton H. Kaplan, ed; in collaboration with Alexander H. Leighton, Jane M. Murphy, and Nicholas Freyberg. 310p $12.95 Behavioral publications

616.8 Cities and towns. Mental illness. Sociology, Urban
ISBN 0-87705-020-1 LC 77-140050

"Primarily a report of a series of seminars seeking new strategies for studying urban environmental influences on mental health and illness. The starting point is the experience gained by prior epidemiologic studies, one directed by Leighton (Stirling County) and the other under the auspices of Cornell (Midtown Study). Initially, Leighton's integration-disintegration theory and its empirical status are reviewed briefly. The remaining text consists of summarized statements and verbatim excerpts from the seminars. In the discussion, it is recognized that global concepts must be translated into more precise and specific variables, and attempts are made to define terms." (Library J)

"This is an important and highly useful assessment of the concepts and results of a young but growing school of behavioral research. Open-system hypotheses, and particularly stress, are explored both empirically and theoretically. Discussions are for the most part rooted in such contributions as A. Leighton's My name is legion (BRD 1960) and [L.] Srole's Mental health in the metropolis (BRD 1963). . . . Chapter 4 by Leighton is one of the clearest and most convincing expositions of social relations as interrelated processes rather than a structure. . . . The only real defect is Komarovsky's badly outdated discussion of blue-collar marriage. A worthwhile reference in social psychology, medical sociology, and psychosomatic medicine. Limited referencing; no index."

Choice 9:542 Je '72 150w

"M. Komarovsky scrutinizes the role of the family in a fine review of his studies of blue-collar marriages. Despite considerable editorial effort, the wider range of issues considered lacks coherence and systematization. The most serious shortcoming is a function of time. The seminars were held in 1965-1966; the intervening six years have brought marked changes in the nature of urban problems which make much of the discussion obsolete. Nevertheless, scholars involved in urban psychiatric studies will find many of the hypotheses worthy of continued investigation." Harold Wilensky

Library J 97:1332 Ap 1 '72 180w

PUHVEL, JAAN, ed. Myth and law among the Indo-Europeans; studies in Indo-European comparative mythology. (Calif. Univ. Univ. at Los Angeles. Center for the study of comparative folklore and mythology. Publication, 1) 276p $10 Univ. of Calif. press

291 Mythology, Indo-European
ISBN 0-520-01587-8 LC 75-627781

"These 14 studies were prepared for a 1967 symposium on Indo-European sacred and secular institutions held at the University of California, Los Angeles. . . . [and] range in subject from a comparative analysis of divine kingship to a discussion of the place of the horse in Indo-European mythology. . . . [Included also are] treatments of Greek, Indic, Germanic, and Norse society . . . [as well as] commentaries on . . . lesser-known Hittite and Hurrian material." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The comparative study of Indo-European mythology fell into disfavor in the early years of this century . . . but was resuscitated after some years and placed on a new theoretical foundation by the French scholar, Georges Dumézil. . . . The articles in this volume are almost all by followers of Dumézil, so that the prospective reader would be well advised to familiarize himself with Dumézil's theories. . . . Most of the authors are content to tread fairly familiar ground, reviewing and piecing together the often scattered literature and scholarship. . . . Such a varying assortment of papers would have benefited from a longer preface . . . attempting to tie them together and relate their new discoveries . . . to Dumézil's framework. Yet such a lack is made up for by an invaluable 22-page bibliography of all the writings by Dumézil and others which use or relate to modern methods for the study of comparative Indo-European mythology." David Evans

Am J Soc 77:804 Ja '72 1100w

"Most [of these studies] are readily comprehensible to the intelligent layman. The book is particularly valuable for its wide coverage. . . . On the whole [it] provides a welcome corrective to the traditional classicism of most specialists in Indo-European philology." A. R. Samuels

Library J 95:3299 O 1 '70 100w

PUKUI, MARY KAWENA. Hawaiian dictionary; Hawaiian-English, English-Hawaiian [by] Mary Kawena Pukui [and] Samuel H. Elbert. 402,188p $15 Univ. of Hawaii press

499 Hawaiian language—Dictionaries—English. English language—Dictionaries—Hawaiian
ISBN 0-87022-662-2 LC 70-142751

"The third edition of the . . . [Hawaiian-English Dictionary] and the first edition of the . . . [English-Hawaiian Dictionary] have now been updated and combined into this single volume. The Hawaiian-English section has four supplements: (1) a list of more than 1,000 new entries, including the 500 included as Supplement A in the third edition, bringing the total number of Hawaiian-English entries to approximately 26,000. . . . (2) a glossary of gods, demigods, family gods, and heroes selected on the basis of their frequency in place names, legends, chants, and songs; (3) a list of Hawaiian gods with their specializations and the important forms they assumed; and (4) a list of Hawaiian reflexes of Proto-Polynesian and Proto-Malayo-Polynesian, unchanged from that appearing in the third edition. About seventy-five new entries of English words with Hawaiian equivalents and a few additional given names have been added as a supplement to the English-Hawaiian section." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[This dictionary] is by far the best existing lexicon of this variety of the Polynesian tongue, the only rivals being earlier editions by Pukui and Elbert. . . . The section 'Notes on Hawaiian grammar,' present in the first three editions, is missing (an expanded version is being printed elsewhere). . . . Libraries which have the earlier, separately issued volumes and which do not have to meet the needs of Pacific specialists, can probably dispense with the book; however, those without earlier editions or those meeting the needs of specialists will require this latest edition."

Choice 9:198 Ap '72 140w

"[This new edition includes a] new preface and a bibliography of books, articles, and Hawaiian newspapers (the last all defunct) used by the compilers. The dictionaries proper are photo-mechanically reproduced, while Supplements A, B, and C to the Hawaiian-English part, and most of the prefatory sections, are newly set. The copied bulk of the work is quite clear and legible. Those who own the earlier editions will do well to replace them with this all-embracing volume, particularly for its new materials. . . . As for the general merits of the Pukui-Elbert works in the field of Hawaiian-English lexicography, they are, as ever, unrivaled." B. H. Smeaton

Library J 97:1306 Ap 1 '72 250w

PULASKI, MARY ANN SPENCER. Understanding Piaget; an introduction to children's cognitive development. 241p il $6.95 Harper

155.4 Piaget, Jean. Knowledge, Theory of. Child study
ISBN 06-013439-9 LC 79-138758

The author "reviews the theoretical rationale behind Piaget's work and sets forth the basic principles of development. A brief overview of the developmental stages of intellectual growth from infancy through adolescence is followed by an . . . assessment of various topics including time, speed, and perception. The chapter on education reveals the impact that Piaget's work is currently having on teacher training and child psychology." (Choice) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Clear, readable, nontechnical interpretation of the research and thinking of Piaget. . . . Recommended reading for anyone who works with children."

Choice 8:1648 F '72 160w

"The intelligent educated reader will learn about the man and his work thanks to this lucid exposition of his learning theory and of the stages through which reflex sensorimotor behavior becomes perceptual activity, to evolve eventually into the ability to think in abstract terms and to conceptualize. Pulaski has avoided the use of technical terms, but not where the omission would result in distortion or oversimplification." J. H. DiLeo

Library J 96:4019 D 1 '71 120w

PULLAN, BRIAN. Rich and poor in Renaissance Venice; the social institutions of a Catholic state, to 1620. 689p il maps $13.50
Harvard univ. press

362.5 Venice—History. Venice—Poor. Catholic Church—History
ISBN 0-674-76940-6 LC 70-133217

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Donald Weinstein
Am Hist R 77:1481 D '72 700w
Choice 8:1375 D '71 170w

Reviewed by A. D. Wright
Engl Hist R 87:617 J1 '72 500w

PULMAN, MICHAEL BARRACLOUGH. The Elizabethan Privy Council in the seventeenth century. 279p $11.50 Univ. of Calif. press 942.05 Great Britain—Politics and government—Tudors, 1485-1603
ISBN 0-520-01716-1 LC 73-115497

"This book sets out to examine one . . . brief period in the Elizabethan Privy Council's history. The council's antecedents, membership, relationship with the queen, and operating procedures are all considered, as well as the multiplicity of functions filled. . . . [The study] also asks what could have been accomplished, but was not. . . . It contemplates the possibility that the Council did not do all that might have been done by way of carrying out those responsibilities any government bears to later generations. . . . [and] faces the fact that the council did almost nothing to help the English adapt themselves and their institutions to altering circumstances." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Pulman] attempts to explain the why rather than the what of the council's actions. In this he is successful to the point that many of his colleagues will gratefully receive his work. His most important contribution, however, is found in parts 2 and 3, which dissect the positive and negative aspects of the council's executive function—nine chapters of rewarding reading for even advanced scholars in the field. . . . The editorial aids in Pulman's work are precise and helpful. However, he is prone to an occasional lapse in taste. . . . [and] also tends to stretch sentences to the point of stylistic agony; they sometimes run to more than a hundred words." P. L. Hughes

Am Hist R 77:507 Ap '72 170w

"A work of major importance. It is the first systematic effort to investigate the operation of the Tudor Privy Council on the basis of a thorough examination of all available resources . . . and provides a convincing description of an important institution. Pulman [writes] in clear and interesting style [and] presents an accurate account of the council's antecedents, membership, and activities as well as arguing a provocative thesis. . . . Although the thesis is not entirely convincing, the work is an outstanding contribution. Highly recommended for college libraries."

Choice 8:1503 Ja '72 150w

PUPPI, LIONELLO. The complete paintings of Canaletto. See Canaletto

PURDY, JAMES. I am Elijah Thrush. 120p $4.95 Doubleday
LC 76-180099

The story concerns Albert Peggs, "a young black, who gets involved with two octogenarians and their great-grandson the Bird of Paradise, a young mute who sings like a bird. The two ancients attempt to use Albert in their battle over custody of the boy." (Library J)

"[The author's] elliptical, erotic style grows more intense and subjective with each new work. What was almost Grand Guignol sexual violence in Eustace Chisholm and the Works [BRD 1967], has now refined itself into fantasies of equally interesting variations on ■ theme, but with such subtle overtones that satire, indirection, and understatement become equally important. . . . I found the luxuriance of the prose to be some of Purdy's best writing, though the novel is short and not equal to some of his earlier works in terms of depth of characterization and plot."

B. L. Wimble

Library J 97:1827 My 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by Robert Boyd
Nation 214:635 My 15 '72 1400w

Reviewed by D. F. Mano
Nat R 24:961 S 1 '72 550w

"Even these days, the characters in [this] novella might be said to have uncommon sexual inclinations. . . . [They] spend much of their time wiping or sucking blood, sweat, and semen off people they love and hate. . . . From time to time, Albert talks about art, illusion, passion, identity and blackness, but through his fluttering and mindless shifts of attention, no effective dramatic action or clear pattern of meaning can emerge." Lawrence Graver

N Y Times Bk R p7 J1 2 '72 100w

New Yorker 48:114 My 27 '72 100w

"The novels of Purdy are, I suspect, only for readers with somewhat exotic tastes in literature. . . . Early in [this one], Purdy, through the voice of Peggs, warns the reader that 'this story, neither in vocabulary or meaning, will be in the taste of the present epoch, and for this reason. . . . I embrace it wholeheartedly.' What Purdy embraces leaves this reviewer cold. Admittedly, he writes beautifully (or do I mean preciously?); however, his bizarre metaphors finally exhaust." Karen Meehan

Sat R 55:68 Je 10 '72 350w

TLS p1305 N 3 '72 450w

Va Q R 48:cxx autumn '72 90w

PURDY, SUSAN. Costumes for you to make. 121 p il $4.95 Lippincott

391 Sewing—Juvenile literature. Costume—Juvenile literature
LC 77-151470

There are "directions for each costume part, including collars, cuffs, wings, hats, capes, tunics, medals, and even wolf muzzles and dog snouts. Every item is accompanied by detailed drawings, directions for measuring and for reducing patterns in some cases. . . . Grades four to eight." (Library J)

"Presenting suggestions for all types of costumes, the book contains brief sections on theatrical make-up and costume material; longer sections on costume construction and patterns; and specific directions for making . . . headbands, and masks. Excellent ideas and simple instructions for theatrical productions or for parties."

Horn Bk 48:165 Ap '72 60w

"After an introduction showing solo drawings of 85 costumes (e.g., historic, national, animal, etc.), the rest of this book is devoted to clear, complete [directions]. . . . The sections on finding materials, make up, sewing and other basic skills are extremely helpful, and children . . . will be able to use this book independently for dress-up, skits, and Halloween. . . . This is a practical complement to Leeming's standard The Costume Book for Parties and Plays [BRD 1938]." Evelyn Stewart

Library J 97:2486 J1 '72 130w

PURYEAR, EDGAR F. Nineteen stars, by Edgar F. Puryear, Jr. 437p $10 Coiner 940.54 Generals. U.S. Army—Biography
LC 76-25371

"This is a comparative study of the leadership traits of Generals George Marshall, Douglas MacArthur, Dwight Eisenhower, and George Patton, especially as exhibited between 1941 and 1945. The book is an expansion of a lecture series delivered by [the author] when he taught at the Air Force Academy. The title is derived from the total number of stars the four generals attained. The key qualities of military leadership, Puryear maintains, are not innate, but developed over many years. They include integrity, courage, selflessness, faith, humanness, sound professional preparation, and a 'sixth sense' in decision-making." (J Am Hist)

"Sometimes straining his evidence, Puryear argues that all four officers measured up to his criteria. He uses numerous likely anecdotes, and his book, although repetitious, is surely not dull. . . . Nothing appears in his findings to alter the stereotyped images of the four men. The book is marred by many factual, grammatical, and typographical errors. . . . [The author] indulges in unabashed glorification of the four generals." D. C. James

PURYEAR, E. F.—Continued

J Am Hist 58:1053 Mr '72 270w

"[The author] bases his illuminating work on correspondence and interviews with hundreds of acquaintances, subordinates, and superiors of the high-level World War II commanders. Thus a considerable amount of material has been generated. A pattern of character and leadership development emerges which admits of happenstance but emphasizes [among other qualities] . . . a high order of technical proficiency. For academic, military, and public libraries." L. E. Spellman
Library J 96:2764 S 15 '71 100w

PUSHKIN, ALEKSANDR SERGEEVICH.

Pushkin threefold; narrative, lyric, polemic, and ribald verse; the originals with linear and metric trs. by Walter Arndt. 455p $12.50; pa $4.95 Dutton

891.7 Russian poetry—Translations
ISBN 0-525-18652-2; 0-525-47260-6 (pa)
LC 69-17218

This book contains a "selection of Pushkin's verse, 1817-36, from lyric poems and epigrams to narrative poems, fairy tales, and ballads. It also contains two kinds of translations, one literal (or linear, as Arndt calls it) facing the original, and one poetic (or metric) which comprises the first third of the book. . . . The introduction is [an] essay on the problem of translating verse." (Choice)

"Arndt's main goal is 'to creat a poem . . . which should stimulate, as near as may be, the total effect produced by the original on the contemporary reader.' He succeeds particularly well in some short poems and in satirical verse, in 'Tsar Saltan,' and in stanzas from Eugene Onegin. Sometimes, however, he is more formal than Pushkin, even has to supplement rhymes with unsuitable imagery and a beat that fits his English pattern but misses Pushkin's. . . . No matter. His linear translations are faithful and extremely readable. Pushkin comes through in this, the most successful Pushkin in English. Highly recommended for all libraries and especially for college courses." Choice 9:1138 N '72 200w

"Although Arndt is a fine translator—his literal translations of Pushkin are generally excellent—his poetic versions are a disappointment. I am very grateful to have some of the hitherto untranslated poems in English, but I am bothered that such a potentially useful and interesting approach to translation should result in such an unsatisfying book." H. F. Babinski

Library J 97:2404 J1 '72 130w

PUTNAM, JACKSON K. Old-age politics in California; from Richardson to Reagan. 211p il $7.50 Stanford univ. press

362.6 Old age pensions. California—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8047-0734-0 LC 70-107649

"This study, a revision of a doctoral thesis, moves . . . from Governor F. W. Richardson (1923-27) to emphasize the years of EPIC (Upton Sinclair's plan to End Poverty in California), the Townsend plan, and the Ham and Eggs plan (thirty dollars every Thursday), 1933-40; a final chapter . . . [discusses] George McClain, summarizes changes in benefits to the aged and surveys their problems." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"Putnam has drawn extensively on newspapers, periodicals, and government documents in developing a critical account of the rise of pressure groups, responses of politicians, and expansion of state programs for old-age assistance. He corrects old errors; . . . he breaks new ground with his discussion of the role of the Fraternal Order of Eagles. The most serious shortcoming of the study is that it is chiefly external, without the insights into motives and attitudes that might have come from manuscript and other private evidence. [Putnam] makes too many unsubstantiated generalizations. . . . The footnotes are informative though difficult to use: some are at bottoms of pages but most in an appendix . . . where citations to government documents appear in abbreviations (U.S. [1-20] and Calif. [1-53]) that refer to the bibliography." Earl Pomeroy

Am Hist R 77:224 F '72 330w

"[This is a] tightly written and thoroughly researched monograph. . . . [It is] not only indispensable for understanding California politics in the 20th century (supplementing, for example, R. E. Burke's Olson's New Deal for California [BRD 1954],) but, since California has been in the vanguard of the national movement for improvement of the lot of the aged, deserves the attention of all students of recent American history."

Choice 8:469 My '71 150w

"A most impressive feature of the book is the author's ability to move skillfully through the maze of the behavioral science literature on the problem of aging. His wide consideration of these matters enables him to avoid many of the pitfalls inherent in the more traditional historical treatment of as complex a problem as old-age politics. At the same time he is able to provide behavioral scientists with a new historical dimension." T. F. Andrews

J Am Hist 59:224 Je '72 400w

PUTNAM, JAMES JACKSON. James Jackson

Putnam and psychoanalysis: letters between Putnam and Sigmund Freud, Ernest Jones, William James, Sandor Ferenczi, and Morton Prince, 1877-1917; ed. with an introd. essay by Nathan G. Hale, Jr.; trs. of German texts by Judith Bernays Heller. 384p il $14 Harvard univ. press 150.19 Psychoanalysis. Freud, Sigmund.

ISBN 0-674-47170-9 LC 70-150010

This volume reproduces "89 letters between Freud [in German, with English translation] and Putnam, as well as a number between Putnam and Jones, James, Ferenczi, and Prince. . . . Hale provides the background for Putnam's role as Freud's first American convert and as first president of the American Psychoanalytic Association." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Putnam was 63 when he took up the unpopular cause of psychoanalysis. . . . The correspondence that followed Putnam's meeting with Freud in 1909 describes the emergence of psychoanalysis in the U.S., and as such, is a historical gold mine. Even more, it reveals the personalities of the psychoanalytic pioneers. From 1909-16, the exchange of letters indicates the influence of one on the other, particularly as Putnam persuaded Freud to take up the study of religion and of conscience. These letters fill a gap and complement those already published of Freud's."

Choice 8:1648 F '72 290w

Reviewed by J. C. Burnham

J Am Hist 59:180 Je '72 440w

PUYVELDE, LEO VAN. Flemish painting from the Van Eycks to Metsys; tr. [from the French] by Alan Kendall. 263p pl col pl maps $24.50 McGraw

759.94 Paintings, Flemish. Painting, Flemish. Artists, Flemish
ISBN 0-07-050980-8 LC 70-125111

The author "begins his study by a discussion of the 'artistic approach' to these 'primitives.' . . . He then devotes a chapter to the techniques employed . . . [and to] . . . the artistic climate before and during the time of the van Eycks. . . . There is a chapter on the van Eyck paintings . . . the artist known only as The Master of Flemalle, . . . on Roger van der Weyden; on Petrus Christus together with Dietric Bouts; [on] Hugo van der Goes and Josse Wassenhove; Jan Memling . . . [and] Gerard David. . . . The final chapter takes one to the beginning of the Renaissance, with Quentin Metsys and Josse van Cleve." (Best Sell)

"Forty color and 17 monochrome plates illustrate a text which is not only the work of an expert but is extremely readable, for which the translator must also share credit. . . . Two maps of the Lowlands (Netherlands), a table of artists, notes and bibliography, and the index complete the best available study of these Flemish painters we have seen."

Best Sell 30:387 D 1 '70 200w

"One is hard pressed to find any reason that justifies the publication of this volume. Van Puyvelde's capricious and idiosyncratic views are already well known to scholars in the field, and they can only serve to confuse the general reader. . . . Much less can this publication aspire to the intellectual probity of [E.] Panofsky's Early Netherlandish painting [BRD 1954], which after nearly two decades, remains definitive. . . . The quality of the color reproductions, despite a few brilliant details, is uneven. Not recommended." Choice 8:58 Mr '71 60w

PUYVELDE, LEO VAN. Flemish painting, the age of Rubens and Van Dyck [by] Leo van Puyvelde and Thierry van Puyvelde; tr. by Alan Kendall. 243p pl col pl $24.50 McGraw 759.94 Paintings, Flemish. Painting, Flemish. Artists, Flemish. Art, Baroque SBN 067130-3 LC 70-150466

"In this companion volume to Leo van Puyvelde's Flemish Painting from Van Eyck to Metsys [BRD 1972]—a third volume is planned—the authors try to show Flemish painting's contribution to baroque art, namely the creation of a specific northern baroque independent from Italian influences. They deal with Rubens, Van Dyck, and Jordaens . . . surrounded and imitated by a large number of lesser masters [such as] Abraham Janssens . . . and by genre painters and specialists, such as Adriaen Brouwer, David Teniers, some members of the Breughel family, Frans Snyder, Jan Fyt, and Paul de Vos." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Another lavish book with tipped-in color plates which seems to have been thrown together for the American public. The late van Puyvelde's text [is] chatty and superficial. . . . The plates themselves also create problems in that lavish color details of pictures are often reproduced without so much as a hint of their relationship to the entire composition. And, to add insult to injury, the color reproduction is uneven. All in all, a slipshod job more for the coffee table than the university library." Choice 9:206 Ap '72 110w

"The authors are bent on seeing a continuity in tradition and argue that the influence of Caravaggio on Flemish art is less important than is generally supposed." Economist 243:56 Ap 1 '72 60w

"The authors estimate the influence of Caravaggio on Flemish painting as rather minor, and seem to overrate the independence and stature of Rubens, considering him an equal of Michelangelo, Raphael, and Leonardo. The book is well written and the many artists discussed are sufficiently characterized as individuals to maintain the interest of the layman, to whom the book will primarily appeal. The color illustrations are very good, the black-and-white satisfactory; but not all the works are discussed, and the most characteristic ones are not always illustrated." J. L. Dewton Library J 97:1701 My 1 '72 170w

PUYVELDE, THIERRY VAN, jt. auth. Flemish painting, the age of Rubens and Van Dyck. See Puyvelde, L. van

PUZO, MARIO. The godfather papers & other confessions. 252p $6.95 Putnam B or 92 LC 72-187892

The author "writes about the emergence of a young Italian-American as a writer; tells about his friends in the Italian community, of the books he has read; he comments on the story of the writing of The Godfather [BRD 1969], the literary scene, gambling, the feminine liberation movement, Hollywood, Marlon Brando, film directors, the film industry." (Publisher's note)

"Most of the pieces have been published elsewhere; all, except for the two short stories, reflect a journalistic competence but no profound insight into people, events, or books; and throughout there is a nagging sense of ambivalence in Mr. Puzo's censuring of America's materialism. The publishing of the book with its seductive title seems to belie the author's frequent strictures on American business methods and exploitation of the public. . . . [However] the two short stories . . . contrast sharply with his essays. . . . In my opinion they serve as proof that Mr. Puzo is far more comfortable in his creative world of fiction." T. A. McVeigh Best Sell 32:67 My 1 '72 500w

"How [Puzo] went on to write [The Godfather] and then demand—and get—the most money ever paid for paperback rights makes grand and gossipacious reading. But Godfather freaks should be warned that these are the only 38 pages in this book dealing with that work. . . . Also included are a couple of short stories, two essays on gambling (a Puzo passion), some penetrating pieces on being Italian in America, and some of the most delightful reviews (on Podhoretz, Mailer, and the Paris Review's 'Writers at Work' series) that have ever graced the pages of Book World. . . . What happens now to Mario Puzo? . . . If [he] has something more to say—as readers of The Dark Arena [BRD 1955] and The Fortunate Pilgrim [BRD 1965] believe he may—he will continue to say it." Robert Lasson Book World p5 Ap 9 '72 450w

"The present collection of articles makes pleasant, casual reading about Puzo's struggles . . . to write and at the same time maintain a family in the face of endless rejection slips from publishers. . . . Candid, uninhibited, and humorous, the author reveals much about the pangs of creative authorship." J. M. Carroll

Library J 97:2084 Je 1 '72 150w

Reviewed by Anthony Bailey
New Statesman 84:328 S 8 '72 240w
Time 99:92 Ap 17 '72 80w
TLS p1214 O 13 '72 330w

PYE, LUCIAN W. China: an introduction by Lucian W. Pye with the collaboration of Mary W. Pye. 334p $10 Little 951 China LC 72-187711

"This introduction to modern China analyzes the political, ideological, economic, and social problems of the Communist regime." (Library J) Bibliography.

"This book covers the general history of Chinese civilization from the early beginnings of Chinese history up to the late 1970's. For this reason, it provides the interested reader with an excellent general background. . . . [The Communist regime] is treated at great length. . . . As an additional aid to the reader, tables on such subjects as Chinese language, population, and the dynasties, as well as maps of China, are featured throughout the book. In fact, an eleven-page listing of Chinese ideological and revolutionary slogans and phrases is provided. Thus, in view of its readers' aids, and its range through all of Chinese history, one can convincingly assert that Pye's book, as an introduction to China, more than sufficiently fulfills its purpose." L. N. Venturi Best Sell 32:359 N 1 '72 550w

"Intended for the student and layman. . . . Chinese political and philosophical traditions receive adequate consideration, but little specific attention is devoted to any of the earlier dynasties. The parallels with and deviations from the policies and values of the traditional ways are clearly drawn, with the contradictions and inconsistencies placed in proper perspective. This book compares favorably with, but does not supplant Hilda Hookham's recent A Short History of China [BRD 1972]. It is also reminiscent of John K. Fairbank's The United States and China [BRD 1972] in approach and coverage. . . . While libraries with limited funds will wish to give preference to the Hookham and Fairbank studies, this volume with its reasoned and scholarly analysis and highly readable style will unquestionably be a valuable addition to most general collections." E. A. Engeldinger Library J 97:2103 Je 1 '72 190w

PYE, LUCIAN W. Warlord politics; conflict and coalition in the modernization of Republican China. 212p $10 Praeger 320.951 China—Politics and government—Republic, 1912-1949 LC 70-153394

This study deals primarily with Chinese politics north of the Yangtze between 1920 and 1928. In his analysis, Professor Pye examines the relationships among the warlords and their shifting coalitions, their relations with the Republic's cabinets, and the composition and function of the cabinets. He treats the warlords' problems in building and financing their organizations and their propaganda techniques. His material is historical, but, in presenting a series of case studies of alliance formation and dissolution, he studies the political operation of the warlord system and its impact ■

PYE, L. W.—Continued

China's modernization." (Publisher's note)
Bibliography. Index.

"Instead of studying each warlord as a unique person, Pye takes up the entire group of warlords as a system of politics in modern China, manifesting both old and new values and patterns of action. . . . Pye has combined descriptions and analytical insights into a most fascinating study. . . . [It] was completed in 1951, yet because of its emphasis on exploring the general and cultural aspects of the warlord politics, it has not lost its relevance. Pye's rewriting the first chapter and his skillful editing here and there brought the study fully up-to-date. Because of its broad and analytical nature, Pye's study on warlords should be read before . . . recent studies of individual warlords in modern China, for Pye's is the only one that has put the warlord politics in China in its political and cultural perspectives." A. P. L. Liu
Ann Am Acad 403:176 S '72 340w

"[This work] by an eminent political scientist and student of China is the most comprehensive study available of a unique phenomenon in the Chinese polity—the warlord system. . . . [He points out that] the warlords were essentially rational men attempting to apply purely pragmatic criteria in order to survive in a world of complex political uncertainty. . . . The warlord system is seen as an attempt to introduce more open and competitive politics into a country that had always had a monolithic structure of political power. An interesting and complex book recommended for libraries rather than college courses."

Choice 9:264 Ap '72 190w

PYE, MARY W., jt. auth. China: an introduction. See Pye, L. W.

PYKE, MAGNUS. Synthetic food. 145p $6.95
St Martins
664 Food, Artificial
LC 77-162369

The author "reviews present scientific knowledge and possible future advancements in the direct chemical synthesis of food components, such as proteins, fats, carbohydrates, and vitamins, from inedible raw materials. He discusses the necessity for making synthetic nutrients palatable by imparting to them acceptable taste, smell, color, and texture. He comments on the relative merits of natural, biological production of food as opposed to chemical synthesis of food from nonrenewable natural resources, especially petroleum." (Library J) Index.

"Economics of production and consumer acceptability of synthetic foods is discussed. One chapter is devoted to synthetic nonfoods, a field which holds much promise for dietetic weight control. The synthesis of vitamins, alcohols, flavors, odors, and colors is also covered. Recommended as required reading for food chemistry, nutrition, and related courses."

Choice 9:238 Ap '72 80w

"Dr Pyke leads the layman [over this ground] with a profusion of chemical diagrams. A scientific background is certainly needed to follow him but thanks to his lucidity it can afford to be fairly rusty. The subject is interesting enough for the reader not to be put off by the increasingly impossible language of science."

Economist 237:57 D 19 '70 390w

"The large number of literature references and chemical structural formulas enhances the value of this interesting book. Recommended."

M. S. Feider

Library J 97:888 Mr 1 '72 110w

"Although sporadic research in this field has gone on for a long time, the efforts of chemists have generally been aimed at restricted objectives such as the manufacture of a particular vitamin. The accounts of these experiments are only readily obtainable by the specialist. Now for the first time there is a book which surveys the whole field. It is important because of its implications for contemporary society. Furthermore it is cleverly written to appeal alike to layman and scientist. Dr. Pyke entertains while he instructs. The main facts are carefully extracted from the great mass of published scientific papers and clearly presented in a lucid and often racy style without undue value judgments."

TLS p189 F 12 '71 600w

Q

QUARTERMAIN, JAMES. Rock of diamonds.
199p $4.95 Doubleday
LC 79-150286

"Corbo, the trouble-shooter, is once again talked into an ugly situation by his boss-lady at Diamond, Ltd. This time a group in the States is threatening to take over the British interests, particularly those of Diamond, Ltd. Ironically called 'The Friends of Britain,' this group is the pet project of a segment of organized crime." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 32:314 O 1 '72 100w

"Yet another Mafia thriller with the difference that this one is seen through English eyes. . . . [Corbo leaves] on his action-packed way the biggest collection of Mafiosi corpses one could possibly wish to have. Professional, fast-moving, and fun, in a grade-B movie sort of way." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3185 O 1 '72 100w

"There is nothing here to test the mind, but if it's raw action you are after, 'Rock of Diamonds' will make you happy. Quartermain keeps things bubbling at so high a heat that not even his pulp-fiction style distracts. There is an unconsciously amusing veneer of sophistication amid the mayhem. Corbo makes love to the accompaniment of the Fifth 'Brandenburg' Concerto. He often talks in a kind of would-be poetry so pretentious it is somehow endearing. It adds up to unimportant escape reading—but fun." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p41 S 24 '72 150w

Reviewed by O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:70 N 25 '72 100w

"Fast, yes, furious, yet, competent, yes, but too much brutality can be obscene, and too much manipulated suffering vulgar."

TLS p612 My 26 '72 50w

QUAYLE, ERIC. The collector's book of children's books; phot. by Gabriel Monro. 144p $8.95 Potter, C.N.

020.75 Book collecting. Children's literature —History and criticism
LC 70-154296

The author of The Collector's Book of Books (BRD 1971) "describes works from the late sixteenth century to the present day, with illustrations taken from his own collection. . . . Apart from describing books in the more familiar fields of juvenilia, such as fairy tales, folklore, poetry and rhymes, Quayle also discusses the development of history and travel books, adventure stories, and annuals." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A unique history of children's literature. . . . Magnificent illustrations . . . vividly portray the customs and costumes of children from the late 16th century onwards. In addition to recounting the historical development of children's literature, the author describes each individual work including the bibliographical details as well as interesting facts about the author, illustrator, and publisher. Quayle's collection includes not only early printed books, but toy books, periodicals, and 'penny dreadfuls.' . . . Useful for students and professors of children's literature, for anyone interested in the history of books and printing, and for aspiring book collectors. Strongly recommended."

Choice 9:208 Ap '72 150w

Reviewed by M. S. Skiff

Library J 97:3441 O 15 '72 1000w

"This is a chatty account. . . . It could have been a most attractive book, for the photography . . . is unusually imaginative, and the colour printing [is] good. But the black-and-white illustrations have come out a depressing muddy grey, sometimes so blurred that it is difficult to penetrate the murk. Mr Quayle's zestful enthusiasm for his books is infectious. As he does not restrict himself to those with literary merit, nor even to those of particular bibliographical interest, he can give space to pictures of Magic Dick, a Boy Detective, . . . penny magazines of the 1880s, and those pretty toy books with shaped covers. . . . A sense of enjoyment pervades the whole book, not just Mr Quayle's enjoyment, but that of the various small owners who have handled and read his treasures before him." TLS p473 Ap 28 '72 160w

The QUEST for America [by] Geoffrey Ashe [and others]. 298p il $15 Praeger

973.1 America—Discovery and exploration LC 78-151832

A survey of possible pre-Columbian contacts between the American and other continents. Included are "Helge Ingstad's re-tellings of the story of the Norse voyages and the finds at L'Anse aux Meadows, and Thor Heyerdahl's recounting of the diffusionist-isolationist issue and the possible significance of bearded gods. . . . [Ashe] has provided . . . [the] introduction and conclusion as well as an analysis of early legends about a land out west and a short account of its discovery in the fifteenth century. J. V. Luce contributes . . . [an] account of the ancient explorers. . . . Bergitta Wallace deals . . . with the alleged Norse remains in North America, and Betty J. Meggers takes up the pre-Columbian story from the Pacific side, discussing the resemblances between the earliest pottery found on the coast of Ecuador and the prehistoric pottery of western Japan." (TLS)

Choice 9:112 Mr '72 220w

"[This] series of essays on various aspects of the pre-Columbian contacts gives the best informed and sanest view of the subject to date. Since the authors themselves disagree on the nature of the transoceanic contacts—and even on their very existence—the book cannot hope to settle the question for its readers. But it does give a clearer picture of the hard-fought controversy over New World and Old, and the diverse routes this controversy has taken." Jon Sutherland

Christian Science Monitor p7 Ja 20 '72 250w

"The book is misnamed; whatever parts of America . . . [the early voyagers] may have run into, they weren't looking for them, nor did they know what they had found." Angus Calder

New Statesman 82:896 D 24 '71 430w

"[This book] contains a large amount of highly individualistic speculation . . . and at least [these] wrong-headed theories sharpen one's critical faculties." J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk R p73 D 5 '71 20w

"[This is] an elaborately produced and handsomely illustrated survey of trans-oceanic problems. . . . The volume makes agreeable, and in places familiar, reading. . . . [Ingstad's and Heyerdahl's] four chapters come straight from the sea-horse's mouth, and must be listened to with relish and regard."

TLS p77 Ja 21 '72 600w

QUIGLEY, JOHN. The last checkpoint. 222p $5.95 McCall pub. co.

SBN 8415-0108-4 LC 77-146472

"When Walter Eislser, the East German premier, offers a proposal including the removal of the Berlin wall, he immediately creates an international crisis that almost leads to world war. Meanwhile, the people of East Germany are sympathetic to Eislser's proposal for more freedom; and, fearing the Russian 'invasion,' many try to escape. Most of them die in the attempt." (Library J)

"For me, [this] was a routine, undistinguished novel. . . . Some of the philosophical comments are interesting. . . . [The novel] is easy reading and the ending is a little surprising, but I am afraid readers will be discouraged by the slow-paced action." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 31:213 Ag 1 '71 180w

"The political power struggle is most intriguing, but Quigley fails to continue to give Eislser the impetus which had emerged briefly in his early confrontations. Stronger characterization would have made this outstanding novel." J. E. Buck

Library J 96:2348 J1 '71 100w

"[This story approaches] science fiction in that . . . [it takes] place in the future. It is the immediate future, however, with which . . . [it is] concerned—and the extrapolations draw upon events of our own day. . . . [It] is a book in which imagination predicts fact." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p21 J1 25 '71 140w

TLS p253 F 26 '71 60w

QUIJANO, ANIBAL. Nationalism & capitalism in Peru; a study in neo-imperialism; tr. by Helen R. Lane. 122p $6.50 Monthly review

330.985 Peru—Economic policy. Peru—Social policy

SBN 85345-186-9

LC 78-163117

The author "analyzes the Peruvian revolution of 1968 through 1971. He describes the military government's new policies in agrarian reform, petroleum, banking, manufacturing, profit-sharing and . . . other fields. . . . He concludes that a stronger nationalistic position has been achieved but that foreign interests are still being accommodated and a truly socialistic economy has not been adopted." (Choice)

"The book is a rather superficial and somewhat disorganized Marxist treatment of a profoundly important phase of Peruvian history. Since few publications are yet available on the subject, the book will deserve attention from Latin Americanists nevertheless."

Choice 9:124 Mr '72 110w

"This is a key study not only of the Peruvian junta, but also of the 'modernizing military' in general, as well as of the changing relationships between the imperialist powers and today's developing world. For all larger libraries. (The entire book was originally published as a special summer issue, July-August 1971, of Monthly Review)." H. A. Spalding

Library J 96:4017 D 1 '71 130w

QUINNEY, RICHARD. The social reality of crime. 339p $7.95 Little 364 Crime and criminals

LC 70-100791

This is an "exposition of the nature and character of crime in contemporary society. . . . The first chapter contains a coherent set of six theoretically related propositions about crime, and concomitant assumptions. These propositions focus on the political and relativistic manner in which crime is socially created. The remaining nine chapters elaborate upon and document these propositions and their relevance for the understanding of crime. Index." (Choice)

"[This work] applies the phenomenological approach to social interaction currently in wide vogue among students of deviant behavior. For the author the problem is not explaining criminal behavior, but explaining the development of behavior patterns that have relative probabilities of being defined as criminal. . . . The book is interestingly written and vigorously conveys a point of view which demands serious and due consideration. . . . [The] chapters on the public conception of crime as shaped by mass communications and the crime issue in domestic politics of the past decade are timely supplementary features." Edward Green

Ann Am Acad 399:236 Ja '72 450w

"[This is an] unorthodox but highly provocative approach to the study of crime. . . . [It] is representative of the shifting away, in the past decade, from a pathological interpretation of deviant and criminal behavior to one based upon a political and epistemological analysis—often called the 'labeling,' or interactionist, perspective. As such, it is an important and strongly recommended addition to any library's more traditionally oriented criminology collection. Addressed to the intelligent college student."

Choice 7:1445 D '70 210w

"The value of the book is in Quinney's theoretical perspective. The studies and statistics presented are about the same as one will find in any textbook in criminology, but the interpretations of 'facts' and the conclusions presented are quite different. Conflict theory, as Quinney uses it, appears to be a more relevant and a more accurate model of the empirical reality of crime than consensus theory, and his examination of this reality with this model makes the literature in criminology much more interesting and provocative to read and much more plausible to social activists. The book is simply and pleasantly written." J. W. Scott

Contemp Sociol 1:460 S '72 650w

R

RABINOWITSCH, WOLF ZEEV. Lithuanian Hasidism; foreword by Simon Dubnow [tr. by M. B. Daguti]. 263p pl $7 Schocken

296.8 Hasidism
ISBN 0-853-03021-9 LC 72-148840

Rabinowitsch, a medical doctor and "student of Lithuanian Hasidism offers a study, originally published in England, of the major dynasties—in Karlin, Amdur, Liubeshov, Bereznia, and Horodok—and their offshoots, from their origins to the Holocaust, paying special attention to the Karlin heder in Lakhovich, Koidanov, Kobrin, and Slonim." (Library J) Translated from the Hebrew original published in Jerusalem. Glossary. Bibliography. Index of persons. Index of place names.

"Rabinowitsch traces the rise, growth, and flourishing of the movement to its final destruction during World War II, when almost all the 'Tsaddikim' (leaders) and disciples were killed by the Nazis. Some who escaped this fate now reside in Israel or the U.S. The work is carefully footnoted, mainly from sources available only to Hebrew or Yiddish reading students [and] has . . . charts and maps. As this is at present the only available work in English on this phase of Hasidism, it is regrettable that the style (either of the author or translator from the original Hebrew) is quite stilted and difficult. Useful to specialists, graduate students, and upper classmen in the fields of religion and/or sociology."

Choice 9:382 My '72 180w

"The study of Karlin . . . is thorough; the entire book reveals a sound knowledge of the field. [Rabinowitsch] has impeccably researched all documents known and available prior to the Holocaust and in large measure destroyed by the Nazis and has conducted interviews with leading figures in the various Hasidic centers. Unquestionably a definitive study." M. A. Cohen

Library J 97:77 Ja 1 '72 140w

RACE, JEFFREY. War comes to Long An; revolutionary conflict in a Vietnamese province. 299p pl $11.95 Univ. of Calif. press 959.7 Communism—Long An, Vietnam.

Vietnamese Conflict, 1961-
ISBN 0-520-01914-8 LC 79-145793

This is a study "of the victory in a single province in Vietnam of a revolutionary social movement, guided by a communist party. . . . The first four chapters, covering the years from 1954 to 1965, analyze what factors were critical to the victory of the communist-led revolutionary movement in Long An province. The . . . focus is on developments during the . . . years from 1956 to 1960, during which each side laid the foundations for its subsequent victory or defeat. The fifth chapter shows how these factors were ignored in the first years of the American intervention to reinstall a pro-western government. In the final chapter Mr. Race evaluates the situation as it stood in 1970." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"[This study] is based on extensive interviews with former provincial officials and Vietcong defectors, and on South Vietnamese Government records and captured Vietcong documents. . . . [It is] required reading for those who want to see what the war is all about at the province level." J. A. Robbins

America 126:326 Mr 25 '72 340w

Choice 9:1186 N '72 200w

"The strength of [this] book is that it supports [the] now generally accepted argument, that the Americans were fighting the war the wrong way, with a wealth of first-hand detail. [Race] knows almost everything that happened in Long An in the 1960s, every skirmish, every assassination, the relative efficiency measured in casualty ratios of each of the different kinds of military unit involved."

Economist 242:65 Mr 11 '72 340w

"In a sense, Long An is Vietnam. And Race's dissection of the nature of revolutionary conflict there represents one of the most penetrating analyses ever made of that hapless society. . . . The evidence behind Race's judgments is imposing. . . . And while his tone is always detached and calm, his facts cry out for attention. They are remorseless testimony to the utter corruption of American policy in Southeast Asia." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 97:182 Ja 15 '72 160w

"[The author] is concerned with the methodology, not the morality, of the Vietnam war. He minutely analyzes the political, social, and economic strategies employed by both sides . . . in an effort to learn why the communist revolutionary movement has succeeded and the US-South Vietnamese counter-revolutionary initiative has persistently failed. This is an instructive study. . . . Race says both sides comprise 'good people who have done what they believed to be right.' Be that as it may, his scholarly inspection of Long An offers a disquieting comparison between their 'good people' and ours."

N Y Rev of Books 18:34 Mr 1 '72 290w

Reviewed by J. T. McAlister

N Y Times Bk R p3 My 14 '72 1500w

Reviewed by A. E. Goodman

Pacific Affairs 45:469 fall '72 180w

TLS p293 Mr 17 '72 900w

RACE among nations: a conceptual approach; ed. by George W. Shepherd, Jr. [and] Tilden J. LeMelle. (Race and nations ser) 238p $12.50 Heath Lexington bks.

301.45 Race, International relations. U.S.
—Race relations
LC 70-129150

The papers in this volume, originally given at a symposium sponsored by Denver's Graduate School of International Studies, are directed to "the impact of racism on foreign policy. . . . [Shepherd] evaluates the applicability of some existing social science models and concepts to the study of institutional racism—a comparative study of white dominance. Peter I. Rose calls for broadening the base for the applicability of American sociological studies so as to encompass cross-cultural data. James N. Rosenau offers a number of hypotheses and admonishes researchers 'to go and test' them. Karl Deutsch demonstrates the applicability of communication theory to the study of race. A selected bibliography . . . dealing with the racial factor in America is appended." (Library J)

"This book is somewhat deceptively titled. It does not reflect 'a conceptual approach,' but at least as many approaches as there are authors. . . . The phrase 'Race among Nations' . . . refers both to the racial factor in international relations and to the comparative study of multi-racial and multi-ethnic societies. The two subjects are quite discrete in terms of existing literature, conceptual approaches, and units and levels of analysis. The foreword . . . leads the reader to anticipate that the book deals with the first topic but that is only partially true. The great majority of the titles in the 50-page bibliography have nothing to do with the race factor in international relations. Instead, they deal mostly with studies of race and ethnic relations in a variety of countries, and, as such, constitute a useful guide to sources of empirical data in comparative race relations." P. L. Van Den Berghe

Am Pol Sci R 65:854 S '71 550w

"None but Americans could today be confident that an energetic application of social science can yield a theory of international race relations. . . . The central article in this [volume] . . . is one in which James N. Rosenau debates with his analytic conscience and his moral conscience. The dialogue brings out the immensity of the difficulties, but goes on to develop a conceptual scheme and to propose thirty-six hypotheses concerning relations between such difficult-to-measure tendencies as the racial consciousness of top officials and their readiness to recommend forms of foreign conflict behavior. . . . Two excellent essays complete the volume. . . . One is Peter's Rose's judicious review of the development of race studies. The other is a sparkling set of proposals from Karl Deutsch for analyzing race in a context of social communication." Michael Banton

Ann Am Acad 398:143 N '71 150w

"First volume in a continuing series. . . . The papers are somewhat uneven, overlapping to some degree on substantive matters. The book . . . offers some worthwhile suggestions for future research. . . . Yet the reader must plow through a great deal of verbiage for relatively meager rewards. . . . Comparable books with parallel approaches, if we look at the topic of race in general, are [J.H.] Franklin's Color and race [BRD 1969] and [I.] Katz and [P.] Gurin's Race and the social sciences [BRD 1970]. Race among nations compares favorably with both of these. Any complete library on the subject of race would do well to include all three."

Choice 8:300 Ap '71 150w

"We are faced with a paucity of studies dealing with the impact of racism on foreign policy. It is therefore welcome to have our attention directed to this crucial matter by [this book. It] . . . is, as its title indicates, part of a rigorous effort to construct models, concepts, and hypotheses in the study of international relations." Kofi Ankomah

Library J 96:2092 Je 15 '71 160w

RACHEWILTZ, I. DE. Papal envoys to the great khans. 230p il $7.95 Stanford univ. press

950 Voyages and travels. Mongols—History. Missions—Asia. Catholic Church—Missions
ISBN 0-8047-0770-7 LC 77-150327

The author "has written a synthesis in narrative form of the journeys and reports of men dispatched from 1234 to 1339 by the monarchs of Europe and the popes of Rome (later Avignon) to the lands of Central and East Asia ruled by Temüjin (Chingis Khan) and his successors. The adventures of the Hungarian Dominican friar Julian, John of Pian di Carpine, William of Rubruck, John of Montecorvino, and others [are included]. . . . There are [also] sections on the conceptions of Asia and the Mongols in Europe prior to Marco Polo's famous accounts, including the tracing of the persistent European legend of . . . Prester John." (Choice) Bibliography.

"For students of Mongol or Central Asian history, De Rachewiltz provides a convenient and well written summary of the saga of Mongol life and activity. The bibliography is complete and the scholarship is thorough. All in all, while there is not a great deal of new material or original interpretation in the book, it would be a good addition to an undergraduate library."

Choice 9:557 Je '72 170w

"[De Rachewiltz] has surveyed much of what might be called the non-Polo literature of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries and placed it in its historical context. The result is very good indeed, readable, accurate and thorough."

TLS p1085 S 10 '71 400w

RADICE, BETTY. Who's who in the ancient world. 225p il maps $12.50 Stein & Day

913.3803 Classical dictionaries
ISBN 0-8128-1338-3 LC 73-127027

This book "contains entries for a mixture of mythological and real persons, including among the latter Alaric, Pyrrhus, Herod the Great, and others. . . . Emphasis is on the use of the classical figure in a play, opera or painting." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"[This popular work is] an excellent reference volume for high school and college libraries, made easy of access by a detailed Index. A Bibliography and Table of Main Dates is also helpful. End papers contain maps of the Western and Eastern Mediterranean."

Best Sell 31:480 F 1 '72 180w

"The influence of classical civilization in our own time has to be constantly pointed out to the present generation. The work under consideration performs this task. . . . The living tradition of the classical past [is] . . . fully traced in an erudite introductory essay. . . . The volume serves as an extremely useful reference work for the average reader."

Choice 9:46 Mr '72 160w

"[This book does not] include enough information not already easily available to make it an essential purchase. [Radice] intends to add to readers' appreciation of art and literature by identifying classical names. . . . The number of entries is far smaller than that in the Oxford Classical Dictionary [BRD 1949], and less information is given about each personage. . . . [The work is] well written, but most or all of the information is available scattered in other books in the well-stocked library." R. E. Stevens

Library J 96:3591 N 1 '71 80w

"[This work] is both more and less than it seems to be. The information provided in the articles is far from complete—for example, they list only a few of the plays of Aristophanes and of the dialogues of Plato. On the other hand, (a) they embrace what's as well as whos, such as the Elgin Marbles, 'Scipio's Dream,' and the Rape of the Sabines, and (b) they let thoughts ripple out from facts, indicating influences on later ages, subjects of recent works of art and literature, and new interpretations of classical mythology." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 54:47 D 4 '71 90w

RADOSTA, JOHN S. The New York Times complete guide to auto racing. 256p il $7.95 Quadrangle bks.

796.7 Automobile racing
LC 79-149559

The author deals with "clubs and organizations, sponsoring races, tracks throughout the world where leading competitions are held. . . . the . . . variety of cars and their engines . . . the language of the sport . . . as well as car classifications and rules under the International Sporting Code." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"This is a very comprehensive and entertaining guide to auto racing. The author . . . does an excellent job in simplifying the rather complicated aspects of this popular sport. . . . He also treats the financial aspects of the sport and the role played by the manufacturers. There are a number of appendixes which include . . . lists of winning drivers and manufacturers and of major racing sites in North America, and tables of racing arithmetic. The book is well bound and appropriately illustrated with photographs and diagrams." Mark Neyman

Library J 96:3342 O 15 '71 130w

"A rather witty, smooth book, [this] manages to escape the parochial style of so many other titles in the field. Radosta, although he includes facts and figures, looks beyond the clouds of dust and tire tracks in noting the technical difficulties involved in televising road races, the falsification of race attendance figures and that 'the demands of the sport have accelerated the evolution of automobiles,' making them safer and more efficient." J. B. Segal

N Y Times Bk R p44 D 5 '71 80w

RADZINOWICZ, LEON, ed. Crime and justice; ed. by Leon Radzinowicz and Marvin E. Wolfgang. 3v 515:703:445p boxed set $35; pa vl, 3 ea $5.95 v2 $6.95 Basic bks.

364 Crime and criminals. Justice, Administration of. Prisons
SBN 465-01468-2 LC 77-158439

The articles in this three-volume anthology on crime "are organized into three . . . categories . . . Volume I deals with general theoretical formulations covering the nature of crime. The second relates to the system of justice. The third analyzes the nature of punishment-correction and its effect." (Choice) Index. Bibliographies.

"All articles in the series have appeared in professional journals or are excerpts from larger published works. A good proportion have appeared in one or more other criminological anthologies . . . although the titles have been changed. Each volume has a general introduction that attempts to relate the selections to follow. The collection is suitable for courses in criminology on both the graduate and undergraduate level."

Choice 9:290 Ap '72 170w

"[The editors have] brought together 127 sociologically oriented selections representing the thinking of various specialists on specific problems. The selections were chosen to trace the major trends in crime, in criminal justice, and in correctional practice, so as to bring out the ways in which they affect each other. . . . Although other good readers are available in criminology and corrections, Volume II has virtually no competition. . . . [These volumes] should prove to be an invaluable reference source for professionals." M. A. Forslund

Library J 97:512 F 1 '72 220w

RAE, JOHN B. The road and the car in American life. 390p il $12 MIT press

388 Roads. Automobiles. Transportation
ISBN 0-262-18049-9 LC 70-148972

"Following a survey of the historical relationships between transport vehicles and roadway systems, Rae gives . . . [an] analysis of the social impact of modern autos and highways, drawing . . . parallels between the European and American experiences." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

RAE, J. B.—Continued

Reviewed by P. D'A. Jones
Am Hist R 77:1516 D '72 500w

"Rae [has] . . . an infatuation with cars and highways which seems somewhat passe. . . . [But] one must admit that [the book] is done rather well. . . . [It] is well researched and profusely provided with valuable background data, and for this reason alone one can perhaps overlook the author's unbalanced viewpoint and include the volume in the planning library collection."

Choice 8:1618 F '72 160w

Reviewed by H. F. Williamson
J Am Hist 59:194 Je '72 300w

"A highlight of the book is Rae's critique of the urban situation with comments on mass transit, the geography of suburbs, and the matrix of urban travel systems including commuters, industries, and retail operations. Objective and informed (author of two automotive histories), Rae is willing to expose the shortcomings of the American 'car-culture' and still take a well-aimed jab at Ralph Nader. An authoritative and indispensable study." R. E. Bilstein

Library J 96:2339 JI '71 90w

"[Rae rejects] vulgar modern fears about the economic role of the automobile. He dislikes manifestations of passion and heat: 'Unfortunately, urban transportation has . . . become an emotionally charged issue.' . . . But where enthusiasm is unavoidable, he is an eager partisan of existing automotive arrangements. . . . [He] ignores such popular criticisms of auto transportation as have become familiar since 1956. . . . While quite . . . eager . . . to claim academic objectivity, [Rae's book] . . . is a hymn to the automotive superstructure. . . . The book's dedication page reveals that Rae's studies were made possible by a 'research grant from the Automobile Manufacturer's Association Inc.' . . . Emma Rothschild
N Y Rev of Books 18:40 F 24 '72 1700w

RAEFF, MARC, ed. Catherine the Great; a profile. (World profiles) 331p $6.50; pa $2.45 Hill & Wang

B or 92 Catherine II, Empress of Russia. Russia—History
ISBN 0-8090-3367-4; 0-8090-1400-9 (pa)
LC 77-163575

"The writings here collected stress . . . Catherine's intellectual development and accomplishments and her influence on contemporary Russian cultural and social life. . . . [They touch on] facets of [her] public activities: connections with West European intellectual leaders, contributions to Russian literature, efforts at molding public opinion and education, ambiguous relations with educated society and 'progressive' thinkers, and the style and achievements of her diplomacy, imperial expansion, social legislation, and ecclesiastical policy. In the Postscript Catherine's rule is placed in the perspective of Russian historiography and assayed in the institutional development of her country." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Annotated bibliography.

"Twelve selections by Russian and Western historians on Catherine and her reign, edited by a leading scholar, with a useful historiographical postscript. . . . Although the level of scholarship is in general high, the principle utilized for selecting the pieces is not always clear. For example, Raef includes a 50-page essay of his own on Potemkin's imperial policy which mentions Catherine only in passing. Most of the selections will appeal more to other scholars and graduate students than to undergraduates, who will find them too dry."

Choice 9:568 Je '72 150w

"Several of the essays are appearing in English for the first time, and all are eminently readable and present a careful, balanced treatment of Catherine and her reign—the failures and successes. . . . The brief bibliography and the essay on historiography about Catherine pointedly underscore the fact that too little serious, scholarly work has been done on this great Russian ruler. . . . This book, which certainly augurs well for the series, should stimulate interest in the czarina who furthered the Westernization of Russia.

However, the lack of ■ index is deplorable." A. S. Birkos

Library J 97:1424 Ap 15 '72 170w

RAFFEL, BURTON. Beowulf. See Beowulf

RAFFEL, BURTON. Russian poetry under the tsars; an anthology; tr, and with ■ introd. and notes by Burton Raffel. 245p $10 State univ. of N.Y. press

891.7 Russian poetry—Collections. Russian poetry—Translations
ISBN 0-87395-070-4 LC 74-136279

In this anthology of Russian poetry about "one-third of its pages [are] devoted to [Pushkin's] work. [His] poem, The Bronze Horseman is translated here, as are other of his longer works, his lyrics [and] narratives. . . . Some of the early oral poetry from which Russian verse grew is translated, ■ are the works of some of Pushkin's predecessors, Blok, Fet, and Tyutchev are represented by six poems each; Lermontov by five. Nikolai Gumilev . . . appears here for the first time in English, with three poems. . . . A page of Russian proverbs is included, and a picture—where possible, a photograph—of each of the poets." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"There is nothing wrong with what Raffel wanted to do, and little wrong with what he did. But it is not enough any more. . . . For the coffee table, perhaps; not for the classroom. . . . Even lots of Pushkin and the whole 'Bronze horseman' can't give us, in Raffel's versions, that sense of power in language which, he says, Russian poetry delivers. Pasternak's 'To live life through is not to cross a field' (Which is a Russian proverb) he turns into 'Life is no casual jingle.' Raffel is too nice."

Choice 8:1591 F '72 230w

"Raffel has assembled snippets from a very mixed bag of Russian poets. . . . The selections are quirky. . . . Most of the poets represented look oddly alike in English dress. The book's format is wasteful: It appears that all that lavish white space could have housed facing Russian texts." Rosemary Neiswender
Library J 96:3765 N 15 '71 130w

RAINE, KATHLEEN. William Blake. 216p 11 col il $8.50; pa $4.95 Praeger 769 Blake, William
LC 70-121081

This "book is chiefly concerned with Blake the artist and is primarily an art book containing 156 . . . reproductions, many in color." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Raine's account of Blake's life is clear and often very perceptive. Her commentary is sometimes controversial ■ it tends (from one point of view) to exaggerate Blake's debt to Neoplatonism and to undervalue some of his more politically radical work. Nonetheless, her comments are basically sensitive and well informed. . . . This beautiful book should be in every library. No other biography of Blake is so well illustrated. Highly recommended."

Choice 8:1166 N '71 110w

"The power and clarity of Blake's style and vision are communicated with ■ directness I have not seen before. Any reader of the poetry is seriously handicapped without this book. As for the text, Raine ■ unusually well equipped to deal with the complexity that is Blake. She is a sensitive poet and a meticulous critic already well known for her work on Blake. Her text, ■ careful survey of all Blake's work, integrates with deceptive ease the poet, artist, mystic, and long-misunderstood human being. This book is recommended to old-hand scholars, who may find a new Blake here, and to beginners who already know that literature is largely visual." T. E. Luddy

Library J 96:1270 Ap 1 '71 170w

"A brief, gracefully written, and generously illustrated biography concentrating on Blake's achievement as a painter, a subject to which Miss Raine brings a wide knowledge and deep love. In viewing his work against the background explored in Blake and Tradition (BRD 1969) she inevitably underplays and perhaps oversimplifies much that is important and irreducibly complicated, especially in Blake's political paintings. . . . Still this book is recommended by its enthusiasm; it should persuade the reader unfamiliar with Blake's art to 'enter into these images in his Imagination . . . and be happy', ■■ Blake once urged."

TLS p1537 D 10 '71 230w

RAINS, PRUDENCE MORS. Becoming an unwed mother; ■ sociological account. 207p $6.95 Aldine-Atherton

301.41 Single women. Mothers
ISBN 0-202-30080-3 LC 70-149842

This is ■ study "of the sequence that ■ young unmarried woman experiences from confirmation of pregnancy through postpartum. The study shows the difference in attitudes between the staff and pregnant middle-class white women at a maternity home and the staff and pregnant lower-class black teen-agers at a maternity day school. Rains concentrates on how the women's lives are molded by the social agencies, not why they became pregnant. She also raises questions concerning attitudes toward the use of contraceptives and includes a discussion of abortion as an alternative." (Choice)

"As a white student . . . the author recognizes her difficulty in drawing definitive conclusions regarding the black woman, but she does state that illegitimacy has different social functions for the black and suggests that separate analysis is needed. [She does] a fine job of raising relevant issues for any of us dealing with illegitimacy or unwed motherhood." Robert and Barbara Fishman

Ann Am Acad 403:217 S '72 310w

"[This is] an excellent comprehensive study using the participant-observer approach. . . . This book should have a wide appeal to sociologists as well as staff members of social agencies, and it is especially appropriate reading for both sexes in high school sociology classes."

Choice 9:444 My '72 250w

"Rains postulates that illegitimate pregnancy is an incidental product of the way sexual activity is organized among unmarried girls in our society. This thesis is well developed and supported. . . . An appendix analyzes the methods used in the study. Rains's thoroughly readable observations, and their implications for service to unwed mothers, will be of significant interest to all those professionally concerned with the problem of unwed motherhood." J. F. Madden

Library J 97:1030 Mr 15 '72 200w

RALPH, ELIZABETH K. Dating techniques for the archaeologist. See Michael, H. N.

RAMSAY, RAYMOND H. No longer on the map; discovering places that never were. 276p 11 maps $10.95 Viking

913 Geographical myths
SBN 670-51433-0 LC 70-184537

"Former 'Roving Ratflink' columnist for the Berkeley Barb, Ramsay has written a book about places which were once recorded on maps, but have since been removed when they have proved to be nonexistent. . . . Ramsay examines the histories of these 'places that never were,' how and when they first appeared on maps, and when and why they disappeared from them." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies, Index.

"If there is ■ fault to be found in this book it's in Ramsay's style. Archaic and stilted expressions . . . slow the reader down. But the author cannot be faulted in his research and considerable knowledge of medieval history and geography. Even when the myths are all exploded Ramsay suggests that our planet may still contain some surprises. The Atlantic Ocean, for instance, hasn't yet been entirely explored." David Winder

Christian Science Monitor p11 S 20 '72 390w

"Many of the old favorites are here, such as El Dorado, Norumbega, St Brendan's Isle, and Terra Australis Incognita; as well as more obscure places, such as Mayda and Daculi. . . . A very readable book displaying a good deal of knowledge of cartographic history. Readers who enjoyed Lands Beyond [by L. S. De Camp and Willy Ley, BRD 1952] will enjoy this work." J. F. Husband

Library J 97:3155 O 1 '72 170w

RAMSDEN, E. H. Michelangelo. See Michelangelo Buonarroti

RAMSEY, PETER H., ed. The price revolution in sixteenth century England; ed. with an introd. by Peter H. Ramsey. 182p 11 $6.50; pa $3.25 Barnes & Noble

338.52 Prices—History. Inflation (Finance). Great Britain—Economic conditions
SBN 416-12180-2; 416-29830-3 (pa)
LC 177-861603

Economists "usually agree that the European inflation of the 16th century was clearly the result of debasement of the currency coupled with large imports of American treasure. The common theme of most of these essays is that, at least as far ■ England is concerned, this hypothesis has not been proved. On the contrary, they establish a . . . case for asserting that 'real' forces, such as population growth, were more important than monetary changes." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This might well have carried some such subtitle ■ 'Reinterpretations of British economic history.' . . . Useful not only for economic history courses but also—even more so—for courses in monetary theory and policy."

Choice 8:1365 D '71 130w

"In his lucid introduction Peter Ramsey discusses briefly the views expressed by contemporaries on the inflation and the problem of arriving at any final explanation of its causes in view of the inadequacies of the statistical material. . . . [This book] has its interest for us living through a comparable price revolution."

TLS p802 J1 9 '71 600w

RAND, AUSTIN L. Birds of North America. 255p 11 $9.95 Doubleday

598 Birds—North America
LC 75-147352

"Some 600 birds 'of regular occurrence in the U.S. and Canada' are covered in pictures and words, and there are . . . accounts of the habits and habitat of most of the species discussed." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[This book] is copiously illustrated with fascinating photos in both color and black and white. . . . [It] is technical enough to be of real service to the professional yet presented in such a way as to be of great interest to the amateur naturalist, sportsman or just plain lover of beautiful books." F. J. MacEntee

Best Sell 31:349 N 1 '71 130w

"[This] is not a field guide, although it could be pressed into service as such, but rather a fascinating companion piece to ■ more detailed text." Nelson Bryant

N Y Times Bk ■ p62 D 5 '71 70w

RAND, PAUL. Thoughts on design. rev ed 95p 11 $5.50; pa $2.95 Van Nostrand-Reinhold

659.13 Design. Commercial art
LC 72-126307

"In this edition of ■ work originally published in 1947 and revised in 1951, a portion of the text has been revised and a number of illustrations have been replaced." (Library J)

"Any library which has the 1947 edition need not order the new edition. It is smaller, sparser in visual material, and a sad commentary on the economics of book production: the color plates have gone along with the French and Spanish translations. But libraries which do not have the earlier edition must order the new one. Rand may not utter eternal verities, but he gives us some 'thoughts' which are still useful, challenging and instructive."

Choice 9:54 Mr '72 70w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 96:3596 N 1 '71 30w

RAND McNALLY AND COMPANY. Rand McNally cosmopolitan world atlas. enl Planet Earth ed 252, 100Xp col 11 col maps $19.95 Rand McNally

912 Atlases
LC 72-654253

This edition follows the basic organization of the earlier editions, which were entitled Rand McNally New Cosmopolitan World Atlas

RAND MCNALLY AND COMPANY—Continued (BRD 1966,1963). It contains new material which seeks to relate "views of the world obtained from space vehicles to conventional mapping techniques, the structure of the earth, the weather, geology, and man's activities . . . [and a] section describing . . . the physical appearance of the ocean floors. . . . [There are] two new sections, 'World Metropolitan Area Maps' and 'U.S. Metropolitan Area Maps,' . . . [and] tables listing the population of U.S. and foreign cities and towns." (Intro) Indexes for world and U.S. metropolitan areas. Index to political-physical maps.

"Index accuracy is about 93 percent judging from a sample. . . . There are some omissions and inconsistencies in cross referencing from official or native forms of important place-names. . . . [However, the merits of the atlas] are the reasonable degree of accuracy and legibility of the maps, and, for the supplementary sections, the well-selected and reproduced color photographs and clear and simple text. . . . [Recommended as] an acceptable choice for small and medium-size public libraries."

Booklist 69:310 D 1 '72 600w

"A practical atlas reasonably priced with the greatest emphasis on the U.S. Political maps predominate with a few physical maps of large areas. A brief narration with a physical map precedes the maps for each continent. The world metropolitan area maps will prove exceedingly useful although the choice of cities is questionable. However, additional metropolitan area maps appear on a smaller scale on the same page as the map of the state involved. The maps of the ocean world are rendered in a dramatic fashion. Many photographs taken by the astronauts on their space journey are included as well as the usual information on rivers, lakes, mountains, etc. The historical maps and the historical gazetteer included in previous editions have been omitted. . . . For quick reference to place location and for the average student this lower priced atlas will prove satisfactory."

Choice 9:46 Mr '72 200w

"An enlarged and revised work containing 400 color maps/map insets up to 12"x18", with average scales from 1:2,000,000 to 1:8,000,000. Map types include physical, political, metropolitan area, and oceanographic. Cartographic information is as current and complete as practicable. All the maps are well executed, pleasing to the eye, and noncluttered, thus lending themselves to facile reading. The index locates 82,000 populated places and terrain features by map page and alphanumeric code. There are also lavishly illustrated, informative articles on the atmosphere, geology, and the ocean world. A superior general atlas, with exceptionally comprehensive coverage." L. E. Spellman

Library J 97:486 F 1 '72 110w

RANDALL, DONALD A. The great American auto repair robbery; a report on a ten-billion dollar national swindle—and what you can do about it [by] Donald A. Randall [and] Arthur P. Glickman. 283p pl $7.95 Charterhouse

629.22 Automobiles—Repairing. Automobile industry and trade
LC 72-84212

In this account of "how the American motorist is systematically victimized by car manufacturers, insurance companies, car dealers, service stations, and repair shops. . . . Randall and Glickman tell the . . . car owner how to fight back—what to insist on when buying a car, what to ask the service writer when you bring it in for repairs, how to check that it's been fixed right, and how to blow the whistle when you've been gypped." (Publisher's note)

"The present book echoes some of the same material in What To Do with Your Bad Car [R. Nader BRD 1971], but is written in a much more compact, readable style. It, too, tells the same type of stories of the car brought to a number of repair shops where each mechanic finds a different thing wrong with it. The impatient reader will find a summary at the end of each chapter, and so need only read what he is interested in. Of inestimable value is the listing of state and federal agencies concerned with automobile legislation as well as lengthy listings of automobile and auto parts manufacturers and insurance companies. The authors keep insisting that if enough car owners write enough letters, there may be legislation enacted to force the licensing of auto mechanics. A good book—worth reading." Sylvia Mechanic

Library J 97:2725 S 1 '72 170w

"The authors describe the use of flat-rate manuals, go into the great warranty headache and the auto manufacturers' interest in selling cars and parts rather than preventing breakdowns. The book offers valuable tips to consumers to prevent these and other abuses."
N Y Times Bk R p38 O 1 '72 30w

RANKIN, HUGH F. The North Carolina continental. 428p $12.50 Univ. of N.C. press

975.6 North Carolina—History. U.S.—History—Revolution
ISBN 0-8078-1154-8 LC 79-135311

In this account of the regulars from North Carolina, the author "surveys the events that led to war in that state . . . provides a . . . treatment of the Battle . . . of Moore's Creek Bridge on April 12, 1776, [and describes] . . . the early British threat to North Carolina and the city and port of Charleston, South Carolina. . . . [He next] traces the movement of North Carolina troops and describes their role at Brandywine, Germantown, Monmouth, and Stony Point. There is [also] attention to the winter at Valley Forge. . . . The last half of the book deals with North Carolina regiments in the . . . fighting that stretched from the defeat and demoralization at Charleston and at Camden . . . [to Yorktown.]" (Ann Am Acad)

"The discussion of the part played by North Carolina regiments seems near-definitive. The vignettes of important political and military leaders are always delightful and often superb. A careful and meticulous scholar who has drawn profusely from a wide variety of manuscript collections, Professor Rankin proves himself a thorough workman. He has digested a mass of data from secondary sources and has tested these data against contemporary accounts. The careful, almost elaborate documentation complements a work that is well written as it is thoroughly researched. The specialist will recognize and respect the fine craftsmanship and the general reader will delight in an entertaining as well as significant story."
R. A. Brown

Ann Am Acad 398:181 N '71 360w

"[The author's] discussion of southern campaigns, based on extensive research in the primary sources, is significant. Our knowledge of many little-known skirmishes in the southern theater of operations has always been weak. . . . But the book is deficient in several respects. It is descriptive rather than analytical—important issues are treated in a factual rather than conceptual framework. Certain themes implicit in Rankin's work also might have been made explicit: the level of violence between whigs and loyalists within communities that made the Revolution more vicious a war than most of us imagine; the changing nature of Britain's military policy toward the loyalists . . . and the ideological differences between those Carolinians who wanted to wage war using the militia and those committed to the continental army as the main military machine." G. A. Billias
J Am Hist 68:1005 Mr '72 350w

"Scrutinizing this one corner of the national struggle, and casting his book in traditional narrative form, Rankin manages to convey the hopeless complexity, the unmanageable and interminable messiness, which is lost or distorted in straight military histories of the American Revolution. Unfortunately, his storytelling approach offers few explanations and, at least to this reader, exhibits only dim understanding . . . By concentrating on the story, on the battles, the ups and downs, and North Carolina's part in the war, and by neglecting the structural context, Professor Rankin has missed a chance to break through the cliché-encrusted folklore of the American Revolutionary War. Nevertheless, his long . . . clearly written account is rich in anecdotes that suggest the historical reality, which lies buried beneath a national myth." John Shy
Sat R 54:40 My 22 '71 700w

RANKIN, ROBERT P., jt. auth. Sociology [2d ed]. See Lowry, R. P.

RANSFORD, OLIVER. The battle of Spion Kop. 150p il pl $7.50 Int. pubs.

968.2 Spion Kop, Battle of, 1900. South African War, 1899-1902
LC [76-444100]

In this description, analysis and interpretation of the Battle of Spion Kop "biographies of the principal antagonists, Generals Buller and Warren on the British side, and General Louis Botha on the Boer, precede the narrative of events leading up to the battle. Index." (Choice)

"Libraries specializing in military history or in South Africa will certainly want to add this to their collection, but for most schools W. B. Pemberton's Battles of the Boer War [BRD 1964] or [R.] Kruger's Good-Bye Dolly Gray [BRD 1960] will be adequate. Illustrated with contemporary photographs; excellent maps; adequate index and references."

Choice 7:1721 F '71 130w

Economist 233:56 D 13 '69 270w

"In the records of the British Army, the battle of Spion Kop stands as a supreme display of military incompetence. . . . The story has often been told before, but perhaps never so clearly as by Mr. Ransford. He makes the whole extraordinary sequence of events intelligible, and is particularly good in disentangling the confusion of command after Spion Kop had been taken. . . . Most of his sources are necessarily secondary, but he makes an interesting original contribution based on his own South African researches in suggesting that the Boers did not altogether abandon Spion Kop as has always been said, but kept a few men near the crest of the hill and rather more near the bottom of it to renew the conflict on the following day."

TLS p1314 N 13 '69 220w

RANSOHOFF, DORIS, jt. auth. Today is for children. See Snitzer, H.

RANSOM, JOHN CROWE. Beating the bushes; selected essays, 1941-1970. 176p $7.95 New directions

801 Esthetics. Criticism. Poetry
LC 79-159738

The author-poet-critic and founder of The Kenyon Review considers "Positivist and Naturalist aesthetics, . . . [the] notion of 'art' itself, and the poetry, among others of Marvell, Milton, Pope, and Shakespeare. Of the eleven selections presented in [this book], nine have appeared in back numbers of The Kenyon Review." (Publisher's note)

"Ransom gently argues with the positivists, the naturalists, Charles Morris, and the 'Foundations of the unity of science' series. The astonishing thing is how little this gifted poet preoccupied himself with talking about individual poems; he would rather, it seems, talk of 'The concrete universal' and provide notes on Kant and Hegel. Surely some readers would trade all the essays in this volume for those Ransom wrote about Thomas Hardy's poetry. One regrets that he confined himself here so exclusively to reprinting outworn philosophical controversies which perhaps were not that interesting in the first place. The book would be appropriate for collections of writings on aesthetics."

Choice 9:816 S '72 140w

"Ransom is himself a poet, and an exquisite one. . . . It would be merely ungrateful to chide him for not keeping up with the news. Beating the Bushes reprints some very old pieces; it has a dated look—there is even a review of Max Eastman's The Enjoyment of Poetry [BRD 1939]; but altogether, the effect of this author's personality is winning. The typical Ransom essay is greater than its occasion, overtly philosophical or generalizing, slightly rambling, ready on a moment's notice to swoop down upon the literary object from a great height." David Bromwich

Commentary 54:79 N '72 1200w

Reviewed by E. W. Said

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 10 '72 430w

RAPER, J. R. Without shelter; the early career of Ellen Glasgow. (Southern literary stud) 273p $8.95 La. state univ. press

B or 92 Glasgow, Ellen Anderson Gholson
ISBN 0-8071-0904-5 LC 74-142337

"Mr. Raper's purpose is to show how Darwin and his views helped Ellen Glasgow achieve a sense of identity in the face of constricting Southern attitudes. . . . [He] interweaves the details of [her] career with his critique of the novels." (Am Lit) Bibliography. Index.

"[Mr. Raper] adds to our knowledge of [Ellen Glasgow's] trips abroad, her relationships with her family, and her personal life. . . . As a critic [he] is often penetrating. His most illuminating single discourse is that on The Voice of the People. . . . He is equally perceptive on The Battle Ground and The Deliverance. Good as he is in indicating the Darwinian ambience of Miss Glasgow's fiction, he sometimes assigns too much to Darwin, since Miss Glasgow might have derived her altruistic sentiments, for example, from other sources than Darwin. . . . But he reveals a mastery of her works as they form a mirror for her mind and as they in turn illuminate her psyche. He has written one of the better books on Miss Glasgow." F. P. W. McDowell

Am Lit 44:163 Mr '72 550w

"This study sheds more light upon Ellen Glasgow's life than any yet published. [It] is closely documented, has a full index, and an excellent selected bibliography."

Choice 9:1132 N '72 160w

"Because Miss Glasgow so successfully destroyed her own past, Mr. Raper had to lean, as all her biographers must, on her own carefully constructed autobiography. He has filled some gaps and . . . has carefully delineated her use of what she took to be Darwinian ideas in the novels published before 1906. . . . He concludes that her understanding of the fundamental struggle between man and civilization should bring her many readers who are not scholars. The flaws in 'Without Shelter' are less in conception than in execution. Ellen Glasgow, who described herself as valuing 'the precise word, the swift phrase, and the cool and scrupulous observation,' would not think well of this book. . . . [It] has promise, but promise unfulfilled." A. F. Scott

Va Q R 47:634 autumn '71 1000w

RAPHAEL, CHAIM. A feast of history; Pass-over through the ages as a key to Jewish experience; with a new translation of the Haggadah for use at the Seder. 250p il col il col pl $12.50 Simon & Schuster

296.4 Passover. Jews—Rites and ceremonies

SBN 671-21175-7 LC 72-176499

The author attempts "to show the significance, history, and customs of the holiday from its inception until our own time. . . . Also included is a new translation of the Haggadah, which contains . . . explanatory and anecdotal material. Songs are translated in free verse as well as literally." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Both the history of Passover and the Haggadah text are valuable. . . . I imagine, however, that one function of this book is to make the text more intelligible to Gentiles and to those Jews who have fallen somewhat from the habit of using Hebrew. For both of these groups, an inclusion of not only a translation but also of a transliteration of the Hebrew might have been useful. . . . The book deserves recommendation to anybody who has even the slightest interest in the Passover as it is and as it should be observed."

Best Sell 32:20 Ap 1 '72 180w

"[In his translation] Raphael avoids a consciously biblical style and seeks for something which, while faithful to the tradition underlying the original, yet speaks 'in an English that reflects our own voice.' In doing this, he has felt compelled to abbreviate on occasion, cutting out elaborations and repetitions and all those parallel expressions in series so dear to the Hebrew liturgical genius. . . . The general sense is conveyed with fine vigor, though I can't help wondering what would happen to someone with a little Hebrew who was counting on the English translation to help him out. . . . [However,] one's general view of this book must be enthusiastic. It is both an admirable introduction to Jewish history and an unusually lively and informative edition of the Haggadah." David Daiches

Commentary 53:93 Je '72 2300w

Economist 243:54 Ap 1 '72 200w

"A lavish and beautifully illustrated book . . . with illustrations from Jewish as well as secular sources. . . . The author is most successful when discussing specific aspects of Passover (e.g., the historical and artistic development of the Haggadah). He tends to be wordy and superficial in his more general discussion of the history of Passover as a key to Jewish experience. . . . The Hebrew print is especially clear." Maurice Tuchman

RAPHAEL, CHAIM—Continued

Library J 97:1334 Ap 1 '72 100w

RAPOPORT, ROGER. The great American bomb machine. 160p $5.95 Dutton

355.02 Atomic weapons. U.S.—Military policy. Radioactivity
ISBN 0-525-11610-9 LC 78-158588

The author, who has written for Look and Esquire, maintains that "today's nuclear threat to America emanates from Washington, not Moscow or Peking. Mindless design, production, testing and transport of nuclear weapons may be a greater threat to national security than all our enemies. . . . [He contends that] nuclear weapons-makers . . . have raised the nation's infant mortality rate, permanently contaminated 250 square miles in Nevada, scattered radioactive debris in Greenland and Spain, triggered small earthquakes in Las Vegas and polluted the prime Western watershed with radioactive waste." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This work] makes insinuations and assumptions without facts to substantiate them. . . . The author overuses 'may,' 'probably,' 'perhaps,' 'if,' 'could,' and more of the same. He . . . ridicules nuclear power for use against attack. . . . [maintaining that] 'our entire nuclear-defense system is predicated on assumptions that belie common sense. . . . [His book] 'belies common sense.'" J. B. Cullen
Best Sell 31:448 Ja 1 '72 300w

"A purely one-sided attack on our nuclear weapons system, the Pentagon, and Atomic Energy Commission. It does an adequate job of presenting the issues and problems of developing and maintaining a nuclear weapon capability, but the book does not discuss the need for having this capability as it relates to U.S. freedom. The book will probably become a classic of the muckrakers art. . . . It is easy to read and well organized, but each chapter leads the reader to a conclusion that he should join the citizen's call for a unilateral withdrawal by the U.S. from the building and testing of nuclear weapons."

Choice 9:577 Je '72 130w

"This is quite possibly one book that every American should read, for it relates the sweeping consequences during the last 30 years of our nuclear weapon inventions. . . . The author's investigations were done at the University of California laboratories at Los Alamos, New Mexico, and Livermore, California, at the testing grounds in Nevada, at the Sandia plants in Albuquerque, and at Flat Rocks, Colorado, among other places. . . . The chapters detailing the dangers connected with radiation and fallout and the mistakes made during manufacture and testing are quite frightening. . . . [Rapoport] calls for unilateral disarmament as America's only solution to the weapons race." Eugene Holtman
Library J 96:3589 N 1 '71 170w

RAPSON, RICHARD L. Britons view America; travel commentary, 1860-1935. 274p $12 Univ. of Wash. press

917.3 U.S.—Social life and customs. U.S.—Foreign opinion, British
LC 68-11040

The author takes the theme of "foreign visitors commenting upon American values, character, and institutions—and applies it to a period (1860-1935). . . . [He concentrates] on such areas as education, children, women, government, and religion." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

Am Lit 44:536 N '72 40w

"[Rapson] utilizes numerous travel commentaries to conclude that Britons, for the most part, continued from 1860 to approximately 1885 to regard the U.S. with the approval and optimism they had felt in the earlier 19th-century. The years 1885-1900 were transitional, and from 1900-1935 our English visitors, while still generally favorable and hopeful, began to reflect increased doubt and skepticism about this nation's future. . . . The book contains a most useful annotated bibliography of more than 250 books relevant to the subject. Despite occasional infelicities of expression, Rapson has a readable style. While the book will appeal mainly to scholars, its inherently interesting subject matter should also attract the layman."

Choice 8:1507 Ja '72 170w

"This is a sensible, clearly written, intelligently organized survey. . . . The movement from simplicity to complexity seems not so much related to the deepening of American life as to the growing sophistication of visitors and even more to the self-awareness and introspection of Americans. What most visitors recorded were the feelings Americans had about themselves and their institutions rather than the realities underlying them. A traveler could not, obviously, learn much about how the schools actually worked in a few weeks or months. But he could find out what intelligent natives thought of them. Thus, with many qualifications which Rapson carefully notes, this is largely a study of American opinion." W. L. O'Neill
J Am Hist 59:173 Je '72 430w

"[This book comes] as a needed contribution to American historical literature. More than a mere listing of British commentary on America, Rapson suggests the rudiments of a comparative Anglo-American social history. . . . [To the narrative is] appended a critical commentary on the value of traveler accounts as historical sources. . . . The book is a positive contribution to the published material on the period."

Va Q R 48:xxxvi winter '72 140w

RASHID, AL-DIN. The successors of Genghis Khan; tr. from the Persian by John Andrew Boyle. UNESCO coll. of representative works; (Persian heritage ser) 372p $12.50 Columbia univ. press

950 World history. Mongols—History
ISBN 0-231-03351-6 LC 70-135987

This is a "translation of the second volume [of a projected four volumes of the first section] of the Jami' al-Tawarikh (Complete collection of histories) by Rashid al-Din Fadl Allah (1247-1318), a Persian physician of Jewish origin who wrote this first world history for his masters, the Mongol rulers of Persia. This book takes up the history of the Mongol world empire from the death of its founder. It recounts the campaigns in Russia and Eastern Europe (1236-42) which led to the founding of the Golden Horde. It then describes the conquest of Southern Sung (1268-79), and it breaks off in the reign of Temür (1294-1307)." (Choice) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"[This work contains] genealogies of the khans in China, Persia, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia; concordance table between the Mongolian animal cycle and the Julian calendar for the years 1168-1371. . . . [It] should prove to be indispensable for the student of Mongol history as well as entertaining for the interested layman."

Choice 9:557 Je '72 200w

"The translation reads well, but the style is similar to that of a catalog or condensed outline: thus its significance will be greatest for scholars in the field. As the first English translation of an outstanding source work, it will be influential for many years to come." J. C. Shipman
Library J 96:3756 N 15 '71 230w

RASKIN, ELLEN. Franklin Stein. unpag $4.95 Atheneum pubs.

LC 75-175560

"This is about friendless Franklin Stein who . . . creates a huge companion from a conglomeration of junk and household objects and then enters it in a pet contest. . . . The creature (named Fred) is awarded first prize. Suddenly Franklin is acclaimed as a hero, and Fred is appreciated as 'original, creative, artistic, and superb.' The neighbors become pleasant . . . and Franklin finds a real friend at last. . . . Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"Once again the author-illustrator has concocted a hilariously improbable story and allowed the outpourings of her visual imagination to take shape in neat and monstrous line drawings. . . . The pure-white pages of the book are a perfect background for the clear blues and greens coloring the drawings; in practically each picture Fred appears in blatant red. The illustrations are rich with impossible details that are only hinted at in the text; and if the youngest of readers or viewers fails to catch the implied irony (the inconsistency of human reactions and opinions), he can, at least, give himself unreservedly to the exuberance of the slapstick." P. H.
Horn Bk 48:138 Ap '72 190w

"A moralistic tale with somewhat stereotyped characters. . . . The text is enhanced by the ink drawings. . . . in Raskin's familiar cheerful style. Although Raskin fans might appreciate Franklin and his monster, the vicissitudes of public opinion are rather obviously portrayed." Phyllis Yuill
Library J 97:1906 My 15 '72 160w

"The characters are broadly caricatured and quite funny, but Fred is so lumbering and awkward that he is almost unappealing." Shirley Williams
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p39 My 7 '72 110w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat ■ 55:75 F 19 '72 120w

RASKIN, ELLEN. The mysterious disappearance of Leon (I mean Noel). 149p il $4.95 Dutton

ISBN 0-525-35540-5 LC 70-157953

"Wed at the age of five to a seven-year-old husband (it solved a business difficulty for their two families), the very young Mrs. Leon Carillon immediately loses her spouse, who is sent off to boarding school. This is the hilarious account of her search for Leon, aided by adopted twins, when she is older. . . . Ages nine to twelve." (Sat R)

"The author's first full-length story begins on a note of lighthearted madness which continues, unabated, until the end of the book. . . . It is difficult to see how children could resist the story, crammed as it is with baffling word puzzles, a dozen zany characters, uproariously funny situations, and unmitigated slapstick. Illustrated very suitably with ingenious word pictures, literally made of pen-and-ink lines and letters." E. L. H.
Horn Bk 48:51 F '72 200w

Reviewed by D. G. Stavyn
Library J 96:4186 D 15 '71 180w

"The book is about the unravelling of [a] message, and readers are given ample opportunity to solve it along with Mrs. C. In the end, of course, Noel (or is it Leon?) is found. I did not solve the puzzle—at least not entirely. But then I am not good at codes or whodunits. However, I thoroughly enjoyed [the book] and even after two readings am still marveling at the funny twists and turns of Ellen Raskin's mind." Jane Yolen
N Y Times Bk R p8 D 12 '71 290w

"With clever clues to stimulate the reader's participation, the story is a bouquet of word-play garnished with jokes, sly pokes at our society, daft characters, and a soupçon of slapstick. Fresh and funny, it's the kind of book that passes from child to child." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:46 D 11 '71 80w

RASMO, NICOLÒ. Michael Pacher. 264p pl col pl $29.50 Phaidon

759.03 Pacher, Michael
ISBN 0-7148-1417-2 LC 70-111063

This is an account of the work of "the fifteenth-century Tyrolean painter and wood-sculptor. . . . [His] contribution to Italian art is discussed. . . . [There is a] catalogue of Pacher's works and [a] . . . chronology of his oeuvre." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index of names. Index of places.

"The first book in English on the Tyrolean painter and sculptor. . . . [this] will serve the scholar and general reader equally well and should be found wherever monographs on important Renaissance artists are collected." Choice 9:206 Ap '72 160w

"This reassessment, from an Italian point of view, places the only great South Tyrolean master of the Middle Ages in a new perspective. Rasmò's brilliant sifting of all extant works and documents reveals a powerful painter and sculptor who, after he went to Padua and absorbed the styles of Lippi, Donatello, and Masaccio, achieved a happy blend of late Gothic and 15th-Century Italian elements. . . . Extraordinarily beautiful illustrations, impeccable scholarship, and a fine translation from the 1969 Italian edition make this an outstanding art book." Peter Fingesten
Library J 97:63 Ja 1 '72 90w

"[This] is an excellent monograph. . . . [Much of] Rasmò's account of [Pacher's] career is taken up with records of commissions for altarpieces that have vanished without trace. The photographs of sculpture, some of them Mr Rasmò's own, are just wonderful, and the details of paintings couldn't be excelled. I don't see how anyone who looks into this book can help becoming a Pacher fan." John Canaday

■ Y Times Bk R p8 D ■ '71 350w

RATHET, MIKE. Pro football: the world of the NFL [by] Mike Rathet and the editors of Pro quarterback magazine. 314p il $14.95 Regnery
796.33 National Football League
LC 72-80937

"The subjects of veteran football writer Rathet's reporting range from equipment, training camp, and statistics to individual players and coaches, the evolution of the game, and the big games of the past ■ well as the future." (Library J)

Best Sell 32:310 O 1 '72 120w

"Although much of it is now dated, this is ■ pretty complement to the 1971 pro football season and a careful outlook for this fall, filled with action photographs, many in color. . . . It's all rather slow going for one sitting; but between-game browsers will be delighted with this slick blow-up Pro Quarterback Magazine, one of the more professionally oriented sports publications." Charles Farley
Library J 97:3611 N 1 '72 100w

RAWLS, JOHN. A theory of justice. 607p $15 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

340.11 Justice. Ethics
ISBN 0-674-88010-2 LC 73-168432

"Rawls presents a substantive theory of justice that is a Kantian alternative to traditional utilitarianism and intuitionism. His contractualism advances two basic principles of justice that apply primarily to the basic structure of society and that allegedly would be agreed to by free and rational persons in an initial situation of equality." (Library J)

Choice 9:884 S '72 180w

"Professor Rawls starts with abstract principles and hypothetical situations, but gradually feeds in complicating realities. He examines first the principles that would regulate a society in which everyone acted justly. . . . [and] eventually reaches the questions of the limits to majority rule, the toleration of intolerance, and the justification of civil disobedience. [The] notion of 'justice as fairness' has been propounded by Professor Rawls in articles that have been much discussed by philosophers, who will welcome this full-exposition. Though he makes no claim to originality, no one can deny the freshness and ingenuity with which he develops his ideas or the breadth and balance of his discussion. The book is, indeed, too long. Precautions against objections, replies to them, and adjustments to meet them result in ■ lot of repetition, and a rather laboured style is an obstacle to comprehension. But this is ■ very interesting and important work."

Economist 243:68 My ■ '72 750w

"Rawls develops his theory in the context of highly illuminating discussions of a wide range of topics in moral philosophy. The book is clearly written, exceptionally well argued, and thorough." Robert Hoffman
Library J 97:1328 Ap 1 '72 160w

"As a work of close and original scholarship in the service of the dominant moral and political ideology of our civilization, Rawls's treatise is simply without a rival. Several distinct virtues in this book set it apart from the work of every other recent moral and political philosopher. One is Rawls's grasp of the literature of social science. . . . The complete absence of pedantry and polemic in the volume, along with the absence of inconclusive arguments based on armchair speculation concerning the meanings of key ethical terms, are in refreshing contrast to much recent writing. Few major books in moral philosophy in this century have been so sparing of semantic maneuvers as is Rawls's treatise. This alone should recommend it to the large audience which has never been persuaded that the so-called 'linguistic turn in philosophy' was a turn for the better." H. A. Bedau
Nation 215:180 S 11 '72 1750w

Reviewed by Peter Caws
New Repub 166:24 My 13 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Bernard Crick
New Statesman 83:601 My ■ '72 1050w

RAWLS, JOHN—Continued

"I think that this book is the most substantial and interesting contribution to moral philosophy since the war. . . . It is a very persuasive book, being very well argued and carefully composed, with possible objections and counterarguments fairly weighed and considered: at the same time it conveys a moral vision and a ruling idea, and a strongly marked personal attitude to experience. Although the book is firmly within the traditions of analytical philosophy, and has the virtue of this kind, there is no pretense of a degree of precision that the subject matter does not admit. . . . The book is a permanent refutation of the reproach that analytical philosophy cannot contribute to substantial moral and political thought." Stuart Hampshire

N Y Rev of Books 18:34 F 24 '72 7000w

Reviewed by Marshall Cohen

N Y Times Bk R p1 J1 16 '72 2750w

TLS p505 My ■ '72 2300w

RAY, PAUL C. The surrealist movement in England. 331p $10 Cornell univ. press

820 English literature—History and criticism. Surrealism

ISBN 0-8014-0621-8 LC 70-145626

"While it is true that organized surrealism did not accomplish much in England, [the author] argues that it had a great deal more to offer which was rejected. He . . . explains the theoretical basis of surrealism, the revolutionary contributions it could have made to the English tradition of letters, the reasons for its rejection, and the . . . influences it had on Eliot, Auden, Thomas and other writers despite its rejection as dogma." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Coming now, at a time when artists, teachers, and the young alike are all concerned to discover the origins, nature, and value of significant experimental movements in the arts, this is a relevant, exciting book. Given the clarity and perception with which it reveals 'in surrealism a doctrine that effects all of man's life,' not merely his literature and art, it is a most welcome book, a genuine contribution to the growing body of work dedicated to explaining the process which has shaped and is shaping our contemporary consciousness."

Choice 8:1574 F '72 150w

Reviewed by James Hill

J Aesthetics 31:126 fall '72 220w

"Organized Surrealism in England in the 1930's and 1940's was at best an amusing side show, as this history frankly reveals. . . . Most readers will find the most valuable part of the book to be not this detail of literary history, but the survey of the liberating influence of International Surrealism on Dylan Thomas and other major writers of the times." W. H. Magee

Library J 96:2086 Je 15 '71 140w

"English critics and artists watched Paris with interest and sympathy, and organized some shows. But few joined the cause. Professor Ray does not really try to demonstrate that Edith Sitwell and Dylan Thomas needed Surrealism in order to develop their poetic style. He does find a few good critical texts by W. H. Auden and Christopher Caudwell. This non-book could have made a respectable article."

N Y Rev of Books 18:25 Je 1 '72 80w

TLS p442 Ap 21 '72 280w

RAYBACK, JOSEPH G. Free soil; the election of 1848. 326p col maps $12.50 Univ. press of Ky.

973.6 U.S.—Politics and government—1815-1861. Slavery in the United States
SBN 0-8131-1222-2 LC 79-111514

The author seeks to show that "the presidential election of 1848, known as the Free Soil election, marked the emergence of anti-slavery sentiment as a determining political force on a national scale. In this book Mr. Rayback provides the . . . history of the campaign and the election, documenting his analysis with contemporary letters and newspaper accounts. . . . [He] concludes that the Free Soil election was one of the most significant in American history." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Rayback details the events of the Polk Administration, which led to the Barnburner bolt of 1848. His treatment of the election is superb. Employing tables and sophisticated statistical analysis he shows that the Free Soil vote was principally of Democratic origin. Furthermore, he points out that both of the major parties were in trouble. Much of Rayback's story is one of factional rivalries and infighting among the political brokers in both parties. He writes with ease and lucidity. . . . [The book belongs] in all college and university libraries for undergraduates and graduates."

Choice 8:607 Je '71 200w

"Rayback, an established historian, makes an excellent case for his thesis. . . . The subject is thoroughly researched, and an impressive array of contemporary newspapers and manuscript collections are cited in the footnotes and listed in the 'Notes on Sources.' . . . The citations appear where they belong—at the bottom of each page. All in all, the book is a solid and scholarly contribution to the historical literature on elections and pre-Civil War politics. The tedious prose (perhaps the subject is at fault or the author's propensity for detail) might discourage all except the most devoted scholar from wading through every one of the seventeen chapters." F. L. Klement

J Am Hist 58:741 D '71 430w

RAYMOND, ELLSWORTH. A picture history of Eastern Europe, by Ellsworth Raymond and John Stuart Martin. 874p 11 maps $12.50 Crown

914.7 Europe, Eastern—Pictures, illustrations, etc.
LC 76-93415

This book describes the historical, political, economic, social and cultural life of Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Estonia, Hungary, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, The Ukraine and Yugoslavia. Bibliography. Index

"The text and more than 1000 illustrations combine to form an easily comprehensible history of [these countries]. . . . from medieval times to the 1960's. Social and economic data are summarized in easy-to-understand tables. The underlying theme of this timely work is the constant striving of these countries for independence and liberty." A. S. Birkos

Library J 97:196 Ja 15 '72 60w

"Communist Europe is for most of us a closed world about which we have little visual knowledge. Unfortunately, text and illustration [in this book] are ■ boring ■ a visit to a cement factory."

N Y Times ■■ R p73 D ■ '71 160w

RAYNOR, HENRY. A social history of music: from the middle ages to Beethoven. 373p $12 Schocken

780.9 Music—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8052-3446-2 LC 79-183616

This work is concerned with "the history of music's 'developing relationships to the patrons or audiences for whom it was originally intended, the singers or instrumentalists who were first expected to perform it and the means at the composer's disposal for placing his work before the public.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Lest the title scare off possible readers, let me quickly point out that 'social' is used here in the most comprehensive sense . . . and while [Raynor] stops with the death of Beethoven, he leaves us with information that speaks to today's problems. Not ■ work of demythologization, the book does lay to rest canards that are romantically comforting but misleading. . . . While never directly hortatory, Raynor tells us much that we need to know, and he does it with sense and lightly worn erudition. Very British." C. J. McNaspy

America 126:656 Je 24 '72 350w

"This eminently readable book demonstrates that music has not grown in a vacuum but has always been linked to political, economic, social, and intellectual history. Raynor's grasp of history in general is impressive. . . . The general reader may marvel at the importance of music in the history of European life, and the scholar will relish the detailed information about past musical practices and performances. Highly recommended for undergraduate and graduate libraries."

Choice 9:978 O '72 180w

"[The author reveals] insufficient understanding, particularly of the music of earlier periods. His discussion of medieval troupes, for instance, is ■ tangle of confusion and error. He barely mentions the madrigal and the many dances that played such a significant role in courtly entertainment. Raynor quotes in full the famous bull of Pope John XXII which decried the musical modernisms of his day; but he leaves the reader with the mistaken impression that the bull had a strong effect on 14th-Century music. . . . [Raynor] is more at home in the music of later periods. The story he tells is fascinating; I wish he had told it more accurately. His bibliography, which certainly reflects the sources of the book's information, contains some striking omissions which might explain some of the book's inaccuracies." A. B. Skei

Library J 97:2608 Ag '72 300w

REARDON, WILLIAM R. The black teacher and the dramatic arts: a dialogue, bibliography, and anthology; William R. Reardon and Thomas D. Pawley, editors. 487p $13.50 Negro univ. press

812 American drama. Negroes in the performing arts—Bibliography
ISBN 0-8371-1850-6 LC 73-90789

"This volume is a direct outgrowth of a summer institute on black theater held at the University of California at Santa Barbara. It consists of three parts: an introduction by the editors discussing black drama on the community and college levels; a bibliography on black drama which includes books, theses, and articles; and five black plays, four of which appear here for the first time." (Library J) These include: one musical (Fly blackbird by C. B. Jackson and James Hatch), two dramatic dialogues ('Curtain call, Mr. Aldridge, sir' by Ossie Davis and 'Tell Pharaoh' by Lofton Mitchell), and two full-length plays (Lofton Mitchell's A land beyond the river and Ted Shine's Morning, noon, and night.)

"Both editors are highly qualified theater scholars and practitioners. Their experience with an Institute in Black Theatre at the University of California, Santa Barbara, in 1968, is carefully if somewhat routinely recorded in the first 64 pages of the book. This dialogue seems dated already in 1971. The bibliography is highly selective, generally accurate, and useful for tyro scholars of black theater. The best part and the bulk of the book is the anthology. . . . All seem worthy of production. . . . Mitchell's contributions are significant additions to black theater, both of them vivid presentations of historical events. Shine's grotesque fantasy is strangely moving."

Choice 8:853 S '71 180w

"This reviewer has mixed reactions to all three parts. The introduction does illumine another area of discrimination and does describe some new projects which assist black theater, but too often it reads like a technical report and does not convey either the warmth or bitterness of black drama. The bibliography includes a number of citations, but seems sketchy for the earlier periods, and the secondary sources are drawn from a very limited selection. Of the five plays, it is difficult to project potential usefulness within an actual community or college setting. . . . Consequently this volume can be viewed as one which should appear in sizeable Afro-American collections, but is not essential for smaller or more general collections." E. K. Welsch

Library J 96:497 F 1 '71 260w

REBHOLZ, RONALD A. The life of Fulke Greville, first Lord Brooke. 384p pl $17.75 Oxford

B or 92 Brooke, Fulke Greville, 1st Baron
ISBN 0-19-812010-9 LC 78-874436

This is an account of the life and career of the poet Fulke Greville, friend of Sidney, servant to Queen Elizabeth and Councillor to King James, set against the background of his times. Genealogy. Bibliography.

"Rebholz's scrupulous study appears on the heels of [J.] Rees' critical biography [Fulke Greville, Lord Brooke, 1554-1628, BRD 1971]. Whereas Rees emphasizes literary style and Greville's philosophic skepticism (seen as essentially unchanging, though more strident and paradoxical in later years), Rebholz stresses the complexities of court life, patronage, and the convolutions of Renaissance diplomacy (suggesting further that a religious conversion by 1613 transformed Greville's views and his later poetry). . . . Valuable [for a] mass of historical evidence and scholarly erudition."

Choice 9:370 My '72 150w

"[This] book is the product of careful scholarship and lively narration. It deserves the close attention of the student of the English Renaissance." H. G. Hahn

Library J 97:868 Mr 1 '72 110w

"Mr Rebholz's biography of Greville is a model of its kind." Paul Johnson

New Statesman 84:277 Mr 3 '72 460w

"[This] book provides a reliable context for the study of Greville's works; and in an appendix Mr Rebholz has established a convincing chronology for their composition."

TLS p270 Mr 10 '72 800w

Va Q H 48:cxl autumn '72 200w

RÉBUFFAT, GASTON. On ice and snow and rock; tr. from the French by Patrick Evans. 187p il col il $15 Oxford

796.5 Mountaineering

ISBN 19-519149-8 LC 75-30062

The French mountaineer writes of clothing, equipment and techniques of climbing throughout the year. The photographs are mostly of climbs in the Haute-Savoie and the Valais alps.

"Along with well-written explanations there are superb photographs of the author demonstrating exterior and interior rock climbing, step cutting, the use of crampons on ice and snow, etc. For the most part, the writing is clear; the section on protective measures against lightning is particularly worth noting. The good color photographs will make any reader want to get out and try mountain climbing for himself." Stanley Swanson

Library J 97:212 Ja 15 '72 150w

"[This] is a book for those who are happier wedging than watching the tube, who feel more at home on a glacier than on a city sidewalk. . . . Rebuffat, already a legend among mountain climbers, is also a gifted writer who can translate the joys of scaling tall peaks into terms that have meaning to those who prefer to keep on the level. . . . This is a book devoted to equipment and technique. But it is not merely a manual. It is a book that will appeal to all who have seen a hawk and wanted to fly or have stood on a high place and seen the minature valley below. This is an important book that will be classic in the literature of mountains and mountain climbing."

Va Q R 48:cix summer '72 170w

REDDAWAY, PETER. Uncensored Russia; protest and dissent in the Soviet Union; the unofficial Moscow journal; a chronicle of current events; ed. tr. and with a commentary; with a foreword by Julius Telesin. 499p il $10 Am. heritage press

323.44 Censorship. Free speech. Russia—

Intellectual life

ISBN 07-051354-6 LC 71-37760

"One of the ways in which [the Russian intelligentsia] opposed censorship was through the . . . underground Chronicle of Current Events, which has been appearing regularly every two months since April, 1968. Eleven editions of that Chronicle form the basis of this book . . . [which demonstrates] the extent of internal opposition to the [Communist] regime's repressive policies." (Economist) Index of proper names.

Reviewed by Denis Dirscherl

Best Sell 32:140 Je 15 '72 450w

Reviewed by F. D. Reeve

Book World p5 Ap 11 '72 900w

Choice 9:1207 N '72 150w

Reviewed by Paul Wohl

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 21 '72 600w

"Far from being the work of a few cranks with an urge for suffering and self-immolation, these documents show that their anonymous authors and editors have a cool, factual approach—which is the very opposite of the ineffectual emotionalism which characterised much of the opposition to the tsarist regime until Lenin came along. . . . Much of the material in this book has appeared piecemeal in various specialist publications and some of it has been published in the daily press in the west. But here it all is—carefully arranged, analysed and annotated. . . . Here are the Jews, the Tartars, the writers, the Ukrainian nationalists, the church dissidents and many others with all their different ideals but also one common objective: to achieve greater freedom of expression in Russia."

REDDAWAY, PETER—Continued

Economist 242:56 F 26 '72 550w

"Inevitably the Chronicle's accounts are fragmentary and episodic; but what a picture emerges. One reads of one protester diagnosed as suffering from 'schizophrenia,' of another told 'to stop thinking,' and of a KGB officer quoting Solon in justification of the need to overlook legal 'errors.' Also noteworthy are the several photographs from the camps, as well as those of the main figures involved in the dissent scene. A most worthwhile volume on an important subject." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:2171 Je 15 '72 170w

New Repub 167:26 J1 8 '72 480w

"[This book] most intelligently arranged and presented and supplied with comprehensive notes, makes clear, if it was not before, the full scope and harshness of the Soviet Government's attempts to suppress the protest and dissent of the intellectuals. . . . One of the most interesting chapters in Reddaway's arrangement of his material is that which illustrates the geographical spread of protest in the Soviet Union, for it is this perhaps which most of all proves the vitality of the Democratic Movement. It is not something confined to a handful of well-known Moscow intellectuals. This The Chronicle shows beyond any doubt." Anthony Arblaster

New Statesman 83:280 Mr 1 '72 340w

Reviewed by I. F. Stone

N Y Rev of Books 18:14 F 24 '72 800w

Reviewed by S. F. Cohen

N Y Times Bk R p6 J1 23 '72 1350w

"Reddaway has done an excellent job in editing the first eleven [issues of the Chronicle]. He has divided [them] into their subject matter. . . . There is a section dealing with the 'mainstream' of protest (Sinyavski-Daniel; Galanskov-Ginzburg), for example, and another with the protest movement in captivity."

TLS p589 My 26 '72 800w

REDEKOP, JOHN H., ed. Labor problems in Christian perspective. 364p $6.95 Merdman 261.8 Labor unions. Church and labor
ISBN 0-828-3419-1 LC 78-150642

In this "collection of twenty-six essays, . . . among the topics considered are the ethics of bargaining, the political affiliation of unions, strikes and violence, labor legislation, the relation of government and the public interest to unions and their policies, the changes brought about by technology, and the possibility of specifically Christian labor unions." (Publisher's note)

"These articles by clergy and laymen could be entitled 'A Christian's view of man and his work.' They cover a range of topics from the reasons Christians work . . . to the way unions should conduct negotiations. The articles are not scholarly with one or two excepted. They resemble the type of piece that might be written for a popular magazine. There is nothing very new here. The coverage is about the same as in other collections, but the articles are, on the whole, more complimentary to organized labor than most. . . . The only reason for a library to acquire this volume might be to give a view into the feelings of clergy and laymen about the relationships between God and the working man. They are described as feelings because the little analysis and documentation attempted are faulty. Not recommended."

Choice 9:1175 N '72 180w

"The 26 contributors speak from many different and often contradictory Christian perspectives, but there is something here for almost everyone somewhere along the spectrum."

Christian Century 89:584 My 17 '72 30w

REDFERN, W. D. Paul Nizan; committed literature in a conspiratorial world. 233p $9 Princeton Univ. press

843 Nizan, Paul

ISBN 0-691-06218-8 LC 78-166387

To "understand Nizan as a writer and a critical intelligence, Mr. Redfern analyzes both the body of his work and his place among his contemporaries (Aragon and Malraux, for example, as well as Sartre and the philosophical rebels Lefebvre, Politzer, and Friedmann). Seen within the context of French literature and politics in the 1920's and 1930's, . . . [Redfern deals with the] features of Nizan's originality, . . . the artistry of the novelist and the commitment of the political radical, which he expressed in all his novels, polemical essays, journalism, and correspondence." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Christian Century 89:427 Ap 12 '72 30w

"This first major study of Nizan's life and works in English sparkles with a novelist's sense of the graphic particular. An intellectual biography of a man who wrote both novels and philosophy, it handles the former more securely than the latter. In vivid prose, Redfern depicts Nizan's frantic efforts at a proletarian novel. Where [the book] falters is in Redfern's blindness to the philosophical significance of his subject as a precursor of Sartre's existential Marxism. Nizan's penetrating critique of idealism is missed, and its applications to British and American philosophy totally lost. . . . The treatment of Nizan's novels is sympathetic and elegant, making for a very enjoyable book." Mark Poster

Library J 97:2099 Je 1 '72 130w

REED, ISHMAEL. Mumbo jumbo. 223p il $6.95 Doubleday

LC 73-171314

"Western civilization, it seems, is the deliberate creation of Atonism, the rationalist, monotheistic, militarist creed dedicated from the dawn of history (its symbol is the sun) to the suppression of animism, the natural magic figured in music, dance, and generative rhythms that reasserts itself periodically, as in the cult of Osiris, the Dionysian mysteries, and jazz. . . . The military arm of Atonism is the Wallflower Order . . . dedicated to the proposition that 'Lord, if I can't dance, No one shall.' . . . In [this novel] this tyrannical order struggles against 'Jes Grew,' the jazz craze creeping up the river from New Orleans like a plague threatening serious American civilization, white and black, with the flapperization of all its children." (N Y Rev of Books)

Reviewed by E. A. Cash

Best Sell 32:299 O 1 '72 400w

Reviewed by Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p13 S 1 '72 500w

Reviewed by J. A. Avant

Library J 97:3182 O 1 '72 200w

"This is Reed's own myth, a contemporary black folk tale, created especially for our era. In his own distinctive way, Reed blurs the boundaries between pagan mythology, Biblical and secular history, and fiction. The result is a form embodying something more than the sum of its parts. It's the 'true' spiritual history of the black race, black in its emotional tone as well as its form and point of view. Moreover, it illustrates a critically important quality of the black spirit, its inextinguishability. However important are the forms by which Jes Grew is known and practiced, they are expendable. . . . Jes Grew doesn't die; only its forms can be destroyed. . . . Others who have expressed similar sentiments have sounded sophomoric at best, ill-humored and pugnacious at worst. Reed, however, wins over by the breadth of his allusions and the seeming inexhaustibility of his imagination." J. H. Bryant

Nation 215:245 S 25 '72 2450w

New Repub 167:31 S 16 '72 270w

"While the Wallflowers's chief agent, Hinkle Von Vampton (evidently a glance at Carl Van Vechten), is an oaf who ingratiate himself with the more respectable elements of the black intelligentsia, his cunning feeds on the reluctance of the Harlem Renaissance to accept 'race' materials, the failure of serious and well-intentioned black artists and intellectuals to sufficiently value indigenous black culture unless it could be elevated to the status of 'high' art like the white folks'. Among all the other things it is, Mumbo Jumbo is an astringent commentary on an important and painful episode in the history of black consciousness, whose consequences still are felt." T. R. Edwards

N Y Rev of Books 19:23 O 5 '72 900w

"The book is . . . frankly and consummately freewheeling, part historical funeral, here a highbrow satire, here a low-key farce, even roman à clef. . . . Reed loves to mix his elements: spiritualists with cops and robbers, literary criticism with caricature, a little bit of jive talk and a little bit of North Africa,' romance and necromancy. . . . Through all this, though he tells a fast-paced story, the author plays fast and loose with the conventions of storytelling. . . . Readers will find the experience rough, unless they are willing to put aside the usual expectations about what a novel is supposed to be, and the satisfaction it is rumored to provide. Ishmael Reed is unique, and he has other things to offer. If one stays with 'Mumbo Jumbo,' uncannily, the book begins to establish its very own life, on its very own terms." Alan Friedman

N Y Times Bk R p1 Ag 6 '72 1600w

New Yorker 48:125 S 16 '72 210w

Reviewed by Andrew Gordon
Sat R 55:76 O 14 '72 1000w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard
Time 100:67 Ag 14 '72 400w

REED, JOHN SHELTON. The enduring South; subcultural persistence in mass society. 135p $8.50 Heath Lexington bks.

301.15 Southern States—Social conditions. Social surveys—Southern States. Public opinion
ISBN 0-669-81083-5 LC 73-172878

Reed has "collected the results of a number of opinion surveys taken in the South over the past three decades, and he draws two conclusions from them: there are clear differences in the ways of thinking of southerners and other Americans, and those differences have persisted during a period in which the pressures on the South to become more 'American' have been particularly intense. Reed isolates three areas in which many observers have felt that North-South differences are strong." (New Repub)

Reviewed by Jared Lobdell
Nat R 24:1189 O 27 '72 210w

"[Reed has assembled] an impressive body of data. . . . [He is concerned with the] question: Is the South still 'the South'? Does the South, that is, remain a definable region, part of yet apart from the national whole. . . . Reed's careful study suggests that the South is clinging with considerable tenacity to the attitudes that gave it 'subcultural' distinctiveness." Jonathan Yardley

New Repub 166:22 J1 15 '72 550w

REED, WILLIS. A view from the rim: Willis Reed on basketball, by Willis Reed with Phil Pepe. (An Associated features bk) 208p il $5.95 Lippincott

796.32 Basketball. New York Knickerbockers
LC 75-163222

"In Reed's own words, 'This is a book about basketball as I play it, basketball as the Knicks play it.' He analyzes all the offensive and defensive techniques which he and other NBA stars use . . . and discusses training, conditioning—mental and physical—and the . . . life style that pro basketball demands." (Publisher's note)

"In this easy-to-read book, Reed tells how basketball has made life good for him, how the acquisition of player Dave DeBusschere and coach Red Holzman helped make the New York Knicks the 1969-1970 NBA champs, and how he feels about many facets of the game. . . . In these times when its fashionable to write exposés knocking pro sports, it's a nice change of pace to read a book such as this." J. A. Phillips

Library J 96:3342 O 15 '71 80w

Reviewed by J. B. Segal
N Y Times Bk R p46 D 5 '71 10w

REEMAN, DOUGLAS. Adventures on the high seas; true sea stories from Captain Bligh to the Nautilus [Eng title: Against the seal]. 173p il $4.50 Walker & co.

910.4 Sea stories. Adventure and adventures
ISBN 0-8027-6088-0 LC 70-166181

A collection of real life sea stories.

"A story collection is an easy thing to compile, but a GOOD one mighty difficult to produce. This one misses the mark completely. Except for a section on Captain Bligh of the Bounty, and the bloody details of cannibalism in the chapter on 'Survival,' the book serves up 'leftovers'—stories that have been told and retold by better writers. Pages of irrelevant description cloud the action until the reader feels himself sinking—into apathy. A redeeming note: Chapter 5 could be used for reference material on the history of submarines." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 31:434 D 15 '71 90w

"It is less than a quarter of a century since the ocean voyage of the balsa raft Kon Tiki. The adventure is already almost as much a part of nautical history as the mutiny on H.M.S. Bounty. Both episodes make intriguing chapters in this mixed bag. . . . Among the names prominent on other pages are Sir Francis Chichester and Sir Alec Rose, Grace Darling and Major Seton, in charge of the troops on the Birkenhead when it foundered in 1852."

TLS p777 J1 2 '71 80w

REES, GORONWY. A chapter of accidents. 270p il $8.95 Lib. press

B or 92 Burgess, Guy Francis de Moncy
ISBN 0-912050-08-X LC 73-161407

The Welsh-born author describes his career. "At one time in his life Mr. Rees was Bur-sar of All Souls [Oxford]. . . . At another he was Principal of the University College of Wales at Aberystwyth. . . . In his early years [as an Oxford student he] became a friend of Guy Burgess, who on one occasion told him that he was a Soviet agent. . . . [Years later] at Aberystwyth, Rees . . . [wrote] down all that he knew about Burgess, and sent the manuscript to the Sunday newspaper, The People. . . . [This was not] the sort of publication considered suitable for a man of high academic position to write for. The outcry against Mr. Rees in the University College was tremendous, and he resigned." (Christian Science Monitor)

"'A Chapter of Accidents' very definitely should not be used as a primer on the complex Burgess-Maclean-Philby triangle which rocked the inner stability of several postwar British administrations, and had severe repercussions abroad as well. It does, however, provide a personal glimpse into the person of Burgess through his drinking, and his sexual and philosophical intemperances, which Rees reports with a detached fascination. Here was a man who was virtually asking to be exposed, but apparently no one could ever make the obvious connection. [This book] serves as neither a provocative exposé nor a powerful autobiography." D. W. Given

Best Sell 32:34 Ap 15 '72 300w

"This is one of the saddest, most bewildering, and at times most beautifully written books that I have read. Its chapter on the golden years at Oxford between the wars is exquisite. . . . What makes [it] so extraordinary a book is that, although Mr. Rees is a man of unimpeachable honor and blameless life, a man of great literary elegance and intellectual distinction, his ruin was consummated entirely by himself." Harold Hobson

Christian Science Monitor p10 Ap 13 '72 750w

Economist 242:51 F 12 '72 800w

"As a picture of Guy Burgess [this book] is a brilliant success: as an explanation of the author's behaviour before and after the crisis it is a broken-backed failure. . . . [Why] does he spoil the marvellous story by so much special pleading? To read it only deepens the impression that Burgess is a powerful character who exerts an influence from the grave. But these are all old men's worries. For a generation which is not concerned with what really happened more than 20 years ago, A Chapter of Accidents provides a brilliantly readable account of what is still an unsolved mystery. Treated as a novella—fiction based on fact—it is without doubt a minor masterpiece." Richard Crossman

New Statesman 83:242 F 25 '72 1750w

"[This] curious tale, interesting in itself and even beyond . . . suggests something about the nature of the English Establishment—how it defuses . . . potentially explosive situations, and how it puts down an outsider (even when he is only as far removed as to be a Welshman). . . . At the end . . . it is not the Communist defector but his anti-Communist friend who emerges as the sad and apologetic figure: . . . an outsider allowed to watch an insider going grandly to pieces. . . . [But neither man] is made entirely comprehensible in his motives and behavior . . . they are described here. . . . One can only be grateful that now, 15 years later, [Rees] should have brought to light his curious friendship with Burgess and the world in which it flourished." Peter Stansky

REES, GORONWY—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 18 '72 1550w
 TLS p141 F 11 '72 4800w

REES, ROBERT A., ed. Fifteen American authors before 1900; bibliographic essays on research and criticism; ed. by Robert A. Rees and Earl N. Harbert. 442p $12.50 Univ. of Wis. press

810.9 American literature—History and criticism. Authors. American
 ISBN 0-299-05910-3 LC 77-157395

"The editors here assemble 17 critical bibliographical essays—evaluating editions, other bibliographies, manuscripts and letters, biographies, and criticism—on the following: Henry Adams, Bryant, Cooper, Stephen Crane, Dickinson, Edwards, Franklin, Holmes, Howells, Irving, Longfellow, Lowell, Norris, Taylor, Whittier, the literature of the Old South." (Library J) Index.

"A key to abbreviations (of the titles of periodicals and important works of reference), notes on contributors, and an index of proper names are useful. . . . Each essay is selective, not comprehensive. . . . The book offers an up-to-date digest of essential scholarly information and a dependable starting-point for further research."

Choice 9:494 Je '72 180w

"The present volume is a valuable addition to the bibliography of Americana. . . . Each of the essays is written by a distinguished scholar in the field; and the evaluations effectively separate the significant from the derivative or shoddy. . . . Moreover, the two essays on the literature of the South (by C. Hugh Holman and Louis D. Rubin) fill an obvious void in many of the topical bibliographies." B. C. Bach

Library J 97:670 F 15 '72 190w

REEVES, DONALD. Notes of a processed brother. 480p $8.95 Pantheon bks.

B or 92 Students—New York (City)—Political activity. Negroes—Education
 ISBN 0-394-47101-6 LC 75-162564

This is the autobiography of the "young black man who led the 1970 fight against the New York City Board of Education for a high school students' Bill of Rights." (Publisher's note)

"[This] is a silly, irresponsible book. Donald Reeves seems to have got through high school without learning much about scientific thinking. . . . It is very hard to say what the book is about. If it is simply an autobiography of a young man who had to grow up in a very tough environment, we could do without all the political harangues. If it is supposed to be a serious analysis of the socio-political structure of schools (which it isn't), we could do without Donald's compulsive need to share the details of his sex life with us in the dirtiest language he can summon. The work is the stream-of-consciousness kind of thing sometimes produced by an undisciplined writer who has not yet learned that not every twitch of his cerebrum or libido is of universal interest." R. B. Nordberg

Best Sell 31:489 F 1 '72 550w

"Reeve's book . . . is not about high school so much as about himself. The genre is not that of the treatise, the exposé, or even the polemic. Rather [it] is a Bildungsroman: the shaping, through circumstances and self-discipline, of an esprit fort. . . . 'This book is about a learning experience,' Reeves concludes. Like any true learning experience, it is not neat. The book grunts, stammers, heaves; lurches toward insight only to slump into cliché; flashes ugly shards of hate and violence, then stuns with fellow-feeling. That such a rich self-revelation could be written by a 17-year-old is astonishing. It is hardly surprising that the mind and heart revealed here are still inchoate: passionately, sometimes crazily, groping towards finer possibilities of genuine sanity than earlier generations aspired to." Ronald Gross

Book World p4 Ja 30 '72 700w

Choice 9:890 S '72 110w

Reviewed by A. B. Masters

Library J 96:4210 D 15 '71 100w [YA]

Reviewed by H. R. Weiner

Library J 97:1425 Ap 15 '72 150w

"Nothing I have recently read about a social movement in process has so thoroughly evoked the evolution of political consciousness and the frustration of actually trying to make concrete change in America. And Reeves's achievement is that for the most part he has evoked his reality by speaking matter-of-factly, letting the history tell itself in raw detail. However, the narrative is not fully successful. For one thing, Reeves does not reflect deeply enough on his own leadership role. He understands, for example, how mass media create movement stars, but not why he so easily succumbed. The book is probably too long by a third." Todd Gitlin

Nation 214:470 Ap 10 '72 550w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Rev of Books 18:21 My 4 '72 1450w

N Y Times Bk R p[28] My 21 '72 240w

"The black militants grab what suits them from their prophets without reckoning the contradictions. Like many angry blacks, Don Reeves writes well of his own personal struggle and badly of history at large, ascribing to intentional repression much human inertia and incompetence. We see this in most revolutionary writing: a calcification of human process into rhetorical attitudes, denying what Yeats called the 'complexities of mire or blood.' A pity: Br'er Rabbit, at least, would not have needed Fanon to tell him what the brier patch was like. Still, Reeves is young and incredibly able." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:80 Ja 31 '72 360w

REEVES, JAMES. How the moon began; a folk tale from Grimm; adapted; ill. by Edward Ardizzone. unp $4.95; lib bdg $4.89 Abelard-Schuman

398.2 Folklore—Juvenile literature
 ISBN 0-200-71862-2; 0-200-71867-3 (lib bdg)
 LC 72-169201

In this adaptation of the folktale English setting and terminology are provided. "Ages six to eleven." (Sat R)

"A humorously macabre tale which demonstrates how primitive myth blended with medieval attitudes in the evolution of the folklore tradition. . . . The grayed-pastel, cross-hatched illustrations complement the text by evoking—particularly in the climactic dance of the dead—an atmosphere which is appropriately gothic but never grisly." M. M. B.

Horn Bk 48:464 O '72 300w

Reviewed by David Gentleman

New Statesman 82:664 N 12 '71 30w

"The story is a little whimsical and a little eerie, the kind of story worth telling. A brief appearance by a host of the dead dancing on their graves provides the eerie sequence, and why not? A story with the moon as protagonist should have a touch of mystery. Edward Ardizzone's illustrations are a fine accompaniment to the unwinding of the plot. . . . They capture moods that are mysterious or humorous and hold them up before us. . . . This is not a book for the most literal-minded child you know. But if you are acquainted with someone between the years of six and ten who has a rather imaginative compartment in his head, ask him to read it to you. You might like it. And so might an eleven-year-old I know." Karla Kushin

Sat R 55:83 O 14 '72 350w

"An odd story, told and illustrated in a way that highlights admirably the weird interaction of human avarice and mysterious supernatural activity which is its main thread."

TLS p1514 D 11 '71 100w

REEVES, PASCHAL, ed. Thomas Wolfe and the glass of time. See Thomas Wolfe and the glass of time

REGAN, DONALD T. A view from the Street. 220p $7.95 New Am. lib.

332.6 Wall Street. Stock exchange
 LC 77-185020

This book deals with what "happened on Wall Street in 1970, and how the Street made its remarkable recovery in 1971." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

Best Sell 32:219 Ag 1 '72 50w

"Regan's retelling of the . . . revolutionary changes [on Wall Street] has its own distinctive charm, as well as a constructive justification. . . . As a frequent spokesman for brokerage and underwriting interests, Mr. Regan writes not only knowledgeably—which is to be expected—but also with an engaging forcefulness and arresting air of concern. This is not a book rich with anecdotes, though references to the way Merrill Lynch does its business carry a special ring of authority. Nor are there any surprising revelations. . . . A look at [his] format shows that he intends his book to be read (and understood) by an audience far beyond the securities industry itself." F. H. G. Christian Science Monitor p15 My 10 '72 600w

"[This] book is . . . informal [and] easy-to-read. . . . An interesting feature is the use of the symbol G after a word or phrase to indicate that a definition appears in the glossary. Recommended." J. B. Woy Library J 97:1427 Ap 15 '72 140w

"[Regan] writes in general 'industry' terms, rather than providing revelations based on either company or personal experience. Much of his book appears gleaned from long, and doubtless diligent, service on industry and Government committees grappling with technical problems during his 26-year career with Merrill Lynch." Kenneth Koyen N Y Times Bk R p10 O 1 '72 230w

REGNIERS, BEATRICE SCHENK DE. See De Regniers B. S.

REGUSH, NICHOLAS M. The drug addiction business; a denunciation of the dehumanizing politics and practices of the so-called experts. 141p il $4.95 Dial press

362.2 Narcotic habit
LC 70-163592

The author "blames sociology with its 'politically oppressive behavior' for labeling and stigmatizing the addict—for turning him into a freak. He indicts the average sociologist and the self-proclaimed drug 'expert' for selling out to the demands of a society in which the definition of 'normal' is pre-determined and where it becomes advantageous to sustain the addict population. Thus, the supposed cures that are offered the addict are, Regush believes, really geared to aggrandize the rehabilitator." (Library J)

"A brief, unstructured book. . . . The author concludes with several recommendations, the most controversial being the wide use of methadone maintenance. But this treatment, he says, should be considered only a stop-gap solution until an 'ultimate' cure such as a long-lasting narcotic 'antagonist' can be developed." S. G. Sawyer

Library J 97:893 Mr 1 '72 130w

"An angry, even railing assault on the drug-addiction establishment. . . . Mr. Regush's perspective is that of the radical sociologist; he adds a whiff of the current critiques of the welfare system that describes it as a device for cowering the poor. There is much to be said for Mr. Regush's tirade and his criticism of official definitions of what a drug addict is; his style has a McLuhanesque quality, with short sub-chapters interspersed with direct quotes from newspapers, manuals, etc. However, the book would have benefited from a more linear, logical argument."

N Y Times Bk R p39 Mr 12 '72 90w

REICH, WILHELM. The invasion of compulsory sex-morality. 215p $10; pa $3.45 Farrar, Straus

176 Sexual ethics
SBN 374-1-7707-4 LC 70-164538

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Charles Dollen
Best Sell 31:464 Ja 15 '72 250w

Reviewed by Anthony Storr
Book World p8 Ja 23 '72 750w
Choice 9:285 Ap '72 200w

REICH, WILLI. Schoenberg; a critical biography; tr. by Leo Black. 268p il $12.50 Praeger

780 Schönberg, Arnold
LC 73-134527

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1592 F '72 170w

Reviewed by Louis Snyder
Christian Science Monitor p10 Mr 2 '72 700w

Reviewed by Charles Rosen
N Y Times Bk R p3 Ja 2 '72 800w

REICHE, REIMUT. Sexuality and class struggle [tr. by Susan Bennett]. 175p $6.95 Praeger

301.41 Sex. Moral conditions
LC 74-163096

Reiche argues "that sex liberation—broadly understood to include contraception, sex education, early marriage, and sex-stimulating advertising and fashion, as well as pornography, promiscuity, group sex, and homosexuality—weakens revolutionary political force; allows the capitalistic establishment . . . [to supply] pseudo-satisfactions for created consumer needs; and induces people to 'work off' the discontent in their lives by indulgence. The most notable example [he asserts] is Sweden, 'the capitalist welfare state par excellence,' with its extreme sex emancipation." (Choice)

"The general reader will encounter heavy seas. . . . All but the most dogged theoreticians of psychoanalytic or Marxist persuasions will abandon ship early on."

Choice 8:1653 F '72 100w

"This book was evidently intended by the author . . . as a contribution to 'inner party' discussion on the theory and practice of the German avant-garde radical youth movement of the 1960's and it is unlikely to evoke much interest outside of similar circles in the United States. Essentially, despite the rather imposing title, the book is not much more than a (sometimes strainedly critical) gloss on some of the ideas of Freud, Marcuse, W. Reich, and Marx, and contains very little that anyone with even a superficial familiarity with the works of these men and with popular contemporary sociological and psychological critiques of the life of youth in modern society would not already know." L. S. Kaplan

Library J 96:2785 S 15 '71 200w

"[In the original German version of his book] the author, who was one of the leaders of the 'anti-authoritarian' student movement in Germany . . . [accepted] Wilhelm Reich's demand for genital primacy, and seemed quite unaware of the essentially reformist nature of a demand for the liberation of sexuality from the anal and oral entanglements characteristic of bourgeois society. He had not yet discovered . . . that genital primacy, too, constituted a form of authoritarianism. . . . In a charmingly written preface and postscript to the English edition, Reiche admits this criticism and explains its reasons through self-analysis, practising a form of personal dialectics that reveals a much more human personality than the awesome intellectual brilliance of the original book."

TLS p26 Ja 8 '71 600w

REICHEL-DOLMATOFF, GERARDO. Amazonian cosmos; the sexual and religious symbolism of the Tukano Indians. 290p il $12 Univ. of Chicago press

980.3 Indians of South America—Religion and mythology. Indians of South America—Colombia. Tukano Indians. Symbolism. Ethnology

ISBN 0-226-70731-8 LC 73-133491

This is an account of the "life-way of the Desana, a remote Amazonian tribe. From the mythology and symbol system of the group, a view of the total cultural web, integrating biology and environment with social structure, emerges." (Library J)

"Smoothly translated from Spanish by Reichel-Dolmatoff from his Desana: simbolismo de los Indios Tukano de Vaupes (1968), this book goes well beyond the usual narrow limits of the more standard descriptive ethnological work. . . . Initially the author worked with a single informant, an acculturated Desana native male, to compile and reveal the interrelated systems of symbolism, cosmology, and social behavior. Ethnolinguistic analysis and mythological interpretation provide the basic means employed to perceive these relationships. . . . Generalizations and constructs of Desana social behavior arrived at from these methods were then checked extensively in the field by the author. . . . [He] presents us with both a remarkable methodology and a unique model of tropical native socio-ecological conceptualization."

REICHEL-DOLMATOFF, GERARDO—Cont.

Choice 8:618 Je '71 240w

"This book is based on field studies and is endorsed by Claude Lévi-Strauss."

Christian Century 88:476 Ap 14 '71 30w

"This is an exceptionally fine book. . . . [It] represents ethnoanthropology at the height of its imaginative and interpretive power. Highly recommended not only for linguists, folklorists, and anthropologists, but also for all those who are interested in knowing how other societies integrate their culture with their environment in a meaningful way." Eve Spangler

Library J 96:1631 My 1 '71 130w

"[This study] may not be definitive but it is an imaginative and detailed investigation of an exotic system of thought which turns out to have a most sophisticated symbolic logic of its own. Above all, it gives us the best insight yet available into the sort of people the Amazonian Indians are—or should one already say 'were?'"

David Maybury-Lewis

N Y Times Bk R p19 Ag 8 '71 1550w

REID, CLYDE. Celebrate the temporary: il. by Patricia Collins. 89p $3.95 Harper

248 Behavior

ISBN 0-06-066817-2 LC 73-160643

"Based on the author's seminary teaching and workshop experience, this basically religious book exhorts readers to elevate themselves and revel in small things so the larger can be appreciated: 'Celebrate the simple things/Enjoy the butterfly/Embrace the snow/Run with the ocean/Delight in the trees.' A large part of the book is hand lettered with line drawings." (Library J) Bibliography.

"To celebrate the temporary is to lie in bed when you first wake up, watching the sun come through the window, the reflections on the ceiling, the colors in the room and thanking God for life. Well, I live in midtown Manhattan and all four of my windows open onto brick walls. . . . When I first read the above statement I felt that the author was whistling his tune for ears other than mine. On second thought, however, it is precisely to hurried, harried people that Clyde Reid addresses his book. He wants us to slow down, lose our minds and literally come to our senses. . . . He recommends exercises—deep breathing, some yoga positions, quiet walks and so on—to help create and foster these attitudes. The exercises are aids and not complete remedies and will, no doubt, strike some people as bizarre. Perhaps they are silly. But no sillier than . . . drowning pain in alcohol or burying it under a blanket of drugs. . . . It's a pity more people won't have an ear for what he is saying." T. J. O'Connell

America 126:522 My 13 '72 500w

"The ideas are interesting, possible and worth trying. Kids looking for another way may find some answers here." Regina Minudri

Library J 97:2248 Je 15 '72 80w [YA]

REID, J. C. Bucks and bruisers; Pierce Egan and Regency England. 253p il pl $9.25 Routledge

B or 92 Egan, Pierce. England—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-7100-6967-7 LC 72-596075

This is an account of the life and career of the writer Pierce Egan who made his name with 'Boxiana', a history of pugilism. His "reputation was at its height during the Regency, with his descriptions of bare-fisted fights and, later, his picaresque account of the adventures of Tom and Jerry in his Life in London." (Economist) Bibliography.

"It should surprise no one to learn that this critical biography is the first book-length study of Pierce Egan the Elder. After reading it one wonders if such a study was necessary. . . . From a variety of documents, Reid is able to add some information about Egan's life, but much of the work is speculation. He summarizes and describes the literature, but offers little real criticism; the discussions of influence are, at best, dubious. . . . There is some interesting information about low-life (especially pugilism) and the language of low-life in Regency England, but hardly enough to make this an important source book. It is illustrated with plates by the Cruikshanks, Sharples, and Pierce Egan, Jr."

Choice 9:216 Ap '72 180w

Economist 239:60 Ap 24 '71 490w

"The title of this book is indeed worthy of Pierce Egan himself but, lest anyone should be disappointed, it should be explained that it is a well-composed and well-argued study of that elusive and astonishingly successful writer. . . . Reid sets out to discover the merits of Egan as writer and indeed to discover the man himself. . . . But we gain the impression that whatever [Egan's] merits as a writer our knowledge about him is—and must remain—sketchy. We admire Mr. Reid's assiduity in trying to find out something about him by writing to all the Egan's in the London telephone directory but this, alas, reaped no harvest whatever."

TLs p762 Jl 2 '71 650w

REID, JOHN PHILLIP. A law of blood; the primitive law of the Cherokee nation. 340p $10 N.Y. univ. press

347 Law. Cherokee. Cherokee Indians
LC 72-90901

This "is a study of Cherokee government and law before the tribe adopted a written constitution in 1827. It explains the . . . tribe's sustained, strong sense of nation, of unity, functioning in a loose confederation 'without coercive national government . . . [or] any institutionalized authority to make and enforce law.'" (J Am Hist)

"If this work is any single thing, it is an unsystematic description of eighteenth century Cherokee social organization and a recounting of some reflections of that organization in sundry Cherokee political behavior during that century. As a study of organization the book is poor mainly because the author has little familiarity with organizational studies generally, thus no sure 'feel' for structural data and its systematic analysis. As a historical study the book is poor, because, astonishingly, the author treats this hundred year period of upheaval from first European contact up to Removal as if Cherokee organization remained unchanged throughout." F. O. Gearing

Am Anthropol 73:1326 D '71 550w

"The provocative mysteries of ancient Cherokee lifeways are exposed by . . . Reid [who] has applied the analytical scheme and vernacular of legal anthropology to Cherokee institutions. His work provides fresh understanding of the remarkable Cherokee propensity for law. . . . [This study] departs from the ethnographic scheme of analysis and . . . contains daring and convincing interpretations of the function and practice of Cherokee institutions." A. M. Gibson

J Am Hist 58:1010 Mr '72 450w

REID, MALCOLM. The shouting signpainters; a literary and political account of Quebec revolutionary nationalism. 315p $8.95 Monthly review

323.1 Quebec (Province)—History—Autonomy and independence movements. French Canadians. French language
SBN 85345-154-0 LC 75-158922

This book describes the "separatist-socialist writers, publishers, poets, and chansonniers gathered around parti pris magazine. Reid explains and translates into English expressions of this group's mood of political, social, and sexual liberation. Part of his analysis deals with the efforts of some writers to write in the 'joual' dialect in order to achieve rapport between themselves and the Quebec working class." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"What annoyed me most in Reid's book was that the anecdotes which make up a large proportion of the total were often very thin in content, digressed frequently, and were sometimes padded. The author . . . has a lot to say about the French language as it is spoken and written in Quebec. . . . Unfortunately, . . . he often errs. Nowhere does he define joual precisely, and this leads him to confuse [it] . . . with le franco-canadien or le québécois. . . . [His book] also suffers from too frequent unclarity and faultiness in sentence structure, with an overabundance of gallicisms. . . . To conclude, it seems to me that a synthesis of the rôle and present significance of Parti pris still remains to be done." Ben Shek

Canadian Forum 52:40 D '72 850w

"This book will be of immense value to all who wish to understand the new generation of [separatists in Quebec]. . . . The ultimate impact of this . . . minority remains to be seen; but for the present, Reid has illuminated an important aspect of the ferment that exists within Canada." J. A. Boudreau

Library J 97:2408 J1 '72 100w

"[This passionately partisan] history of radical separatism (or, as it seems to prefer to call itself, nationalism) in French Canada . . . manages for the most part to avoid the jargon . . . characteristic of such movements today. . . . Reid focuses primarily on the group that calls itself (always without capitals) parti pris and that has made its presence felt through a magazine, a publishing house and a political-action club, all of them called parti pris. . . . What concerns Reid, especially, is the literary-linguistic-political aspect of the struggle and the efficiency of literature and language in the achievement of national liberation. . . . [He] has done an excellent job of penetrating far below the surface of the movement." C. L. Markmann

Nation 215:24 J1 10 '72 1500w

"Mr Reid copes ably with the problem of presenting both parti pris and the complex and little-known social and political context which produced it. In the four main chapters, he gives us, largely verbatim, reports of conversations he had with his writer friends. It is the varied, discursive nature of these conversations, though Mr Reid knows what to ask and when, which makes it possible for him, almost incidentally, to give a well-rounded picture of the opposition in Quebec in the 1960s to 'Cité libre' federalism on the one hand and the 'révolution tranquille' on the other."

TLS p1307 N '72 160w

REID, WILLIAM. Out of the silence; phot. by Adelaide De Menil; pub. for the Amon Carter mus., Fort Worth. 120p $7.95 Outerbridge & Dienstfrey

732 Indians of North America—Art
ISBN 0-87690-043-0 LC 74-137008

This book contains photographs of totem poles made by the Indians of The North West Pacific Coast. They are shown decaying in the forests of British Columbia and Alaska.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 228:153 N 1 '71 30w

"A highly specialized work dealing with wood carving by the Indians of the Pacific Northwest; there was not a great deal for photographer Adelaide DeMenil to go on, but she made the most of her material—this is creative photography."

Best Sell 31:440 Ja 1 '72 50w

"Outstanding photographs and a lyrical narrative unite here to recapture the vision of those long-ago totem pole carvers of the Pacific Northwest. . . . The beauty of the carvings, the stark realism of the sculpture will lead young adults to appreciate the people who made them as well as the magnificent giants themselves which . . . covered by silence . . . [now] return to the forest that gave them birth—falling, but noble in decline." Carol Tefft

Library J 97:296 Ja 15 '72 80w [YA]

"Since the literature on totem poles is not vast, collections on Indians and Indian art should probably consider this." S. A. Haffner

Library J 97:513 F 1 '72 100w

"The Haida sculptor William Reid's prose-poem accompaniment to the wonderfully evocative photos . . . oscillates unsatisfactorily between poetry and ethnography while being too short to do justice to either. It is moving, however." Nathaniel Tarn

N Y Times Bk R p7 D 12 '71 250w

Va Q R 48:lxiv spring '72 100w

REIGSTAD, PAUL. Rølvaag; his life and art. 160p pl $8.50 Univ. of Neb. press

819 Rølvaag, Ole Edvart
ISBN 0-8032-0803-0 LC 70-175804

This study is concerned "with Rølvaag the novelist, rather than with Rølvaag the historian or prophet of acculturation," and it is intended to serve both as an introduction to the novels and as a stimulus for continuing appraisal of Rølvaag's achievement. The novels are examined in a biographical context which reveals the forces and influences which shaped his artistic development." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The present work is literary analysis and criticism of all Rølvaag's novels by a professor of English, along with the biographical details pertaining to that work. It relates the experiences of the Norwegian immigrant to South Dakota, already strongly influenced by Ibsen, to the translation of those experiences into fiction dealing with the struggles of men and women of Norwegian culture and ideals on the Western prairies. It makes interesting reading both as literary criticism and as a human document."

Choice 9:1132 N '72 130w

"The book is a thorough critical study; and Reigstad draws on a wealth of unpublished materials (especially letters) and also on the entire canon of primary and secondary sources. Chapter 1, which deals with Rølvaag's first 20 years in Norway, and Chapter 2, which tells of his struggle for education and emigration to America, are too brief to contribute much that is new; but the succeeding four chapters—dealing with his artistic development—are thorough and well documented." B. C. Bach

Library J 97:2843 S 15 '72 120w

REIK, THEODOR. Insights. See Freeman, E.

REILLY, ALAYNE P. America in contemporary Soviet literature. 217p $8.95 N.Y. univ. press

891.7 Russian literature—History and criticism
ISBN 8147-7350-8 LC 74-145513

The author points to "a new image of America in the writing of such authors as Voznesensky, Nekrasov, Kataev, and Yevtushenko. The party-dictated picture . . . was replaced by these authors' more personal impressions of the land and its people. Reilly examines and quotes . . . from the selected works of these four writers and compares their work with the writings of earlier travelers to America—Mayakovsky, Pilnyak, and Ilf and Petrov." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Reilly is enthusiastic and scholarly in her analyses and documentation of these writers' works, but much is, of course, left out."

Choice 8:1334 D '71 180w

"Reilly writes a clear, easy prose, making her argument accessible to general readers as well as to scholars. Recommended for all academic and large public libraries." S. A. Haffner

Library J 96:2646 S 1 '71 120w

REILLY, R. J. Romantic religion; a study of Barfield, Lewis, Williams and Tolkien. 249p $9 Univ. of Ga. press

820.9 Religion in literature. Romanticism
ISBN 0-8203-0267-8 LC 70-145886

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1330 D '71 170w

Reviewed by Sister M. F. Slattery
J Aesthetics 30:406 spring '72 270w

Reviewed by J. C. Lobdell
Nat R 24:292 Mr 17 '72 380w

Va Q R 48:lxvii spring '72 110w

REIMER, EVERETT. School is dead: alternatives in education. 215p $5.95 Doubleday

370.1 Education—U.S.
LC 78-157619

The author "contends that schools are an instrument designed by society primarily to keep people under control. They perform four functions. The first is custodial care. . . . The second is the sorting of young people into the social slots they will occupy in adult life. The third is indoctrination with the values of society—conformity and meritocracy. . . . The fourth function . . . that of education, occurs in spite of and not because of school. The author . . . [envision]s an ideal society founded on lowered consumption . . . sharing, and conserving." (Library J)

REIMER, EVERETT—Continued

"[The book] reveals some excellent thoughts and criticisms with which schools should be dealing."

Choice 9:261 Ap '72 100w

"Reimer, who is currently the director of the annual international seminars at Ivan Illich's Cuernavaca center, says that his book 'is the result of a conversation with Ivan Illich that has continued for fifteen years.' He is eloquent in his argument that the structure of society that schools serve is not in itself viable; but he is less convincing in his 'alternatives in education.'" Marian Wozen-craft

Library J 96:3320 O 15 '71 150w

"The critique of the schools and society that Reimer presents is familiar. He finds little about which to cheer. Schools are costly and inefficient, he says, and provide support for a technological society. By perpetuating myths of equal opportunity and progress, they bolster belief in a [society] . . . dedicated to competitive consumption, and maintain the illusion 'that as long as one keeps climbing all roads lead to the top'. . . . What are Reimer's solutions? The heart of his proposals beats in a strange technological process he calls a network system, in which schools would be replaced by informational records, skill models, peer matching, and educators. . . . How would the system be run and financed? Reimer passes over these questions as though he were walking on hot coals. . . . [What he] has prescribed through his network system seem regrettably inadequate as solutions." Jeck Fields

Sat R 55:64 Ja 15 '72 1200w

Reviewed by David Rogers

Teach Col Rec 74:108 S '72 1600w

REINMUTH, HOWARD S., ed. Early Stuart studies. See Early Stuart studies

REISMAN, WILLIAM MICHAEL. Nullity and revision; the review and enforcement of international judgments and awards. 900p $25 Yale univ. press

341 International law

ISBN 0-300-01219-5 LC 76-99837

The author examines "the processes of international arbitration and international courts, focusing on the process of 'review' which results when an award or decision is claimed to be null by one of the parties or by third parties. For him review is a flexible term which can be as narrow as an appeal heard by a higher court, or as broad as criticism by the media or by influential individuals. He sees [it] as a democratizing function which maximizes the effectiveness and strengthens the authority of arbitral and judicial decisions." (Library J)

Reviewed by C. H. McLaughlin

Am Pol Sci R 66:685 Je '72 1200w

"Reisman does not simply employ the case approach of analysis but rather presents the reader with several theoretical constructs with which he explores the entire process of arbitration. The material is quite technical and specialized and therefore would have limited readership at the undergraduate level. Highly recommended for graduate and law school libraries."

Choice 8:1645 F '72 70w

"Yale law professor Reisman's . . . step-by-step examination of the arbitral process, from the compromis (agreement to arbitrate) through the adjudicatory process, to the award, and finally to the enforcement or review of the award, is coupled with thoughtful criticism and analysis. His elaboration of the various bases for claims of nullity (fraud, essential error, mistake, new facts, excess de pouvoir is quite refined, considerably more precise than international courts or arbitral commissions have cared to be. Regrettably, the beginning and certain later sections of the book seem unnecessarily abstract and laden with social science jargon. The writing otherwise is lucid, though he naturally includes many technical legal terms. Recommended for law libraries and other libraries stressing international relations and law." O. J. Werner

Library J 96:1630 My 1 '71 230w

REISS, ALBERT J. The police and the public. by Albert J. Reiss, Jr. 228p $7.95 Yale univ. press

363.2 Police—U.S. Law enforcement

ISBN 0-300-01381-7 LC 78-158143

In this study of police in Boston, Chicago, Detroit, and Washington, D.C., the author is concerned with the "extent of police misconduct and [gives an] analysis of why it exists." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Gilbert Geis

Ann Am Acad 401:212 My '72 450w

"The study is empirically significant with ■ vast scope and . . . [is] a necessary acquisition to all college and university libraries."

Choice 8:1653 F '72 190w

"Reiss evaluates various proposals for improving the operation of police departments, including systems for auditing performance and the establishment of independent agencies to receive and investigate complaints about police work. An indispensable book for all who are interested in understanding police behavior and the role of the police in modern society." William Silverman

Library J 97:182 Ja 15 '72 210w

"[The author's] findings are based on the reports of . . . law students, teachers on their summer vacation and several policemen—who were instructed to go out with policemen and record exactly what occurred every time they came in contact with citizens. . . . Some of the findings that emerge from [this report] will shock the average reader. Some of the other findings will suggest the vast difference between the reality of police work and the public picture of it painted by hypocritical politicians, self-serving policemen and romantic intellectuals entranced with the violent power of the police and detectives. Putting aside the turgid prose favored by sociologists and some mad-deningly obscure tables, this is a superb book which cuts closer to the bone of truth about the police in America than any book I have read. It attacks and destroys a number of favorite police myths." David Burnham

N Y Times Bk ■ p5 N 28 '71 1950w

"[This] excellent yet disappointing book [is] based on eight years of competent, reliable study of the big city police work. . . . A lot of the research was done by police observers assembled for the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice. Pieces of the Reiss findings have surfaced in the Commission's 1967 report, its task force papers, and several anthologies and scholarly journals. Although this book, originally delivered as the Terry Lectures at Yale (where Reiss teaches sociology), would blend, distill, and enlarge upon these published findings, unfortunately, it is too elliptical. The author fails to elaborate several striking points and consequently fails to make the research easily accessible." Ralph Whitehead

Sat R 54:42 D 4 '71 220w

REISS, JOHANNA. The upstairs room. 196p $4.50 Crowell

B or 92 World War, 1939-1945—Jews—Juvenile literature. Netherlands—History—German occupation, 1940-1945—Juvenile literature. Jews in the Netherlands—Juvenile literature

ISBN 0-690-85127-8 LC 77-187940

This is an account "of the author's own experiences as a child in Nazi-occupied Holland during World War II. In danger for her lives because they are Jewish, the De Leeuw family is forced to split up, and Annie and her older sister, Sini, are hidden for several years in the upstairs bedroom of a Christian family's farmhouse. What it means never to go out, to see another child one day of the year as a dangerous treat on your birthday, and the horror of finding German soldiers are to be stationed elsewhere in the farmhouse—these are . . . a few of the events in this [story]. . . . Ages nine to thirteen." (Commonweal)

"[This is a story] of courage and kindness."

E. M. Graves

Commonweal 97:158 N 17 '72 120w

"Reiss' book, written in a matter-of-fact, straightforward style, offers believable characterizations of unremarkable people who survived, if not thrived, and displayed an adaptability and generosity probably beyond their own expectations." Diane Gersoni-Stavn
Library J 97:4074 D 15 '72 280w

"This admirable account is as important in every aspect as the one bequeathed to us by Anne Frank [Diary of a Young Girl, BRD 1952]. Annie's ambivalent relationships with her father, her sister, the family that sheltered her, her discovery of concentration camp horror—we laugh with her and cry with her. With her we await D-Day and liberation, sharing her anxieties and her dreams. In the end, we are grateful to fate for having spared a child who can reminisce with neither hate nor bitterness but a kind of gentleness that leaves us with a lump in our throats." Elie Wiesel
■ Y Times Bk R pt 2, p3 N 5 '72 200w

REITLINGER, GERALD. The economics of taste; v3. The art market in the 1960s. 695p $22.50 Humanities press

708 Paintings. Art objects. Collectors and collecting
SBN 214-65131-2

"Volumes 1 and 2 of The Economics of Taste [BRD 1965] were divided between the pictures and the objets d'art sold in the 200 years before 1960. Volume 3 lists both the pictures and the objets d'art for which...large sums of money [were spent] in the 1960's." (Library J)

"What Mr. Reitlinger describes as the 'perniciously misleading' peddling of world records has had its effect; most people believe that art has proved and is proving an excellent investment. . . . Reitlinger does not altogether destroy this theory, but he gives it a rough handling. Throughout his book, . . . he is at pains to point out that in real terms many artists now fail to command the sort of prices paid for their stuff at the turn of the century. . . . But for all the damage Mr. Reitlinger does to the myth of soaring art prices, his book contains specific examples that seem to reinforce it."

Economist 237:51 D 5 '70 650w

"Among collectors who followed the fashion in the decade there were some who believed they were investing, and for them here are the prices obtained in the auction galleries and in a few private transactions. The speculator in art would do well to read the perceptive introduction. Reitlinger provides for all the artists and the categories an informative and occasionally barbed commentary which should be studied by lecturers on art appreciation. . . . Recommended for all art collections." Paul von Khrum
Library J 96:1354 Ap 15 '71 170w

"By now the reader knows what to expect from this author's treatment of the art market—a vast body of information which, when sifted and evaluated, is of the greatest value to fellow students of the subject; a cool look at modern art; and a certain indifference to the correct spelling of names. Mr. Reitlinger is no dry-as-dust compiler and he never makes any secret about his opinions, for he is a strong and attractive nonconformist. . . . In this volume, which can be used independently of its predecessors, he makes the point that the true peak of the art market occurred many years ago, in about 1912. . . . This statement was well worth making and he provides evidence to support his contention."

TLS p134 Ja 29 '71 550w

REMARQUE, ERICH MARIA. Shadows in paradise; tr. by Ralph Manheim. 305p $6.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-181480-5 LC 79-174513

This novel concerns the experiences of World War II refugees in the United States. The narrator-hero Robert "Ross has a false name from a dead man's passport, a false identity as an art expert from months spent hiding in a museum. In New York during the closing months of World War II, he is one of the few non-Jews among a group of refugees. A job with a clever, superficial art dealer introduces him to the rich dilettante collector and to . . . Hollywood. His guilt, despair, and failure to establish a real relationship with his mistress culminate in final acceptance that the crime of the Nazi brutes has distorted Western culture beyond any hope of return to stability." (Library J) Originally published in Germany.

"With this novel Remarque, who died in 1970, has not helped his reputation as a significant writer. . . . [His] book drags heavily and seems almost interminable. Relatively little action occurs, not one character in the novel arouses particular interest, and the . . . dialogue [is] for the most part repetitious, trivial, and tedious." P. A. Doyle
Best Sell 31:531 Mr 1 '72 360w

Reviewed by R. W. Haney
Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72 550w

Reviewed by Michael O'Malley
Critic 30:80 My '72 1500w

"Always a superb storyteller, Remarque threw into . . . [this] book the remnants of his experiences in flight from the Nazis [and] his bitterness as a critic of the Teutonic personality and soul. . . . Remarque insists on an anguished concern for individual human character." Jeanne Lopez
Library J 97:516 F 1 '72 150w

"Remarque's last novel . . . is basically plotless, a nostalgic look—if nostalgia can be touched with bitterness—at refugee life in New York City during the early Forties. Remarque himself experienced such an episode, and the novel is best when it simply reflects the local color of the period: the seedy lobbies of Time Square hotels, the garrulous reunions over goulash at the apartment of a prosperous refugee, the funerals of friends who survived Hitler's Germany only to die of cancer or suicide in the States. . . . Remarque's refugees are people who have extinguished themselves in their effort to keep alive. They have succeeded in making it to 'paradise,' to America, and in the process have become shells or caricatures of their former selves. The real worth of [this novel] is found in this gallery of burnt-out cases. The romantic tales the author sometimes surrounds them with are the thinnest sort of frames." D. W. McCullough
Sat R 55:78 F 26 '72 500w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Time 99:84 F 7 '72 650w

REMINGTON, ROBIN ALISON. The Warsaw pact; case studies in Communist conflict resolution. (Stud. in communism, revisionism and revolution) 268p il $10 MIT press

355.03 Warsaw Treaty Organization
ISBN 0-262-18050-2 LC 76-148971

This book "describes the pact's evolution since its inception in 1955, concentrating upon challenges to Soviet hegemony, especially by Albania, Czechoslovakia, and Rumania." (Choice) Chronology. Bibliography. Name index. Subject index.

Reviewed by Leonas Sabaliunas
Ann Am Acad 403:192 S '72 450w

"Remington has written the first full-length treatment in English of the security system devised by the U.S.S.R. for the East European Communist states. . . . Under the Brezhnev regime, it is noted, the pact . . . provides the appearance—but not the reality—of equality. . . . [The author] has made judicious use of available newspaper and periodical literature in the various East European languages and Russian. The book is clearly written, well argued, cogent, and should be comprehensible to undergraduates and informed lay readers. Specialists will find the compilation of documents in the back most useful. Highly recommended for both college and public libraries." Choice 9:123 Mr '72 120w

"Miss Remington has written [a] . . . book about the Eastern European Warsaw Pact that is clever, original, and readable, and one of her themes is the tension between military and political uses of the alliance. . . . One of [her] central insights is that 'the Warsaw Pact, born of Moscow's attempt to block the rearming of West Germany . . . acquired substance largely in relation to Soviet policy towards Eastern Europe and the socialist commonwealth.' . . . Miss Remington, in some telling pages at the end . . . [points to] the fate of Czechoslovakia in 1968 . . . [into which Warsaw Pact] members were dragged as accomplices for the sake of 'token multilateralization.'" Neal Ascherson
N Y Rev of Books 18:28 Ap 20 '72 600w

"Dr Remington's text runs to something less than 200 pages and much of his narrative is only tenuously or artificially connected with the Warsaw Pact: essentially what he has done is to trace the Soviet Union's handling of difficulties that have cropped up in its relations with certain other East European countries which also happen to be members of the alliance. The rest of the book is made up of documents, including the texts of treaties, communiqués and articles from the Soviet press, a number of tables and charts, an extensive bibliography, and good name and subject indexes. The proof-reading was less painstaking than one might have wished, and not only in the exacting matter of transliteration."

REMINGTON, R. A.—Continued

TLS p535 My 12 '72 700w

RENDELL, RUTH. No more dying then. 203p

$4.95 Doubleday

LC 72-175396

"A small boy is kidnapped and the little English village is disturbed and frightened—only months earlier a young girl had disappeared. Fear stalks the village. Chief Inspector Wexford and his assistant, Mike Burden, struggle . . . to solve the mysteries. Burden, completely upset over his wife's recent death, falls in love with the mother of the kidnapped boy and is useless to Inspector Wexford." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 32:100 My 15 '72 200w

"The atmosphere of a small English town is quite well done in this otherwise not very distinguished, rather dull mystery." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:2439 J1 '72 60w

"[This] is a warmer book than some of [Rendell's] previous ice-cold studies of the British lower middle class. As always, she writes like a dream and she never lets the tension down. Purists may object to an unlikely coincidence toward the end. (The author herself seems to make a rather lame apology in the final pages.) But there are not many mystery writers who have Rendell's style." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p15 J1 2 '72 100w

"[The author] is really first-class, easy, natural and gemütlich in her writing, unhampered in her invention, a natural storyteller who uses crime as conveniently as the Victorian novelists used to, as a tensing part of stories about people. . . . Among many good characters, the creation of the destructively indolent Ivor Swan is especially worth praise."

TLS p1638 D 31 '71 100w

RENFREW, COLIN. The emergence of civilisation; the Cyclades and the Aegean in the third millennium B.C. 595p il maps $50 Barnes &amp; Noble; for sale by Harper

913.391 Civilization, Aegean. Cyclades—Civilization

SBN 416-16480-3 LC 72-186014

In this account of the early origins of prehistoric civilization, after "an introduction dealing in general with civilisation and culture change, Part I (Culture Sequence) presents a . . . survey of Aegean archaeology and chronology in the third millennium B.C. Special attention is given to the Cycladic islands. The ensuing study of Culture Process (Part II) focuses successively upon population, farming and subsistence, metallurgy, craft technology, social organisation, symbolic systems (language, art, religion) and communication." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Renfrew undertakes the laborious task of synchronizing all the known excavations from the Cyclades islands and working out a definitive chronology which may then be related to that of adjacent shores. The fact that this is the first time that this task has been attempted, together with the author's impeccable scholarly reputation, ensures a place for this study as an important reference work. Renfrew displays his erudition and his mathematical ingenuity in formulating a theory of cultural change which he proceeds to implement with material gathered from the Cyclades. . . . [His] views are rich in theoretical implications of great interest to students of archaeology." J. R. Bram

Library J 97:3155 O 1 '72 200w

"Explanations as to why high civilisations flower in particular places and at particular times have often been sought. Most historians have perhaps been too ready to abandon them and recognise a mystery. . . . If I, personally, do not think that [the author] has so much dispelled the mystery as divided it up and put it together again, and if I am so bred as to doubt the value of some of the intellectual premises, these questions do not diminish my admiration. . . . [Renfrew gives] a most remarkable account of the cultures of the formative 3rd millennium BC and of their interrelationships and development. Nor does he forget the flesh and blood individuals who created them, and brought about the multiplier effect." Jacquetta Hawkes

New Statesman 83:608 My 5 '72 1000w

"One of the main purposes of [this book] . . . is to propose a model of prehistory that can be generally applicable. . . . Much material is packed in: methods derived from the natural sciences or statistics are deployed and there are exciting new analogies with other ancient cultures and civilizations. Fresh thought and an open mind are obvious. . . . In spite of his treatment of the Early Cycladic cultures, which he sees as the hub of the development of the Mediterranean polyculture and their contacts, Professor Renfrew never quite satisfactorily explains their relevance to the first flourishing of Aegean civilization in Middle Minoan Crete. . . . There is much to disagree with in [this book]. . . . Yet it is always provoking and stimulating, with countless new insights and much information."

TLS p1054 S 15 '72 2000w

RENNER, FREDERIC GORDON, jr. comp.

A bibliography of the published works of Charles M. Russell. See Yost, K.

RENNERT, JACK, ed. The poster art of Tomi Ungerer. See Ungerer, T.

RENTZEL, LANCE. When all the laughter died in sorrow. 265p $6.95 Saturday review press

B or 92 Football. Deviant behavior

ISBN 0-8415-0208-0 LC 72-79037

This account of Lance Rentzel, the "twenty-nine-year-old wide receiver for the Los Angeles Rams . . . [tells of] his early triumphs in high school and college football; his professional career with the Minnesota Vikings, the Dallas Cowboys, and the Los Angeles Rams; his marriage to Joey Heatherton; his . . . exhibitionism, and the search for an answer to this problem." (Publisher's note)

"The book is humorous in certain spots; it is also a bit sad and touching in other spots. Rentzel does not attempt to cover up or make excuses for his psychological flaw and one must admire his honesty." J. J. Fitzpatrick

Best Sell 32:382 N 15 '72 180w

"The notoriety of the Lance Rentzel case alone will undoubtedly make this book popular. . . . His world came tumbling down on a November morning in 1970. He was arrested for the second time in four years for exposing himself to children. Rentzel . . . awkwardly confesses the entire story, describing his mother's suffocating affection and his obsessive need to escape her and to prove his masculinity by projecting himself as a cool lady's man and as a football player under constant pressure. The character Rentzel reveals is often annoyingly self-absorbed and self-pitying. But there is, in the end, a distinct ring of painful honesty and catharsis." Charles Farley

Library J 97:2857 S 15 '72 170w

"Rentzel's glittering life as a celebrity and his furtive exhibitionism in parked cars in Minneapolis and Dallas will hold a frightening fascination for some readers; perhaps there is even a dark and meaningful psychological drama in Rentzel's story. But the subject is a complex and delicate one, demanding sensitivity, taste and clear-eyed perception from the writer who attempts to tell it. And in this discordant autobiography, Rentzel fails badly. . . . The book continues . . . [in an] aimless drift to the conclusion. At that point, one can only hope that the writing of it contributed to Lance Rentzel's personal rehabilitation. And one must wish just as fervently that he had never decided to publish it." Pete Axthelm

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 7 '73 650w

"[This] is one of the most interesting books to come out of sports in a long time. Certainly, it cannot have been easy for Rentzel to write (he was, in fact, encouraged to do so by his psychiatrist). . . . Watching the Super Bowl, from which he had been excluded, he thinks, 'I had brought on my own downfall and failed an entire team.' Of course, it is a moot point just how much of his real feelings Rentzel is revealing (he is still under probation), but the tone of the book is one of painful, even unconscious, honesty—indeed, its stumbling and occasional inarticulateness work for it in this regard. . . . This is a story melodramatic enough to have written itself, but luckily, Rentzel has given us more." Jack Spencer

Sat R 55:[80] O 14 '72 600w

RESCHER, NICHOLAS. Welfare; the social issues in philosophical perspective. 186p $7.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

361.6 Public welfare
ISBN 0-8229-3233-4 LC 70-158184

This work is concerned with "the human and philosophical implications of welfare programs and alternatives . . . [as well as with] the ethics and even aesthetics of state action to aid its members." (Choice)

"Few if any issues are avoided and many are dealt with in a courageous and socially honest manner. The work is generally clear and understandable. It will be of great value to social planners, policy makers, social workers, and all who are concerned not only with the requisites of social welfare but the quality of life. It should be a basic work in educational programs for such persons at all levels of study. Of particular interest to social workers are the implications for social work role in the 'post welfare state.'" (Choice)

Choice 9:1009 O '72 160w

"The author takes a refreshing look at social welfare from the perspective of a professional philosopher. . . . If occasionally he seems to change his viewpoint, he may be forgiven, for unlike so many of his colleagues he writes clearly and charmingly. Although he insists in the early chapters that he regards 'social welfare' as being much more than the mere provision of economic security to the needy, by the time he gets deeply into his argument he is clearly discussing public assistance. This shift may well be intentional. Occasionally, one fears that Rescher is trying to update Jeremy Bentham's calculus of happiness, but familiarity with statistics is not essential for enjoying this volume." M. D. Speizman
Library J 97:893 Mr 1 '72 230w

RESEARCH librarianship; essays in honor of Robert B. Downs; ed. by Jerrold Orne. 162p $11.95 Bowker

021 Downs, Robert Bingham. Library science
ISBN 0-8352-0487-1 LC 78-163902

"The essays in [this volume], preceded by a short biography by Robert F. Delzell, have been selected to demonstrate the . . . range of Downs' interests and contributions: intellectual freedom, academic status for librarians, interlibrary cooperation, library resources and bibliography, collection building and rare books, library education, and library surveys. These seven chapters appearing in the order given were contributed by Everett T. Moore, Arthur M. McAnally, Robert H. Blackburn, William V. Jackson, Robert Vosper, and Jack Dalton. The concluding chapter was written jointly by Stephen A. McCarthy and Murray L. Howder." (Col & Res Lib)

"These essays are far from a potpourri hastily thrown together as a gesture to a retiring colleague. They represent a distillation of contemporary thought on topics of essential and current concern to research librarianship. . . . All the essays contain useful appended bibliographies." C. K. Byrd

Col & Res Lib 33:238 My '72 800w

"The seven major contributors to this festschrift seemed determined to produce work worthy of the great leader in librarianship they were honoring, and, in the main, they succeeded very well. So many and varied are the phases of librarianship which Robert Downs has helped to improve in his long career that it must have been a difficult task for Jerry Orne to decide where to ask the writers to place their emphases, but this chore was well handled. . . . A real and original contribution to library literature is the highpoint of this volume. . . . Everett T. Moore's essay on 'Intellectual Freedom' . . . is the first full adequate recital anywhere of the effect of McCarthyism on American libraries in 1953. As might be expected, Moore's article is both historically correct and philosophically important. . . . This book could well serve as a library science text; its broad coverage and expert handling of each topic must be unique in our profession's literature." E. M. Oboler

Library J 96:4074 D 15 '71 300w

"The editor, in his Preface, states that 'this collection of papers can give true perspective to the past, the present, and possibly the future of research libraries.' This seems to overstate the scope of the essays and the intentions of their authors. . . . [The work includes] a bibliography of Robert Downs's publications, organized under a useful series of broad subject headings." H. H. Fussler
Library Q 42:346 Jl '72 1150w

RESTON, JAMES. The New York Times report from Red China. See The New York Times

REVEL, JEAN-FRANCOIS. On Proust; tr. by Martin Turnell. 174p $8.95 Lib. press

843 Proust, Marcel—Remembrance of things past
ISBN 0-912050-10-1 LC 70-161409

The author is a 'left-wing French intellectual, and the author of Without Marx and Jesus [BRD 1971]. A couple of years ago he reread A la recherche du temps perdu . . . found it very different from what the critics and popular impressions would have it, and wrote down his ideas." (Book World) Originally published in France, in 1970, entitled Sur Proust: Une Lecture non-conformiste de A la Recherche du Temps Perdu.

"[This] is a provocative and intelligent book and has aroused many passions in France (where passions arouse easily). It is a commentary, not an introduction: You have to have read Proust before Revel. . . . Criticism: The translation is pedestrian and Revel falls into the trap of showing off the extent of his reading. At one point, for instance, in one sentence he throws at our heads Theocritus, Tibullus, the Breton cycle (meaning, I suppose, King Arthur), and Claude Bernard, who may be relevant to his argument but are not necessary to people reading Proust. There is also a long chapter on Montaigne, thrown in as a make-weight (and very interesting, too, if you are a Montaigne fan)." Patrick Brogan
Book World p12 Ap 30 '72 800w

"The last sentence of the book sums up Revel's critical approach: 'Talking about an author means using him as a support for saying what we ourselves think about the things he has spoken.' For people interested in Revel rather than Proust. Readable, dispensable for the Proust specialist."

Choice 9:652 Jl/Ag '72 100w

"[While I appreciate Revel's] many penetrating remarks on Proust, . . . I cannot help noticing that some of his observations are undermined by his own requirement that what is important to Proust should be important to him. Above all Revel is wrong in scorning the 'philosophical' element in Proust as derivative and unoriginal. . . . How would [he] account for the fact that philosophers as different as Santayana and John Wisdom have admired the philosophical qualities of Proust?" E. B. Greenwood

Encounter 39:80 S '72 140w

"[This] is a straightforward critical study. Strongly opposed to the 'fossilized' and 'categorized' expositions offered by Marxist, existentialist, and structuralist schools of criticism, Revel stresses a fluid approach to literary analysis. . . . [He] asserts that Proust's imagination enabled him to reach closer to reality; that his descriptions always revolved around something he had himself seen or experienced. . . . The most fascinating chapter deals with similarities between Proust and Montaigne—the fact that neither man was dependent upon certainties or explanations for dealing with universal questions, that both suffered from inner tumult, both knew and felt human nature deeply. . . . Highly recommended." B. L. Knapp

Library J 97:876 Mr 1 '72 160w

Yale R 62:X O '72 1000w

REVEL, JEAN FRANÇOIS. Without Marx or Jesus; the new American revolution has begun; with an afterword by Mary McCarthy; tr. by J. F. Bernard. 269p $6.95 Doubleday 309.173 Right and left (Political science). U.S.—Social conditions. Social change LC 72-157576

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Ann Am Acad 401:200 My '72 320w
Reviewed by Edward Grossman

Commentary 53:90 F '72 3100w

Economist 243:80 My 13 '72 120w

Reviewed by Colin McGlashan
New Statesman 84:132 J1 28 '72 900w
TLS p763 J1 7 '72 700w

REXROTH, KENNETH, comp. One hundred poems from the French. 100p $6.50 Pym-Randall press

841 French poetry
LC 70-183776

"Rexroth's 100 (plus) choices are . . . mostly post World War I through 1965. . . . The most poems and the longest come from Francis Carco and Lubicz-Milosz. . . . Collectively, these poems concern the sentimental education of an adult, heterosexual Western male." (Choice)

"A fifth of the book may already be on many library shelves. . . . The eight Reverdy are . . . reprints from an earlier book. Perhaps the most complex, successful version . . . is 'My brother the shadow' (Joë Bousquet). Aside from the three-page 'Acknowledgements,' there are missing the critical-biographical addenda of Rexroth's earlier translation-books. . . . In his versification, Rexroth almost always prefers prose rhythms to emphatic stress. Prosodically, the clear patterns of 'Old' are much less characteristic than Jammes' '14th elegy.' Since the book is not bilingual, it belongs much more obviously to good modern poetry collections than to those emphasizing French-language materials. There are four illustrations: Arp's cover, a Léger, and two Braques."

Choice 9:964 O '72 180w

"[This is] a pleasant little volume of assorted verse . . . chosen, one may surmise, on the basis of affinity to the translator's temperament and freely translated from the French. . . . [The book contains] much that's romantic, melancholic, and nostalgic; little literary pyrotechnics. All in all, a charming assemblage made to express the translator rather than to display a panorama of French poetry; but that is a quite acceptable enterprise when the translator is Rexroth. The poems sing themselves so sweetly it is hard to believe they were not born in English." Dorothy Nyren
Library J 97:2404 J1 '72 100w

REYMOND, LIZELLE. To live within; foreword by Jacob Needleman; tr. from the French by Nancy Pearson and Stanley Spiegleberg. $6.95 Doubleday

181 Hinduism—Philosophy. Spiritual life
LC 79-147361

The author "writes of her initial contact with [her guru, Sri] Anirvan and decision to work with him, of the establishment of Haimavati, where Hinduism and Islam would be studied and their unknown texts translated and published. She sketches Anirvan's life. . . . In addition to extracts from Anirvan's letters and his translations of various Bâtl songs, the second part of the book consists of discourses by the guru on Samkhya, one of the traditional philosophical systems of India." (Sat R)

"For some 35 years, Raymond has been immersed in translating Indian classics into French, and the degree of accord she has achieved with the Oriental, specifically Indian, spiritual attitude is evident in her own works The Dedicated [BRD 1953] and My Life with a Brahmin Family [BRD 1961]. . . . [The first section of this new work] is typified by the deep personal honesty and straightforward sincerity characteristic of her earlier work. However, it is the last and longer portion of the work which forms the book's core. . . . The obscurity and intensity of this section will make its message available only to those who are ready through experience, concentration, and hard work to grasp its wisdom. For this reason, the book is recommended for large research libraries only." R. S. Haas

Library J 96:2658 S 1 '71 230w

"Much of Mme Raymond's description of her years in a Himalayan hermitage has the clarity and beauty of a pebble dropped into a pool. Each small chapter seems to be a distillate of untold pages of notes, memories of conversation, hours of concentration, and years of reflection. . . . Mme Raymond writes of her arrival at Anirvan's hermitage, 'where, seated before him, I found myself for the first time, 'alone in front of myself.' Emptiness filled their life together, as silence fills this book. Of course there are words, objects, actions, and these are precise and satisfying. But one feels a formless, nameless experience welling up through the printed lines and narrated events, infusing them with vitality and wisdom." Linda Hess
Sat R 54:43 D 18 '71 300w

REYNOLDS, CHARLES R. American Indian portraits; from the Wanamaker expedition of 1913; chosen and with an introd. by Charles R. Reynolds, Jr. 123p ill $12.50 Stephen Greene

970 Indians of North America—Portraits
ISBN 0-8289-0146-5 LC 76-173404

This book contains photographs, "printed in their original size, of representative Indian men, women and children from tribes across the country in 1913. . . . The captions to the photographs give what information is known about the identity and tribe of each subject." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:109 F '72 100w

"The glass-plate negatives [of these photographs] were stored in the American Museum of Natural History after 1913, and apparently forgotten until 1965, when they were brought to the attention of Reynolds, then editor of the photography journal Infinity. He selected 120 portraits, but arranged them according to a photographer's taste, rather than grouping them by cultural or even regional affinities. This, plus the lack of a location map and other ethnographic data, make the book of questionable value to researchers interested in Indians. . . . However, as a collective photographic portrait of a vanishing race, this is a compelling, sensitive work." J. W. Hall
Library J 97:1005 Mr 15 '72 180w

Natur Hist 81:95 Ag/S '72 100w

"It is not certain who took the pictures, but Joseph K. Dixon, who led the expedition 'to the American Indian,' is a likely candidate. . . . [These portraits] have dignity, restraint, strength and beauty. Having seen original prints, I must complain about the reproductions in this book. They show all the details of these photographs, but in flat, grey tones that lose much of the luminosity and force of the originals. . . . One hopes that the Stephen Greene Press can do something to improve the picture tones in the next printing. Meanwhile it is still a beautiful book." David Vestal
N Y Times Bk R p42 D 12 '71 150w

"[The pictures in this volume] were taken by an unknown photographer in the course of an expedition to raise the American flag in 169 Indian communities. They were then filed and forgotten until 1965. All of them are eloquent: we know the names of the subjects and, for the most part, their tribes, but nothing more about them than what their faces tell us. . . . Tragedy, pride, skepticism—we can see these in their faces—and disdain, bitterness, resentment and a chilly reserve as well. Looking at these portraits one gets the uneasy feeling that these Indians knew very well what they were telling the photographer—and the society from which he came." P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 78:1093 D 13 '71 110w

REYNOLDS, LLOYD GEORGE. The three worlds of economics. 344p $12.50; pa $3.45 Yale univ. press

330.12 Economics. Capitalism. Communist countries—Economic policy. Underdeveloped areas

"In part 1, Reynolds sketches the common characteristics shared by economies within each of three major groups; capitalist, socialist, and less developed. In part 2, he contrasts the most crucial problems faced by the economies in each group, from which follows an appreciation of the differences in economic policies pursued by them. Part 3 is an assessment of the relevance of contemporary Western economic theory to the problems manifested in socialist and less developed economies." (Choice)

"While many economists claim universal validity for their theories, the author of this book questions this thesis. In comparing capitalists, communists, and less developed economies, he arrives at interesting conclusions. . . . [The] unexplored relationship between actual and theoretic systems prevented the eminently qualified author from making a significant contribution to the study of economic systems. Critical readers will thus benefit more from his two expertly done chapters on the 'usefulness of Western economies' in analyzing noncapitalist economies." Arthur Schweitzer
Ann Am Acad 401:221 My '72 430w

"Suggestions are made toward ways of fruitfully broadening the scope of orthodox Western economic thought to encompass the challenging issues revealed from a more global perspective. Reynolds provides a nontechnical synthesis of a vast literature, and will be helpful to both those seeking an introduction to the field of comparative economic studies, as well as those wishing to stay abreast of recent developments." Choice 9:107 Mr '72 170w

REYNOLDS, PAUL R. The middle man; the adventures of a literary agent. 223p $6.95 Morrow

070 Literary agents
LC 76-151932

The author presents an anecdotal account of his "forty-four years as a literary agent, [and of] events involving authors or editors . . . [in an attempt to describe] how writers, editors, motion picture executives, and publishers operate." (Pref) Index.

"Reynold's account is . . . filled with literary chitchat about famous and not-so famous authors. . . . There is a fascinating—but all too brief—section about Hollywood and selling books to the films as well as authors writing for the movies. There is a unit on various authorial problems handled by agents, e.g., choosing a title, having a publisher do more advertising of a book . . . the dustjacket drawing, etc. Some of this book contains rather ordinary trivia of very little interest. Over-all, though, it contains much startling and fascinating information. . . . Anyone interested in books, authors, publishing, and similar subjects will unquestionably find [this book] enjoyable reading." P. A. Doyle
Best Sell 31:464 Ja 15 '72 800w

"[Here] is a folksy, practical, sometimes fascinating account of the business side of publishing. Reynolds has written four how-to books on writing and selling, and his style is journalistic and fast paced. This, coupled with a given lack of modesty, may not make his story everyone's idea of great literature. But in its own peculiar way, it does have class." Bill Katz
Library J 97:66 Ja 1 '72 80w

REZVANI, Light-years; tr. by A. M. Sheridan Smith. (A Helen and Kurt Wolff bk) 332p $6.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-151990-0 LC 70-162816

An account of the childhood and adolescence of Cyrus, the son of a Persian father and a white Russian mother. It describes his growth to manhood, his love—more romantic than filial—for his stepmother, his adventures as a runaway in wartime Paris, and his life in Montmartre as a young artist.

Reviewed by R. J. Williams
Best Sell 31:427 D 15 '71 340w

"Rezvani, an Irani-born painter novelist, has written an exuberant work about a young boy's infinite capacity for the small emotional wound, the thread-bare life and risible fate of Russian émigrés in Paris in the 1940's, and the tragicomic side of the Resistance. . . . [The novel] includes tragedy, unrequited love, and irony and is written in an energetic style full of movement and surrealist furbelows." Paul Boytinck
Library J 96:3777 N 15 '71 210w

"Rezvani, admirably packaged, printed and translated from the French, is prone to exaggerated reactions and fits of the vapours. All is magical, inducing surrealistic visions of undeniable charm, or appalling, whereupon clamorous vomiting takes place. Sundry persons dive into their clothing to expose their 'sex' (it translates both kinds)." R. R. Davies

New Statesman 82:308 S 3 '71 40w

"[The author] writes from a vantage point of sexual delight and singular harmony. He belongs to no fraternity. His humor, his vision, and his heritage—he's the son of a Russian mother and a magician father from Persia—these must be unique. . . . Rezvani's intelligence inhabits the words themselves, the way they lie together on the page, his swift and detailed descriptions. . . . Surprise and warmth and intelligence light up this book. Against it, like the black cypresses of his childhood, rise dark signs of chaos. It must be the magician father in Cyrus that can turn the horror of life into such exultation. This is a magical book." Peter Rand
N Y Times Bk R p20 F 1 '72 800w

RHINE, J. B., ed. Progress in parapsychology. 313p il $7 Parapsychology press

133.8 Extrasensory perception. Psychical research
LC 76-140922

These papers summarize the "contributions in psi research during the last two years . . . and report on precognition tests with mice, automated test systems, electronic equipment, sex differences in ability, and what psi is. The papers cover the historical perspective, as well as the current recognition, of parapsychology's independent status from psychology." (Choice) Glossary. Name index. Subject index.

"These papers present what is currently known and dependable. Therefore, [they are] of most value to the general reader who does not have the expertise to select the critical articles from the Journal of parapsychology, where many of the articles are reported. The general reader will be further aided by the appendix which develops specific specialized concepts."

Choice 8:1513 Ja '72 120w

"Although most of the papers in this second volume have been adapted from the complete reports published [some of the papers] are published here for the first time. Some editing has been done, but only to make the research more understandable. Most significantly, the statistical jargon and tables have been deleted.

This volume, dedicated to William McDougall on the centenary of his birth, begins with a brief summary of his contributions to the field. . . . The work is divided into five parts, each of which is introduced and highlighted by Rhine. This book will be indispensable to students of parapsychology." R. A. Lyders
Library J 96:2330 Jl '71 140w

RHODES, ROBERT I., ed. Imperialism and underdevelopment; a reader. 416p $11.95; pa $3.95 Monthly review

330.9 Underdeveloped areas. Imperialism. Economic policy. Economic development
SBN 85345-141-9 LC 70-122736

These essays concern the "problems of underdevelopment considered in historical perspective. . . . The first part, 'Imperialism in Historical and Contemporary Perspective' [deals with] the relationship between underdevelopment and imperialism. Case studies on the Alliance for Progress, Pakistan, aluminum in the Caribbean, and Brazil are offered as substantiation, and the section closes with a summary view of imperialism. . . . The second section, 'The Underdeveloped Economy and Economic Policy,' presents six . . . studies of specific policy problems. . . . The final section [discusses] politics and class conflict." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[This] is a collection of Monthly Review loyalists who are endowed with a highly selective coefficient of righteous indignation: the Western world is imperialist and conspiratorial; the Eastern world is democratic and forthright. It maintains a uniform querulous snarl at any American policy, but somehow the Soviet Union remains the hope of democracy, peace, and security and is dedicated to ending economic exploitation everywhere. Rhodes' collection of authors covers the whole world: the Caribbean, South America, Asia, and Africa." William Gomberg
Contemp Sociol 1:59 Ja '72 350w

"[This book exhibits] in varying degrees the New Left approach to the study of underdeveloped countries. To read [it] is to realize the vast scope of the problems facing a world rife with inequality on all levels, and, with the new light they provide, to anticipate answers to the old challenges. . . . [This collection supplies] refreshing, exciting reading with [a] controversial [thesis]. . . . [It is] extremely valuable because so little organized scholarship has appeared in this new area of revolutionary social science. One great value of [this book] is that the reader can peruse selectively to satisfy his interests on many topics. . . . [It is a] worthwhile addition to any library." R. N. Hill

RHODES, R. I.—Continued

Library J 96:967 Mr 15 '71 170w

RHYS, JEAN. After leaving Mr. Mackenzie. 191p $5.95 Harper

ISBN 0-06-013534-4 LC 79-160658

This "work is a study of the gradual breakdown of a kept woman who is no longer kept. The parting from Mr. Mackenzie marks the downward turning point in Julia's life, a bleak one at best, though one with a few illusions. It is the loss of these that Julia is not able to face. Spiritually isolated and lacking a means of support, Julia attempts to return to her sister and invalid mother. After a devastatingly bleak encounter, the sisters remain as morally and spiritually isolated from each other as their mother, the victim of a stroke, remains from them. Ironically, the sister who stayed behind to care for the mother is envious of the 'free' life she envisions Julia to have had. Neither sister is able to make contact and both remain in their suffering." (Library J)

"More an extended short story than a novel, the book is a quick glance at an irregular type of life. . . . The style is simple, the dialogue too overdone for the sincerity of the situations, the characters shadowy. The work is caught in a way of writing appealing to junior readers, while its subject would most interest more mature readers. It is an explication of circumstances with a rather clinical viewpoint, searching the surface, perhaps commendably, but thereby emphasizing circumstances and neglecting or even obfuscating the victims of the circumstances. This work might provide an interesting case study for a social psychologist, but it has most value as a sociological commentary." J. T. Gilboy

Best Sell 31:532 Mr 1 '72 420w

Reviewed by Paul Theroux

Book World p6 F 13 '72 410w

"[This novel was] originally published in 1931. . . . Rhys's later book Wide Sargasso Sea [BRD 1967] is a better and richer work than this one. Nevertheless, she is adept at the psychological novel, and masterful in her portrayal of isolation. Julia remains a pathetic and real, if not sympathetic, character." Leide Gilman

Library J 97:517 F 1 '72 180w

Reviewed by V. S. Naipaul

N Y Rev of Books 18:29 My 18 '72 2500w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p52 F 27 '72 220w
New Yorker 48:130 Ap 8 '72 100w

"One doesn't read [this novel] as a rediscovered period piece. The 'feeling of foreboding, of anxiety, as if her heart were being squeezed' that afflicts Julia Martin afflicts the reader so freshly that a catastrophic final crash would come as a relief. Jean Rhys refuses us that. Her special subject is the longevity of fecklessness. We read her with apprehension—fascinated, embarrassed. She is an extraordinary artist." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:77 Mr 6 '72 230w

Reviewed by Michael Cooke

Yale R 61:599 Je '72 430w

RIABCHIKOV, EVGENY. Russians in space; ed. by Nikolai P. Kamanin; tr. by Guy Daniels; prepared by the Novosti press agency pub. house, Moscow. 300p pl $10 Doubleday 629.4 Astronautics—Russia LC 70-144291

The author traces Russia's "progress in space travel, from the visionary plan and designs of Konstantin Tsiolkovsky . . . to the . . . flights of the first Sputnik and Yuri Gagarin, the first man in space." (Publisher's note)

"The narrative is journalistic rather than scientific. The contents are of interest-arousing events. The language is familiar and often moving; indeed it may be influenced more by the fact that its translator is a poet than by the public expressionism of its author. . . . [Riabchikov] has dug up all sorts of relevant and irrelevant data, scientific and biographical, interesting and merely factual. . . . [The book] is, frankly, a popularization. It was written in Russian by an active observer, and meant to be interesting. It is. . . . [But] the lack of an index to the veritable mass of fact gathered here is a serious handicap to its future value." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 31:404 D 1 '71 290w

Choice 8:1602 F '72 170w

"[This] is the Russian counterpart to the pasteurised, deodorised and trivialised Time-Life version of the American space programme with some rather obvious stresses on the cultural differences."

Economist 242:63 Ja 29 '72 100w

"If there was an awestruck quality to coverage of the U.S. astronauts, Mr. Riabchikov has made a quantum jump with the space-men of his own country. Perhaps the sheer Russianness of the enterprise gives the work a lyric sweep unknown to space journalism. Whatever the reason, it makes delicious reading for those grown gray and a bit jaded at the knee of Walter Cronkite. . . . [The book] smacks here and there of the company line, which is to say that it is totally reverential about the history of Russian rocketry and the space program and about every man, woman, and dog who ever had anything to do with it. . . . Much of [this writing] is a damned clumsy bore, an interminable series of launches, reentries, and new Heroes of the Soviet Union punctuated by useless rhetoric on the importance of their missions. I doubt if the book offers anything new to informed rocket watchers or space historians." Loudon Wainwright

Harper 243:138 N '71 1700w

Reviewed by R. L. Hough

Library J 97:888 Mr 1 '72 120w

"[The author] tends toward overzealous hero worship, and occasional primer language in his scientific explanations. . . . Perhaps the chief fault that many American readers will find with Riabchikov is actually one of the strengths of his work. His almost rapturous romanticism and unabashed prostration before the starry throne of space will strike many readers as strange, perhaps partly because what we regard as our 'maurely skeptical' viewpoint is currently out of phase with even our own romantic heritage. Yet Riabchikov's honesty and lack of fashionable skepticism toward what he clearly regards as one of modern man's most heroic aspirations is not invalid within the Eastern context." William Shelton

Sat R 54:41 O 30 '71 2100w

RIBICOFF, ABRAHAM. The American medical machine [by] Abraham Ribicoff with Paul Danaceau. 212p $6.95 Saturday review press 614 Medical care, Insurance, Health. Public health—U.S. ISBN 0-8415-0200-5 LC 74-154257

A survey of the inadequacies in our health and medical care with suggestions for a national health insurance plan to remedy the situation. Index.

"We have detailed views of our sick society within these pages. There is an index; places and names are mentioned. . . . There is no reason why all of us cannot read this book. Statistics and medical data are wrapped in pleasant language. This is not heavy going. Some solution is offered. . . . We have a prophet here in Senator Ribicoff; and prophets do not foretell future events—They speak strongly about the present. And our present ought to be enough warning about the future." E. J. Linehan

Best Sell 32:382 N 15 '72 500w

"Senator Ribicoff, who brings to the subject the expertise of a former HEW secretary, has produced a lucid account of the inadequacies in our health care: shortage of doctors, excessive cost, inability or unwillingness of private organizations to put customer needs before profit. . . . [He] advocates a federally controlled but not federally administered program, allowing state governments to run their own plans. Stressing that the nation cannot wait until after the doctor shortage has been alleviated, the author suggests extensive use of paramedical personnel as a stop-gap measure. While not all advocates of a national health service will agree with Ribicoff's stand, most will want to read his book." Hana Stranska

Library J 97:2856 S 15 '72 150w

RICCIUTI, EDWARD R. Shelf pets; how to take care of small wild animals; phot. by Arline Strong. 132p $4.50 Harper
639 Pets—Juvenile literature
SBN 06-024993-5 LC 76-135782

This book discusses some small wild animals that can "be kept successfully indoors as pets. These include some kinds of frogs and toads, salamanders, snakes, lizards, turtles, spiders, crayfish, water striders, whirligig beetles, catpillars, crickets, grasshoppers, katydids, millipedes, guppies, Siamese fighting fish, water and land snails, hamsters, and guinea pigs." (Publishers note) Bibliographic. Index. "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"This book offers aspiring wild pet owners ■ wealth of how-to-plus supplementary information about various wild animals. . . . For those children removed from but learning about small wild animals, it can be used for conservation study." E. T. McDonald
Library J 96:2366 J1 '71 120w

"This fond and expert guide to the husbandry of pets beyond the usual domestic range . . . is based on both knowledge and responsibility. . . . It is a valuable resource for any school or group, or for the individual pet-loving child." Philip and Phyllis Morrison
Sci Am 225:106 D '71 150w

RICH, ELIZABETH. Flying scared; why we are being skyjacked and how to put ■ stop to it. 194p $6.95 Stein & Day 364.1 Hijacking of airplanes
ISBN 0-8128-1356-1 LC 70-127227

The author deals with the problem of skyjacking. "How did it begin? Who does it? Why do they do it? Why do some succeed and others fail? . . . Why haven't pilots, crews, airline officials—even governments—been able to stop it? What will happen if it is not stopped? . . . [She has] interviewed those involved (including some of the skyjackers themselves), evaluated what we've done about the problem so far—and come up with a solution." (Publisher's note)

"Superb is this book. It is written gracefully and with power. . . . [It] is a small book but it is packed with wisdom and with facts. The appendix has five chapters and for the student there are pieces of evidence concerning the number of attempts at skyjacking and the terror which they cause. . . . Read through this splendid book and make it available for those who can do something about our air menace." E. J. Linehan
Best Sell 32:221 Ag 1 '72 550w

"The author discounts the effectiveness of the much-vaunted 'psychological profile' used by many airlines to screen boarding passengers, as well as the use of sky marshals, electronic metal detectors and other surveillance techniques. . . . While Miss Rich places perhaps too much faith in her major proposal—to treat skyjackers as mental cases—she has made a valuable contribution in assembling and analyzing the history of skyjacking, probing the merits and shortcomings of preventive measures taken to date, and offering a thoughtful new approach. Even so, this reviewer for one would prefer to have her approach tried as a supplement to present surveillance methods, rather than as a simple alternative." G. H. Favre
Christian Science Monitor p9 J1 26 '72 450w

"Rich, as a stewardess, writes from a new viewpoint—that of a potential victim. Her work is adequately researched, and she is quick to point out (correctly) that before U.S. airliners were hijacked to Cuba, Cuban planes were hijacked to the U.S., where we welcomed the skyjackers as heroes. . . . Although I agree with many of the author's suggestions to curb skyjacking, her book is not, as the title might suggest, a manual for stopping hijackings." J. M. Burger
Library J 97:3609 N 1 '72 140w

RICHARDS, I. A. Poetries and sciences . . . with commentary [by] I. A. Richards. 121p $6 Norton 808.1 Poetry—History and criticism. Science
SBN 393-04308-8 LC 68-22852

This is a reissue of the author's Science and Poetry [BRD 1927] "with ■ new title and ■ short commentary which reflects his further thoughts on the subject along with his essay

"How Does ■ Poem Know When It Is Finished?" The volume . . . is an analysis of poetry and its use and value, as well as ■ consideration of the imaginative life and how it is influenced by the sciences, particularly the science of psychology." (Library J)

"[This is a] seminal work. Poetry 'is capable of saving us.' Perhaps those words in its final paragraph didn't seem excessive on their first publication in 1926, though rather dubious on the book's reissue in 1935. But before they are reached there is, of course, still much that's alive and kicking and that merits re-pondering." Roy Fuller
Encounter 38:43 D '71 270w

"[This is] a classic in its field . . . [and] is essential for libraries with a special interest in poetry." Alan Seaburg
Library J 95:2480 J1 '70 110w

RICHARDSON, DENNIS W. Electric money: evolution of an electronic funds-transfer system. 181p il $8.95 MIT press

332.1 Electronic data processing. Credit. Banks and banking. Money
ISBN 0-262-18045-6 LC 74-110233

"This book presents a . . . history of money and banking, concluding with ■ description of the development of the credit card as a part of the payments mechanism in the U.S. economy. In the concluding chapters the author describes an advanced stage of a bank credit card system, a 'checkless society,' and discusses its possible effects on the economy" (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. General index. Name index.

"In some respects the book is redundant, such as the lengthy discussion of the early evolution of money and monetary institutions. But Richardson shows insight in his analysis of the role credit cards may play in the development of an electronic funds-transfer system, and his analysis of the impact of the eventual realization of such a system on the various financial institutions, on merchandisers, and upon monetary policy is a pioneering effort. Although the book will probably find its greatest appeal among economists, bankers, government officials, and businessmen, it can profitably be read by anybody who has had an elementary exposure to money, banking, and monetary economics." Choice 8:1491 Ja '72 300w

"Richardson offers little to satisfy his fellow economists: he does not test hypotheses; his discussion of the implications of electronic money for monetary policy breaks no new ground; the historical section depends heavily on one secondary source. The description of the current status of the credit card is the book's strongest feature. For the layman the book provides a general understanding of the approaching checkless society. One caution: throughout the book there is an underlying bias toward depicting consumer credit in a favorable light." R. S. White
Library J 95:3903 N 15 '70 150w

RICHARDSON, JOHN ADKINS. Modern art and scientific thought. 191p il $10 Univ. of Ill. press

709.04 Art and science. Art, Modern
SBN 252-00125-7 LC 74-122914

The author discusses "the relationship between art and science in the 19th and 20th centuries. . . . [He contends that the] way in which science is discussed when art is related to it . . . has nothing to do with the scientific method. Examining artistic practice in relation to this method, the author [attempts to] demonstrate that styles that have for a long time been called 'scientific,' styles such as Impressionism and Cubism, have nothing to do with science. At the same time parallels are drawn between developments in mathematics, science, and philosophy." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Peter Gay
Am Scholar 41:660 autumn '72 350w

"Recommended to all those seriously interested in modern art and the history of ideas." Choice 9:638 J1/Ag '72 200w

"A thoughtful, speculative recapitulation of some patterns of resemblance between artistic and scientific modes, movements, and inventions in the past 100 years. The author sketches some interconnections between scientific empiricism and artistic objectivity, between Cézanne's and non-Euclidean geometry's rethinking of structure, between artistic alienation and projective psychology. Actually, however, this review deals with old-fashioned zeitgeist theory as the last chapters turn from science to society. An overreliance on tertiary source material and popularizations may account for the reader's feeling of a surface rather than basic insight into casual relationships."

RICHARDSON, J. A.—Continued

J Aesthetics 30:407 fall '72 100w

RICHARDSON, ROBERT S. The stars & serendipity. 129p 11 maps $5.95; lib bdg $5.59 Pantheon bks.

523 Astronomy
ISBN 0-394-82022-3; 0-394-92022-3 (lib bdg)
LC 70-77435

The author describes how some unanticipated discoveries in astronomy were made by researchers who are not following theory, but were pursuing slight deviations from accepted theory. Some topics discussed include Those canals of Mars; The not-so-eternal stars; Uranus and beyond; Sunspots; The solar magnetic cycle; Radio bursts from Jupiter; Fireball radiation; Pulsars. Glossary.

"The abstractions here, besides the notion of serendipity itself, are the familiar ones of gravity and orbits, precession and aberration. The book is for older readers, and Dr. Richardson faces few restrictions in his choice of words. He supplements a good collection of astronomical photographs with a number of well-thought-out diagrams. The weakest of these is on page 50, where I fail to get the desired impression that an increase in telescope power can magnify a planet disc without doing the same to the star images. The book [is] an interesting work on little-known aspects of astronomy." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 47:624 D '71 250w

"Richardson successfully conveys some understanding of the scientific principles, hard work and personal satisfaction involved in making both expected and unexpected discoveries in the field of astronomy from ancient times to the present. Unfortunately, his explanations sometimes skip over the important points, and the chapter on precession is too difficult for beginners. Most of the black-and-white illustrations are clear and well chosen." O. V. Fortier

Library J 96:4192 D 15 '71 160w [YA]

"Personal, a little scoffing, quite unliterary, this book for readers of junior-high-school age (and beyond) is what the expert author would be likely to call a pretty happy business. The idea is plain; a good many important discoveries have been stumbled on, the way three princes of Ceylon (once called Serendip) were said to have done in 'a silly fairy tale.' . . . Richardson presents about a dozen discoveries that did not make sense in his light, clear, metaphorical, slangy essays, supported by some dandy pictures. . . . Slightly weak on the side of spelling, definitely mistaken on how unusual degenerate matter is (one finds it in every atom and every chunk of metal), the book is nonetheless an enjoyable, instructive and fruitful path into astronomy, or to the spirit of experimental science itself." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 225:112 D '71 220w [YA]

RICHIE, DONALD. The inland sea; with phot. by Yoichi Midorikawa. 290p $6.95 Weatherhill

915.2 Japan—Description and travel
ISBN 0-8348-0063-2 LC 78-157276

An account of a journey through Japan's Inland Sea, a "body of water bounded by three of Japan's four major islands and inhabited by 'a people living eternally in the present, a people for whom becoming means little and being everything.' Richie, film curator at New York's Museum of Modern Art, has lived more than half his life in Japan. His . . . book is part travel journal, part diary, part study of the character of the Japanese whose lives have been shaped by the island-studded sea which he calls 'this paradise, this ideal sea garden.' It is also a . . . prose-vehicle that Richie uses in order to see himself clearly in the 'mirror' of Japan." (Publishers' Weekly)

"Full of affection for the intricate simplicities of old Japan, Mr. Richie prowls the inland waters, collecting lively vignettes and indulging in rather too much subjective melancholy. He is the kind of writer who is most eloquent when he is complaining, which means that a new wallboard-and-plastic tourist hotel which he never visited makes a stronger impression on the reader than more agreeable items which he actually saw. This is a backhanded way to write a travel book, and the author deserves considerable credit for the mixture of fact and charm which he maintains against the odds of his own temperament." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:129 Ap '72 100w

"This is a travelogue, skillfully compiled, shot with sensitive economy, and edited with a subtlety which balances description and comment. . . . The 'Inland Sea' around which Richie conducts us at a lazy amble is as remote and changeless as some deep, far shore of the mind and sometimes we wonder if we are being offered a wily parable. . . . We drift by boat from island to island, meeting the villagers and fishermen, sharing the gossip, listening to the local folklore. Time seems to slow down to a tick. The water in Yoichi Midorikawa's beautiful photographs lies calm and crinkled. . . . The delicacy with which Richie sketches his encounters with these isolated and civilized communities is uncanny. . . . The truly Japanese traits can be traced . . . in the brief encounters he records so well." Nigel Gosling

Book World p5 Mr 26 '72 900w

"The book will be useful and enjoyable for anyone with an interest in Japan, be it casual or professional. The casual reader will warm to its style and gain insight into the culture. The specialist on Japan will nod his head in agreement with the insights so well stated—or occasionally pause to argue with some evaluative comment, judging it from his own experience. In short this is a subtle and welcome addition to sound popular discussions of contemporary Japan. . . . Undergraduate and public libraries will find it particularly useful for general readers."

Choice 9:563 Je '72 150w

"One's romantic picture of the author, in his search for an older Japan . . . may be slightly tempered by the epilogue . . . revealing that it is not the record of a single journey but a digest of several. . . . [Richie] speaks the language, is faintly on the fleshly prowl. . . . He visits Shinto shrines, dips into blood-boiled history and mythology, meets . . . briefly, Mrs. Richie on an orbit of her own. He cogitates on St. Bernard dogs in Japanese zoos, the Japanese copy of a Van Gogh copy of a Hiroshige print; on the vogue for new religions . . . on mixed marriages, the geisha myth. . . . His valedictory to Arcadia makes a sensitive, shrewd and often painfully funny book." Christopher Wordsworth

New Statesman 83:362 Mr 17 '72 410w

N Y Times Bk R p36 Mr 26 '72 100w

RICHMOND, HUGH M. Shakespeare's sexual comedy; a mirror for lovers. 210p $7.50 Bobbs 822.3 Shakespeare, William—Comedies. Sex
LC 77-155437

A professor of English at the University of California asserts "that Shakespeare has much to teach us about love; to a society wrenched by facile and violent idealism, he holds up the sane laughter of Beatrice and Benedick, the knowing flexibility of Rosalind, the adroitness of Cleopatra, against Romeo's humorless and death-dealing romanticism. Moving from play to play, Mr. Richmond demonstrates his thesis: far from being something to fall into, love is far too potent and dangerous to be left to the inexperienced or the doctrinaire. Sexual disaster can be averted only through resilience, realism, and a sense of humor. 'Laughter,' he concludes, 'is the only seasoning for love.'" (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[The author] brings together theories of what literature is, of what love is, and what personality is. (Incidentally, I grudgingly concede that the book is worth its rather high price.) His theory of literature is that it is a model of reality that helps ordinary men cope with that reality. People read Shakespeare for a corrective vision of the present. Richmond contends that Shakespeare's vision of sexual desire yields a theory of personality and a theory of love which are a corrective to the excesses of both old-fashioned rigid morality and modern neo-romanticism. . . . [His] constant effort is to relate Shakespeare to the quality of contemporary American life. It is worth doing, and here it is done well. The book belongs on every Shakespeare teacher's reserve-shelf." T. H. Stahel

America 126:27 Ja '72 1100w
Choice 9:216 Ap '72 160w

"Posthumus and Timon, Romeo and Antony, Pandarus and Angelo, between them surely indicate that Shakespeare shared all the common human confusion about sex and knew what it was to be passion's slave. The fact that he could make superb dramatic poetry out of this particular quarrel with himself does not entitle us to turn him into a marriage guidance counsellor. But then Professor Richmond's prime concern is not with the plays. He is troubled by the mores of Californian campuses. . . . The reader who cares for Shakespeare's plays as the artefacts of an intelligence that we should not twist to serve our own concerns will find . . . Professor Richmond's [book] somewhat barbarous. But he will also have to admit that [it] calls forth an alert response." M. M. Mahood

Encounter 38:55 D '71 $00w

Reviewed by J. H. Crouch
Library J 96:2321 Jl '71 100w

"An attempt at with-it Shakespeare criticism. Opening paragraph about how the book was 'conceived in a Paris flat on the Left Bank . . . born in Berkeley clouded with tear gas . . . etc., etc. Comparisons are thrown around: 'Much Ado' with 'Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf'; discussion of Shakespeare's 'relevance' of LSD. Outa sight." N Y Times Bk R p56 S 26 '71 70w

RICHMOND, STANLEY. Clarinet and saxophone experience. 137p il $8.95 St Martins 788 Wind instruments. Clarinet, Saxophone
ISBN 0-232-51148-9 LC 70-183051

The author's "manual of technical matters concerning the clarinet and saxophone . . . covers the principles of musical acoustics, embouchure, fingering alternatives, intonation, tone, transposition, and . . . other related subjects." (Library J)

"This British publication focuses upon the acoustical-mechanical properties of the clarinet and to a lesser extent the saxophone, rather than upon the physical approach of the player. Richmond deals competently with these aspects of the problem, although the introduction to acoustical terminology is of such brevity as to create problems for the reader who does not have a background in this area. . . . The lack of page numbers accompanying references to illustrated materials and errors in the numbering of illustrations are definite handicaps. The serious student of the clarinet or saxophone will find useful information, particularly that pertaining to reeds and fingerings."

Choice 9:825 S '72 200w

"[This book] fills a need for the music library and the larger general library. . . . [Richmond's] explanations are in clear and simple terms, and his treatment is comprehensive. There is no index, but the chapters are very logically organized so it is possible to find specific information easily. . . . Teachers of woodwind instruments, as well as amateur and professional musicians, will want this compendium of useful information." M. A. Silver
Library J 97:2401 Jl '72 140w

RICHTER, GISELA M. A. The engraved gems of the Greeks, Etruscans and Romans; pt. 2, Engraved gems of the Romans; a supplement to the history of Roman art. 307p pl $50 Phaidon; for sale by Praeger
736 Gems
ISBN 0-7148-1455-5 LC 68-27417

"This second volume of [Richter's work] illustrates in about 780 selected examples the varying styles and subjects used first in the Roman Republican period of the third, second and earlier first century B.C., and then in the early and late Imperial period. . . . The material is arranged according to the subjects represented, with an introductory chapter for each section, preceded by a general introduction dealing with the uses of engraved gems, the choice of designs, the material used, the technique, and the information we have about the artists." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index of collections. Index of subjects. Index of persons and places. For part one see BRD 1969.

"The second volume . . . of Richter's distinguished study is even more fascinating and useful than the first. While the author acknowledges her debt to A. Furtwängler's fundamental Antike gemmen, her work has surpassed this famous classic. . . . The catalogue is full of valuable, often otherwise inaccessible, information and is as thoroughly up to date as anything in print can be. Particularly important are the frequent references throughout the volume to original Greek compositions, many of them lost, as sources for Roman carving. It is this aspect of the book that makes it a major contribution to the history of Roman art. . . . Essential for all research libraries."

Choice 8:1325 D '71 130w

"Part Two could also be subtitled A Supplement to the History of Greek Art, for the author has long specialized in bringing forth the Greek qualities of all ancient art, and these cameos and intaglios are no exception. There are very few gems with subjects that can be termed wholly Roman. . . . The cameo and intaglios have been photographed from the widest possible range of public and private collections. . . . Dedicated students of Greek and Roman gems will need the Richter volumes." C. C. Vermeule

Class World 65:64 O '71 440w

RICHTER, HANS. Hans Richter; ed. by Cleve Gray. 191p il $27.50 Holt

700
ISBN 0-03-083475-9 LC 75-155510

"An anthology of Richter's writings on . . . aspects of his career." (N Y Times Bk R)

Choice 9:638 Jl/Ag '72 170w

"The multi-media roles of Hans Richter are proliferated in this book like so many flashbacks and film cuts—now the soldier, there the student; here the lover, stand back for the philosopher; take heed of the teacher, look out for the lover again—alternating with Richter the editor, Richter the film producer, Richter the camera's eye, Richter the great innovator and enfant terrible. This is a humanized scroll unraveling itself and worthy of the attention of the filmician and the chronicler of twentieth-century art. More important still is the anatomy of the creative process dissected and spread before the reader in many 'moments of purification,' or, as Richter says, 'the result of arriving at Zero.'" Cyril Miles
J Aesthetics 30:549 summer '72 300w

"The sections on Dada are a useful supplement to Richter's own history of the movement, and the material on film will be good source material for historians of the medium. Some of the illustrations are blurry, but on the whole the book has been well-produced. The price is pretty steep, however, for a volume of less than 200 pages." Hilton Kramer
N Y Times Bk R p74 D 5 '71 70w

RICHTMAN, JACK. Adrienne Lecouvreur; the actress and the age; a biography. 240p il $7.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92 Lecouvreur, Adrienne
ISBN 0-13-008698-3 LC 76-164920

The author, "assistant professor of French language and literature at the State University of New York, Albany, has attempted to retrieve Lecouvreur from her own distorted legend. . . . He reviews the main facts of her life—humble birth, rough childhood in Paris [in 1690], early interest in acting, phenomenal rise to success with the Comédie-Française, well-known liaison with Comte Hermann Maurice de Saxe—and of her death, under suspicious circumstances, at 38. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"The true rags-to-riches story of the leading actress of early 18th-century French theater has prompted numerous biographies, novels, plays and an opera. This bright and readable account places her within the social and political world of Louis XIV, the Regency, and Louis XV. . . . This modern examination is scholarly, detailed, and fascinating reading; and, for the first time, we have supportive evidence for a solution to her mysterious death.

RICHTMAN, JACK—Continued

... A welcome addition to shelves of biography, social history, or theater arts."

Choice 9:666 J1/Ag '72 150w

"Richtman's writing style is not always equal to his grand subject, and there are occasional ramblings and euphemisms bordering on the coy. (Lecouvreur, for all her tact and delicacy, was nothing if not direct in her relations with men.) The author has wisely eschewed any attempt at a psychological or psychoanalytical interpretation and has offered his explanations on the basis of carefully considered evidence. Not the definitive biography of Lecouvreur, but a well-researched work, the only serious effort in English." H. E. Whitmore

Library J 97:2084 Je 1 '72 300w

RICKARDS, MAURICE. The rise and fall of the poster. 111p il col il $6.95 McGraw

741.67 Posters—History

SBN 07-062619-2 LC 71-155883

The author traces the evolution of the poster from its "beginnings in the early eighteenth century, through a heyday in the early 1900s and the 'Indian summer' of the twenties and thirties, to the television-dominated post-war era. Throughout, the stress is on the poster's practical role ■ ■ persuader." (Publisher's note)

"This book must be viewed as irrelevant from ■ scholarly point of view since it contains no new information. ■ However, if an inexpensive and minimally adequate history of the poster, is desired [it] may fill the bill. No index."

Choice 9:632 J1/Ag '72 150w

"While [the] text (33 pages) is somewhat conservative and biased in ■ British style, it forms one of the most interesting and readable of brief histories of the poster. Unfortunately, however, [Rickard's] selection of 233 illustrations (20 color) is not inspired; and the fidelity of their reproduction is terrible."

Andrew Robison

Library J 97:1422 Ap 15 '72 100w

RICKMAN, GEOFFREY. Roman granaries and store buildings. 349p il $25 Cambridge

725 Granaries

ISBN 0-521-07724-9 LC 76-116843

"Using the evidence of inscriptions, papyri and legal documents, in particular the Codex Theodosianus, in which are preserved the rescripts of Emperors of the late fourth and early fifth centuries, Dr Rickman describes the organization and running of [civil and military repositories for grain]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. General index. Index of classical authors; of inscriptions; of papyri; of Greek words.

"The importance of [this] work is that [the author] is able, through the study of one type of building common to the Roman Empire, to learn more about such subjects ■ Roman commerce and the military system. This book should certainly find a place in any collection of Roman history or architecture."

Choice 8:1372 D '71 160w

"This is a quite competent, well-organized and significant survey of the horrea—warehouses of all types—of Rome. Civil and military horrea are treated separately; the treatment is chronological, from early to late empire, and topical, discussing design, structure, and organization. There are six appendices dealing with specific problems. The most important of these, on the function of the praefectus annonae, draws together information on the total grain supply of the city of Rome. The volume draws upon archaeological information from all over the Empire, with emphasis, naturally, upon remains at Ostia and Rome. ■ ■ Such a book can be dry. ■ Yet in its overall impact, this book is not dull at all. It manages to shed light in several areas of significance to the social, economic, and political history of the Roman Empire. ■ ■ [This excellent study] is far more interesting and significant than the title might imply." H. C. Boren

Class World 65:103 N '71 850w

"Where Ostia, Portus, and Rome are concerned, corn is the major interest. More than half a million tons (the equivalent of 10½ million sacks) were unloaded each year at the port from ships of, on an average, seventy-five tons capacity, carried on the backs of porters into warehouses, brought out again for towing upstream to Rome in lighters (whose capacity was nearly seventy tons).... It is salutary as you scorch back to Rome from Ostia Lido in under half an hour in your Alfa Romeo to recollect that the laborious journey up-river was, for the towers, a three-day business. ■ ■ Archaeologists and Roman historians alike will go to this book for information. Dr Rickman has tackled an unromantic subject with scholarly discrimination."

TLS p744 Je 25 '71 700w

RICKS, CHRISTOPHER. Tennyson. (Masters of world lit. ser) 349p $8.95; pa $3.95 Macmillan (NY)

821 Tennyson, Alfred, Lord

LC 76-165569

This "volume has a threefold purpose: to show what went into the making of Tennyson the man; to establish the distinct power, subtlety, and variety of his poems along with the artistic principles and preoccupations that shaped his work; and to suggest the relationships between the man and the poet." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This is] a major work of criticism and by far the best book on Tennyson since Harold Nicolson's revaluation 50 years ago [Tennyson, BRD 1923]. Always Ricks has his eye on the language, on Tennyson's use of words in profoundly creative ways, or on his unsatisfactory manipulating of them in 'Tennysonian' ways. Ricks shows how, in the finest poems, Tennyson's is in 'art of the penultimate,' the poems not concluding themselves but hanging suspended in some compelling inconclusiveness. Particularly fine on 'The Lady of Shalott,' 'Ulysses,' 'Tears, idle tears,' and 'Maud,' the criticism never dwells on the obvious, and by reconsidering conventional wisdom about the poems discovers new truth about them. The biography is told with sympathy and psychological acuteness."

Choice 9:817 S '72 250w

"[Ricks responds] sympathetically to Tennyson's poetry. He has edited the recently published annotated edition of the complete poetic works, and in this workmanlike study he combines critical commentary with an account of Tennyson's life. For the biography he has been able to draw on papers only recently made accessible. ■ ■ Professor Ricks has constructed his portrait with detachment."

Economist 244:49 Ag 12 '72 350w

"The Tennyson story, seen as a whole, has an almost preposterously fictional quality. ■ ■ Rick's sharply observed and rousing book ■ ■ [fills in several] of the biographical blanks; it looks again at the charming elusive Hallam—the more elusive since Arthur's father and Alfred's son destroyed what letters remained between the two. Was Arthur always radiant light to Alfred's gloom? True, there are areas scarcely touched—the changing nature of reputation, say. Still, the field is vast. ■ ■ Naomi Lewis

New Statesman 84:475 O 6 '72 1150w

Reviewed by R. W. Flint

N Y Rev of Books 19:28 N 2 '72 1750w

"[The author's] shrewd and sympathetic record of the facts of Tennyson's life helps us to focus more sharply on the distinctive features of Tennyson's work. ■ ■ [Rick's] intimacy both with Tennyson's normal methods of composition and with the unique processes which yielded certain individual poems enables him freshly to illuminate works as different as In Memoriam and Idylls of the King. ■ ■ This compact but comprehensive study seems likely to remain for the foreseeable future our most useful and stimulating general introduction to Tennyson's poetry and life."

TLS p988 Ag 25 '72 700w

RIDGWAY, SAM H., ed. Mammals of the sea: biology and medicine. 812p il $45 Thomas, C.C.

599 Mammals. Marine animals. Marine biology

ISBN 0-398-02389-1 LC 78-143753

"The first quarter of the book is devoted to ■ ■ brief summaries of the 'general biology' of each living species of cetacean, pinniped and sirenian, and of sea otter. ■ ■ The remainder of the book is devoted to anatomy (three chapters), behavior and senses (two), evolution and cytogenetics (one), and parasites (one), ending with a 160-page chapter on physiology, medicine, and husbandry." (Science) Chapter bibliographies. Name index. Subject index.

"[This] contribution to the general biology and parasitology of marine mammals . . . furnishes a useful companion volume to Whales, dolphins, and porpoises [BRD 1966] edited by K. S. Norris. . . The chapters are uneven in length (17 to 200 pages) as well as in quality, but the book is technically well produced and is well illustrated with many valuable anatomical diagrams, photomicrographs not easy to locate elsewhere, and summaries of physiological data. Reference lists are extensive."

Choice 9:528 Je '72 140w

"A more integrated, functional arrangement would have made this book more convenient as a reference. As it is, to obtain information on reproduction, for example, the reader must consult the separate chapters on anatomy, behavior, and physiology. This is facilitated by the exemplary 62-page index. The book has far too many misprints. Biologists, veterinarians, keepers, and trainers who work with marine mammals will find this book one of the most useful sources of information and references." D. W. Rice.
Science 176:903 My 26 '72 500w

RIEGER, SHAY. Animals in wood [phot. by Eeva and by James Calonis]. unpag. lib. bdg $4.95 Scribner

736 Wood carving—Juvenile literature. Animals in art—Juvenile literature
SBN 684-12322-3 LC 70-143928

In this book the author describes how she sculpts in wood. "There is a photograph of each real animal, then the artist's . . . line drawing, and finally one or two photographs of the finished piece—by itself and/or in a setting. . . . There are also five pages devoted to showing the artist at work with a piece of wood which turns into a sea gull. . . . Grade three and up." (Library J)

"The beautiful photographs of wood sculptures and the simple text help to create an appreciation for art."

Horn Bk 48:165 Ap '72 40w

"[The author] makes it very easy to see the transition between the real and the portrayed in this book on wood sculpture. . . . Her animals are whimsical, warm and alive. . . . [Unfortunately] she writes as though addressing pre-schoolers and primary grade children, but the skills are technically beyond the motor control of most young children. . . . However, this is the only book available that deals with wood sculpture alone; and as a book on the appreciation of that medium, it is worthy of a place on middle-grade shelves." B. G. Mulconry
Library J 96:2366 Jl '71 160w

RIEGLE, DONALD. O Congress [by] Donald Riegle, with Trevor Armbrister. 297p $7.95 Doubleday

328.73 U.S.—Politics and government—1961-.
U.S. Congress. House
LC 71-132842

This is a personal account of one year in a congressman's life. "Riegle is a young Republican representative from Michigan who has recently been in trouble with his own party for opposing President Nixon on a variety of issues, from the war to the economy. He kept this diary for publication in order to help voters learn about the House, how it works, and what a representative's life is like." (New Yorker)

"Riegle writes with wit about his pompous colleagues and with warmth and feeling about the tragedy of his divorce and his separation from his young children. More importantly, he conveys the feeling of frustration and alienation that the staid, tradition-ridden Congress evokes among young, ambitious, and humanistic agents of change. Recommended." F. A. Burdick
Library J 97:2615 Ag '72 110w

Reviewed by Jeanne Cavallini
Library J 97:4096 D 15 '72 160w [YA]

"I wanted to read O Congress because of the favorable impression Riegle made before an audience of conventioners in Detroit last April. . . . Unfortunately, the book does not measure up to expectations. Condensed from 4000 pages of material dictated or written by Riegle over a one-year period, it is structurally a swamp. His assistant Trevor Armbrister must have made a valiant effort to get the thing together, but like those fashionable books of instant sociology, it remains overburdened with the shortcomings of ordinary speech. As a diarist a Pepsy the congressman is not." Robert Cassidy

New Repub 167:34 S 2 '72 500w

"Riegle is more novelist than haranguer. The passages that deal with his personal life—his divorce, the wrenching separation from his children, his remarriage—are in themselves little exercises in courage and often achieve a kind of lyricism. Even the insider's view he offers of the McCloskey campaign is more implicit than explicit, meditative rather than judgmental. . . . Riegle himself comes across as a man adrift—a man who recognizes the need for social and political change but is unable to break what seems to be an almost umbilical tie to his party." Stephanie Harrington
N Y Times Bk R p5 Jl 2 '72 750w

New Yorker 48:78 Jl 22 '72 120w

"Congressman Riegle's yearlong diary (beginning in April last year), kept while Congress was in session [was] . . . printed, he says, to 'prompt a few young people to enter politics.' Yet [his] account of his frustrations in one of America's most intractable institutions seems far more likely to turn young idealists away from Congress—at least as an instrument for change. It did not take the new Congressman long to learn that he had only three unhappy choices in the House of Representatives: 1) 'play the game and be one of the boys,' hoping to accumulate power gradually; 2) quit and try to influence policy through administrative jobs at federal, state or city levels back home; 3) stay and fight outside 'established traditional paths.' Riegle chose the third." Edward Magnuson

Time 100:77 Jl 24 '72 600w

RIEPE, DALE MAURICE. The philosophy of India and its impact on American thought. (Am. lectures in philosophy) 339p il $17.75 Thomas, C.C.

191 Philosophy, Hindu. Philosophy, American
LC 75-97533

"Riepe's account of the impact of Indian thought, both Hindu and Buddhist, on American philosophy . . . begins in the 1700s and leads directly to the Romantic movement—to Emerson, Thoreau, . . . the St. Louis Hegelians, Paul Carus, Theosophy, and spiritualism. He next considers the founding of Ramakrishna-Vivekananda centers and other influences preceding 1900. . . . [Harvard University] emerges (1885-1915) as a seminary for Oriental studies in the labors of William James, Charles Lanman, Josiah Royce [and others]. . . . [A chapter] on George Santayana precedes one on the key persons who anticipated the Depression years. . . . and on the earliest Oriental societies. [There follows] a series of . . . portraits with philosophical analyses of Orientalists who flourished from the Depression to our own day." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"[The author's] discriminating judgment, everywhere apparent, convinces the reader that he himself may be one of the prophets! The conclusion explains why 'India has had more influence on American philosophic thought than any other non-Western culture.'" K. W. Cameron
Am Hist R 77:201 F '72 280w

"The book contains a good deal of biographic and bibliographic information on several dozen often obscure and relatively unknown American philosophers. . . . Although it should not be purchased as an introduction to Indian philosophy, it does contain a number of excellent quotations that give one a sense of the main thrust of Indian philosophizing. The book is witty and well written, but it tends to emphasize detailed biography and exposition and scant on illuminating criticism. It contains an excellent bibliography and index. Recommended for academic and large public libraries." F. C. Motley
Library J 96:82 Ja 1 '71 140w

RIMANELLI, GIOSE. Poems make pictures; pictures make poems; poems by Giose Rimanelli and Paul Pimsleur; pictures by Ronni Solbert; lettering by John Slorp. unp lib bdg $4.39 Pantheon bks.

811
ISBN 0-394-92387-1 LC 70-175950

A picture book of poems. "Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"In order to read this collection of so-called poems, one is obliged to continuously turn the book around since the words are positioned to constitute the outline of an animal or an object. The discouraging result of the 'poems make pictures' concept is that in some cases it is almost impossible to determine the word order. In any case, the words are often pedestrian ('No, I won't wear shoes'), or nonsensical ('A boat is often called a ship, but I call it a boat'). Ronni Solbert's orange and blue crayon drawings may appeal to children, but they hardly justify purchase of this slim but expensive item by budget-conscious libraries." Daisy Kouzel
Library J 97:2941 S 15 '72 110w

"Obviously the work of a committee. The poems are not poems, the drawings are dull, the lettering is hard to read. Enough!" L. E. Sissman

N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 25 '72 130w

RINKOFF, BARBARA. Guess what grasses do; il. by Beatrice Darwin. unp $3.95; lib bdg $3.78 Lothrop

633 Grasses—Juvenile literature
LC 76-177316

The author "tells how grasses are important to us and to other creatures large and small. The . . . [illustrations] show the many ways that grasses are used for food, for shelter, and for fun." (Publisher's note) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"A simple, brief text, which is set like short lines of poetry and illustrated on every page by silk-screen prints in one, two, or three colors. Text and illustrations give this informational volume the appearance of an attractive picture book for the youngest. Facts about many kinds of grasses are presented." V. H.

Horn Bk 48:263 Je '72 150w

"The elementary factual information is sociological rather than scientific; human needs are emphasized. The ecological importance of preventing erosion and harboring insects and small animals is mentioned. Rinkoff does not explain which parts of the plants are used, how they are treated, where they grow, or exactly what grass is. . . . Still, this title could be useful as an introduction to plant study or for fostering an appreciation of nature's abundance." Muriel Kolb
Library J 97:2479 J1 '72 150w

RISTELHUEBER, RENÉ. A history of the Balkan peoples; ed. and tr. by Sherman David Spector. 470p maps $7.50 Twayne

949.6 Balkan Peninsula—History. Ethnology —Balkan Peninsula
LC 78-147184

"Ristelhueber was a member of the French diplomatic corps, who served in the Balkans and . . . published this history in French in 1950. Spector, [an] American specialist on the Balkans, has translated and edited the original work. He has added a supplementary chapter covering the years since 1950 and his own conclusion. In addition, he has provided [a] general bibliography." (Choice) "Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"This volume does not supersede the standard work by L. S. Stavrianos, The Balkans since 1453. Whereas Stavrianos' book is written for the scholar and specialist, this volume is directed to the general reader and undergraduate. It provides a brief survey of the political and diplomatic history of the Balkan states; it does not probe into the socioeconomic problems of the area. It is an acceptable introduction." Choice 9:870 S '72 130w

"Written in a popular style, without documentation (not counting a highly selective bibliography), this introductory text provides general historical information for several nationalities of the Balkan peninsula, including Greeks, Romanians, Bulgarians, Albanians, Turks, Serbs, and others. . . . One finds also a helpful chronological table that compares major historical developments among several nationalities in the area. One of the weakest points in the book is the historical treatment of Moldavia, as evidenced even in the above mentioned chronological table. Nevertheless, this is a handy volume of essential information on this subject that will provide sufficient background for the uninitiated." B. S. Wynar

Library J 97:873 Mr 1 '72 120w

RITTENHOUSE, JACK D. The Santa Fe Trail; a historical bibliography. 271p pl $12 Univ. of N.Mex. press

016.9173 Santa Fe Trail—Bibliography
ISBN 0-8263-0206-8 LC 72-153936

"This bibliography is published in celebration of the 150th anniversary of the opening of the Santa Fe Trail. There is a short introduction giving a brief history of the trail and describing the men who traveled it. There are entries for some 350 books, 250 articles, and [over] 100 congressional reports. Entries are described and evaluated; first editions are noted and recent reprints listed." (Library J) Index. Index to Congressional documents.

"First-rate contribution to the field of Western Americana. Rittenhouse has progressed from a buff to a serious researcher and bibliographer. . . . [He] has provided a superb introduction. Indispensable for any school or library that wants to keep up its Western history holdings."

Choice 8:1163 N '71 90w

"An important acquisition for subject collections." H. E. Smith

Library J 96:3314 O 15 '71 80w

RIVERA, FELICIANO, jt. auth. Chicanos. See Meier, M. S.

RIVERA, GERALDO. Willowbrook; a report on how it is and why it doesn't have to be that way. 147p il $6.95 Random house; pa $2.95 Vintage

070.4 New York (State). Willowbrook State School, Staten Island
ISBN 0-394-43180-1; 0-394-71844-5 (pa)
LC 72-265

In early 1972, Willowbrook, a New York State "school" for the mentally retarded was "understaffed by hundreds, allowing a 30-or 40-to-one patient-attendant ratio. The results ranged from neglect of minimal survival needs of the most 'severely and profoundly retarded' inmates to severe limitations on habilitation efforts for the less afflicted. Now Rivera [who did a series uncovering conditions there on ABC Eyewitness News, tells] how he came to do the series, some of the obstacles he faced, and the public's . . . expression of outrage. He includes his trips to Letchworth Village . . . Suffolk State School . . . and out to California, where they have solved the mass institution problem and their mentally retarded are treated as individuals, . . . who are taught, cared for, and loved." (Library J)

"[This volume documents one] of the great failures of our society. . . . [It] apparently has less impact than [the] television program did."

Best Sell 32:221 Ag 1 '72 150w

"[In spite of] the fact that many sections are quite moving, I'm sorry Rivera did the book. There's too much pat-myself-on-the-back stuff which is unlike Rivera and which doesn't belong in this story about Willowbrook, not Rivera. Rivera admits he was looking for a BIG story, something as big as the drug thing he did; but when he found Willowbrook, it became total involvement for him. Yet he comes off as being purely on an ego trip. On the air Rivera was obviously touched, upset, and outraged at what he found. And he was able to move the public to action. The photographs in the book are the story as they were on the air. The written words are as cold and as empty as the tile floors and unlived lives of the children of Willowbrook." I. S. Land
Library J 97:2197 Je 15 '72 320w

RIVKIN, ROBERT S. GI rights and army justice; the draftee's guide to military law and law. 333p $8.50 Grove

355.1 Military law. U.S.—Armed Forces
LC 77-116172

The author discusses "the way the military justice system works both in theory and in practice, he alerts soldiers to their already existing rights during basic training, their rights to privacy, their rights to complain, to disobey illegal orders and their right to know their rights. In addition, he discusses administrative discharges and conscientious objection." (New Repub)

"This is not a 'how to do it yourself' law book. . . . [It] indicates the great need for reform under military law. Intended as a guidebook . . . [its] main thesis is that the military have a duty to honor our country's constitution; otherwise, the values of the entire nation are threatened. . . . Recommended for public, university, and law libraries."

R. M. Mersky

Library J 95:2445 J1 '70 130w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman

Library J 96:291 Ja 15 '71 100w [YA]

"[This book] fills a void in current military justice literature. It is critical of military justice, to be sure, for there is much to criticize. This criticism is, however, but a necessary by-product of Rivkin's first goal, to assist the draftee 'within the law to endure his chosen alternative.' In this, he succeeds admirably. . . . Mr. Rivkin's advice is cautious, consistent with his concern for the welfare of the average GI who does not want to become a notorious test case. . . . [He] speaks to the draftee's fears and speaks in their lingo." P. C. Saunders

New Repub 163:27 Ag 29 '70 1200w

RIZZI, ALDO. The etchings of the Tiepolos [tr. by Lucia Wildt]. complete ed 456p il $55 Phaidon

767 Tiepolo, Giovanni Battista. Tiepolo, Giovanni Domenico. Tiepolo, Lorenzo Baldissera

ISBN 0-7148-1499-7 LC 79-162313

"In the autumn of 1970, the bicentenary of Giovanni Battista Tiepolo's death was celebrated at Udine by an extensive exhibition, 'Le acqueforti dei Tiepolo', organized by Aldo Rizzi, the . . . director of the city's municipal museum. . . . [The present] volume is in effect a translation and revision of [the catalogue of that exhibition] for which the author has written a new . . . preface. To his early catalogue Dr Rizzi has added to the oeuvre of Giambattista: one work unrecorded in the earlier volume; . . . two prints to that of Giandomenico . . . and one by Lorenzo, of which a unique state has recently come to light in the Gabinetto Nazionale delle Stampe at Rome." (TLS) Concordance to the catalogue numbers from De Vesme's Le peintre-graveur italien. Bibliography. Index of names.

"The entries for each work are exact and complete, and many related or preparatory drawings for the prints are illustrated. . . . The brief introductory text is largely a critical analysis of earlier literature and it presupposes a familiarity with the subject. Still, it will serve as an excellent guide for the student, and this corpus of beautiful and intriguing images belongs in every library that has a serious interest in the history of art. The reproductions . . . are very good, and the translation reads smoothly."

Choice 9:361 O '72 150w

"The importance of the Tiepolos' etchings is sadly mismatched by the lack of accurate and convincing publications on them. While this cannot be considered a definitive catalogue raisonné, it is a good and long-overdue step in that direction. For the first time a book gives complete reproductions of all the prints; and even if their fidelity is sometimes very poor, their value as a visual record is enormous. Rizzi's general introduction . . . has some original suggestions concerning the prints, but it is largely a rehash of previous scholarly opinions. The detailed catalog listings show a first-draft attempt at state distinctions and refer to a number of unusual impressions, but are primarily concerned with the drawings and paintings which underlie the prints. On the whole, a most basic compendium and tool for further research." Andrew Robison

Library J 97:2178 Je 15 '72 130w

"The large, well-illustrated catalogue produced [at the exhibition at Udine] formed the most comprehensive study of the etchings of the three Tiepolos, available at that date and amplified in several respects, the earlier catalogue published in de Vesme's Le peintre-graveur italien in 1906. . . . All the etchings are reproduced on a legible scale and the author has added and illustrated thirteen further works, produced either by G. B. Tiepolo in collaboration with other artists or by imitators of his style—and those that have been wrongly attributed to him by earlier writers. The result is a valuable and interesting book and one exceedingly pleasing to the eye."

TLS p368 Mr 31 '72 900w

RIZZUTO, ANTHONY. Style and theme in Reverdy's Les ardoises du toit. 204p $7.50 Univ. of Ala. press

841 Reverdy, Pierre—Les ardoises du toit
ISBN 8173-7603-8 LC 72-135706

This is a "study of a collection of Reverdy's best poems as they relate to vocabulary, intensification, metaphor, rhyme and meter, and visual verse. [Rizzuto] proceeds from the simple to the complex (from word to word order) and examines those categories of devices and themes that permeate most of Reverdy's work. The uniqueness of the individual poem is properly restored at the end by a careful textual analysis of the piece, 'Pointe,' where the poet intensifies his fear of and fascination with death." (Choice) Bibliography. Index to poems.

Choice 8:1590 F '72 180w

"Although I admire Anthony Rizzuto's determination to work directly from the texts, the impact of so much detailed analysis of minutiae unrelieved by more general critical preoccupations or by comparisons with other studies gives an aura of heavy tedium. This is too bad, because Rizzuto has a poet's feeling for languages. Occasionally he comes up with a most interesting and revealing comment on Reverdy's style." Mortimer Guiney

Mod Lang J 56:471 N '72 600w

"[This] is a superb stylistic analysis of a 1918 collection of eighty-one short poems. [Rizzuto] neglects no aspect, verbal, aural, or visual. And the poems are still poetry at the end. Since he supplies almost no translations . . . and sticks strictly to the text, this is a book for specialists and students of French poetry. Their gain."

N Y Rev of Books 18:25 Je 1 '72 70w

ROACH, JACK L., jt. ed. Radical sociology. See Colfax, J. D.

ROACH, JOHN. Public examinations in England, 1850-1900. 299p $13.50 Cambridge

371. Examinations. Education—Great Britain
ISBN 0-521-07931-4 LC [71-123668]

This is an "historical account of the origins of the modern examination system in England from 1850-1900. . . . Professor Roach discusses the assumptions and intentions behind the introduction of examinations, particularly in the secondary schools, the universities and the Civil Service. He shows how far in practice the aspirations of the reformers were achieved or disappointed, and considers some of the educational and social results of the implementation of their policies." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This thoroughly documented analytical and descriptive study holds that the outlines of the 19th-century system prevail still in 20th-century England. Recommended as standard work on its subject."

Choice 9:261 Ap '72 140w

"Roach's book is a model of its kind; excellently produced, well written, scholarly work at its best. It can be heartily recommended. . . . Basically the history of the Oxford and Cambridge local examinations, it describes how the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge were brought first of all into a system of examining individual candidates, and eventually into an arrangement whereby they, and similar institutions copied from them, provided the main school-leaving examination in England. The effects of this on the curriculum and structure of the schools, particularly the girls' schools, and on the calibre of the entrants to the universities, as well as its relationship to the spread of competitive examinations for the Indian Civil Service and the Civil Service, are meticulously and often hilariously pointed out."

TLS p834 J1 16 '71 1300w

ROBBE-GRILLET, ALAIN, jt. auth. Dreams of a young girl. See Hamilton, D.

ROBBE-GRILLET, ALAIN. Project for a revolution in New York; a novel; tr. from the French by Richard Howard. 183p $5.95; pb $1.65 Grove

ISBN 0-394-48020-1 LC 77-187581

"This novel involves a mysterious revolutionary organization in New York City which deals with drugs, sexual perversion, blackmail, and other evils. Since crime, we are informed, 'is indispensable to the revolution,' the book is filled with 'rape, murder and arson,' activities which, it is claimed, will 'free the blacks, the impoverished proletariat and the intellectual workers from their slavery' as well as 'the bourgeoisie from its sexual complexes.'" (Best Sell)

"We are offered an incoherent story and images of violence, brutality, and bestiality. Lies mingle with truth, reality and fantasy; for example, scenes of the moment are interspersed with material from a pornographic pulp magazine. The novel's main feature consists of numerous lurid descriptions of the sadistic torturing and killing of girls. . . . Since [Robbe-Grillet] is widely known as the author of the well-received film 'Last Year at Marienbad,' one comes to his work with attention. . . . [He] now offers nothing but excessive and incredibly repulsive sadism; in fact, he makes de Sade seem like Sesame Street. This is a totally disgusting novel, frightfully degenerate, and . . . possesses no redeeming social values. This book is sheer pornography of the lowest type and the product of a man who has now been reduced to catering to sick minds." P. A. Doyle
Best Sell 32:158 J1 1 '72 300w

"[Robbe-Grillet's] novelties have worn themselves thin. He does not seem to break any really new ground with Project. There is still some enjoyment in seeing how he adapts his slicing in and out, his repetitions, his dwelling on minute details to suggest linking and overlapping slices of American violence, eroticism, and revolutionary politics. (Alas! The themes are thin too.) And perhaps one can simply fall backwards into the novel and be carried along. But the present novel seems likely to appeal only to those who still like to play the detective and puzzle it out. [The] translator gets Robbe-Grillet's objective, clear-cut diction into English with no real trouble."

Choice 9:1138 N '72 180w

Reviewed by John Weightman

N Y Rev of Books 18:6 Je 1 '72 2700w

"The great dangers that threaten this kind of fiction are triviality leading to boredom, and excessive mannerism. . . . 'Project for a Revolution in New York' would make a great novel to explicate; it is harder to read. I am not fully satisfied by a story without human content, or in which human content is systematically dismembered and never reconstituted. This mystery story has no conclusion and no solution. I kept looking for the body of the text. When, every so often, I found it for a page or two, it was quickly snatched away again." Roger Shattuck

N Y Times Bk R p5 My 28 '72 1100w

ROBBINS, CLIVE, Jr. auth. Therapy in music for handicapped children. See Nordoff, P.

ROBBINS, HAROLD. The Betsy. 502p $7.95 Trident press

ISBN 0-671-27086-9 LC 74-169136

"The Betsy' is a car—the car of tomorrow—the golden-age dream of motor magnate Loren Hardeman I. . . . Angelo Perino, his protégé, a fearless racing car driver and builder, becomes the target—as he is caught mid-stream—in the crossfire of the Hardeman family's feud for power and position. Junior, the weak son, thoroughly emasculated by his domineering, disinterested father's seeming strength; Loren III, grandson, fighting the tough old man with his own ruthless business tactics; and the lovely wild young granddaughter, Betsy, complete the Bethlehem Motors Co., dynasty." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by J. E. Oppenheim

Best Sell 31:427 D 15 '71 250w

"The Henry Fords need not worry: The Detroit auto dynasty featured in this new Harold Robbins 'novel' resembles them only in the incredible chutzpah of its author's intentions, not in any of its actual characters, which make Archie Andrews, Jughead, and Mrs. Grundy into complex, pulsing human beings by comparison. Here we go again: more than 500 pages of carefully regulated formula sex scenes (Harold Robbins still hasn't learned the facts of life) and wild-eyed power schemes." Sara Blackburn

Book World p10 F 20 '72 140w

"[The 'granddaughter'] is actually the Old Man's daughter by his daughter-in-law, whose husband was That Way and so not a Real Man. In his day the Old Man was quite a stud, like his young sidekick Angelo Perrino. . . . There is too much incomprehensible boardroom intrigue, and the book isn't preposterously sweeping as The Carpetbaggers [BRD 1961]; but unless one takes Robbins seriously enough to be offended by his dumb phrasing and the often inhuman values his novels display, The Betsy has its lively moments, and Robbins is without doubt a better stylist than Jacqueline Susann." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:4031 D 1 '71 180w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p20 D 19 '71 140w

ROBBINS, LIONEL CHARLES ROBBINS, Baron. See Robbins, Lord

ROBBINS, LORD. Autobiography of an economist. 301p pl $10 St Martins

$30.0924

ISBN 333-12508-8 LC 70-160137

The author "describes his academic career, giving [an] account of his life at the London School of Economics in which he has been student, lecturer, professor and eventually a member of the governing body. [He] also describes his public life, giving a personal view of some of the great economic and political controversies of the inter-war period . . . (and including an . . . account of his experiences in government service during the last war. . . . [He describes his later] activities as art administrator at the National Gallery and the Royal Opera House, and as Chairman of the Committee on Higher Education, which produced the 'Robbins Report'; finally his experiences in business affairs." (Publisher's note) Index of proper names.

Economist 240:59 S 18 '71 750w

"Reading the book makes it very clear that the great love of [the author's] life has been the London School of Economics, and not economics itself. . . . The most interesting chapters of the autobiography, for professional economists, are those on the LSE in the 1930s and on [Robbins'] service in the Economic Section of the Offices of the War Cabinet . . . [in particular] the inside story of Keynes negotiations with the Americans over the plan for international economic reconstruction, and the substantial grant that Keynes mistakenly thought he could get; here Robbins emphasizes the fact that the British were up against the wall to an extent that few British economists and politicians really grasped. . . . Like all that Lord Robbins writes, this book is beautifully written . . . (and there are) enlightening character sketches of the great economists of the time, [with] enough serious discussion of economic issues to make the book instructive as well as entertaining." H. G. Johnson J Pol Econ 80:835 J1/Ag '72 600w

"Lord Robbins's autobiographical study . . . of an economist's life and development . . . fascinates, with its nicely calculated attributions of influences and impacts of a personal and doctrinal kind. . . . [He] obeys one self-denying ordinance: the story of the [1968-69] troubles at LSE and of his part in them is reserved for another time; but for the rest, here is the story of his going on to preside over the progressive prospering of that vast publishing empire which embraces the Financial Times, The Economist and other financial, medical and specialist periodicals, to say nothing of Longmans, Oliver and Boyd, and now Penguins. Meanwhile throughout it all runs the thread of his happy marriage and family life, his love of and work for art (inspired first by his brother-in-law, Clive Gardiner), the National Gallery, Covent Garden opera, and much else aesthetic."

TLS p1197 O 8 '71 300w

ROBBINS, LORD. Money, trade and international relations. 282p il $11 St Martins

382.1 Economic policy. Finance, International. Commercial policy
ISBN 0-333-12517-7 LC 74-154021

These "papers deal with the public policy aspects of full employment, price stability, and international financial relations. Index." (Choice)

"Eleven papers, seven of which are reprints originally published in 1954 in The Economist in the twentieth century and other lectures on political economy (1954). Of the remaining four, two were published in Robbins' Politics and economics [BRD 1964], and one was published in his Economic basis of class conflict [BRD 1939]. Only one paper, the introduction, is entirely new, and it summarizes the contents of the other 10. . . . [The book] is written in a pompous style with abundant use of the first person singular pronoun. An unlikely reference for any course, graduate or undergraduate." Choice 9:410 My '72 130w

"[The] reflective 'general view' of economic problems since the war [in the introductory chapter] has the particular virtue of gently rubbing home all the best arguments that should be borne in mind by those who may often disagree with [Robbins]. . . . It contains one of the best arguments to be found anywhere for curbing aggregate demand to counter inflation, an intriguing analysis of how an expected inflation can have much worse consequences than an unexpected inflation, and a discussion of fluctuating exchange rates that comes down against absolutely free floating." Economist 240:52 S 4 '71 300w

ROBERT OWEN: aspects of his life and work; a symposium; ed. by John Butt [Eng title: Robert Owen: prince of cotton spinners]. 265p il $11.50 Humanities press

B or 92

ISBN 0-391-00154-X LC 77-147784

In this collection of essays about the life and work of Robert Owen, one essay "relates the story of Orbiston, a Scottish Owenite community that existed and died while Owen was in the United States. . . . Another essay is entitled 'The Industrial Archaeology of New Lanark'; it concentrates on the history of the buildings and emphasizes the years of greatest construction and renovation, years when Owen was not associated with the business. . . . The biographical sections of the book treat Owen thematically: his social and economic thought, his role as an educator, his relations with workingmen and their movements, his role in the agitations for factory reform, and his career as a businessman." (Am Hist R)

"The contributors obviously worked with each other, and there is very little repetition. The essays are broad in scope and cover [Owen's] career beyond New Lanark; they are good summaries. . . . Dr. Butt's own contribution on Owen as a businessman is outstanding. [Some of the] essays cover ground that has been well explored previously, and consequently they contribute less to Owen scholarship. Their total effect is to give only a glimpse of his complexity. . . . The problem with the book is that it has no clearly formulated historical purpose. The stated purpose of biography sits badly with the table of contents. The biographical articles land awkwardly between broad coverage and contribution to scholarship. The articles are all good, but they do not add up to anything substantial." T. M. Kemnitz

Am Hist 77:515 Ap '72 550w

"Dr Butt's team of contributors consists mainly of younger scholars from the University of Strathclyde, and his volume has a strong element of industrial archaeology and the advantage of some illustrations of the surviving buildings at New Lanark. . . . [These essays] provide some key pieces towards the completion of the Owen jigsaw, although to appreciate their value a reader requires some grasp of Owen's career and a fair acquaintance with the period. At the end, however, one is left feeling that the general tendency of these new studies is to diminish somewhat Owen's stature as an original thinker and reformer." TLS p1088 S 10 '71 420w

ROBERT OF BASEVORN. The form of preaching. See Murphy, J. J., ed. Three medieval rhetorical arts

ROBERTS, BRIAN. Churchills in Africa. 370p pl $8.50 Taplinger

920 Churchill, Sir Winston Leonard Spencer. Churchill, Lord Randolph Henry Spencer. Wilson, Sarah Isabella Augusta (Spencer-Churchill) Lady
ISBN 0-8008-1580-7 LC 79-148405

This book recounts Lord Randolph's expedition to Mashonaland in 1891, the adventures of his sister Lady Sarah Wilson, known as the "heroine of Mafeking" and Winston Churchill's exploits as correspondent, escaped prisoner of war and army officer. Bibliography. Index.

"For those interested in the colorful adventures of [the Churchills] . . . this book will prove entertaining. For those interested in Africa at the end of the 19th century, it will prove essentially uninformative. Not recommended for serious students or academic libraries." Choice 8:1373 D '71 60w

Choice 8:1373 D '71 60w

"[The author of] Cecil Rhodes and the Princess [BRD 1969], returns to the same era of South African history—the years up to and including the Boer War—for a superb retelling of the exploits of three remarkable Churchills. . . . The focus of Roberts' story is on the youthful exploits and escapades of Winston Churchill, who found in the Boer War a perfect stage for his formidable talent for intrigue, bravado, and sheer zest for life. Roberts skillfully weaves these three lives into a narrative that most readers will find hard to put down." L. S. Fallis

Library J 96:1605 My 1 '71 140w

"Perhaps the liveliest [section] is the one on Lord Randolph. . . . It is a merit of the book that Mr. Roberts brings out the real hardships of [the Mafeking] siege which to some may now appear more of a farce. . . . It was careless of him, however, to pass for publication a map, the only one in the book, which so misrepresents the political boundaries of 1899 as to give a wrong impression both of the Raid and of the War. . . . The story of [Winston Churchill's] escape is well told here again; Mr. Roberts has done some independent research as well as drawing on the standard sources in Churchill's own writings and his son's biography. . . . The period of the 1890s and the early 1900s, when South Africa cast its strongest spell, makes a good story, and Mr. Roberts has told it well, in a fluent style and with an impartiality that is rare in anyone writing on so perennially controversial a subject." TLS p36 Ja 8 '71 1100w

TLS p36 Ja 8 '71 1100w

ROBERTS, BURGERT. Spacewalks. 88p il ill Harper

811

ISBN 06-013571-9 LC 70-156546

The author's "first collection of poems . . . [consist of] 'space tales,' inspired by astronomy, astrology, ancient religions, and . . . by Apollo." (Publisher's note)

"[These] poems consist mainly of longish, short-lined chants. . . . The usually facile and repetitious meter and the over-capitalization of nouns . . . is sometimes hypnotic, as in the best of Whitman, but sometimes merely monotonous and pompous, though suited for lyrics to a popular music not yet invented. . . . Astrology, mysticism, and technology merge rather uneasily in these poems, but sometimes the merging does produce a powerful sense of what man might be if he defined himself as spaceman, and the richly illustrated book is very attractive. A promising poet." Choice 9:216 Ap '72 160w

Choice 9:216 Ap '72 160w

"The publisher's claim that Roberts has 'a firm grasp of space technology and the music of the spheres' is wrong on both counts. Roberts' use of technological jargon reveals a scientific background gleaned from TV Apollo coverage and the shoddier variety of science fiction. As for his poetic sense, the best pieces in this book hardly even rate classification as doggerel. The manuscript would seem to have been chosen for publication on the basis of topicality rather than excellence." P. T. Fanning

Library J 96:3617 N 1 '71 80w

ROBERTS, DONALD F., jt. ed. The process and effects of mass communication. See Schramm, W.

ROBERTS, GEOFFREY K. Political parties and pressure-groups in Britain. 203p $3.95
St Martins

329 Political parties. Politics, Practical.
Great Britain—Politics and government
LC 73-175009

The author discusses the functions of political parties and pressure groups. "He treats their history, organization and functions, and discusses the kind of people who make up their members and leaders. He distinguishes between political parties—which actually seek to control the Government—and pressure-groups, which seek merely to influence its policy on specific issues." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The present work is written in a very lucid and informative way. . . . An analysis of pressure groups is of special value to American readers because an issue-oriented parliamentary system in which party discipline plays a vital part necessarily molds the interest group in a way far different from ours. There is a good chapter on the constraints that exist, and comparisons are drawn with institutions of other countries. Very selective bibliography."

Choice 9:718 J1/Ag '72 180w

Economist 235:53 Je 6 '70 100w

"Perhaps an 'intermediate' book, ■ this sets out to be, has its uses, but it is a little difficult to see what these are. The level of discourse is very elementary. . . . Dr Roberts's main virtue is clarity of exposition. Nothing in this book is difficult to understand; it sets out neatly all the essentials of the subject and illustrates them with apposite examples. As a pre-examination 'quickie' (too late for this year!) it will have its attractions. As a mental stimulant, it can not be given very high marks."

TLS p743 J1 9 '70 $50w

ROBERTS, GEOFFREY K. West German politics. (Studies in comparative politics) 206p $10; pa $4.95 Taplinger

320.943 Germany (Federal Republic)—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8008-8151-6; 08008-8152-4 (pa)
LC 77-185875

This survey of the West German political system is divided into three sections: "historical background; social, geographical, economic, and diplomatic factors; and German political behavior. . . . The author devotes . . . attention to the important political developments which have taken place in Germany during the last three years, and surveys . . . the major areas of political concern in the country today, including foreign and defense policy, overseas aid, economic policy, social policy, and demands for political reform." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"[This] relatively simple guide through the maze of contemporary west German politics can be recommended to would-be explorers with little time at their disposal. . . . [The author has] reassuring words to say about west German democracy, for all its much-publicised failings."

Economist 244:59 J1 22 '72 50w

"In this straightforward treatment of the contemporary political system of the German Federal Republic, Roberts examines the workings of the government, the institutional framework in which it acts and responds, and the characteristics of West Germany's political culture and parties. . . . Bibliographic footnotes are often to German sources; appended is a short bibliography of titles in English. A brief work which covers a lot of territory, Roberts' book offers little probing examination or discussion, though it is quite adequate as a concise introduction to West German politics and political institutions."

Topsy Smalley

Library J 97:2104 Je 1 '72 150w

ROBERTS, KENNETH H. A primer for film making: a complete guide to 16 mm and 35 mm film production [by] Kenneth H. Roberts and Win Sharples, Jr. 546p il $15; pa $6.75 Bobbs

778.5 Moving pictures. Moving pictures—Production and direction
LC 70-91620

The authors discuss "film, lighting, budgets, scripts, editing, optical effects, sound, music, and copyrights. They also offer some . . . advice and a short history of the sound film." (Library J) Bibliography.

"For a book designed, as the title indicates, to be a step-by-step guide through the process of film-making, there is little to fault this work. . . . [The authors] assume little or no prior knowledge and begin, appropriately enough, with a discussion of the budgetary aspects of the process. From there they proceed through a remarkably economic description of the hardware and on through each step down to the final print. If there is a lack, it lies in the treatment of the subjective aspects of film-making, but this is not a serious fault in a work designed as a 'primer.'"

Choice 9:522 Je '72 120w

"At last, a book on film making which covers the subject thoroughly, professionally, and technically, and yet is readable and easily understood. . . . The illustrations and examples are abundant, and the excellent appendixes include a list of significant films by period (and their rental sources), a budget outline, a nomenclature guide, and a selected bibliography. This is an oversized book not only in dimension, but also in content." J. L. Limbacher

Library J 97:1344 Ap 1 '72 100w

ROBERTS, ORAL. The call: an autobiography. 216p pl $4.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Faith cure
LC 79-139057

Roberts describes his "poverty days on a little farm in Pontotoc County, Oklahoma. . . . his early successes and failures as a struggling pastor in the 1940's, his transition to the healing ministry in 1948 and the notoriety that followed, his treks across the country with his 'big tent' Crusades. He tells of the criticism and skepticism that confronted him when he first advocated healing by faith. . . . [his] religious TV programs, and . . . Oral Roberts University . . . [of which he is] President." (Best Sell)

"To ■ vast number of people the name Oral Roberts is synonymous with a psalm-singing shyster who has made it big off religion, but to a multitude of others he is a genuine instrument of God's healing power. This autobiography of one of the noted faith-healers of the past twenty-five years purports to answer the question, 'Who is Oral Roberts?' . . . I'm inclined to say, a very rich minister . . . but Oral himself would say, 'Just the instrument of God who healed him and made him whole and then called him to share this witness with his generation.'" J. J. Fitzpatrick

Best Sell 31:490 F 1 '72 600w

"Roberts' autobiography and credo has no literary value as such; but it suggests Flannery O'Connor source material. . . . His mixture of spirituality and shrewd commercialism is so baldly stated that it comes across as profitable guilelessness. . . . Roberts' television audience is big enough to indicate a heavy demand." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:492 F 1 '72 120w

ROBERTS, PAUL CRAIG. Alienation and the Soviet economy: toward a general theory of Marxian alienation, organizational principles, and the Soviet economy. 121p il $6 Univ. of N.Mex. press

335.4 Russia—Economic policy
SBN 8263-0208-4 LC 73-153939

"The purpose of this book is to explain the operation of the Soviet economy in terms of its organizational principles and Marxian aspirations [in order to] offer a conceptual framework that permits the Soviet economy to be understood as not centrally planned [and to] show the impact on the operation of the Soviet economy of the original aspirations of Marxian socialism." (Pref) Index.

Reviewed by Nicolas Spulber

Ann Am Acad 401:222 My '72 500w

"A very interesting book on a narrowly defined subject of economic alienation. . . . Roberts sets out in a meticulously careful and precise analysis to show how this alienation manifests itself in the Soviet economy. He bases his judgments on the Western authorities on Soviet economics, but especially the socialist thinkers like Lenin, Marx, Lange, and other proponents of socialist economic planning. The whole book is a fresh and exciting contribution to the literature on Soviet economics. Its diagrams and mathematical excursions are an excellent contribution to the subject. As a whole, the treatment of the subject matter is concise, very much to the point. . . . It is a must for every library with interests in Soviet affairs."

Choice 8:1366 D '71 130w

"The uncritical acceptance by Western observers of the supposed achievements brought about by central planning in the Soviet Union is subjected to a devastating critique in this short but powerful collection of scholarly essays. . . . The most important contribution made by Roberts in this gem of a book is his carefully documented indictment of most Western scholarship concerned with Soviet economics, a scholarship which 'has been effective in producing interpretations that provide historical justification for every turn of Soviet events and in blinding the world to the important role played by folly in Soviet experience.'" J. B. Burnham

Nat R 23:1189 O 22 '71 220w

ROBERTS, ROBERT. The classic slum; Salford life in the first quarter of the century. 219p il pl $8 Humanities press

323.3 Great Britain—Social conditions. Salford, England—Poor
ISBN 0-7190-0453-5 LC 74-855642

A study of working-class life in Lancashire.

"This unpretentious little book is . . . a charming amalgam of Roberts' recollections of his own childhood and adolescence combined with solid research. But it answers fundamental questions that far more professional historians have only begun to unravel: where was the Liberal party vote and what happened to it; what was the working-class attitude toward Labour; how were the Tories able to win so many slum constituencies; . . . what was the working-class social structure? Should be in every library that attempts to cover modern British history."

Choice 9:97 Mr '72 160w

TLS p731 Je 25 '71 250w

ROBERTS, RON E. The new communes: coming together in America. 144p $5.95; pa $1.95 Prentice-Hall

335 Collective settlements—U.S. Conflict of generations
ISBN 0-13-612473-9; 0-13-612465-8 (pa)
LC 70-160531

"Through a historical comparison with 19th-Century communal experiments such as Brook Farm and a personal examination of a wide variety of contemporary communal societies, Roberts . . . discusses the positive and negative characteristics of present-day communes. He examines contemporary religious, hip, political, Skinnerian (Walden Two), and free-sex communes, as well as economic cooperatives and sensitivity sessions, showing how in these diverse groups there is a common concern for individual human happiness." (Library J) Index.

"[The author's] discussion is insightful but very general, leaving the reader with the impression that the work is closer to a journalistic account than to anything like a solid piece of carefully documented scientific study or analysis. . . . Inadequate index, good but 'thin' introduction to the topic."

Choice 9:291 Ap '72 160w

"Although the discussion of the 19th-Century communes is a bit superficial, the main portion of the book contains a valuable and wide-ranging study of contemporary communes, which the author believes can be viable alternatives to our present society." Jack Forman

Library J 96:3338 O 15 '71 100w

ROBERTS, VERA MOWRY. The nature of theatre. 499p il $12.50 Harper

792 Theater
LC 72-137814

"Divided into five parts, [this book] covers the experience of theater, seeing a play, predominant genres, theater artists, and allied arts. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"[The author] places great emphasis on the 'now' quality of the art form, on the total experience of immediacy within the playhouse. . . . Students of theatre should find the chapters which deal with new forms and the relationship between playwright and critic especially valuable. . . . [Roberts'] remarkable insights into theory and history, her appreciation of the past and the present, her understanding of the psychology of theatre artists and audiences, her ability to make fine distinctions and comparisons and above all, her complete dedication to and love of the theatre have enabled [her] to produce a scholarly and eminently readable book." Sister Gregory Duffy

Best Sell 31:229 Ag 15 '71 270w

"A good, rather conservative introduction to theater text which adds to the long list of introductions appearing in the past few years. . . . In style [the book] exudes a sometimes overstated enthusiasm for theater which is presented with a combination of loose breeziness and encyclopaedic pedantry. . . . It is good for the beginner, but dull to one who has experienced much theater or is fairly well-read in the subject. The weakest chapter is Roberts' attempt to apply an Aristotelian theory of drama to every aspect of theater that falters in attempting to deal with contemporary trends. . . . Illustrations are plentiful but poor selections have been made from college and university productions. Well-indexed. . . . It could be a useful book for libraries and class use, depending on the instructor's emphasis."

Choice 9:229 Ap '72 170w

ROBERTSON, D. W. Abelard and Heloise [by] D. W. Robertson, Jr. (Crosscurrents in world hist.) 238p pl $7.95 Dial press

B or 92 Abelard, Peter. Héloïse
LC 79-163597

"This book presents . . . an account of the careers of the medieval lovers and . . . [an] analysis of Abelard's writings, both epistolary and philosophical. . . . [as well as a discussion] of the legend of Héloïse in history and literature." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Robertson throws so much light on amorous attitudes that his book might be subtitled 'Love Down the Ages.' He is more at home in medieval Paris than in Pope's London, where he fails satisfactorily to analyze the nature of rococo wit, but all things considered he makes an excellent showing over this nine-century steeplechase. The values that elude the literary historian dealing with the great works of one period in vacuum emerge clearly from this comparative study of implicit attitudes glimpsed in the varying treatment of a given theme. The more books like this, the deeper our understanding of the past will be; and the more, I think, we will come to marvel at the variety of metamorphoses which can overtake even the simplest idea, fact or story."

Vincent Cronin
Book World p3 F 13 '72 850w

"[The author] offers an excellent general study . . . based in part, for want of concrete evidence, on plausible conjecture. . . . Robertson's interpretation of this legend in the writings of the 17th and 18th-Century poets, especially Pope, is new and instructive. Students of all branches of medieval studies and at all levels will be informed by this work. They and the general reader will enjoy the author's fresh insights, his lucid style, and his acerbic wit, which is often aimed at the nonsense of modern academic life." B. D. Hill

Library J 97:502 F 1 '72 150w

"[Abelard] became after a lapse of centuries a mythical figure of many shapes that still survive outside (and even inside) the realm of critical scholarship. The second half of D. W. Robertson Jr.'s book is concerned with this posthumous existence and . . . he is at his best in presenting it in the forms provided by Pope, George Moore, Helen Waddell and others. It is one of the most alluring and treacherous of historical myths, and is here given a course of demythologizing. . . . Certainly there is little of romance and glamor, of passion or of tragedy, left in the story of Abelard when Mr. Robertson has done with it." David Knowles

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 13 '72 450w

"[This is a] highly instructive and brilliantly written study."

New Yorker 47:104 F 12 '72 110w
Va Q R 48:xcii summer '72 170w

ROBEY, SIDNEY J., Jr. auth. For gourmets with ulcers. See Bruyère, T. M.

ROBIEN, LOUIS DE. The diary of a diplomat in Russia, 1917-1918; tr. from the French by Camilla Sykes. $18p il $8.50 Praeger 947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921—Personal narratives LC 73-109483

The author "was assigned to a junior post in St. Petersburg early in 1914. . . . He began his diary in March, 1917, with the coming of the first revolution of that year, and he continued it through 1918, with one long interruption. The diary was published originally in French in 1967, almost a decade after de Robien's death. . . . [It provides] insights concerning the allied diplomatic community and concerning life in Russia's capital. . . . descriptions of demonstrations, of street fighting, of the effects of the transport crisis . . . and of the qualities and views of the aristocrats." (Am Pol Sci R)

"Unfortunately, the English translation provides no introduction or footnotes to aid the reader, and the volume lacks a map of Petersburg-Petrograd, which would have been most useful for both the scholar and the ordinary reader. Moreover, . . . [it] has serious shortcomings as a source and as a guide to the activities, mood, and temper of 1917-1918. De Robien was a junior officer and one with profound aristocratic views, which made understanding the Russian scene very difficult for him. He was not a skilled observer, and the information he provides is often fuzzy or unclear. . . . De Robien on occasion showed remarkable insights concerning probable developments, handicapped as he was by his political views." R. F. Byrnes

Am Pol Sci R 66:229 Mr '72 450w

"As a venturesome and observant young secretary in the French embassy in Petrograd, De Robien had a ringside seat for some of the most dramatic events in modern history. Fortunately for us, he was an able diarist as well as a curious observer. . . . He is particularly bitter towards Kerensky and, at the start, naïve as to the actions and goals of Lenin and Trotsky. His entries, however, have the freshness of good newspaper journalism and will interest layman as well as scholars." R. W. Schwarz

Library J 95:2461 Jl '70 110w

ROBINS, DOROTHY B. Experiment in democracy; the story of U.S. citizen organizations in forging the charter of the United Nations. $16p $7.50 Parkside press; for sale by Union of Am. Hebrew congregations

$41.23 United Nations—History LC 75-31934

The author "as secretary of the American Association for the United Nations (now the United Nations Association of the United States of America), was a . . . participant in the efforts of the nongovernmental organizations . . . to guide public opinion toward an understanding and acceptance of the Dumbarton Oaks proposal for a United Nations. At the San Francisco Conference, the nongovernmental organizations played a considerable role as liaison between the public and the U.S. delegation; and they were influential in bringing about several revisions in the proposed charter. . . . It is the period after Dumbarton Oaks and through the San Francisco Conference that the book chronicles." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"As an analysis of the topic indicated in its subtitle, this book is exceedingly weak. As a document that would have to be drawn on in any treatment of the topic it is valuable. Therefore, the book is of more use to larger libraries supporting documentary research. . . . Events are described without much interpretative subtlety in the first 161 pages of the book. There follows an almost equal length of appendix material, notes, and references."

Choice 8:1645 F '72 130w

"The book is useful in several ways. It reveals the imaginative efforts and techniques of skilled propagandists, it relates their strategy to events of the moment, and it documents the extensive role of the state department in cooperating in the educational campaigns. It also provides insight into the origin of cooperation between non-governmental organizations and national and international agencies to promote particular ends, an aspect of citizen participation which has become a traditional part of the machinery of international politics. Despite the valuable factual and descriptive data, some of the conclusions, both direct and implicit, must be approached with caution." W. F. Kuehl

J Am Hist 59:478 S '72 450w

"[This book adds] an illuminating chapter to the literature on the work of the non-governmental organizations. Extensively annotated, the book will be valuable for both reference and general reading." Jean Deuss

Library J 96:2499 Ag '71 140w

ROBINSON, DEREK. Goshawk squadron. 246p $6.95 Viking press

SBN 670-34672-1 LC 72-158419

"France in 1918. . . . A small squadron from the Royal Flying Corps, temporarily on reserve, undergoes extensive and tortuous exercises devised by its cynical commanding officer, Major Woolley is quite prepared to drive his men to despair and collapse to teach them that the air war on the German front is not a game like cricket. . . . but the business of assassination which only men bent to a murderous inclination can survive." (Newsweek)

"This new book has little of the heroics that marked starry-eyed romance in the days when the world was incredibly young. . . . The book is tough, understated, allusive, effective. . . . Perhaps the only place in which [Robinson] is not restrained is in his creation of the character of Major Woolley; this is a caricature on a Faustian scale. I rather suspect that if a major had acted towards his men as this one did he would be rather afraid to have any of them behind and above him in the air." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 31:516 F 15 '72 250w

"[The author's] intelligent prose and exciting battle scenes cannot hide a routine plot and dull characters. This is a potboiler on an overworked subject that after half a century demands either spectacular adventure or a serious fictional assessment." R. T. Dillon

Library J 97:902 Mr 1 '72 110w

"Most accounts of World War I leave few illusions about life in the trenches, but for many the sky battles between gentlemanly aces in wood-and-canvas birds-of-war still seem heroic and bloodless. . . . Robinson's novel lays that myth to rest. . . . Authentic detail about handling the rickety biplanes is balanced by plenty of action in the skies and enough bedroom scenes to hold readers who want only excitement." George Merrill

Library J 97:1626 Ap 15 '72 200w [YA]

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p36 Ja 28 '72 200w

New Yorker 47:102 F 12 '72 200w

"This is genre writing, of course—there is a whole subspecies of fiction devoted to air combat in the first world war—but it is an uncommonly excellent example of the breed. It is a taut, grim story in which the author is mindful of the need for irony and interludes of heavy humor; he makes the conventions crisp and serviceable and, in his scenes of fighting in the sky, he concentrates on tactics. Robinson is particularly adept at killing off his characters; after an engagement, he snuffs them out, quickly, just the way it must have happened." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:77 Mr 6 '72 220w

ROBINSON, IAN. Chaucer and the English tradition. 296p $14.50 Cambridge

821 Chaucer, Geoffrey

ISBN 0-521-08231-5 LC 79-163179

"In a series of critical studies, beginning with Chaucer's earlier works, especially The Parliament of Fowls, and through to The Canterbury Tales, Mr Robinson writes of Chaucer as a serious and sometimes tragic author. (He places Chaucer) in the setting of English literature and some of its European neighbours. There are comparisons with Langland and Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, then with the parallel Scottish poetic tradition (especially Dunbar), and finally with the greatest of the contemporary traditions—the Italian." (Publisher's note) Index.

"An uneven book, both in terms of style, which is not always clear, it might be, and in terms of critical perceptiveness. Indeed, some readers may find Robinson's judgments at times no less than perverse. And though Robinson calls 'The miller's tale' and 'The wife of Bath's prologue' Chaucer's 'pure poetry,' his study of these two works leaves a good deal to be desired. On the other hand, he has much to say that is perceptive and stimulating on 'The merchant's tale,' 'The knight's tale,' and, especially, 'The clerk's tale.' . . . This book should be read by undergraduates, and by those who intend to teach them."

Choice 9:817 S '72 230w

"This misdirected volley rebounds upon its author. The common reader it addresses and for whom and by whom Chaucer supposedly is to be saved will care little either for the protracted damning of certain critics—particularly C. S. Lewis and D. W. Robertson Jr.—or for the equally fulsome praise of others—J. Speirs, Charles Muscatine, and the author's friend David Sims. Like 'common reader,' the 'English tradition' of the title remains largely undefined, so one must guess how Chaucer relates to each. Eccentric and splenetic though the book is, the reader may find some good things there."

H. T. Keenan

Library J 97:1812 My 15 '72 150w

ROBINSON, JACKIE. I never had it made; by Jackie Robinson as told to Alfred Duckett. 287p $7.95 Putnam

B or 92 Baseball

SBN 399-11010-0

LC 75-175272

This is an account of the life of Jackie Robinson who "rose from a poor Southern family to become the first black baseball player in the major leagues, a member of the Hall of Fame, a successful businessman, a civil-rights spokesman, and a political adviser." (Library J)

"Like many books of its kind, this one is pro-author, but few autobiographies aren't, no matter what the profession of the author. Unlike many books about sports personalities, however, this book has no photographs, dwells little on sensational moments on the field, and states its message in a reserved yet decisive manner. . . . Although there is some profanity in this book, it deserves a 'general reading' rating because it is a wholesome story of a man who fought hard, figured he was even with baseball, and always believed that the first freedom for all people is freedom of choice." J. A. Phillips

Best Sell 32:435 D 15 '72 500w

"The Jackie Robinson story has been told before but never with quite so much sincerity and prudence as in this intelligent account. Despite Duckett's pedestrian, as-told-to style, Robinson's life story reads much like a novel. . . . Robinson's beliefs remain surprisingly moderate. Probably no one will agree with all his outspoken opinions on various issues and leaders, but few will go away from this book without a genuine respect for the man." Charles Farley

Library J 97:3330 O 15 '72 120w

"As to the score on this book it is genuine Jackie Robinson. He talked into a tape recorder, and all Al Duckett did was tidy up the loose ends and let Jackie speak. All his life Jackie Robinson said what was in his heart and what was on his mind; he was so immediately honest he was often severely abrasive. . . . [This book] is so complete that one feels that, with his health failing rapidly, perhaps Jackie had an intimation that he just had time to finish his own story himself. Although this is also an exciting baseball book, that is almost incidental." Red Barber

N Y Times Bk R p53 N 12 '72 750w

ROBINSON, JAMES M., ed. The future of our religious past. See The future of our religious past

ROBINSON, RICHARD A. H. The origins of Franco's Spain; the Right, the Republic and revolution, 1931-1936. 475p $9.95 Univ. of Pittsburgh press

946.081 Spain—Politics and government

ISBN 0-8229-1099-3

LC 77-133417

The author "charts the history of the largest organization of the Spanish Right (the Confederación Española de Derechas Autónomas, or C.E.D.A.) under the Republic." (TLS)

"The Spanish Civil War of 1936-39 has attracted many historians; studies of its origins have not proved as compelling, partly because of the complexity of events and the lack of solid documentation. Professor Robinson . . . has approached and solved both of these problems. His aim was to write a history of the Right. In order to put [its] development into context he had to deal with the Left and Center as well. The result goes beyond his title; his book is actually a complete political history of the Second Republic and is certainly the most useful and satisfying study of that period yet published. Robinson's principal source is the rightist press. . . . His skillful use of these readily available sources demonstrates that despite other manifestations of backwardness the Spanish press was one of Europe's most sophisticated, and there is much valuable material to be gleaned from it." J. M. Sanchez

Am Hist R 77:161 F '72 450w

"[In the preface] there are established two crucial points: (1) that it was the Socialist party that abandoned democratic forms, turning to violence; (2) that it was the Left Republicans who killed the Republic by adjusting the form of the government to their own ideology, accusations not sufficiently proven within the context of the book and, above all, unjustified." Francisco Arenas

Ann Am Acad 398:167 N '71 800w

"Serious analysis of the role of the right-wing parties (ranging from Monarchists and Fascists to the Radicals) in the politics of the short-lived Spanish Republic (1931-36) is much needed. . . . Unfortunately, Robinson's work barely begins to fill the need; instead of a searching account of the structure, leadership, popular appeal, and ideological postures of the parties of the right, this book offers a dull chronicle of political events, mostly of a parliamentary sort, from the perspective of rightist leaders. . . . Robinson does a disservice to scholars and general readers on both counts. His interpretations are often naive, e.g. he offers rich Socialist rhetoric as sure proof of their revolutionary intentions, and he indulges in countless reckless statements, e.g. 'the historic republican' Lerroux."

Choice 8:601 Je '71 170w

"[In writing of Spain in the 1930's] it is all too easy to slide into partisan writing. . . . But there is at least one other and far subtler peril which can deeply affect the whole argument: the temptation to look for 'historical responsibilities' rather than explanations. [This volume] is a case in point. . . . While it would be unfair to charge Mr. Robinson with limiting his research to the field of his choice, it is permissible to regret that he should have drawn from it some sweeping conclusions which are not, and indeed cannot yet be substantiated. . . . Nonetheless, the book is compulsory reading for anyone who wants to talk knowledgeably about the Spanish Second Republic, even though one may not agree with the author's basic view of the C.E.D.A."

TLS p351 Mr 26 '71 2000w

Reviewed by S. G. Payne

World Pol 25:155 O '72 650w

ROBINSON, RONALD, ed. Developing the third world; the experience of the nineteen-sixties. (Cambridge Commonwealth ser) 289p $13.50 Cambridge

382.1 Economic conditions. Economic assistance—Congresses. Underdeveloped areas

ISBN 0-521-08079-7

LC 74-138379

This volume contains selected papers from the Cambridge Conferences on Development. "Issues of a development strategy are confronted: balanced vs. unbalanced development, import-substitution vs. the classical model, export-led growth, appropriate desiderata for allocating aid, role of agriculture, hindrances of government administration, role of taxation, and other . . . considerations." (Choice) Index.

"[As] an antidote to a standard textbook in economic development, one need not look much further than this volume of 'position papers' and extensive conference commentary. The eye-opener to the novice in economic development is that there are as yet, after many years of study and discussion, no commonly accepted solutions to each of these issues. Since the 'position papers' in this volume span a period of six years (1964-69) one can watch, as it were, the pendulum of expert thought swinging to and fro on each issue. . . . The papers are general and analytical in some instances, and 'country-applications' in others."

Choice 9:255 Ap '72 250w

TLS p1066 M 15 '72 230w

ROBINSON, THOMAS W., ed. The cultural revolution in China. 509p $13.50 Univ. of Calif. press

951.05 China (People's Republic of China)

—Politics and government

ISBN 0-520-01811-7 LC 77-129609

"The authors, young political scientists associated with the RAND Corporation who are specializing on China, deal for the most part with events up to early 1968." (Library J) The studies included are Power, policy, and ideology in the making of the Chinese Cultural Revolution, by W. F. Dorrell; Maoist theories of policy-making and organization, by Harry Harding, Jr.; Chou En-lai and the Cultural Revolution in China, by T. W. Robinson; The Foreign Ministry and foreign affairs in the Chinese Cultural Revolution, by Melvin Gurtov; and The Cultural Revolution in the countryside: Anatomy of a limited rebellion, by Richard Baum. Index.

Reviewed by Jay Mathews

Am Scholar 41:304 spring '72 450w

"[These five scholars] use the tools of political science, probing deeply. Their findings may be of interest to teachers and other specialists. The five separate studies are not coordinated. To some extent they overlap while at the same time leaving major gaps in coverage. . . . But the volume does complement the existing literature on the Cultural Revolution."

Choice 9:420 My '72 180w

"This volume brings together five valuable monographic studies. . . . Robinson provides the most detailed study available of Premier Chou En-lai's crucial activities in 1966 and 1967. . . . The essay by Harry Harding Jr. provides a stimulating analysis of the points of difference between Mao and his opponents over principles of policy making and organizational structure. The five studies are not intended to add up to a full portrait of the Cultural Revolution, but they are authoritative treatments of the topics covered. They will be required reading for China specialists, and difficult but rewarding reading for laymen."

A. J. Nathan

Library J 96:3606 N 1 '71 180w

"There are nourishing plums in the pudding, particularly when it deigns to copy out such source material as Japanese reports of wall newspapers, or verbatim transcripts of speeches by China's leaders. The rest is meticulously charted nothings masquerading as 'analysis of underlying trends', or the nit-picking of mindlessly accepted categories. . . . [The volume's] conclusions are mind-wrenchingly obvious: that Mao is an ideologist, Chou a pragmatist."

Francis Hope

New Statesman 83:607 My 5 '72 400w

ROBSON, W. W. Modern English literature. 172p $3.75; pa $1.75 Oxford

820 English literature—History and criticism

SBN 19-885051-4 LC 71-509014

This volume "attempts to cover all major fiction, poetry, and drama from about 1880 to the present." (Va Q R)

"[The author's] judgments are certainly eccentric at times: but we feel them to spring from a living commitment to the study of literature, and from a real enjoyment of it. In the small space of his book he does not attempt to give any evidence in support of his opinions. It is an indigestible book, for it is uncomfortably full of ideas which have dictated to the author a monotonous style making it impossible to read unless in short passages."

TLS p1383 N 27 '70 360w

"[Robson's] critical assessment of authors in the early twentieth century are original and judicious. The neglected Edwardians—Wells, Bennett, and Galsworthy—are treated with respect, while authors generally exempt from recent criticism—James, Woolf, and Joyce—are subject to questioning and qualifications. But readers interested in more recent authors and trends will be disappointed. The author is markedly unsympathetic to the theater of the absurd—Beckett and Pinter, for example, are very scantily treated."

Va Q R 47:xxiv winter '71 160w

ROCKLAND, MICHAEL AARON, ed. America in the fifties and sixties. See Marias, J.

ROCKWELL, ANNE, ed. El toro pinto and other songs in Spanish; selected and il. by Anne Rockwell. 52p $7.95 Macmillan (N Y)

784.4 Folk songs, Spanish—Juvenile literature, Children's songs

LC 70-146623

A collection of thirty "songs—lullabies, Christmas carols, folk songs, and comic songs—from Spain, Latin America, and southwestern United States. Music in the form of melody lines and guitar chords is provided, and the illustrations suggest pantomime action. [English] translations are appended." (Horn Book) "Grades two to six." (Library J)

"A welcome companion to Savez-vous Planter les Choux? [BRD 1970]. . . . Adults and children together can find fun in both singing and acting out the songs." V. H.

Horn Bk 48:65 F '72 70w

"The volume is large (10 1/4" x 10 1/4") and handsomely bound with a charmingly laid out table of contents and bold, colorful illustrations that suggest the atmosphere and customs of Spanish-speaking countries. However, these are not enough to justify acquisition of such an expensive title. Youngsters not fluent in Spanish will feel the lack of a line-by-line or juxtaposed translation of the Spanish text, a guide to pronunciation and a brief description of the origin and purpose of each song." Daisy Kouzel

Library J 96:2909 S 15 '71 100w

ROCKWELL, ANNE. Paintbrush & peacpipe: the story of George Catlin. 86p il $5.25 Atheneum pubs.

B or 92 Catlin, George—Juvenile literature

LC 74-154762

A biography of the American artist who traveled throughout the West "painting Indian portraits and collecting beautiful things the Indians had made. . . . He left us one of the few records of how Indians of the old West lived and looked. Some of his paintings and drawings are the basis for the pictures by the author in this book." (Publisher's note) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

Reviewed by Polly Goodwin

Book World p12 (children's issue) N 7 '71 130w

"A well-written, uncomplicated biography, touching upon many of the incidents that fascinated the older boys of an earlier generation who were avid readers of Catlin's adventures. The lack of bibliography and index must be deplored." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 47:492 O '71 240w

"A sympathetic, factual biography of [the] 19th-Century painter, chronicler and champion of the American Indian. . . . [The] book, although weakened by its undramatic approach . . . presents new material for this level in a precise, straightforward manner." B. G. Mulconry

Library J 96:2921 S 15 '71 150w

"Caveat emptor. Now why should a volume that looks so classy disappoint so? Because it is sad, static and incrustated with silly non sequiturs. . . . The conglomeration of myth and artifact is insufficient to offset the ineptness, and the adaptations of Catlin's portraits are unfortunate. . . . The book does Catlin, whom the author admires, a disservice." N. L. Magid

N Y Times Bk R p8 N 21 '71 140w

ROCKWELL, ANNE. The toolbox, by Anne & Harlow Rockwell. unip il $3.95 Macmillan (N Y)

621.9 Tools—Juvenile literature

LC 72-119836

The text is accompanied by "representational paintings [which] depict such tools as screwdrivers, clamps, saws, hammers plus a . . . toolbox. . . . Ages two to seven." (Library J)

"A picture book celebrates with unadorned economy of words and illustrations the simple beauty of useful tools. The brief text is printed in clear, handsome type; very little boys—and undoubtedly some girls—well—will pore over the appreciative portraits of common implements, which make ingenious use of watercolor to show textures and surfaces of wood and metal." E. L. H.

Horn Bk 47:280 Je '71 100w

"[This] is a beautiful as well as useful book. . . . Parents' helpers, aged 2, can enjoy it by looking at the pictures; at ages 6 and 7 they can learn how to decipher the words (in clear, bold print) which explain them. This simple teaching tool is a refreshing change from the didactic, flat, controlled-readers and the psychedelic transports sometimes offered as antidotes to them." E. C. Trimble

Library J 96:4195 D 15 '71 80w

"[On] simple and well-designed pages . . . [the] interestingly-drawn objects . . . resemble and have the rich charm of the real things." David Gentleman

New Statesman 82:665 N 12 '71 30w

ROCKWELL, HARLOW, jt. auth. The toolbox.
See Rockwell, A.

RODGERS, MARY. Freaky Friday. 145p $3.95;
lib bdg $3.79 Harper
ISBN 0-06-025048-6; 0-06-025049-6 (lib bdg)
LC 74-183158

"Set in Manhattan, this contemporary fantasy features 13-year-old Annabel Andrews who wakes up as her 35-year-old mother. . . . Beginning with her delighted anticipation of absolute freedom, Annabel's day predictably turns into one disaster after another—from the washing machine's breakdown, through an interview with officials at Annabel's private school, to the disappearance of her six-year-old brother. . . . At the crucial moment, however, all ends well, and Annabel winds up finding a bit of romance with the boy upstairs, admitting affection for her brother, and gaining a better understanding of herself and her parents and teachers. Grade five to eight." (Library J)

"Something astounding happens to [the] heroine [of this story] on page one, and the rest follows naturally. . . . Mary Rodgers has the knack of catching the sound of a real child talking. When Annabel says, 'Oh, wow,' it is because writer, character, page of print, and reader have all been catapulted into an Oh, wow mood. Plenty of other writers try to hit young readers with 'now' ideas and phrases—make love, not war; I mean; you know; Fascist pig. You wish they hadn't. . . . But in this book the pages rush by, right now in 1972, and it might all be happening in the apartment next door. [This novel] is unputdownable. It is a gem. . . . Library divisions should be broken down so that adults can get at [books like this one]." Jane Langton

Book World p5 (children's issue)
My 7 '72 140w

"If it's a laugh you want, and you're a girl try [this novel]. I'm not going to describe the plot—couldn't without sounding ridiculous. It really is freaky, but it's very funny, too. Mrs. Rodgers—who also writes scores for Broadway musicals ('Once Upon a Mattress,' 'The Mad Show')—has a deft touch. While she can make fun of the frictions in family life, and teen-age idiosyncrasies in particular there is a kindness in her humor that takes away any sting. And she is funny. I laughed out loud; I really did." P. M. Canham

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 1 '72 100w

Horn Bk 48:378 Ag '72 180w

"Although the magic is never satisfactorily explained and Annabel's problems are rather simplistically removed with her braces, the first-person narrative keeps plot and characters moving with humor and believability for a fast-pace, enjoyable read that should be popular with middle-graders." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:1608 Ap 15 '72 190w

Reviewed by Robert Berkqvist
N Y Times Bk R p8 J1 16 '72 220w

RODINSON, MAXIME. Mohammed; tr. by Anne Carter. 360 maps $3.95 Pantheon bks.

B or 92 Mohammed. Islam
ISBN 0-394-47110-5 LC 69-20189

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:382 My '72 180w

Reviewed by James Kritzeck
Commonweal 95:[334] Ja 7 '72 460w

Reviewed by L. P. Elwell-Sutton
N Y Rev of Books 18:22 Ja 27 '72 4700w
New Yorker 48:139 My 20 '72 190w

ROEGEN, NICHOLAS GEORGESCU-. See Georgescu-Roegen, N.

ROETHEL, HANS K. The Blue Rider; with a catalog of the works by Kandinsky, Klee, Macke, Marc, and other Blue Rider artists in the Municipal gallery, Munich. 174p pl col pl $17.50 Praeger

709.43 Art, German. Art, Modern—20th century
LC 75-148140

This volume "includes a complete catalog of the works in the Städtische Galerie by the Blue Rider artists and those artists who were frequent exhibitors with the Blue Rider although not members—for example, Jawlensky and Wereffkin. The Städtische Galerie has the largest collection in the world of works by Kandinsky, Marc, and Macke. The plates, most of which are in color, are accompanied by excerpts from the letters, diaries, or published writings of the artists whose works they depict." (Publisher's note) Index of artists.

Choice 9:961 O '72 200w

"[Roethel has] supplied a historical introduction full of new facts, new insights, and beautiful illustrations. Each plate is accompanied by remarkable examples of statements by the artists and their friends and critics, such as Franz Marc's utterance, 'Mysticism awoke in the souls of men, and with it primordial elements of art.' The text and superb reproductions brilliantly convey the aesthetic and spiritual fervor of this group." Peter Fingesten

Library J 97:2568 Ag '72 170w

"[This book] is substantially a (most competent) translation of the third edition of [the Städtische Galerie] catalogue. There are many more plates, the format is slightly larger, there are photographs of the main artists, there is a longer introduction by Dr Roethel and an essay which has already been published in part elsewhere. . . . Moreover, the new foreword, which tells the story of how Münter's bequest was secured, makes fascinating reading. But for all that, it is not clear for whom the book is intended. . . . Dr Roethel devotes thirty pages to an English translation of the check-list, titles and all. Is this provided for English-speaking visitors to the museum? . . . The space should have been saved for discussion of the Blaue Reiter itself and for a bibliography."

TLS p508 My 5 '72 700w

ROETHKE, THEODORE. Straw for the fire; from the notebooks of Theodore Roethke, 1943-63; sel. and arr. by David Wagoner. 262p $7.95 Doubleday

818
LC 78-175404

A selection of a "miscellany of fragments of poetry, aphorisms, jokes, memos, journal entries, random phrases, bits of dialogue, commentary, whole poems. . . . Wagoner has arranged the fragments here thematically: 'using something like Roethke's own methods as I had come to know them in public and private.' The result . . . [offers] variations on his constantly recurring subject matter: woman, his attempts to [change himself] . . . the greenhouse Eden, the thrust toward mysticism, God, death." (Publisher's note)

"Roethke, like most good poets, was his own best critic: one doubts that he would have loosed these papers on the public. They add nothing to Roethke, though they subtract little. . . . The editor has arranged Roethke's fragments of prose and poetry thematically, with the justification that the poet wished to leave many poems in a fragmentary state, 'to write nothing but fragments.' Whatever chronology exists in the notebooks is deliberately scrambled, thus making a kind of anthology of wrong starts and jottings. . . . These assembled notes and fragments are extraordinarily boring and banal. . . . There is perhaps a clinical dimension to this book which might justify its existence. In places it reads like a medical report, and for those who know the poet's work it reveals formulas of withdrawal and autism which lie at the heart of Roethke's poetry." Karl Shapiro

New Repub 166:24 Mr 4 '72 750w

"There is very little here that is not more eloquently said in the 'Collected Poems' and in 'On the Poet and His Craft' [BRD 1965]. Wagoner imposes order on Roethke's anarchic entries, but the effect, even to an admirer of the poems, is exasperatingly tedious. Roethke's sense of humor, theatricality and burly charm vanish for long stretches.

ROETHKE, THEODORE—Continued

What in the poems and essays is intense and deep, if somewhat narrow—his 'love for the bottoms, the fell last roots of things'—is in the 'Notebooks' flat-footed. The reader who turns to the 'Notebooks' for help in unriddling Roethke the man who struggled for deliverance from himself will find only a scattering of clues." Herbert Leibowitz
N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 9 '72 850w

"[This book] consists of fragments of poetry and prose sensitively selected and arranged by David Wagoner from the 277 notebooks Roethke left behind at his death. Wagoner's was a labor of love, and Roethke would have been grateful, as we should be, for this volume. Wagoner realizes that those who know Roethke's work will find here primarily variations on the poet's obsessive themes rather than writings pointing in new and unexpected directions. Still, Roethke is never boring, and his great skill and imagination are apparent on every page. Exciting in itself, Straw for the Fire will also serve to send us back to the Collected Poems [BRD 1966] with a better sense of how much Roethke won through to." William Heyen
Sat R 55:70 Mr 11 '72 390w

Reviewed by Jenijoy LaBelle
Va Q R 48:637 autumn '72 1350w

ROFHEART, MARTHA. Fortune made his sword; a novel. 445p $8.95 Putnam

Henry V. King of England—Fiction
LC 78-175254

In this first novel by the former actress "Henry V is seen from several perspectives: his queen; his beautiful Welsh mistress, Morgan; his court jester, the fool; ■ comrade-in-arms; and his own point of view ■ both boy and man." (Publisher's note)

"Here and there mislaid facts and shaky interpretations will bother the finicky history buff (as also would Shakespeare). Yet, Rofheart has given the story of Henry of Monmouth such an attractive and smooth-moving narrative that one can't put it down until it is finished and, once it is completed, feels lonely, for there is only a memory of it then to enjoy. . . . The Henry V of Shakespeare will be recognized. The female narrators are more tender and thought-provoking. Was this the real Henry? Who really knows? One does get an understandable Henry. One gets more, for the narrators, and those they tell us about all give us ■ worthwhile glimpse of one aspect of medieval life, life at the top of the pyramid." Rev. J. M. Murphy
Best Sell 31:532 Mr 1 '72 400w

"This very slow-moving historical will appeal more to readers of Zoé Oldenbourg than to fans of Edison Marshall or Samuel Shellabarger. The milieu is well described. . . . There is no real plot, however, beyond the bare historical facts. . . . None of the five narrators is sufficiently developed. This, with the lack of any real action, severely taxes the reader's ability to maintain interest." M. K. Smith
Library J 97:517 F 1 '72 100w

"[This novel] has no plot and very little suspense but that is equally true of some of the most admired books of this genre. . . . So far as history is concerned, the novel raises questions in the mind of the reader whose view of England and France at the beginning of the 15th-century has been drawn from Shakespeare, but it is by no means a textbook. . . . Mrs. Rofheart knows enough to create an illusion, and that is all that is necessary for her fictional purposes. She also knows how to keep the story going. This, truly, is a book one hates to put down. . . . The people are not presented in depth, but they live." Granville Hicks
N Y Times Bk R p46 F 27 '72 1050w
New Yorker 48:105 Ap 1 '72 110w

ROGER-MARX, CLAUDE. Delacroix [by] Claude Roger-Marx [and] Sabine Cotté [tr. by Lynn Michelman; general ed: Henri Scrépell]. 99p il $7.95 Brazillier
709.3 Delacroix, Eugène
SBN 0-8076-586-7 LC 70-132366

This volume contains "fifty-eight illustrations, drawn from collections of [Delacroix's] water-colors, ink sketches, landscapes in wash, Une drawings, paintings of impressions noted during his Moroccan visit, bouquets of flowers, seascapes . . . [and] studies of animals. . . . [Included also are] excerpts from Delacroix's Journals and correspondence." (Best Sell)

"The translation (from the French) . . . is idiomatic to the point of awkwardly splitting infinitives on several occasions which, one feels sure, is not an accurate reflection of the original. The book is attractively bound and merits study for its lucid presentation of its subject." R. F. Grady
Best Sell 31:10 Ap 1 '71 200w

"It is a pity to find the reputable Roger-Marx associated with this trifling, commercial venture. His commentary about the artist is, to put it kindly, slight. It is followed by some platitudes prepared by Cotté, who is also responsible for assembling some scraps from Delacroix's writings. . . . The sources are not indicated, so it is virtually impossible to reconstruct their context, if any, or to check matters of translation. . . . The color plates accompanying these texts are forced in tone and inadequately documented. Only a library somehow required to be 'complete' need give shelf space to this item." Choice 8:1325 D '71 140w

ROGERS, DAVID. The management of big cities; interest groups and social change strategies; with a foreword by Amital Etzioni. 191p $8.95 Sage publications

301.3 New York (City)—Politics and government. Philadelphia—Politics and government. Cleveland—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8039-0092-9 LC 77-151671

Professor Rogers' "goal is to analyze 'the social forces affecting the formulation and implementation of socioeconomic development programs in New York City, Philadelphia, and Cleveland.' [He] emphasizes the need for social scientists to offer practical solutions as well ■ diagnoses [and offers] his own solutions. . . . An epilogue discusses some events of 1970 in the three cities." (Choice) Bibliography.

Reviewed by R. E. Edgar
Ann Am Acad 400:211 Mr '72 500w

"Little in these chapters, as well written and interesting as [they] may be, will be new to any student of urban affairs. . . . Propositions offered in the final chapter are quite abstract and rather unoriginal. No attempt is made to cite the relevant findings of the growing body of comparative community power structure literature. . . . [However,] Rogers' book will serve as a useful introduction to some of the variables involved in implementing innovative urban programs with some highly selected and sketchily presented observations from three cities." Choice 8:1618 F '72 180w

ROGERS, GEORGE C. The history of Georgetown County, South Carolina [by] George C. Rogers, Jr. 665p il maps $12.50 Univ. of S.C. press

975.7 Georgetown County, South Carolina—History
ISBN 0-87249-143-9 LC 70-95260

Georgetown county saw the rise, flourishing and decline of a plantation society based on two of the South's staple crops—indigo and rice. The author traces the county's history from colonial times. "Index." (J Am Hist)

"Rogers, a student of the history and culture of his native state's low country, has chronicled with impressive documentation the rise and fall of ■ way of life that was close to the plantation legend of the Old South. Although he has written a final chapter on modern Georgetown that reads like ■ chamber of commerce brochure, and although he ignores the impact of the civil rights movement on the county, he has made a solid contribution to the history of the Southern plantation. In him the great rice planters of the Waccamaw, the Pee Dee, and the North Santee have found their elegist." N. D. Brown
Am Hist R 76:1595 D '71 490w

"Avoiding the traditional genealogical and antiquarian approach that has characterized much local history, Rogers has written what might well be a 'model' county history. Fully utilizing manuscript collections, newspapers, state and county records, and secondary sources, he has successfully related the story of this significant locality to that of the state and nation. . . . Rogers' volume is much more than the story of one county; it is the history of plantation society in microcosm."

R. A. Wooster

J Am Hist 58:164 Je '71 500w

ROGERS, P. G. The Dutch in the Medway. 192p il $7.25 Oxford

949.2 Anglo-Dutch War, 1664-1667. Medway River

ISBN 0-19-215185-1 LC 74-17952

"In June of 1667 a Dutch fleet captured the English fort at Sheerness, broke through a defensive chain near Gillingham, and moved as far up the Medway as Upnor Castle before meeting serious resistance. There the fleet lost about fifty men, and the decision . . . was taken to terminate the operation without making an attempt on the Chatham Dockyards." (Am Hist R) The author focuses on this expedition.

"Mr. Rogers, an amateur of history, writes as well and knows his Dutch. He gives us a clear and straightforward narrative, even if it is less exciting than the one in Pepys. Although [the book] will be of no interest to scholars, it may perhaps bring students into their classrooms." S. B. Baxter

Am Hist 76:1536 D '71 800w

"Rogers, as a 'man of Kent' long familiar with the Medway and with the Gillingham and Chatham region, is exceptionally well qualified for this task, and he has taken the trouble to study all the Dutch accounts as well as the English narratives. . . . [He] is to be congratulated on producing what is undoubtedly the definitive well the most readable account."

TLS p424 Ap 9 '71 1100w

ROGERS, PAT. Grub Street; studies in a subculture. 430p $18.75 Barnes & Noble; for sale by Harper

820.9 Satire, English. English literature—History and criticism. Great Britain—Social conditions
ISBN 0-416-11690-6 LC 72-192666

"His first chapter, . . . [Rogers] says, describes 'the history and character of Grub Street proper'; his second 'examines some of the ways in which the "real life" of London affected Augustan writing'; his third deals with 'the social and literary characteristics' of the hack; his fourth with Swift's relations with Grub Street; his fifth with 'the psychology, rather than the social condition, of professional writers' with special reference to DeFoe and Fielding; and his sixth and last with 'the gradual blurring of the Grub Street idea, as it loses contact with its original topographical base'." (TLS)

"Dr Rogers points out [that] those who used . . . [Grub Street] as a term of abuse were hardly familiar with the area. . . . The alternative is to forget that Grub Street was a real place at all; but that is to lose so much of the meaning of the wealth of topographical allusion in Augustan satire. So argues Dr Rogers in this excellent book: he walks down the labyrinth of myth, metaphor and city slum with a certain step and every evidence of intellectual satisfaction. He starts from the unfamiliar end of the ball of string, not seeking to extract a picture of the city from Augustan literature but to inform an understanding of it by providing 'a route map to explore the comedy of Grub Street.' He extracts the maximum information from the evidence; it is a brilliant piece of detection, for Grub Street no longer exists."

Economist 243:79 My 27 '72 480w

"This splendidly researched book does much to restore the 'topography of Dulness,' to define duncehood sociologically, and to renovate the satire of the period, especially Pope's Dunciad, here interpreted with very imaginative literalism." F. M. Keener

Library J 97:3591 N 1 '72 130w

"Dr Rogers may be being slightly heavy-handed in trying to establish the factual and geographical reality of what he calls the Grub Street Subculture. All four principal members of the Scriblerus Club, Pope, Swift, Gay and Arbuthnot, used the term as the metaphorical abode of Dulness; Swift went so far as to suggest the establishment of a Grub Street in Dublin to accommodate the local hacks; Dr Pat sets out to prove that the metaphor was already there complete, a tumbledown Tudor slum in a quietly elegant and formalised Georgian London, renamed Milton Street in 1830 and now buried beneath the Barbican Development. . . . [This] book is consistently interesting, and more so perhaps for the subjects it raises than those it exhausts." John Wells

New Statesman 83:876 Je 23 '72 850w

"Rogers is a clever man and . . . he has [his] whole subject at his fingertips. The one drawback is that he seems not to have the vaguest idea how to write a readable and reasonably consecutive book or how to handle his transitions. No opportunity to digress is missed, no fact once ascertained is omitted. A mention of the Gordon Riots, though well outside his period, leads to ten pages or so on the subject. . . . All that Dr Rogers has to tell us of the physical existence of that famous street . . . is fascinating."

TLS p710 Je 23 '72 650w

ROGERS, RUTHERFORD D. University library administration [by] Rutherford D. Rogers and David C. Weber. 454p il $20 Wilson, H.W.

027.7 Libraries, College and university. Library administration
ISBN 0-8242-0417-4 LC 75-116997

This work deals with "personnel, library organization, budgeting and fiscal management, book collections, technical services, reader's services, special collections, measurement and evaluation, automation, and the planning of library buildings." (Library J) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This] exhaustive account of university library administration is detailed but never muddy, never confusing, never pedantic. An excellent primer for university librarians on the essentials of administration, it is a mine of information. . . . [Included] are 30 photographs which are beautifully reproduced and for the most part well chosen. . . . [This] book displays the best qualities of the university library administrator. Its exposition is clear; the experience reflected is unobtrusive but real. A wide variety of problems common to all university libraries is raised. Different aspects of each problem are stated and a solution is offered." G. R. Lyle

Library J 96:8579 N 1 '71 550w

"This work is a compendium of sound and sane contemporary practice. . . . [It] can be read to good advantage, and with a measure of enjoyment, by every administrator of a university library, for it will help him to consolidate his own thinking, provide a stimulus to further thought, and supply, particularly in the Appendices, outstanding models of policies, contracts, and other administrative documents. It will be welcomed by schools of librarianship, which should hasten to adopt [it] . . . for the study of university library administration."

Basil Stuart-Stubbs

Library 42:347 J1 '72 1300w

ROGERS, THOMAS. The confession of a child of the century by Samuel Heather; a novel. 377p $7.95 Simon & Schuster

SBN 671-21266-4 LC 72-189740

"Samuel Heather is a 'child of the century,' of the Episcopal bishop of Kansas City, of the Korean War. . . . Expelled from Harvard . . . he joins the Army. During a battle near the Yalu River, he . . . is captured. Samuel admires the philosophical style of his instructor (brainwasher) in prison camp, and therefore accepts the Chinese invitation to visit the People's Republic. When he returns home, he finds himself a pariah. At the end of the book, after a career as a CIA spy and a spy-fiction writer, he tries to give himself back to his author and is rejected. 'Though you are not real [Samuel] you are true enough to finish your own story,' which, converted back to Christianity by heavenly voices, he does, with a prayer." (Library J)

Reviewed by R. D. Evans

Best Sell 32:205 Ag 1 '72 550w

"This novel is so packed with allusions and quotations that reading it is a sort of parlor game. It is timely in its sympathetic presentation of China under Mao." Margaret Wimsatt

Library J 97:2118 Je 1 '72 200w

ROGERS, THOMAS—Continued

"[This book] begins fine and familiar and hokey and breezy. . . . But then Heather is taken prisoner and something happens to the novel. . . . [We are] forced to change, from listening to an entertaining 'comical-historical-pastoral,' as Heather calls it, to seeing the painful limitations and needs of a spoiled, educated, callow, aggressive young man. For this new purpose Rogers's original mode is all wrong. . . . My guess is that . . . he would like us to be both convinced and amused by Heather as much at the end as at the beginning. . . . The sadness is that after a fine beginning we gradually cease to care." Roger Sale

N Y Rev of Books 18:28 Je 29 '72 1700w

"Told in the words of its 'author' Samuel Heather, [this novel] is an astonishing kaleidoscopic account of coming of age in postwar America, a tour de force but much more—a comic and sympathetic vision of the age-old battle between fathers and sons, a rich, boisterous, satisfying novel that stands confidently on its own as a major accomplishment by, no doubt about it, a major writer. He shifts stylistic gears with [skill,] going back and forth among comedy and slapstick, contemplation and outrage, elegance and slang—splendidly conveying the aspects and moods of Samuel Heather. . . . Samuel is one of the best-realized characters of recent fiction. . . . [This] is fiction of great depth and distinction, comedy in the classic sense, the tale of a happy human triumph over the varieties of 20th-century adversity." Jonathan Yardley

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 12 '72 1300w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 79:100A Je 12 '72 700w
Va Q R 48:cxx autumn '72 130w

ROGIN, GILBERT. What happens next? a novel. 260p $6.95 Random house

ISBN 0-394-46088-X LC 75-143826

The stories composing this piece of fiction are "told either in the first person singular or, as the author explains, . . . 'in the third person singular under the name of Julian Singer.' [They] describe the life in the mid-1930s and early Forties of an editor and writer who (like Rogin) works for a national magazine in New York and lives in Greenwich Village with his wife, Daisy, and two children by her previous marriage. These and other household characters are usually referred to as 'Singer's wife,' 'Singer's stepdaughter,' or 'Singer's goldfish' . . . Singer's relationship with his Jewish parents is . . . troubled only by his feeling, which recurs in dreams, that he has somehow let them down." (Sat R) Most of these stories appeared in The New Yorker.

"This appealing book depicts six years of ruefully comic incidents in the life of Julian Singer. . . . The absurdity and sadness of people's lives in the present milieu (New York specifically) is often the subject. . . . Most conversations are comic exchanges, with phony accents and much horsing around to mask a hurt, childlike bewilderment at the way the adult world really is. Because [this work] is . . . a collection of 22 stories . . . about the same characters, repetition is unavoidable; the similarity of scenes and effects and the lack of development weaken the book unless one reads it a story at a time—which is worth doing for the funny, wistful glimpses of the way we live now." J. W. Charles

Library J 96:4108 D 15 '71 190w

"In the second chapter, a blow-by-verbal-blow description of Singer's strangled relations with his second wife, the book begins to become something far richer and stranger than any mere comic account of city life. . . . No two chapters are quite alike—but each invents new spanners, sockets, chisels and burins to do justice to its theme. . . . People who first appear as near stereotypes, though brilliantly rendered ones . . . mutate. Characters like Singer's wife, Daisy, grow in reality as they diminish in predictability. . . . Even the more minor characters, like the alcoholic first husband . . . [possess] ineffable dignity. . . . [Here] is a novel of the first importance. I hope you'll read it." L. E. Sissman

N Y Times Bk R p6 O 31 '71 1250w
Reviewed by Pete Axthelm
Newsweek 78:120 O 25 '71 200w

"Both the dust jacket and the title page proclaim [this work] to be a novel. . . . Call it what you will, [it] is a splendid book—amusing, sensitive, finely wrought. Reading these stories is like looking through an accomplished painter's very personal sketchbook. With few exceptions, the sketches are intimate and of the home—beds, bathrooms, and backyards figure prominently. Possessing a painterly eye, Rogin is selective about the details he chooses to bring out. . . . 'The theme and pattern of my life,' Singer/Rogin says, 'is that all of it happened to me.' And the charm and the merit of this book are that one believes him." Peter Wood

Sat R 55:32 Ja 1 '72 650w

Reviewed by John Skow
Time 98:87 N 29 '71 500w

ROHMER, ELIZABETH SAX, jt. auth. Master of villainy. See Van Ash, C.

ROHR, HANS. The beauty of the universe; tr. and rev. by Arthur Beer; foreword by Arthur A. Hoag. (A Studio bk) 86p il $7.95 Viking

520 Astronomy—Pictorial works
ISBN 0-670-15340-0 LC 77-164990

This book, which contains photographs of astronomical objects "begins with the moon, goes on to the planets, discusses constellations, nebulae and other denizens of deep space." (Library J)

"All types of celestial objects are included, selection being determined by their suitability for photographic reproduction. Many photographs are in color, using the pioneering methods of the Palomar and Flagstaff observatories. Reproduction is superb. The accompanying text points out the salient features of the pictures in an elementary but accurate manner suitable for the general public. The book might well be titled 'A pictorial introduction to astronomy.'" Choice 9:1150 N '72 90w

"The superb photographs, which probably account for the price of the book, will stimulate even casual readers to pause and ponder the mysteries they hold. YA's have exhibited considerable interest in astronomy, and this beginning book should easily attract more." Regina Minudri

Library J 97:2248 Je 15 '72 60w [YA]

Reviewed by Horace Judson
Time 100:68 Ji 17 '72 220w

ROIPEHE, ANNE. Long division. 190p $5.95 Simon & Schuster

ISBN 671-21363-6 LC 72-83905

"Emily Brimberg Johnson, 35, is on the road to freedom: 'what I'm doing in this car flying down these screaming highways is getting my tail to Juarez so I can legally rid myself of the crummy son-of-a-bitch who promised me a tomorrow like a yummy fruitcake and delivered instead . . . a garbage of life.' Her little daughter is in the back seat, playing jacks or silently solving arithmetic problems. Mother and daughter are divided, have been since birth; Emily's painter husband, who seemed to free her from her Bronx Jewish past, has ditched her; so she must free herself from the cold nest. . . . Peculiar things start happening early; on a visit to the chocolate factory in Hershey, Pa., little Sarah falls into a chocolate vat and her mother is told she can reclaim her at the conclusion of the guided tour." (Newsweek)

Reviewed by Sharon Rinkoff
Library J 97:2755 S 1 '72 260w

"For many, it gets harder to believe that two people can live together for a long time without paying a fierce price for it. . . . Yet some are still wistful about continuity. The very young seem more worried than ever about these old perplexities. . . . Meanwhile, those who like their own particular marriages have taken an enormous battering of late, and some are rebelling against being called abnormal. . . . Most of these dilemmas lunge out of Anne Roiphe's books. She seems to have a rugged belief in marriage, yet she also questions it acutely. Disentangling, working loose; the novel is a compressed study of that process. . . . This book doesn't have the range of [the author's] first two, perhaps because the remembered husband is too shadowy. . . . But the writing is exhilarating throughout." Nora Sayre

N Y Times Bk R p5 N 5 '72 850w
New Yorker 48:195 N 4 '72 160w

"As Emily speeds westward in her discovery of an American she's never seen—to a campsite meeting of Jesus freaks in Ohio, to a crushing hotel-room encounter with a conventioning dentist who blames his impotence on her bad breath... to a horrific entrapment in an old-folks' mobile-home camp in Texas—it takes a while to realize that the demarcation between the safely probable and the monstrously possible, between love and fear of what's out there in America, has been dissolved. 'Long Division' is a sometimes magical, sometimes bumpy trip. But I urge you to stay with it to [Emily's] arrival in Mexico, where a pronography-peddling border guard hands her a kind of Rosebud—an indication that Anne Roiphe has known all along where she was taking us. It's nice to read a novel that ends brilliantly." Walter Clemons

Newsweek 80:112 O 23 '72 450w

"Sarah, [Emily's] child, is a foil. She is a sometime stranger, a vessel of Emily's vulnerability. . . . An elusive child, Sarah is the result of admirable liberal values pathetically compromised by the instability of disintegrating family mores. She is unwitting victim. . . . Emily's mental meanderings are rich with classical illusions and historical perspective on woman's lot. The modern woman is likely to be more bewildered than either bitter or bedazzled by the possibilities of liberation. The author's implicit conclusion is that Woman's Lib is viable for the few, not the many, if the party line is adhered to fully. In probing the depths of one female's agonized psyche, Anne Roiphe has pursued an intensely personal vision and produced a piercing poignant portrayal of a modern woman still hooked on the notion . . . [of] love." I. P. Heldman

Sat R 55:85 O 14 '72 1150w

Time 100:112 O 23 '72 290w

ROKKAN, STEIN, jt. ed. Mass politics. See Allardt, E.

ROLAND, CONRAD. Frei Otto: tension structures; tr. by C. V. Amerongen. 172p il $22.50 Praeger

729 Architecture, Modern—20th century. Architecture—Designs and plans. Otto, Frei. Tension structures LC 69-19188

This book surveys "the structural studies, projects, experimental devices, and completed structures that have been carried out between 1953 and 1967 by Frei Otto and his followers. . . . [These include] pneumatic structures; multistory suspension buildings; compression-loaded structures such as lattice domes, mutable roofs, and super-shelters spanning whole sections of a city; and giant envelopes, which could be used to roof cities and valleys or to contain vast storage installations or marine cities. The author [seeks to] show how Frei Otto's existing and proposed structures will be employed in . . . the future development of . . . aesthetics, economics, and human ecology." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. Originally published in Germany in 1965.

"Roland has carefully assembled his material with a systematic approach. Otto is perhaps the most influential figure in the movement that, within the past 20 years, has begun to revolutionize the theory and practice of architecture. . . . [The author's] writing is clear and concise. . . . The text includes a thorough outline of Otto's professional career. . . . The foreword by Felix Candela is of special interest."

Choice 8:1169 N '71 220w

"Roland describes a number of kinds of tension structures (space frames . . . tents, suspended roofs, and humped surfaces) and gives many examples. The book is profusely and well illustrated with photographs and diagrams. It will be of interest mostly to architects and engineers, as well as to informed laymen seeking a detailed account of the subject." E. B. Murphy

Library J 96:1254 Ap 1 '71 130w

ROLAND, NICHOLAS. Who came by night. 223p $5.95 Holt

Nicodemus—Fiction

ISBN 0-03-091389-6 LC 77-182751

Nicodemus "is attracted to Jesus through stories, and then hears Him teaching in the Temple. He is impressed more and more by His wisdom and compassion. . . . He considers Him more than Elijah, the prophet. . . . The doubts, the lack of understanding of many people who couldn't believe what Jesus was saying and doing; the strict observance of the letter of the law rather than the spirit of the traditional teachings; the desire to maintain the status quo with the Romans rather than to cause trouble—these and many more factors in Jesus' public life are woven . . . into a re-creation of [the] years before Golgotha. The coming of Nicodemus by night with Joseph of Arimathea gives a Greek ending to the violence of the preceding day." (Best Sell)

"Although Jesus is the strong force around which everything centers, the characters of John, Nicodemus, Annas, Festus, Samuel, and Esther are clearly and sympathetically revealed. . . . Roland has brought this period to vivid realization . . . [and] has made the characters very human, weak and strong, as they were, real people, who saw Jesus, who believed and didn't believe, just such as we are today." V. J. Collamore

Best Sell 32:58 My 1 '72 300w

"[This novel] explores two themes: corruption in high places and rigidity in the interpretation of the law. If one of these elements could have been subordinated to the other, a stronger novel might have resulted. As it is, the author's ambiguous point of view fails to bring unity and dramatic force to his treatment of the story of Jesus and his ultimate crucifixion. [The book] is too short for adequate treatment of its complex themes . . . [and the] use of the present-day idiom is a jarring element, destroying the illusion of the first century setting. The novel does have some merit in that it dramatizes the dangers of a rigid approach in interpreting the law, and of rigidity of thinking in general. . . . [It] will no doubt appeal to the same folk who take delight in the Hollywood versions of Bible stories." M. D. Kravig

Christian Century 89:877 S 11 '72 550w

"[Roland's] characters are flat; the story lacks tension; and the plot is unsurprising. The author's interpretation of the theological difficulties Jesus created for the Pharisees is interesting but probably not for those untrained in the New Testament." D. C. Taylor

Library J 97:1827 My 15 '72 160w

Reviewed by Dianne Rynne

Library J 97:2970 S 15 '72 160w [YA]

TLS p1166 O 1 '71 300w

The ROMANCE of ballooning; the story of the early aeronauts. (ed. by Joseph Jobé). (A Studio bk) 197p il maps $35 Viking

629.133 Balloons—History. Flight—History
ISBN 670-60398-8 LC 78-164993

This is a history "of balloon ascensions, from the first one in France in 1783 to various Alpine flights in 1970. [Included also are] accounts of . . . perilous adventures, technical data on modern balloons, etc." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography.

"The absurdities and heroics of the history of aeronautics are captured . . . [in this splendid book. It] is made up almost entirely of contemporary accounts, engravings, and (after 1860) photographs. The most fascinating chapters are the early ones; but a valuable last section explains just how a modern balloon is built, what the sport is like today. . . . and how the beginner can get started." D. S. Roberts

Book World p10 D 5 '71 700w

Reviewed by Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk R p20 D 11 '71 40w

RONAN, COLIN A. Invisible astronomy. 173p il pl $7.95 Lippincott

522 Radio astronomy. Stars. Astrophysics
ISBN 0-397-00649-7 LC 78-165164

This study "deals with radio and infrared astronomy, on the one hand, and with x-ray, a-ray, and cosmic ray astronomy on the other. . . . The author discusses at length the relevance of these observations to current astronomical and cosmological theories." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Presents an excellent and most up-to-date summary of the methods and results of all the astronomical techniques which do not rely on visible light. . . . The style is nonmathematical throughout and can be understood by undergraduates who are taking a conventional astronomy course concurrently. One wishes that the author had not been so terse at times and had given more illustrative detail. The bibliography is totally inadequate. . . . [but] the book is strongly recommended." . . .

RONAN, C. A.—Continued

Choice 9:671 J1/Ag '72 120w

"Ronan's description of the astronomer's universe is intellectually satisfying because he manages to describe the elements of modern theory with simplicity while presenting enough detail to keep the reader from drifting off among the nebulae. As an introduction, it's probably one of the most current and even-handed available. The most difficult chapters are the ones discussing technical innovations that make possible nonvisual astronomy. . . . The summarizing chapters are more readable. In them, Ronan tries to collect these astronomical observations into a coherent system, placing each in its scientific and historical context. Because Invisible Astronomy doesn't assume a scientific audience, it's possible to read the book even if you don't know anything about physics."

New Repub 166:22 Ap 8 '72 350w

RONDIÈRE, PIERRE. Purity or pollution; the struggle for water. 125p il col il col maps $4.95 Watts, F.

628.1 Water—Juvenile literature. Water supply—Juvenile literature. Water—Pollution—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-02103-3 LC 74-153828

This history of the world's water supply covers "the role of water in our lives, how it has been abused, and the ways we are now learning to treat it properly. The author's solution to the pollution problem is . . . one requiring international cooperation. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades eight to twelve." (Library J)

"[The author] has given ■ a book that is pertinent and informative. . . . With the ever increasing need for water, the concluding chapter dealing with revitalizing water is of great interest. Recommended." Francis Carmody
Best Sell 31:523 F 15 '72 150w

"[This] clear, comprehensive . . . [account] [is for] readers with some general science background. . . . Though the book is beautiful to look at, the many eye-catching photographs scattered throughout are not effectively coordinated with the text. Photos often appear on different pages from the material they illustrate or, in other cases, have little bearing on the text at all. Nevertheless, this account, including an adequate index and a brief but very good bibliography, is the most complete, up-to-date treatment of the topic of water on the secondary school level." Myra Silver
Library J 97:2491 J1 '72 200w [YA]

ROOT, WAVERLEY. The food of Italy; with an introd. by Samuel Chamberlain; il. by Warren Chappell. 750p maps $16.50 Atheneum pubs.

641 Cookery. Italian. Italy—Social life and customs. Agriculture—Italy. Wine and wine making
LC 74-139325

"This is a study of the Italian character and appetite. Region by province, city by town, and hamlet by countryside, [the author] has surveyed the growing, harvesting, preparation, cooking, serving, and eating of foods and wines." (Publisher's note) General index. Index of food and dishes.

"[This] is so remarkable ■ book, so rich in verve and intellect, that two small squawks almost but not quite embarrass me: (a) the double-spread maps . . . are so tightly bound into the center that some detail ■ lost, and (b) some of the material has appeared before in Root's own The Cooking of Italy (in the Time-Life series). But where there is duplication the content has been meticulously rewritten, the approach is more sophisticated and expansive. Most of the material is new." Nora Magid

Book World p8 F 20 '72 260w

Reviewed by S. L. Steen

Library J 97:1324 Ap 1 '72 140w

"If your heart flutters for fettucine al burro, if you rhapsodize over risi ■ bis or swoon for saltimbocca (literally, 'jump into the mouth'), this extraordinary and encyclopedic study of Italian cuisine and character is required reading. . . . While Root's tome is no cookbook ■ such, he describes processes ■ well ■ raisonne d'être for dish after dish, including the dialect names which, for any traveler, should be an enormous aid in puzzling out local menus. . . . Weaving history and anecdote throughout his narrative, Root has managed to capture not only the essence of the Italian table but also of the Italian soul. While it is long and sometimes necessarily repetitive, his book is so complete that anyone with a consuming love for Italian cooking—or eating—must read it." S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 78:116 D ■ '71 700w

RORVIK, DAVID M. Brave new baby; promise and peril of the biological revolution. 202p $5.95 Doubleday

577 Biology—Research. Reproduction
LC 79-132510

"This book begins with description of biomedical techniques already in use: artificial insemination, embryo transplantation, sex selection, and surgery on the fetus. Glimpses into the not-too-distant future present test-tube babies, genetic manipulation, and lines of human offspring derived from ■ single parent. Glances further into the future disclose chemical transfer to the mind, human immortality, and 'thinking' machines." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

"This book is ■ good early attempt at popularization [of the biological revolution]. It will be of interest to biologists, physicians, students of ethics, religion, and law, and to the laymen who desire to be informed beyond newspaper headlines. . . . Many leaders in the field are quoted at length; this device has great impact in that it shows how far along openly expressed thinking has really come."

Choice 8:1047 O '71 140w

"The discussions are based on scientific fact, reinforced with conjecture and laced with inquiries into attendant legal and psychological problems. In concluding, Rorvik asserts that any biomedical advances are ultimately for naught if mankind does not control the greatest single threat to his future well-being: human overpopulation." J. H. Zar
Library J 96:491 F 1 '71 100w

Reviewed by Elizabeth Storey

Library J 96:2149 Je 15 '71 260w [YA]

ROSCOE, THEODORE. The Lincoln assassination, April 14, 1865; investigation of a president's murder uncovers a web of conspiracy. (A Focus bk) 90p il maps $3.95 Watts, F.

364.1 Lincoln, Abraham, President U.S.—Assassination—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-00993-9 LC 73-152852

"Roscoe describes in detail the events before and after the killing and discusses the actions and possible motives of all concerned. [Bibliography. Index.] Grade seven to twelve." (Library J)

"[This is one of] the latest additions to the Focus Books Series and [is an] excellent one. (Focus books are designed to provide ■ closer study of some historic event than could be possible in a general history text.) . . . Roscoe's description of the 'main event' is vivid, but the telling of the murderous attempts on Secretary of State Seward and the chilling story of Booth's flight and eventual capture are even more disturbing. Readers will be moved to an uneasy comparison of the 1860's to the 1960's." Mrs. J. G. Gray
Best Sell 31:387 N 15 '71 90w

"Emphasizing the elements of mystery, this account of the Lincoln assassination unfortunately tends to be confusing and melodramatic. . . . Many prints, photographs and maps are well reproduced and useful for supplementary material on the period. However, the vocabulary . . . is far too complicated for the age group, and the use of emotionally-charged phrases . . . seriously detracts from the account's objectivity. The bibliography includes many items which are not generally available to junior and senior high students." Barbara Quattrone

Library J 97:1618 Ap 15 '72 120w [YA]

ROSE, RICHARD. Governing without consensus: an Irish perspective. 567p 11 maps $12.50 Beacon press

941.6 Northern Ireland—Politics and government
ISBN 0-8070-4390-7 LC 70-156451

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by A. M. Lee
Ann Am Acad 400:195 Mr '72 380w
Choice 8:1633 F '72 160w

Reviewed by Peter Lyon
Encounter 39:73 J1 '72 140w
TLS p297 Mr 17 '72 1850w

ROSEN, BARBARA, ed. Witchcraft. 407p 11 $9.95 Taplinger

133.4 Witchcraft, Trials
ISBN 0-8008-8372-1 LC 74-179662

This is a "selection from Elizabethan and Jacobean pamphlet literature on the subject of witches and witchtrials." (Engl Hist R) Bibliography. Glossary. Index of familiars. Index of persons. Index of places.

"Some of the tracts concerned are exceedingly rare and it is good to have them made more accessible. Mrs. Rosen's edition, however, is better fitted to the needs of the general reader than of the scholar. Her decision to modernize the spelling and punctuation is defensible, but her omission of long passages from some of the pamphlets means that the serious student will still have to turn to the originals. . . . [Mrs. Rosen] stresses the psychological aspects of witch-beliefs, but though seldom silly on this most difficult subject she is not often original either. She does not probe very far into the relationship between the pamphlet accounts and the actual trials and she rather overstates her case by claiming that the pamphlets 'provide the best approach to discovering what witchcraft meant in England at this time.'" Keith Thomas

Engl Hist R 86:411 Ap '71 180w

"The volume complements C. L'Estrange Ewen's Witchcraft and Demonianism [BRD 1971], and is, indeed, somewhat more useful because of the superb introduction—a statement which, beside other attributes, carefully establishes the distinction between witchcraft in England and on the Continent. Each pamphlet's text is preceded by explanatory editorial notes; and the book includes . . . a very helpful simple glossary. . . . Numerous contemporary woodcuts establish a pleasing mood for the reader. Recommended." Lee Ash

Library J 97:509 F 1 '72 140w

ROSEN, RICHARD DEAN. Me and my friends, we no longer profess any graces; a premature memoir. 189p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

818 U.S.—Social conditions
LC 79-152816

The author of these essays "won the 1970 Academy of American Poets Prize at Harvard, where he is now a senior. [In these articles he] . . . looks for signs of national decay in everyday life; an analysis of the inferior quality of our food follows . . . a discussion of the . . . art of Richard Brautigan. The 'nervous bourgeois habit' of travel and the passive viewing of baseball are both escapes from confrontation." (Library J)

"Rosen has a sensitivity for the poignant, even wrenching reality of the current American scene. . . . [He] covers—and rediscovers—culture, poetry, history and politics. Especially enlightening is his chapter on food and eating. Rosen slips easily into prose poems that are simply beautiful; no other word except perhaps masterful will do. . . . Only occasionally is [his] language studied, his metaphors strained, his vocabulary weak. . . . And though Rosen is generally better as poet-narrator than as analyst, there are exceptions. . . . I find him painfully perceptive in his put-down of radical poseurs—for he appears to be putting himself down alongside the rest of us. For further insight, read the book." Charles Whitman

Christian Century 88:1508 D 22 '71 600w

"The ironic tensions of the self inherent in the artistic temperament encountering the necessity of political action inform these well-written informal essays with psychological honesty. . . . Rosen is really asking for higher standards in both our art and our life. Recommended for all libraries interested in the contemporary scene." R. R. Centing

Library J 96:3138 O 1 '71 220w

ROSENBERG, BERNARD. Dictionary for the disenchanted. 89p il $4.95 Regnery

817 Satire, American
LC 72-80938

The definitions in this volume are intended to illustrate the hypocrisies in American society today. Rosenberg has been editor of the magazine Dissent.

"A modern imitation of The Devil's Dictionary, [enlarged ed., BRD 1967] with all of Ambrose Bierce's pseudoscholarly verbosity but very little of his wit." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:130 N '72 20w

"Not only is this a dictionary for the disenchanted, but it is written by one who is disenchanted. The cutting definitions spare no one nor anything. It appears to be Rosenberg's thesis that nearly everyone is game playing. . . . This is a serious book which should be read in that vein; but at the same time, the reader should not suppress the chuckles that will come naturally from reading the sarcastic definitions. However, it is not a major work, and therefore library acquisition should be of low priority." J. J. Fox

Library J 97:3608 N 1 '72 170w

ROSENBERG, BERNARD, ed. Mass culture revisited; ed. by Bernard Rosenberg [and] David Manning White. 473p $10.95; pa $5.95 Van Nostrand-Reinhold

917.8 U.S.—Civilization. U.S.—Intellectual life
LC 71-164986

"Articles focusing on the nature of popular culture in America during the 1960's, this work is a sequel to the editors' other anthology, Mass culture: the popular arts in America [BRD 1957]. . . . The book is divided into eight . . . sections: issues, overview, television, film, magazines and newspapers, spy fiction, advertising, and alternatives." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies.

"Most of the articles have appeared elsewhere, although a few, including insightful position papers by the editors, were prepared especially for this volume. . . . An interesting feature is the tendency of the editors and contributors to disagree on the positive contributions of mass culture to general public enlightenment. The quality of the selections is uneven, some excessively burdened with sociological jargon, others immensely entertaining and readable. Unfortunately, there is no index and only minimal bibliographical references."

Choice 9:142 Mr '72 160w

"The early sections are devoted to interpretations, by the editors and others, of the reality, meaning, and extent of shared patterns of leisure, entertainment, and media experiences. Predictably, youth culture seems to be the most prevalent addition to the new volume. While such sections as the 'The Selling of the Presidency' suffer from excerpted brevity, the more complete articles on fiction, the press, and TV have much merit. All in all, the level of analysis improves upon that of [the earlier volume] but the attempt to be 'now' will probably make [this one] less enduring." H. R. Weiner

Library J 97:1822 My 15 '72 130w

ROSENBERG, CARROLL SMITH. Religion and the rise of the American city; the New York city mission movement, 1812-1870. 300p $10.50 Cornell univ. press

266 Church work. New York (City)—Poor
ISBN 0-8014-0659-5 LC 76-164640

This "historical review and interpretation of religious development in the first half of the 19th century stresses the role of revivals, mission cities, tracts, and tract societies in trying to handle the . . . religious and social problems of New York City." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The chief interest in this research is to show the build-up, in this period, of the socioeconomic functions which made the activities of the next hundred years so significant and so extremely difficult to conduct."

Choice 9:382 My '72 200w

"This book is a valuable contribution to the 'recovery of American religious history,' especially as that recovery concerns the evangelical inspiration of many of the social movements of the antebellum period. . . . [The author's] study also adds to our appreciation of the millennial dimension of reform thought in the 1830s and of the institutional importance of the many 'benevolent' societies of that era. Her explication of the ideology of the evangelical leaders does justice to their religious sincerity and human sympathies. . . . [This] is a clear, well-written, and informative book. It is based on thorough research, illuminates an important subject, and is filled with interesting sidelights. It deserves attention and respect." Philip Gleason

ROSENBERG, C. S.—Continued

J Am Hist 59:415 S '72 600w

ROSENBERG, GEORGE S. The worker grows old. 206p $8.50 Jossey-Bass

301.43 Aged—U.S. Labor and laboring classes—Philadelphia. Social psychology
SBN 87589-053-9 LC 78-110628

"This study dealing with the social isolation of the older white working class is based on data on 1,596 persons selected by a multi-phase random sample of Philadelphia blocks and households. . . . The analysis indicates that neither poverty nor aging, taken separately or jointly, is a factor in social isolation. Rosenberg locates the source of working-class isolation not in the characteristics of the individual, but in the social composition of the neighborhood. He [states:] . . . 'For the poor (working class), the presence in high concentration of people of their own or adjacent age . . . reduces isolation and increases the rate of local friendships.'" (Am Soc R)

"As Rosenberg reminds the reader, the study deals with a specialized population and utilizes constructs and indices which make some of the findings non-comparable to other gerontological studies. . . . [He] concludes that 'the viability of working class social networks is a function of opportunity structure,' and joins with those who point out the need for a theoretical model which will utilize processual as well as cross-sectional data and which will encompass both the gerontological and stratificational approaches." Aaron Lipman

Am Soc R 36:1133 D '71 550w

"[Rosenberg] refutes other concepts relative to causative agents. . . . [His] work is an excellent source for reconceptualization of posited theorems and would be an ideal graduate seminar topic in gerontology. The level of presentation is believed too advanced for undergraduates. Recommended as a theory challenge to all gerontologists, as well as behavioral scientists. [It offers] a more selective approach than . . . R. R. Boyd and Oakes' Foundations of practical gerontology [BRD 1970]."

Choice 7:1586 Ja '71 160w

ROSENBERG, HAROLD. Act and the actor: making the self. (An NAL bk) 214p $6.95 World pub.

120 Philosophy. Man
LC 73-112428

This volume, one of the "Perspectives in Humanism series, deals with the self that has concerned Man since his first manifestation of consciousness. . . . Rosenberg asserts that we cannot separate Man from his actions, his actions from events, nor events from the course of history. He turns to the writings of philosophers, politicians, playwrights, novelists, and analyzes insights that arise in actions. He evaluates Karl Marx's interpretation of history . . . Shakespeare's Hamlet . . . Dostoyevsky's The Idiot . . . Sartre's autobiographical [The] Words [BRD 1964, 1965] . . . [and] The Eichmann case." (Publisher's note) Nine of the ten essays have been previously published. Index.

"Rosenberg, art critic and historian, presents 'speculations' about 20th-century man as actor, with his highest aim the performance itself. . . . At times, Rosenberg's tendency to parallel historical persons and fictional characters is confusing. For example, he speaks of 'the estrangement of Socrates, Hamlet or Kierkegaard' as the effect 'not of common processes but of their own choice.' (Shakespeare, of course, would make Hamlet's choices.) . . . Any reader who likes to think, especially one who likes to ponder the trends of current drama, will enjoy these reflections on man and his art."

Choice 8:1574 F '72 170w

"Rosenberg has written a remarkable philosophical analysis of Western culture. The interpretations of Hamlet and Marx's thought are most extraordinary and sensitive. The criticism of Marx and Marxism is significant far beyond the limits of Rosenberg's own thesis. Highly recommended for all philosophy collections." R. L. Perkins

Library J 95:3783 N 1 '70 250w

ROSENBERG, HAROLD. The de-definition of art; action art to pop to earthworks. 256p ill $10 Horizon press

709.04 Art, Modern—20th century. Art—Philosophy
ISBN 0-8180-0118-6 LC 73-170944

In this book, consisting of reviews which appeared in the New Yorker, Rosenberg "confronts present developments in art and indicates where art is going. . . . [The author deals with] the creative identities of Arp, Dubuffet, Guston, Lichtenstein, Newman, Oldenburg, Rothko, Stella and others, through analysis of specific works and the emotional and intellectual assumptions behind them. He establishes the interconnection between modern art and modern ideas, with emphasis on the past ten years . . . analyzes the tensions between American and European art . . . and examines the role and dilemmas of the museum in our time." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The articles are enjoyable to read, articulate and learned. . . . Rosenberg is the most fruitful of contemporary writers on modern art and for that reason should be in every library. Unfortunately, the 54 black-and-white reproductions are only of newspaper quality."

Choice 9:804 S '72 120w

"[Rosenberg] uses the art scene to rewrite continually his own theory of modern art creation, which he calls Action art. The individual pieces in this collection are like chapters in a book: each one brings us back to what we think about his theory. Perceptive as he is, Rosenberg seems less a guide to the current situation than a landlord who's on the premises because he's checking up on his property. . . . [He] sometimes seems caught in his own theorizing—his writing on art before the Abstract Expressionists makes it appear as if he can see art only in terms of Action painting. Yet frequently this approach can be extremely provocative." Sanford Schwartz

Nation 214:697 My 29 '72 1450w

"Of all the critical voices raised in protest against vanguard American art, Harold Rosenberg's is at one the most passionate and persuasive. . . . Pop and vanguard art, the enemy of the self, is assailed with masochistic delight. Rosenberg comes most to life when he is detailing the inanities he sees in gallery after gallery. . . . He attacks the vanguard time and again for failing to speak out clearly against political injustice, then belabors museum directors who do, as though it bismirched their saintly calling. He even charges Pop Art with the one sin it has thus far escaped—turning away from the world (this from the champion of abstraction!)" Douglas Davis

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 30 '72 1800w

"There is, says Harold Rosenberg, a 'profound crisis that has overtaken the arts in our epoch. Painting, sculpture, drama, music have been undergoing a process of de-definition. The nature of art has become uncertain . . . No one can say with assurance what a work of art is.' This sharp sense of crisis is Rosenberg's distinguishing mark as an art critic. It is what makes him exciting to read, and what makes him the critic for the 'outsider'—the intelligent reader who is not part of the cool, hip, self-generating preoccupations of the current art world. . . . [He] detects with great sensitivity the forces that are deflecting and pressuring art in the direction of esthetic and moral nullity." Jack Kroll

Newsweek 79:87 My 29 '72 800w

TLS p1311 N ■ '72 1450w

ROSENBERG, J. MITCHELL. Jerome Frank: jurist and philosopher. 274p $8.75 Philosophical lib.

340.1 Frank, Jerome. Law
ISBN 0-8022-2328-1 LC 76-100581

This book deals with "Judge Frank's opinions and other writings, with emphasis on his philosophy of legal realism." (Library J)

"A welcome addition to a small but growing body of materials on the legal realism movement, this is easily the best book out on what is perhaps the most major figure in that important 20th-century development in American jurisprudence. . . . The explanation of Frank's contribution to contemporary legal thinking is very well done indeed."

Choice 8:734 JI '71 100w

"[This] is a curious mélange of exhaustively footnoted commentary on [Frank's] opinions and principles plus some very elementary explanations of trial by jury, the meaning of judicial legislation, and the like. Expanded from a doctoral dissertation, it is not written for lawyers, yet its appeal to other groups may be doubted. Recommended only for the large special library." Marian Boner

Library J 96:629 F 15 '71 110w

ROSENBERG, MARVIN. The masks of King Lear. 431p $13.75 Univ. of Calif. press 822.3 Shakespeare, William, King Lear
ISBN 0-520-01718-8 LC 75-115492

This study of King Lear "explores major interpretations of distinguished actors and directors as well as of critics from England, the United States, France, Belgium, Japan, Sweden, Norway, Germany, Italy, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Romania, Hungary, Bulgaria, and Poland. Is the play unsuited for the stage, as Charles Lamb—and others—have declared? How, in fact, has it been staged, and how visualized by critics? Is Lear designed to be a frail and aging old man? A powerful image of authority? Mad or senile, to begin with? A kindly old father? Everyman? All of these? None? Does the play end with redemption? Unmitigated despair? Is it Christian? Pagan? Mr. Rosenberg confronts these and other questions." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Rosenberg has brought together all that can be known about the stage history of King Lear, and has used that information to construct what amounts to a line-by-line commentary on the play. The book is accurate, intelligent, comprehensive, and often illuminating. It should be part of every Shakespeare or drama collection. It is not easy reading, for it is so freighted with details that it sometimes seems more like a variorum than an essay; and while readers familiar with the text will find much here that is common knowledge, those who do not know the play thoroughly may very well lose the forest for the trees. The author has studiously avoided using his data to argue for one or another interpretation of the play." E. Pearlman

Library J 97:3592 N 1 '72 220w

"[The author is] very much the theater man; but although some of the visualized action assumes a more cluttered stage than is strictly necessary, his scene-by-scene imaginative reconstruction does bring out in specific detail how much we need to see—gesture, facial play, movement, etc.—even if only in the mind's eye, if we are to experience the play with any fullness. More important, he now shows a much more subtle sense of what is going on at any point in the dramatic action. . . . He has the producer's eye for the almost unnoticed anticipations of future developments of feeling and action, and, correspondingly, the felt pressure (in word, gesture, grouping) of what has gone before. And he has the critic's sensitivity to language." L. C. Knights

N Y Rev of Books 19:3 O 5 '72 800w

ROSENBLATT, STANLEY. Justice denied. 324p $6.95 Nash pub.

345.73 Justice, Administration of. Law reform
SBN 8402-1185-6 LC 72-143016

The author tells of "those things which are wrong with the American system of justice . . . [including] laws on sexual crimes, abortion and pornography statutes. . . . [His book contains] criticisms as well of prosecutors, police, the National Guard, and the judiciary itself." (Choice)

"This book is not particularly scholarly or profound, but rather characterized by advocacy and a marshaling of facts to prove a particular preconceived set of conclusions. It does not have depth or detachment but does superficially treat serious problems. Justice Denied serves a purpose in informing the unsophisticated general public but is rather elementary for college students and much too simple for the serious scholar in sociology, law, or political science."

Choice 8:1645 F '72 160w

"A small part of this book is devoted to . . . [an] indictment of delay and inefficiency in the courts. . . . The language varies from colloquial to mildly profane, and the tone is bitter and scornful. The author, a personal injury lawyer, is quite ready to advise the world on how to set things right, and specific references to cases and statutes lend a kind of spurious authority to his views. But he offers nothing new; the market is flooded with oversimplified plans for reform, and this is not one of the best." Marian Boner

Library J 96:3340 O 15 '71 110w

ROSENBLOOM, DAVID H. Federal service and the Constitution; the development of the public employment relationship. (Cornell Univ. Cornell studies in civil liberty) 267p $8
Cornell Univ. press

342.6 Civil service—U.S.
ISBN 0-8014-0614-5 LC 74-140462

The author "explores the constitutional relationship between the state and the civilian employee in the executive branch of the federal government. Using a historical approach, he attempts to delineate the steps by which the rights of bureaucrats have been circumscribed through such regulations as the ban on taking part in certain partisan activities. In America today, the federal bureaucrat actually has fewer constitutional rights than the citizen working in private industry." (Library J) Index.

"In the course of the study the whole set of conditions which have been attached to public employment by patronage practices, civil service regulations, restraints on political activity, loyalty and security programs, veteran's preference, and guarantees against discrimination is set out in detail and subject to analysis. . . . The value of the book lies in the combination of very exhaustive detail in which the development of legal conditions of public employment is set out and the thoroughness with which the doctrines offered to justify or question these conditions are examined." Phillip Monypenny

Ann Am Acad 403:203 S '72 700w

"Rosenbloom is an American Society for Public Administration fellow with the United States Civil Service Commission. . . . [His] work is well documented, particularly with Supreme Court case material, and the author makes use of appropriate analogies to foreign countries to help the reader to judge what is the best political role for the bureaucrat in modern democracy." Hindy Schachter

Library J 96:1718 My 15 '71 160w

ROSENBLOOM, RICHARD S. New tools for urban management; studies in systems and organizational analysis [by] Richard S. Rosenbloom [and] John R. Russell. 298p $8 Harvard Univ. Division of res.

352 Municipal government—U.S. Cities and towns—U.S. Operations research. Systems analysis. City planning—U.S.
ISBN 0-87584-093-0 LC 73-168850

These "case studies are presented to illustrate the application of operational analysis and systems analysis as tools for more efficient organization and management of urban affairs. The first case compares an attempt to utilize the tools for solving unemployment problems in a Dayton, Ohio Model Cities neighborhood to an application of systems analysis for the much simpler task of locating a fire station in another middle size city. The second and third cases look at the experience of New York State's Bureau of the Budget in its development of analytic systems and at the New Jersey Housing Finance Agency's applications of systems analysis for administering complex housing program for multiplicities of cities. . . . [The final case involves analytic innovations in planning and building the newly planned city of Columbia, Maryland." (Choice)

"The authors assess the potential benefits of wider use of systematic methods in attacking urban management problems while also identifying important technical and institutional limitations in their effectiveness. A valuable supplement for technically advanced students of urban planning, public administration, and urban sociology."

Choice 9:404 My '72 180w

"This is not, despite its title, a how-to-do-it book for model building, data analysis, or computer simulation. Instead it is a rather nice compendium of hard lessons learned by several experienced model builders, analysts, and simulators in the workaday world. . . . The emphases and biases are hardheaded and pragmatic, not theoretical or technical, and the chief strength of the book is the commonsensical character of the sophistication exhibited in the cases. A fundamental, recurring message is clearly aimed at technically skilled but politically naive analysts searching for ways to cut urban ailments: the major systemic constraints are political, economic, administrative, and operational, not simply methodological." G. D. Brewer

Science 176:647 My 12 '72 1500w

ROSENGART, OLIVER A. Busted; a handbook for lawyers and their clients with reference to the new criminal procedure law. 175p $6.95 St Martins

345 Criminal law. Courts—New York (City)
LC 78-183289

"Written by a lawyer affiliated with the National Lawyers Guild—a group which provides counsel for those arrested in the course of political activities—this advises how to protect legal rights. . . . It is a step-by-step guide through New York Criminal Court from the time of arrest to sentencing and appeals. Each phase of a case is covered: arrest, the police station, arraignment, dismissals, preliminary hearings and other discovery devices, representation of drug addicts, plea bargaining, trial, sentencing, and appeals. Laws and precedent-setting cases are cited, and various sample forms are appended." (Library J)

"Rosengart seeks to provide a handbook for lawyers and for social activists who confront unsympathetic criminal court systems. . . . The book reads well and the number of technical and legal terms is kept to a minimum so that its contents may be appreciated by the non-lawyer as well as by those formally trained in the law."

Choice 9:1206 N '72 140w

"[The author] offers introductory insights on the practice of urban criminal law for both lawyers and clients. Using New York City misdemeanor courts as a paradigm, Rosengart seeks to educate the neophyte in the options and intricacies of the law, while emphasizing an anti-Establishment viewpoint. . . . On a practical level this book is of limited value to the non-New York City attorney, due to its saturation with local statutes and practices. The new lawyer might better prepare himself by digesting his own state's penal code." C. M. Sevilla

Library J 97:3175 O 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by Sumika Yamashita

Library J 97:3475 O 15 '72 130w [YA]

ROSENTHAL, ALAN. The new documentary in action: a casebook in film making. 287p pl $11.95 Univ. of Calif. press

791.43 Moving pictures, Documentary
ISBN 0-520-01888-5 LC 78-139776

"Rosenthal interviews such . . . documentary film makers as Allan King of Warrendale, Frederick Wiseman of High school, Albert Maysles of Salesman, Don Alan Pennebaker of Don't look back, along with a number of television journalists and Norman McLaren (interviewed for his contributions to film technique). Rosenthal asks . . . questions stressing film making technique and distribution problems as much as artistic selection of content. . . . [The] interviews are prefaced by a . . . sketch of the career of the director or member of the production crew. A 17-page history of documentary film making opens the book." (Choice) Index.

Choice 8:1598 F '72 160w

"The philosophies of contemporary documentary film makers are elucidated through revealing interviews in this informative publication. . . . Most of the films covered are available in 16mm for library showings. The book will be of great interest to film makers and film buffs." J. L. Limbacher

Library J 96:3776 N 15 '71 90w

"The question of the relationship of the cinema to politics is a much-debated one, but one in which the terms of the debate give the appearance of being set from the left. . . . It is hard to tell whether, behind the academic mask, Mr Rosenthal is a supporter of the crusading radical left or merely of crusading journalism, independent of political standpoint, and in a way it does not matter. The book consists almost entirely of interviews. . . . The questions asked are intelligent and to the point, and the answers reveal a lot about the politics of documentary film-making as well as about technique. Most of what is revealed makes ideal ammunition for an exposé of the manipulation, philistine interference and open or covert censorship practised by the Establishment, here and in the United States, on courageous and independent-minded artists."

TLS p433 Ap 21 '72 1150w

ROSENTHAL, BERNARD, jt. ed. Race and the American romantics. S. Freimark, V.

ROSENTHAL, BERNARD G. The images of man. 244p $8.95 Basic bks.

155.8 Psychology
SBN 465-03200-1 LC 79-135555

A professor of social psychology at the Illinois Institute of Technology argues "that modern psychology, by neglecting the values that have been developed in Western societies in the past, fails to take account of the full range of possibilities, or 'images,' that are latent in man. . . . Dr. Rosenthal has attempted to . . . identify the chief characteristics of three societies of the past (classical Greece, medieval Europe, and the Renaissance) . . . in the areas of intelligence, perception, group behavior, and the ego. . . . [He] suggests research methods which may be used to discover these values." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"This book is part of the current counter-culture fad. . . . [The author's] historical analyses of the three societies chosen . . . are full of textbook over-simplifications and are irrelevant to the proposed lines of research presented at the conclusion of each chapter. As far as these research proposals themselves are concerned, some are interesting, others seem silly; but whatever their nature, actual data would be a great deal more convincing than mere proposals for research." Thom Verhave

Library J 96:4100 D 15 '71 180w

"A psychologist's hopelessly generalized and overambitious version of Learning From the Past. Specifically correcting modern psychological aptitude tests and values by applying lessons from the Greeks, the Middle Ages and the Renaissance (from the Greeks we get 'excellence,' from the Renaissance the Renaissance spirit, etc.). Psychology meets New School Cultural History—in a sophomore classroom."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ag 29 '71 50w

ROSENTHAL, DONALD B. The limited elite: politics and government in two Indian cities. 360p $12.75 Univ. of Chicago press

320.954 Agra (City)—Politics and government. Poona (City)—Politics and government
ISBN 0-226-72810-2 LC 70-121818

In this study of urban government and politics in Agra and Poona, the author deals with "the role of religion and caste, the nature of the party system—including the relevance of urban experience for the one-party dominant model—and the relationship between politicians and administrators. . . . There is also a discussion of legislative assembly and parliamentary elections in the two cities." (Ann Am Acad)

"Explicitly denying that his two cities, Agra and Poona, are representative of all or of certain major categories of Indian cities, the author presents a quite comprehensive account of political life in these cities, with ample explicit comparisons, and with frequent reference to other Indian and non-Indian urban situations. . . . One of the very great strengths of this book is the way in which sophisticated methodologies and concern for theory are judiciously and deftly woven into the fabric of the presentation. We are not bludgeoned with laborious discourses on either theory or method but, as appropriate, the author deals knowledgeably with both, including many end-notes that readers should not ignore. Students of political science generally, not only students of Indian politics, will find this a useful and stimulating volume." H. L. Erdman

Ann Am Acad 397:152 S '71 550w

"Rosenthal is the one-eyed man in the land of the blind that is Indian urban politics. His is one of the few studies in this field and we are bound to be grateful. Nor, as one eye goes, is there anything wrong with Dr. Rosenthal's; he uses it industriously and sees a great deal. He has looked hard and long at the politics of Agra and Poona and reports with evident faithfulness who they are, where they came from socially, how they are associated with each other and with politicians operating at other (mainly State) levels and how they conduct their activities. . . . [He] seems to have found it hard to recover from the shock of finding that it was difficult to carry out a cross-polity comparative analysis in which Indian findings would be put alongside his earlier U.S. data. . . . [The book] is full of good stuff but it could have been so much better used if Dr. Rosenthal had not allowed himself to be so put out, so worried and so solemn." W. H. Morris-Jones

Pacific Affairs 45:295 summer '72 750w

"[This] is a rich and well-documented book, theoretically unadventurous, but at the same time one of few detailed works in its particular field."

TLS p1119 S 22 '72 300w

ROSENTHAL, ERWIN I. J. Studia Semitica, 2v; v 1 Jewish Themes; v2 Islamic themes. (Cambridge Univ. Oriental pubs, nos 16-17) 366/222p v 1 $12.50; v2 $9.50 Cambridge

296 Bible O.T.—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Philosophy and religion. Islam. Judaism

SBN 521-07958-6(v 1); 521-07959-4(v2)

LC 70-116836

Devoted to themes of Jewish and Islamic religious history these volumes contain "some twenty-five articles, all previously published [between 1940 and 1967] either in scholarly journals or Festschriften. . . . They deal with the Hebrew Bible, Jewish philosophy [and political philosophy in] medieval and modern Islam." (TLS) Index to volume one in volume one. Index to volume two in volume two.

"[The second volume] is devoted to Islamic themes, specifically political philosophy in medieval Islam and religion and politics in modern Islam. . . . Islamic political thinking is essentially value-oriented. Empirical observation, pragmatic advice, or operationally valid hypotheses about political realities play but a small part. As such this literature will appeal more to historians of culture and society than to analytically minded political scientists. . . . Of the articles in this volume, the second, 'Some Aspects of Islamic Political Thought,' introduces the three main Islamic genres of political thinking and sketches the views of the several philosophers treated at length in other articles. . . . As Professor Rosenthal shows, these thinkers were devoted to an ideal of human perfection in which intellectual vision was carried out in moral action." I. M. Lapidus
Am Pol Sci R 66:1028 S '72 900w (review of v2)

"It is not clear why the Cambridge Faculty of Oriental Studies and the Cambridge University Press should have judged it appropriate to reprint articles which no one who wishes to read them should have any difficulty in finding in the scholarly outlets to which their author originally consigned them. . . . None can be described as 'pioneering' or 'seminal' . . . but most constitute the bread-and-butter stuff which professional scholars are expected to produce. The most valuable study included in this miscellaneous collection is, perhaps, the very perceptive article on Ismar Elbogen whose scholarship and considerable influence on Jewish studies in the first third of this century deserve to be better known. . . . Photographic reproduction has [not] added to the beauty of these two volumes, for each article appears in its original fount and garb. . . . More serious, however, is the misleading title. . . . [It] suggests coverage of area (Akkadian, Syriac, Ugaritic, Ethiopic, &c) and subject (philology and linguistics in particular) which is wholly absent from these volumes."

TLS p976 Ag 13 '71 450w

ROSKILL, STEPHEN. Hankey: man of secrets; v 1, 1877-1918. 672p il $12.50 St Martins

B or 92 Hankey, Maurice Pascal Alers Hankey, 1st Baron. European War, 1914-1918—Great Britain
LC 75-156341

This is the first volume of a projected two volume biographical study of the career of "Maurice Hankey of the Royal Marine Artillery [who] became the secretary to the Committee of Imperial Defense, which developed British defense policies before 1914. At the outbreak of the war, Hankey became secretary of the War Council and of other committees that ran the war effort in Britain. When Lloyd George formed the War Cabinet in 1916, Hankey . . . became its secretary. . . . In his work, Hankey was privy to the plans of prime ministers and generals." (Library J) Index.

Choice 9:426 My '72 120w

"[This book] is an entirely fresh picture of how British war strategy was formed [during World War II. It is put together by a skilled naval historian from the papers of the one man who spent all those four and a quarter years at the centre of the British war machine. . . . Hankey's own memoirs, 'The Supreme Command' [BRD 1962]—mainly extracted from his diaries—were published seven years ago. . . . [But these memoirs] had been compiled with that perfect discretion for which Hankey was famous. Captain Roskill, the first historian to have access to [these] carefully guarded papers, must have realised that Hankey was able to keep so many secrets because his diaries had given him a safety valve: in them he wrote down what he really thought about the politicians, sailors and soldiers with whom he dealt. . . . All of the omissions of genuine interest to history are now supplied by Captain Roskill. . . . For British strategy in 1917-18 and [during] 1915-16 this volume is likely to remain unsurpassed."

Economist 235:56 My 2 '70 900w

"Roskill has made good use of Hankey's famous diary and his voluminous correspondence. Among books on World War I, this one is very important. For only Winston Churchill was as close to the center of British government over so long a period as was Hankey. This is not exciting reading, but it is a detailed study of the making of British policy during World War I. Recommended for all larger libraries." Keith Eubank
Library J 96:2769 S 15 '71 180w

"This volume adds to Hankey's own account fuller extracts from the diaries, supplemented by letters, mainly to Lady Hankey. It is a historian's book, fully referenced, beautifully composed, occasionally critical; the editorial work is impeccable. . . . Most of the book concerns the war years, and is rather in the nature of a running commentary on familiar themes: . . . Hankey does not merely provide material for textual comparisons with The Supreme Command. A much more human Hankey appears, particularly with his family and his devoted wife, Adeline." C. L. Mowat

New Statesman 79:696 My 15 '70 1250w

Reviewed by Paul Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 7 '73 550w

"'Can these bones live?' That question from Ezekiel springs to mind in considering Stephen Roskill's fine and remarkable biography. . . . Captain Roskill has brought the dry bones to life. . . . What a solace to read a book in the 1970s about fairly recent political history which is marred neither by lackadaisical research nor by opinions which are at once over-confident and slapdash. [The] biography is packed with information, but never smothers the person under the facts. . . . No one could close this book without feeling that they have been enjoying the company of a splendid character."

TLS p453 Ap 23 '70 2150w

ROSNER, STANLEY, ed. The creative experience; ed. by Stanley Rosner and Lawrence E. Abt. 399p $13.95 Grossman pubs.

153.3 Creation (Literary, artistic, etc.)
ISBN 0-670-24657-3 LC 76-86116

"The editors have gathered information on creativity and its development by interviewing 23 people from different fields of the arts and sciences, including Harlow Shapley, H. Bentley Glass, Noam Chomsky, Arthur Koestler, Sidney Lumet, Aaron Copland, Edward Steichen, Raphael Soyer, and Neil Simon. Each was asked how he came to be creative, what his motivations and drives were, what aspects of his family life and educational background were most beneficial, etc." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Every interview was open-ended, different from all the others; and the result is this solid, stimulating, diverse, absorbing book. It is not exciting, except perhaps intellectually. Any reader who prefers cookbooks, comics, thrillers, the sporting pages or the financial news, is unlikely to read The Creative Experience panting with emotion. . . . Constant questioning is of course a faculty of childhood. Perhaps the creative thinkers are simply those who have kept their childhood fresh. . . . [This book] offers evidence for this theory—and for other theories. To the right reader it may well open windows on new landscapes of expectation." Neil Millar

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ja 11 '71 800w

ROSNER, STANLEY—Continued

"[This] is a collection of free-flowing interviews, taken verbatim from edited tape, that do indeed throw a good deal of light on the creative process. Even more important to the general reader, the interviews provide a thoroughly enjoyable look into the personal lives and idiosyncracies of a fascinating group of people. Highly recommended to general as well as special collections." George Adelman
Library J 95:2928 S 15 '70 130w

ROSS, DONALD, jt. auth. Action for ■ change. See also Nader, R.

ROSS, ISHBEL. The uncrowned queen: life of Lola Montez. 349p il $8.95 Harper
B or 92 Montez, Lola
SBN 06-013662-6 LC 70-181641

This is an account of the life and career of "Lola Montez, famous dancer, mistress of Franz Liszt and Alexandre Dumas père, intimate of kings and prime ministers, de facto ruler of Bavaria during Ludwig I's declining years, and belle of the California gold rush." (Time) Bibliography. Index.

"It's hard to account for an Ada Isaacs Menken in any age. To account for a Lady Hamilton or a Lola Montez is all but impossible. Though it's a word that has to be whispered when we're talking about anything so frivolous as courtesans, 'brains' is a term we can't just brush aside. . . . [The author] has great material here but seems a little too ready to credit Lola's ghosted autobiography. Lola couldn't see herself for the myths. There's a lot more unscrambling to be undone before we see her as she really was." J. J. McAleer
Best Sell 32:86 My 15 '72 600w

"[Ross] has sifted through the misrepresentations to find out the truth about this spoiled, temperamental amoureuse. It is a well-written book covering Lola's entire life." E. O. Hofstetter

Library J 97:1706 My 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by Brad Darrach
Time 99:84 My 15 '72 900w

ROSS, JACK C. Black belonging; a study of the social correlates of work relations among Negroes [by] Jack C. Ross [and] Raymond H. Wheeler. 292p $11 Greenwood press 301.45 Associations. Negroes—Employment. Negroes—Social conditions
ISBN 0-8371-3298-3 LC 77-105974

This "is a study of black workers in Tampa, Florida and their participation in voluntary associations. The . . . research consists of 1,086 interviews focusing on the relationship of occupational characteristics to membership. . . . [The authors'] analysis of voluntary associations in Tampa and their source of appeal for the black community [indicates that the] most popular were church-related organizations. These and several types of Negro-rights organizations are specifically examined in the context of work relationships." (Ann Am Acad)

"So many new words and phrases are coined in this book that the authors found it necessary to provide a glossary of twenty-four concepts that are either original or already existed but here are endowed with special meaning. Work relationships among the 'employ' differ in the extent of 'coracialism' and 'collegiality,' and are affected by 'phase segregation' and 'work imperialism.' . . . The concern with new concepts leads to some humorous but strained and oversimplified statements. . . . Some new concepts are edifying. . . . But the cost of this originality is a repetitive book, full of definitions, redefinitions, and jargon. . . . Had the authors avoided pretentious, platitudinal ponderosities and written a concise and elegant article, this reviewer would have found it more useful." Dorothy Nelkin

Ann Am Acad 398:203 N '71 440w

"The crucial variables newly developed in this study are: co-racialism (working with other Negroes), collegiality (work-related friendships), and reinforcement (ability to call upon outside forces, such as unions, in work). Unfortunately, after a promising start at developing the underlying theory and conceptual framework for analysis, the study deteriorates into a dismal finish. . . . [The authors] make statements like: 'Why . . . is not clear.' 'We cannot explain this by any of the reasoning advanced so far.' . . . The final chapter is a contrived, inconsequential 'test' of the data as related to the Tampa race riot which occurred while the study was in progress. The format for presenting tabular data and inconsistencies in rounding off percentages make it unnecessarily difficult to read and interpret. Appendices contain the interview schedule and collateral data; glossary."

Choice 9:142 Mr '72 210w

ROSS, JONATHAN. Here lies Nancy Frail. 195p $5.95 Saturday review press
ISBN 0-8415-0139-4 LC 70-171986

Nancy Frail "was a high-class call girl; now she is dead. Is it murder? Inspector Rogers believes it is and he sets in motion the wheels of investigation—and then discovers from the autopsy that she died of natural causes and then was moved to the place where her body was discovered. . . . His investigation is hampered because his chief assistant had been in love with Nancy, has refused to believe the results of the autopsy, and has rushed off on his own to find the murderer." (Best Sell)

Best Sell 32:314 O 1 '72 140w

"Unfortunately, . . . [this book] is not sensational enough and much less amusing than it ought to be." H. C. Veit
Library J 97:3620 N 1 '72 60w

"As a retired Detective Chief Superintendent, Ross knows what he is writing about. And he can write very well, as he does here." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p46 O 8 '72 70w

"The story, in its harsh, unpitiful way, is neat, and the morality still neater."
TLS p612 My 26 '72 50w

ROSS, PAT, ed. Young and female; turning points in the lives of eight American women, personal accounts; comp. with introd. notes by Pat Ross. 107p il $3.95; lib bdg $4.39 Random house

920 Women in the U.S.—Biography—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-394-82392-3; 0-394-92392-8 (lib bdg)
LC 76-37417

This anthology comprises excerpts from the autobiographies of Emily Hahn, Shirley MacLaine, Margaret Sanger, Althea Gibson, Dorothy Day, Edna Ferber, Shirley Chisholm, and Margaret Bourke-White. Bibliography. "Age eleven and up." (Book World)

"'The female mind is incapable of grasping mechanics or higher mathematics or any of the of the fundamentals of mining taught in this course.' Thus Emily Hahn first learned what it is to be a woman in a man's world. Rather than retreat she went ahead to become a mining engineer. . . . For girls seeking alternatives to the roles of cheerleader and homemaker, the book offers the inspiration of individuals who were able to make their own, widely differing lives. Interested readers will probably want to go beyond these brief excerpts to the full autobiographies from which they are taken." Emily Finkelstein

Book World p13 (children's issue)
My 7 '72 150w

"[This] is an obvious and perhaps slightly self-conscious by-product of the Women's Lib movement, but no matter. It's a good beginning to a subject—women's achievements—that has had far too little coverage in teen literature. . . . The excerpts stand alone nicely, though they're so brief as to be mostly teasers. . . . [The editor] would have done her young and presumably female readers a greater service . . . by supplying biographical dates. Preteens might not be familiar with Edna Ferber's work, for example, or be able to place her achievements in the context of the period in which she lived." Marilyn Gardner

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 4 '72 150w

Reviewed by D. G. Stavn

Library J 97:258 Ja 15 '72 30w

"The selections by Shirley MacLaine, Shirley Chisholm, Dorothy Day, and Althea Gibson are likely to interest today's teens more than those by Emily Hahn, Margaret Sanger, Edna Ferber, and Margaret Bourke-White, which are either more dated (Hahn and Ferber) disorganized (Sanger) or parochial (Bourke-White). Still, it's a viable purchase to meet current interests, with the added appeal of an attractive format that will catch browsers." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:2244 Je 15 '72 100w [YA]

ROSS, STANLEY R., ed. The middle beat. See Kennedy, P. P.

ROSSETTI, CHRISTINA. What is pink? pictures by Jose Aruego. unsp $4.95 Macmillan (N Y) 321 Colors—Poetry—Juvenile literature
LC 71-152289

"Christina Rossetti's short poem about colors has here been set down as a dialogue between two flamingos. A curious young flamingo poses the question, 'What is pink?' On the following double-page spread his mother replies with the couplet, 'A rose is pink/by the fountain's brink.' And so it goes through all the colors in the poem until the youngster inquires 'What is orange?' and receives the reply 'Why, an orange, just an orange!' . . . Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

"[This book is] a visual delight . . . [and] shines with a gentle sense of humor." D. K. Willis
Christian Science Monitor pB2 N 11 '71 60w

"Jose Aruego's illustrations (pen-and-ink line drawings filled with color) humorously expand the brief text but the book on the whole is a less successful poetic introduction to colors than Mary O'Neill's Hailstones and Halibut Bones: Adventures in Color [BRD 1962]; that book would also be enjoyed by slightly older readers." Margaret Bush
Library J 97:767 F 15 '72 120w

ROSSI, ALFRED. Minneapolis rehearsals: Tyrone Guthrie directs Hamlet. vp il $12.50 Univ. of Calif. press

792 Theater—Production and direction. Shakespeare, William. Hamlet. Tyrone Guthrie Theatre, Minneapolis
ISBN 0-520-01719-6 LC 70-115496

This is a "log of rehearsals by a member of the company; illustrations of costumes by Tanya Moiseiwitsch; photographs; a . . . sampling of reviews; and, mainly, a complete promptscript of Guthrie's 1963 presentation of Hamlet in the Minneapolis theater named for the director." (Library J)

"The prompt book is not Guthrie's; it is done by Edward Pason Call, one of the stage managers for the production and shows only the mechanical stuff which Guthrie did notably, often spontaneously and sometimes arbitrarily. The soul of genius cannot be captured in this classroom exercise, indeed this demeans his work. Rossi writes well, is enjoyable, ingratiating, and entertaining. Put what little there is of his stuff and the play's reviews into a slim volume, a sort of pre- and post-mortem, for $1.50, and you have something. But this, for $12.50—who needs it?"
Choice 8:353 S '71 130w

"It all adds up to a director's curiosity piece, in part marred by the anonymous madness of a book designer who printed the promptscript and costume designs on alternating 16-page clusters of olive-and-apple-green paper. There may be less here than meets the eye." J. H. Crouch
Library J 96:1385 Ap 15 '71 90w

ROSSI, ALICE S., ed. Essays on sex equality [by] John Stuart Mill & Harriet Taylor Mill; ed. and with an introductory essay by Alice S. Rossi. 242p $8.75 Univ. of Chicago press

301.41 Woman—Social conditions
ISBN 0-226-52545-7 LC 73-133381

This edition "brings together 'all the known writings of both Harriet Taylor and John Stuart Mill on the topic of sex equality.' . . . [Rossi] introduces the essays by placing them within the context of the long personal and intellectual relationship between Harriet Taylor and John Stuart Mill which began more than 20 years before their marriage." (Library J) Contents: Sentiment and intellect: the story of John Stuart Mill and Harriet Taylor Mill, by A. S. Rossi; Early essays on marriage and divorce (1832), by J. S. Mill and H. Taylor; Enfranchisement of women (1851), by H. T. Mill; The subjection of women (1869), by J. S. Mill.

"One would like to be able to put aside personalities and judge this volume in terms of the very considerable issues raised by the subject itself. Yet personalities constantly intrude and not only in the introduction, which so inflates the intellect and elevates the character of Harriet Taylor. . . . If we are to take the essay as a tract for our times, we must also consider an . . . aspect of it, which might give pause to some, particularly among academics, who have so heartily endorsed it. For Mill was arguing not only for a policy of equality but also for a policy of liberty . . . the rights, identity, and consciousness of the individual person. . . . His argument was Darwinian: the free play of competition was necessary to ensure the survival and ascendancy of the fittest—the fittest individuals, whether men or women. As with all sacred texts, this one has great potentiality for heresy." Gertrude Himmelfarb
Am Hist R 77:736 Je '72 700w

"John Stuart Mill's The Subjection of Women, a work of major importance in the literature on women's rights, is featured in this [work]. . . . Although the precise nature of Harriet Taylor's contribution to Mill's ideas is still disputed, this interpretation accords her a major role and supplies supporting documentation. For general and academic libraries, and collections serving women's studies programs." A. R. Schiller
Library J 96:973 Mr 15 '71 130w

"It is not unlikely, Mrs. Rossi thinks, that many critical views of Harriet can be explained by the fact that 'Mill's association with the Unitarian Radicals was seen by his political associates as a threat to his allegiance to the Utilitarian cause, and Harriet was the symbol of that association.' . . . The best aspect of this book is that it allows Harriet Taylor to speak for herself. Mill . . . publicly stated that many of his publications were the 'joint productions' of Harriet and himself. But the productions continued to appear under Mill's name alone. Alice Rossi's investigations have led her to conclude that Harriet Taylor was the primary author of one such shared effort, the Enfranchisement of Women, and it appears here, accordingly, ■ her work." Virginia Held
Nation 213:405 O 25 '71 1950w

ROSSI, LINO. Trajan's column and the Dacian wars; Eng. tr. rev. by J. M. C. Toynbee. 240p il $10 Cornell univ. press

937 Rome (City). Trajan's Column. Dacia—History. Rome. Army—Military life
ISBN 0-8014-0594-7 LC 70-127778

"Rossi undertook to study the strategy behind Trajan's invasion of Dacia, the nature of the Roman army at that period, and how the actions are represented on the column of Trajan." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] good study in Roman military history . . . presents a clear narrative which will be very useful for the student studying Roman military operations. The historical and cultural background of the war and of Dacian society receive relatively little attention ■ does the place of Trajan's column in Roman art. The work is well illustrated with maps, line drawings, and plates. . . . Good bibliography. . . . Recommended for general libraries in Roman history."

Choice 8:1627 F '72 90w

"As Professor Toynbee points out, in the present work we have the first English book wholly devoted to the Column and presenting it in a handy . . . volume that can . . . accompany the traveller to Rome. The main trouble about the traveller being accompanied by the book to Rome . . . [is that] however much one may peer and crick one's neck, most of the scenes are much too high above the ground to be made anything of at all. . . . The last and longest chapter of the book is . . . Dr Rossi's stunning commentary on his photographs of the entire sequence of the reliefs. His unusual familiarity with Dacian topography is one of quite a number of factors which will bring Roman historians back to his exposition again and again. It is unfortunate only that the photographs themselves have not come out too well. . . . [They] are scarcely likely to be of much assistance to students of Trajanic art, although they will be useful enough for reference."

TLS p375 Mr 31 '72 1150w

ROSSI, PAUL A. The art of the Old West; the collection of the Gilcrease Institute; selg. and text by Paul A. Rossi and David C. Hunt. 335p il col il $30; deluxe lea ed $100 Knopf

917.3 The West—History. Art, American. Indians of North America—History
ISBN 0-394-46669-1 LC 73-154901

This volume traces the emergence of the western U.S. from the period of earliest discovery to the first years of the twentieth century. The illustrations . . . represent painting and sculpture by George Catlin, C. M. Russell, Thomas Moran, Albert Bierstadt, Frederic Remington, Olaf Seltzer, W. R. Leach, and modern Indian artists among others. The narrative covers the earliest explorations, describes the life of the Plains Indians, records the experiences of trappers, traders, freight and mail handlers, soldiers and cowboys, and various Western characters good and bad. Bibliography.

"Rossi and Hunt have tried to place the illustrations in context by providing a running narrative of Western history in each section. But the artists' emphases on Indian warfare, buffalo, cowboys, and dramatic events force the narrative to be lopsided and often superficial. Still the authors never lose sight of the fact that the 'painter's West' was neither the real nor complete West but rather 'as much a state of mind as Boston.' . . . This volume is a valuable addition to the growing list of good art books concerned with the Western scene. Except for the fact that the pictures of sculptures did not reproduce well on slick paper the book is a visual feast." H. R. Lamar

Am Hist R 77:1172 O '72 700w

"This [is] the most readable and sumptuous picture book of the year. . . . [It is] a social history blazing with action and authentic. . . . All through this book one feels the sense of loss: the loss of Indian wisdom as their captivity hardened; the loss of the multitudes of wildlife, the buffalo in particular . . . which once covered the tawny plains in the millions; the loss of the silent wilderness. . . . The prose blends the fortitude of the frontiersman with the prophetic view of the European explorers, the perspective is sound, and no reviewer can overemphasize the chain reaction which leaps from the picture to the text to the imagination—action so often stirring and tragic." Edward Weeks

Atlantic 229:95 Ja '72 600w

Economist 245[book survey p12] N 11 '72 200w

"Drawing exclusively upon the heretofore unreproduced art in the Tulsa, Oklahoma institute, this volume features 300 plates, 134 in full color. Except where they run over two pages (and thus are broken by the binding), the illustrations are excellent. The text . . . is first-rate. While there is a bibliography as well as biographical section, there is no index. A pity, because this is much more than the typical Christmas entry. The authors know both their frontier history and the artists and give many new insights in an altogether pleasing way. The price is high, but right for this highly recommended title." Bill Katz

Library J 96:4000 D 1 '71 120w

ROSSI, PETER H., jt. ed. Cities under siege. See Boesel, D.

ROSSI, PETER H., ed. Ghetto revolts. 171p il $5.95 pa $2.45 Aldine-Atherton

362 Riots. U.S.—Social conditions. Negroes—Social conditions
LC 70-115945

"Seven articles deal with the causes of the ghetto rebellions in the 1960's, their development, and the reactions of Americans, black and white, to those violent events. Most of the articles were written by [social scientists.]" (Choice)

"None of the articles contains any footnotes or formal references, although a handful suggest further readings. . . . [The editor's introduction] provides an excellent account of the historical context of the black uprisings of the 1960s. . . . Two of the selections . . . deal with the Detroit riot and with sniping. The other pieces include Rainwater's argument that economic programs, not community action, are most essential to 'any permanent solution to the riot problem'; an insightful treatment of the politics of creating the Kerner Commission and of presenting its findings; and an analysis by Lipset and Raab of the Wallace movement." J. A. Winter

Am Soc R 36:1141 D '71 100w

"Would be of interest and utility to a broad spectrum of readers. . . . Since [the articles] were originally prepared separately for the popular audience of Trans-action magazine—most are eminently readable and without jargon. Indeed, the articles generally go beyond social science analysis to the discussion of the political and/or policy significance of the issues examined; the real world problem of ghetto rebellions is examined, together with possible solutions."

Choice 8:438 My '71 110w

ROSSITER, JOHN. Here lies Nancy Frail. See Ross, J.

ROSSKAM, EDWIN. Roosevelt, New Jersey; big dreams in a small town & what time did to them. 148p $7.95 Grossman pubs.

352.0749 Roosevelt, New Jersey—History
SBN 670-60751-7 LC 78-185018

The author describes the development and changes occurring in a planned community over a forty year period. Jersey Homesteads was "established in the mid-Thirties as a socialist-oriented cooperative (part factory, part farm) community for immigrant East European Jewish garment workers." (N Y Rev of Books)

"Rosskam came late to Roosevelt, long after the government had stopped bailing out the town's collective factory, and the town's Jewishness had been so diluted that there came to be some school classes without a single Jewish child in them. . . . By interview, by anecdote, he reconstructs the town's past. His fidelity to the idiom of his subjects is sharp; his patience, perplexity, and bemusement over their idiosyncracies are warm. Rosskam's book, however, also makes one think . . . of the obsolescence of all neighborhoods and towns—our own neighborhoods and towns—that defy attempts to hold back the clock by will or memory." R. J. Cattani

Christian Science Monitor p11 Ag 2 '72 300w

Reviewed by George Charney
Library J 97:2393 J1 '72 170w

"This melancholic portrait of a unique New Jersey town is more than local history or community survey. . . . For a time the federal government underwrote the venture, but even before the name was changed to Roosevelt (upon the death of its benefactor FDR) the co-op spirit was dying; and by the time Rosskam . . . arrived in 1953, nothing was left of the dream except the town itself and the factory building which had become an automated button plant. . . . Roosevelt is not dead, Rosskam says. 'Towns don't die that easily.' But time killed the dream. Roosevelt can 'serve as a warning' to contemporary planners of artificial communities."

N Y Rev of Books 18:35 Je 15 '72 300w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
N Y Times Bk R p7 J1 30 '72 430w

"The homesteaders had problems: they were called communists; they didn't understand the government strictures . . . and besides, some of the original settlers were pretty feisty, if not downright mean. . . . The Red scare of the 1950's brought an anti-foreign anti-different sentiment to Roosevelt. . . . Fortunately, . . . the town survived its crises. . . . But something changed; new people came; children grew dissatisfied with their parents; all the cooperatives failed, until finally, battle lines were formed to oppose a community swimming pool. All of this, the anecdotes and squabbles, Rosskam tells with equal measures of affection and acerbity. He . . . is quick to chide, to adopt an intimate, conversational tone, even to challenge the testimony of those who speak for themselves and the town. More important, I think, is Rosskam's shrewd wit, which lends sinew to his informal narrative." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 79:94A Je 19 '72 600w

"Rosskam has written a short, bittersweet, and intensely personal account of the town, its unusual beginnings, and its most prominent citizen. . . . In many places Rosskam lets the townspeople tell their own stories, moving in briefly with exposition or personal comment. As a result, he does not tell the story of Roosevelt as much as weave it. There is no chronological account of Jersey Homestead's controversial beginnings or its ideological roots, no comprehensive explanation of how the co-operative method was supposed to operate, no clear explanation of how and why it failed. Which is all right. Rosskam has not tried to write a history. He has written a sociological memoir." John Margolis

Sat R 55:62 Ag 19 '72 1000w

ROSSMAN, MICHAEL. On learning and social change. 384p $10 Random house

378 Education, Higher. Learning, Psychology of. Social change
ISBN 0-394-48082-1 LC 72-621

This book "on educational reform focuses on the processes of learning. . . . [Free-learning experiments] in-depth social interaction, dome construction, etc. are discussed, along with a demand for the demystification of technology." (Library J)

"Mr. Rossman's book is a tirade. . . . [The book] reveals the author's lack of compassion for the predicament of those human beings with whom he does not now identify; at the same time . . . [he] demonstrates the not uncommon human capacity to rationalize and obscure the frailties of those with whom he identifies. . . . The most obvious devil for Rossman is the devil of American educational institutions. As a former leader of the Free Speech Movement in Berkeley in 1964, he sees American universities as they now exist as instruments of destruction and dehumanization deforming and destroying the integrity and creativity of their students. . . . One tends to read Rossman's indictment of American education, and particularly higher education, with mixed feelings." K. B. Clark

Am Scholar 42:156 winter '72-'73 1300w

"The book 'has no pretensions of completeness,' and the author admits to skimming the surface of many problems. His honest, personal approach is marred by circumlocution and the creeping rhetoric of Amerika." Gloria Gehrman

Library J 97:2584 Ag '72 100w

"[The author] has provided part of an answer to the question of what transformations sixties activism must undergo as we move into the seventies—and the activists into their thirties. The book is in fact shaped by an underlying concern with the passage from an age in which change seemed within our grasp, into 'the decade when it begins to get hard, after the easy dreams of the sixties: when Amerika's true resistance to change, and for each of us our own, begins to come into the open.' Rossman describes [his book] 'a fragment of a collective thesis for a floating college unchartered by the State.' . . . The core of Rossman's argument comes in the long and interesting chapter on 'Technology and Social Reconstruction.'" Peter Brooks

N Y Times Bk R p4 O 15 '72 1450w

"[This work] draws on manifestoes and lifestyles of the counterculture in constructing a new social philosophy of higher education. . . . Despite the energy of the work, despite its conviction that potency can be achieved by a breakout from anti-technological superstition, On Learning and Social Change rouses little optimism, finally, about the future of individual emotional response. . . . [The book] is stimulating in its aspirations and in its images. . . . There's solid substance, furthermore, in Rossman's suggestions about reorganizing learning situations, expanding opportunities for participation, teaching human beings how to deal with their own authority complexes. But . . . the book does not allay the deep fear raised by its favorite therapies, namely, that if the culture needs this much help in freeing up feeling, it's doomed." Benjamin DeMott

Sat 55:97 S 16 '72 600w

ROSSMAN, MICHAEL. The wedding within the war. 397p $7.95; pa $2.95 Doubleday

378.1 Students—U.S.—Political activity, Youth movement. Right and left (Political science)
LC 69-15884

In essays, poems and letters, the author describes "his coming-of-age as an activist in the cultural revolution of the 1960s. . . . He draws a . . . picture of the changes and mutations of the idealistic young from the Berkeley Free Speech Movement through Chicago, 1968, and the People's Park scene to the rise of the New Left." (Publishers' Weekly)

"A poetic, intensely private though subtly revealing view of the growth of individual consciousness in Movement politics. . . . There are also jail and travel notes, a letter to Jerry Rubin, and first-rate reflections about education, violence, rock, and the future. For the author the events have a continuity. He sees a deep philosophical maturity emerging, the advent of a culture of greater brotherhood and less isolation. This book is a worthy testimonial to his belief. Clear and forthright, sensible and intelligible on emotive as well as intellectual levels, it shows how remarkably the youth movement has come of age. A book of rare excellence." S. J. Pacilon

Library J 96:3590 N 1 '71 160w

"A dazzling, moving book that . . . has flaws, evasions and contradictions. . . . [Yet the fragments] are so lucidly and intensely reported that they help to point up the inadequacy of a systematic life. . . . [Rossman] develops some fragments (like the Free Speech Movement) at length, and others (like sex and drugs) almost not at all. He is, significantly, either unwilling or unable to reveal as much of his inner life as his outer. . . . Because I find the life Rossman is trying to fashion for himself admirable, and the book he's written about it exhilarating, it seemed important to express fully the points of confusion or disappointment. . . . [This] is a far better road map to the chaotic present the radical young are living and the bold future they're dreaming, than even the best-disposed and executed academic account." Martin Duberman

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ap 2 '72 700w

ROSSNER, JUDITH. Any minute I can split; a novel. 222p $6.95 McGraw

ISBN 0-07-053942-1 LC 72-55

"How do you get attached to people?" asks David, a withdrawn 19-year-old, who has picked up (or been picked up by) the novel's heroine, a pregnant, 250-pound runaway matron named Margaret Adams. [That is the question the author explores in the various human relationships the novel sets forth]." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The book jacket is all wrong and the title not much better. Both give an impression of a smark-aleck funny book which this is not. It's a serious-thinking book about people's relationships to each other, their interdependencies, and their needs. If the people are a little far out at times, they are, even so, real. . . . The story is told from Margaret's point of view, and it is her mind and her thinking we follow. She is intent on finding out who and what she is, and if her answers are sometimes more happenstance than cerebral, it is nonetheless an absorbing search. Characterizations throughout are marvelous, dialogue is vivid and rings true, and the problems of both Margaret and the commune are universal problems." E. C. Howley

Best Sell 32:241 Ag 15 '72 400w

"Middle-class parents, suburbia, sex, money—the whole Establishment is tried and found mostly wanting. Fortunately, Margaret and Roger [her husband] find their real selves and incidentally, save the whole commune, with the help of a $100,000 check from decadent daddy. The real heroines of this mildly amusing, largely erotic bit of ephemera, however, are the twins [which Margaret gives birth to]: they say not a word." Jean Spang

Library J 97:2201 Je 15 '72 100w

Reviewed by Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p23 Jl 30 '72 200w

"[The members of the Vermont farm commune in which the novel is set] are not lovable. Mr. Rossner persuasively pictures the commune as a poor man's college dorm, made even poorer by doctrinaire dietetics and slogan philosophy (Adelle Davis and Buckminster Fuller), bell-jar stuffiness, and an almost total lack of privacy. . . . As the novel's title suggests, every relationship is uneasy and tentative; the indication is that we are beginning to see in America the ironic triumph of situational existence [based on situational morality]."

Ms. Rossner shows us the results." J. D. O'Hara

Sat R 55:52 Ag 11 '72 400w

ROSSOFF, MARTIN. The school library and educational change. 113p $6 Libs. unlimited

027.8 School libraries
ISBN 0-87287-037-5

LC 71-178876

This book discusses such topics as "Definitions and Assumptions," "The Librarian and the Teacher," "The Library and Learning," "The New Education," "The New Technology," "The Past Experience," "Standards and Students," "The Library and Reading," "Library Instruction," "The Library in Action," and "Keys to the Collection." (Library J)

"The central theme seems to be that 'the library stimulates the intellectual growth of children,' and 'there must be some validity to the notion of a school library's power to educate.' . . . [But the] volume slights theory and makes unsubstantiated recommendations, e.g. on the value of student book clubs as tools for book selection, and touches the other pole by the inclusion of technical details belonging in a basic Reference Course. A serious omission under 'Reference Books' is the work of the Reference and Subscription Books Committee of ALA. . . . Rossoff's writing further weakens and emasculates the work. Changes of tense unnecessarily slow the reader's progress. . . . Unevenness of tone further detracts from the exposition. The text ends like a run-down clock with a few old-saw utterances on the pros and cons of teaching students 'what materials are available in a library and how they may be located.' This subject Rossoff treats fully in his earlier book, The Library in High School Teaching." C. C. Leopold
Library J 97:753 F 15 '72 460w

"Citing the need for 'a manual that would define in simple terms the place of the school library in contemporary education,' Rossoff does not succeed in presenting such a manual, if this is his goal. He can scarcely hope to serve an audience of teachers and one of librarians with equally good effects. His review of educational change and its impact on school librarianship is cursory. . . . When he treats of activities, assignments, relations between librarians and teachers, and reading guidance, Rossoff is on solid ground, and these sections provide the kind of specific information that neophyte school librarians and students may wish to have. Throughout, however he seems to limit his comments to high school libraries, by simply ignoring elementary schools." Peggy Sullivan
Library Q 42:271 Ap '72 550w

ROSTAND, EDMOND. Cyrano de Bergerac; tr. and adapted for the modern stage by Anthony Burgess. 174p $5.95 Knopf

842
ISBN 0-394-47239-X LC 76-161405

This version was commissioned for production at the Tyrone Guthrie Theater in Minneapolis. It is newly adapted and translated from the French play originally produced in 1897. Cyrano, the hero, a Gascon poet and swordsmen notorious for his long nose, is in love with Roxana.

"[Burgess'] version boldly mixes prose with a variety of verse forms, a method that works very well in the comedy scenes, which have a fine rasping snap. It works rather less well in all those romantic arias, which read just as long-windedly as they ever did. The adaptation includes the removal of Roxana (rechristened Roxana), coach, and horses from the battlefield. Mr. Burgess justifies it on the grounds of increased realism. . . . One is entitled to wonder, however, whether realism really benefits the peculiar fin de siècle romanticism, part sweet champagne and part wormwood, that underlies the play." Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:97 Ja '72 170w

Choice 9:522 Je '72 130w

"[Rostand's] gallant verbal virtuosity is brilliantly appropriate to the myth he forged. Through the mystery of such a creation, the quixotic Cyrano, with a nature nobler than his nose, has stepped forth into a form of immortality which transcends the world and the genre. . . . The original inspiration, the great libertine Cyrano of the 17th century, was easily more fascinating than the play written about him but hardly less intriguing than his latest adapter, the ubiquitous Anthony Burgess, one of our universal men. . . . The translation itself is both virile and ingratiating. It is also quite noticeably prolix and unfaithful to the letter while attempting to garner the spirit of the original. . . . Yet it is also consciously witty, urbane and . . . eminently actable." Alex Szogyi

N Y Times Bk R p6 D 26 '71 900w

ROSTOW, W. W. Politics and the stages of growth. 410p $9.50; pa $3.95 Cambridge 320.9 Political science. Economic conditions
ISBN 0-521-08197-1; 0-521-09653-7 (pa)
LC 70-149440

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by B. F. Hoselitz
Ann Am Acad 402:199 J1 '72 1100w
Choice 8:1645 F '72 100w

Reviewed by R. H. Miller
Commonweal 95:375 Ja 21 '72 600w

ROSZAK, THEODORE. Where the wasteland ends: politics and transcendence in post-industrial society. 492p $10 Doubleday 301.2 Technology and civilization. Social change. Civilization, Modern
ISBN 0-385-02728-1 LC 78-170179

Critical of technocracy and the politics supportive of it, Roszak argues that "if democracy is to be preserved, if . . . alienation is to be healed, we must seek a psychology liberated from scientific objectification, a new reality drawn from dream, myth, visionary rapture, and the transcendent symbol, and ultimately achieve thereby a shining new world free of urban-industrialism." (Library J)

Reviewed by Cornelia Holbert
Best Sell 32:415 D 1 '72 650w

Reviewed by Alan Goldfein
Commentary 55:99 Ja '73 1650w

"Roszak's latest book is a provocative, irritating, always stimulating mélange of the history and philosophy of science and society. . . . Though not destined to be a popular book, it will raise the dust in some faculty club rooms. Recommended if you have a call for this sort of thing." R. E. Will
Library J 97:2630 Ag '72 160w

Reviewed by Karen Stevens
Library J 97:4096 D 15 '72 190w [YA]

Reviewed by Peter Caws
New Repub 167:34 O 21 '72 2600w

"Roszak's heavy moralizing about the flattening effect of the scientific view of nature is . . . almost impossible to unuddle. . . . What in the end [he] wishes to say is something very broad and, I believe, false: that the scientific concern with the 'mechanical' properties of the natural world did something to our perceptions of the world and to our attitudes to it. . . . Roszak has another thesis. . . . that it is in the dark forces of the world expelled by natural science and by a rigorous and intolerant monotheism that salvation is to be found; that the shaman, rather than Isaiah or Paul, is the exemplar of saving wisdom: all this is bound to strike most literature persons over the age of twenty-five as so strange as to be almost not discussable." J. M. Cameron
N Y Rev of Books 19:18 N 30 '72 1100w

"It is the energy of religious renewal [Roszak maintains,] that will generate the next politics, and perhaps the final radicalism of our society.' In spite of nearly 500 pages, the specifics of this renewal never quite emerge. Roszak always anticipates the skeptical questioner with an old evasion: if you don't know, I can't tell you—'Either one re-experiences that vision, or one has missed the message.' We hear a good deal about visionary powers, primordial energies, sacramental awareness . . . and about 'sudden ecstasy, an awareness of the heavens and earth swept by awesome presences, the mind on fire with rhapsodic declaration. . . . [This] is not so bad a book as a summary of its main contentions makes it appear. The prose [is] . . . showy and improbable . . . [but] there is a great deal of virtue in the minor contentions, as there is in the attitudinal, in contrast to the conceptual, content of the book.' George Stade
N Y Times Bk R p1 S 24 '72 3850w
New Yorker 48:126 S 30 '72 130w

"No doubt many young intellectuals will be charmed by the wholeheartedness of [this book]. Unlike the pallid, impersonal work of most scholars, it bears the imprint of the writer's whole being on every page. . . . It would be a mistake to dismiss Where the Wasteland Ends on the ground that Roszak's political remedy is silly or unworkable. For one thing, it isn't really political. . . . For another, the value of the book lies elsewhere, in the force, clarity, and plausibility that it imparts to a viewpoint held by many intelligent students. . . . Hostility to the secular intellect and a yearning for mystical transcendence now are powerful tendencies in America. The best thing to be said for [this book] is that it helps to explain why this is happening." Leo Marx

Sat R 55:69 S 23 '72 2500w

"Today, weary hindsight makes 'progress' seem a mocking, self-defeating process by which men promise to improve themselves and their planet right out of existence. Into this 'wasteland' climate of despair, a countermyth of hope has been introduced. It may be identified as the myth of the New Arcadia. . . . In The Greening of America [BRD 1970], C. Reich tried (and failed) to define this spiritual revolution: a mysticism of self-renewal that would save modern man from himself. In [this book] Roszak fails too, perhaps inevitably. But in the meantime he has brilliantly summed up once and for all the New Arcadian criticism of what he calls 'postindustrial society.' His book expresses almost as an act of autobiography the needs and demands he first began to detail in The Making of a Counter-Culture [BRD 1969, 1970]." Melvin Maddocks

Time 100:74 S 11 '72 250w

ROTENSTREICH, NATHAN. Tradition and reality; the impact of history on modern Jewish thought. 145p $6.95 Random house

296 Judaism—History

ISBN 0-394-46425-7

LC 71-159369

This is a "study of six men's different conceptions of the meaning of Judaism and its history: Zunz, Krochmal, Graetz, Dubnow, Ahad Ha-am and Bialik. Rotenstreich offers an . . . overview of each subject's thought, set against the backdrop of his era." (Library J) Glossary. Index.

"This is a unique book; it will be required reading for any student or instructor who wishes to confront the naked essence of the Jewish intellectual dilemma."

Choice 9:797 S '72 180w

"The 19th century crisis of historical consciousness affected Jewish thought at least as much as it did that of Christianity. Rotenstreich surveys the blight and tries to sort out again what he believes to be a more nearly authentic Jewish approach to history."

Christian Century 89:523 My 3 '72 40w

"Rotenstreich's historical and philosophical concerns are evidenced by his captivating introductory chapter entitled 'The Meaning of Tradition in Judaism,' and his brilliant conclusion recognizing 'the progressive erosion of tradition as the norm in Jewish life.' Though some of its statements bear further analysis, this work is a creative and authoritative contribution to Jewish history and Jewish thought, and as such is highly recommended for both scholarly and lay audiences."

M. A. Cohen

Library J 97:2622 Ag '72 160w

ROTH, ERNST. A tale of three cities. 178p maps $6.95 Scribner

914.3 Vienna—Description. Budapest—Description. Prague—Description
SBN 684-22645-1 LC 70-172972

This book is a "mixture of memoir, guide-book, history, and personal interpretation of bygone days [in the Austro-Hungarian empire at the turn of the century]." (Library J)

"Vienna and Prague, and their inhabitants, are treated with first-hand knowledge and perceptive insight, while the third city, Budapest, receives relatively little coverage. Not without factual inaccuracies . . . the book is nonetheless rich in interesting historical detail and highly individualized comments that make the people and places described come alive. Roth's musical expertise adds another dimension. A highly enjoyable book." Hana Stranska

Library J 97:1434 Ap 15 '72 120w

"[The author] came to London before the Second World War, became a distinguished music publisher, and after his retirement wrote this lighthearted, nostalgic and entertaining book which has appeared to celebrate his seventy-fifth birthday. The Habsburg Empire lives on in Ernst Roth's heart. . . . [He] has great knowledge, is equally interested in world-shaking events and amusing trivialities, while his wit and nostalgia lend a gentle warmth to this enjoyable book. . . . Most of Dr. Roth's slight mistakes occur in the section of his book on Budapest. . . . It is the Czechs and Prague who are closest to [his] heart. The charm and beauty of Prague as well as the melancholy injustice of history come to life under his pen."

TLS p234 F 26 '71 900w

ROTH, JOHN K., jr. auth. The American religious experience. See Sontag, F.

ROTH, JOHN K., ed. The philosophy of Josiah Royce. See Royce, J.

ROTH, PHILIP. The breast. 78p $4.95 Holt
ISBN 0-03-003716-6 LC 72-84892

"David Alan Kepesh awakes one morning to find himself in the hospital, mysteriously altered. Questioning his doctor and psychiatrist, Kepesh gradually learns that, by an 'endocrinopathic catastrophe' of unprecedented proportions, he has been transformed into 'a mammary gland disconnected from any human form'—i.e., a giant human female breast. Kepesh . . . is a teacher who has always 'loved the extreme in literature,' Railing at the incomprehensible, he uses his intelligence to deny, to heroically resist the thing he has become; then, grudgingly, he comes to accept his breasthood." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:135 O '72 100w

"The Breast heaves with weighty theme-ideas . . . but it yields nothing firm, lacking any consistent interplay between the serious and the grotesque. . . . It's intermittently funny, and even moving, because Roth is a marvelous writer, with limitless verbal resources. But it's still only a half-formed sketch for a novel, a tissue of unconnected and undeveloped ideas—sort of a tempest in a D-cup. Roth probably should have published it in Playboy, and later expanded it; he, and his publishers, have one hell of a nerve asking $4.95 for it."

Bruce Allen

Library J 97:3182 O 1 '72 310w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wagner

Nat R 24:1254 N 10 '72 500w

Reviewed by Frederick Crews

N Y Rev of Books 19:18 N 16 '72 2000w

"Sensibly, casually, Roth plays the existentialist jive for laughs. . . . Technically at least, 'The Breast' seems to me Roth's best book so far. The humor and pathos (it has fair amounts of both) come from his solid grasp of how life is, his firm knowledge of the importance of strength of character and the will to live. . . . The trick which is the heart of the book is brilliant: to celebrate the ordinary, the silly, the banal. . . . The banal may be wonderful subject matter, but it's lousy as a literary method. . . . [However] Roth is no Gogol—a comparison he boldly and jokingly invites—but 'The Breast' is terrific for a thing of its kind: inventive and sane and very funny, though filthy." John Gardner

N Y Times Bk R p3 S 17 '72 1900w

New Yorker 48:199 N 25 '72 130w

"David may now be a 6-foot, 155-pound lump of fatty tissue, but he is still hung up on sex. . . . What has happened to him happened in the stories he once taught: Kafka's 'Metamorphosis,' Gogol's 'The Nose,' Roth's sure-handed craftsmanship is evident in this story, which I found entertaining and often funny, but finally it doesn't work. Roth suggests themes he doesn't pursue—is the story, for instance, meant to parody the oral phase of sexual development, with David on the giving, rather than the receiving end?—and yet I would not have wished the story longer. Perhaps what is wrong with it is that Roth did not decide whether it was to be a buoyant farce like Gogol's story, or a dark parable like Kafka's." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 80:118 S 25 '72 750w

Reviewed by Eliot Fremont-Smith

Sat R 55:80 S 23 '72 1500w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard

Time 100:94 S 25 '72 800w

ROTHBERG, ABRAHAM. Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn; the major novels. 215p $7.50
Cornell univ. press
891.1 Solzhenitsyn, Alexander
ISBN 0-8014-0668-4 LC 70-164641

Following a "survey of the Nobel Prize winner's life and milieu, Rothberg turns to an exposition of the three longer works—One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich [BRD 1963], The First Circle [BRD 1969], and The Cancer Ward [BRD 1968]. In this . . . analysis, Solzhenitsyn emerges as essentially a moral, rather than a political, writer." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Choice 8:1591 F '72 150w
Economist 241:64 D 11 '71 550w

"Both those unfamiliar with Solzhenitsyn's remarkable novels and those acquainted with them should find this articulate, perceptive study absorbing. Rothberg, a critic, editor, and teacher, has written an excitingly readable book. . . . [He] faults Solzhenitsyn's 'literary' talents, but finds any defects outweighed by a passionate commitment to justice and 'ethical socialism.' A biographical chronology and a most useful bibliography of publications by and about Solzhenitsyn are welcome adjuncts. For all public and academic collections." Rosemary Neiswender

Library J 96:3761 N 15 '71 140w
New Repub 166:29 F 19 '72 360w

"Not merely a pioneering work, this book provides many shrewd insights. Furthermore, Mr. Rothberg argues his case skillfully and is no mean stylist himself. The more pity, then, that his book contains a number of inaccuracies and lacks that perspective and depth which one hopes to find in a work by a scholar-critic. Mr. Rothberg's acquaintance with the history of Soviet literature is obviously quite limited and—more seriously—so, too, to all appearances is his knowledge of Russian. Indeed, one should admire Mr. Rothberg for producing so good a work in spite of such formidable handicaps. . . . A more regrettable and fundamental weakness of [this] book is that it is based on English translations of Solzhenitsyn's three novels." Maurice Friedberg

Sat R 54:59 D 4 '71 750w

ROTHBERG, ABRAHAM. The heirs of Stalin: dissidence and the Soviet regime, 1953-1970. 450p $14.50 Cornell univ. press

320.947 Russia—Politics and government—1953-. Russia—Intellectual life
ISBN 0-8014-0667-6 LC 77-164643

This is an account of the "relationship between the Kremlin's rulers and the intelligentsia. Mr. Rothberg . . . defines three streams of dissidence—artistic, political, and scientific—and shows how they gradually converged. . . . He begins with artistic and intellectual dissidence after Stalin, as exemplified in the works and careers of such writers as Ehrenburg, Dudintsev, Yevtushenko, Sinyavsky and Daniel, Pasternak, and Solzhenitsyn, then treats such political dissidents as Yakir, Amalrik, Litvinov, Grigorenko, and Marchenko, and finally deals with such scientific dissidents as Sakharov, Tamm, Kapitsa, and Medvedev." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by A. O. Sarkissian
Ann Am Acad 403:193 S '72 370w

"This new book . . . is a useful work of consolidation, rather than innovation. . . . Soviet statements are reexamined in Russian or published translations. Although Rothberg's approach is essentially journalistic, the name of Solzhenitsyn runs throughout, symbolizing courage and a dedication to honest literature. Little space is devoted to dissent by non-Russian or religious groups."

Choice 9:563 Je '72 170w

"[This study] testifies to the growing band of critics willing to fight on regardless of isolation and danger in the hope of making some impression. Rothberg has performed a real service to students of the Soviet scene by bringing the different aspects of dissent together without making any far-reaching claims for their ultimate significance." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:70 Ja 1 '72 200w

"The facts are reasonably well marshalled and there are some telling quotations, but Mr Rothberg's efforts to interpret literature are about as subtle (and quite as politically oriented) as those of Pravda."

New Statesman 83:495 Ap 14 '72 300w

Reviewed by S. F. Cohen
N Y Times Bk R p12 J1 23 '72 800w

"The best part of Rothberg's [book] is his final analysis of the Stalinist legacy. Here he shows a cognizance of how absolute power can corrupt absolutely not always to be found in the writings of American scholars. . . . The title of the book is taken from the poem by Yevgeni Yevtushenko. Throughout the book there is a curious reverence for the obiter dicta of that talented hard-currency cultural export who is, by turns 'outspoken' and Pravda's poet laureate. . . . Rothberg relies heavily on secondary sources from Moscow, including reports from Western correspondents there."

TLS p589 My 26 '72 800w

ROTHENBERG, JEROME, ed. Shaking the pumpkin; traditional poetry of the Indian North Americas. 475p il $8.95; pa $3.95 Doubleday

897 Indians of North America—Poetry. Poetry—Collections
LC 74-171317

This book represents an "effort to bring Amerindian poetry to the reader in such a way that the total poetry—the dance, the vowel changes, the pauses, the movement, the interaction between speaker and audience—is made evident, rather than by merely providing a straightforward, line-by-line . . . translation." (Library J)

"Rothenberg has undertaken and achieved—with the help of other poet-translators and consultants—a major task. Frequently using far-out methods, such as the devices of concrete and sound poetry, he has struggled to make available in English a wide selection of Amerindian poetry, originally created in dozens of separate languages, and ranging from the frozen north to Panama. . . . Many of the poems have a cultic or at least communal purpose: creation myths, liturgical dramas, magic spells, etc. The poets, mostly unknown, seem to function as spokesmen of their people and purveyors of religious and tribal lore. There are, of course, the exceptions, when sharply individualized feeling breaks through." Chad Walsh

Book World p11 Ap 2 '72 170w

"Much of the book is not otherwise available. The poetic value of the translations is high, especially the versions of Jerome Rothenberg and Dennis Tedlock. . . . The book is an important acquisition for all libraries: it is valuable from both a literary and an anthropological viewpoint."

Choice 9:654 J1/Ag '72 100w

"This is an anthology whose material is popular with the less affluent young."

Christian Century 89:176 F 9 '72 30w

Christian Science Monitor p12 Ap 20 '72 410w

"Owing in part to our acceptance of contemporary total theater, [this] effort succeeds. The notes and comments are helpful; but even without explication, many of the poems fairly beg to be performed, rendered in a highly charged, visceral mode, the rhythm of speech being but one component of a complex, pulsing life. Myth-making, humorous, bawdy, sacred, scatological, delicate—these poems span the range of feeling, and their close study should enable students of Indian culture to gain new insights into tribal life." John Demos

Library J 97:879 Mr 1 '72 110w

"Several collections of Indian myths or chants labelled as poetry have appeared [in the past few years]. This cross-cultural approach levels and makes all material sound the same, while ignoring major differences among such cultures as Eskimo, Seneca, Zuni and Maya. Indians are at least as varied as Russians, Chinese and Americans. Furthermore, most Indian songs are flat and dull on the printed page, especially when divorced from all cultural context. . . . [This book] is another large collection of bits and pieces from Panama to Alaska, with a few notes but no discernible arrangement, cast in e.e. cummings style type." Collin Clark

Library J 97:1939 My 15 '72 80w

ROTHENBERG, JOSHUA. The Jewish religion in the Soviet Union. 242p $10 Ktav

301.45 Jews in Russia. Russia—Religion
ISBN 087068-156-7 LC 75-149602

"Using the theories of Marx and Lenin and the documents of the government about religion as starting points in his analysis, the author describes the legal framework through which the religious community operates. He then turns to specific areas (holidays, customs, ceremonies, religious articles, and education), gives a historical review, and describes the current situation." (Library J) Index.

"Rothenberg's book . . . is a carefully annotated work of scholarship that traces the harassment of the Jewish religion that has taken place in the Soviet Union [from 1917 to the mid-1960's]. . . . [It] is not a work of propaganda or of protest but simply scholarship. . . . We hope that it will be studied with the attention that it deserves." Jack Reimer

America 126:125 F 5 '72 650w
Choice 9:829 S '72 150w

"[This is] a thorough and systematic description of the Jewish religion in Russia that is fully documented from primary sources and includes statistical data, graphs, and a chronological listing of the legal acts of the Soviet government and the resolutions and pronouncements of the Communist party pertaining to religious matters. . . . Rothenberg has been careful to confine his analysis to facts and has been diligent in explaining both religious and governmental terms. Recommended." Maurice Tuchman

Library J 97:2372 J1 '72 350w

ROTHMAN, DAVID J. The discovery of the asylum: social order and disorder in the new republic. 376p il $12.50 Little 361 U.S.—Social policy. Mentally ill—Care and treatment. Prisons—U.S.

LC 71-143711

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Rowland Berthoff
Am Hist R 77:585 Ap '72 240w

Reviewed by Thorsten Sellin
Ann Am Acad 402:191 J1 '72 400w

Reviewed by G. H. Daniels
J Am Hist 58:1015 Mr '72 600w

Reviewed by G. N. Grob
Pol Sci Q 87:325 Je '72 850w

ROTHSTEIN, RAPHAEL, jt. auth. Fedayeen. See Schiff, Z.

ROTHWELL, V. H. British war aims and peace diplomacy, 1914-1918. 315p $13.75 Oxford

940.3 European War, 1914-1918—Great Britain. European War, 1914-1918—Diplomatic history
ISBN 0-19-822349-8 LC [70-886729]

Rothwell's "purpose is to discover what aims, if any, Great Britain had in Europe. He also examines how far British statesmen contemplated ending the war by negotiation or at least how far they attempted to detach any of Germany's allies." (TLS)

"The book will be of considerable interest to American historians as well as British and to students of international relations. University and select college libraries must have this work; others must judge by the slant of their collections."

Choice 9:271 Ap '72 180w

"The fundamental fact which emerges from this book is the limited nature of British war aims. . . . [It] is a book for specialists, though the author's findings have a wider significance for students of the war and the peace settlement. The strictly chronological approach makes for a good deal of unnecessary cross-referencing and demands considerable knowledge of the issues involved. Very little is conceded to the less expert reader, but an introductory chapter and scattered comments suggest that Dr Rothwell both understands and can write convincingly about the broader questions which his study raises. It is unfortunate that Oxford University Press did not encourage the writer to turn what must have been an original and important thesis into a coherent and readable book."

Economist 242:55 Ja 15 '72 480w

"Rothwell has taken advantage of the opening of the British archives to prepare this thoroughly researched study. He documents the consistency of the British belief in the necessity of defeating Germany and their reluctance to make detailed statements of war aims. Such statements as were made portrayed British intentions as being for the benefit of mankind in general. In fact, as Rothwell demonstrates, London's policy 'was truly concerned only with the interests of the British Empire.' Rothwell also considers the disagreements between the military and civilian leadership. . . . This is a valuable monograph of a specialized nature." B. S. Viault

Library J 97:1322 Ap 1 '72 120w

"What was the [British] purpose or policy underlying the First World War? . . . [Mr Rothwell] provides new information . . . though he rightly hesitates to reach firm conclusions. . . . [He] writes off the unofficial discussions of war aims as unimportant, and no doubt they were. But he errs on the opposite side by treating the pronouncements by members of the Foreign Office with a respect they did not merit, especially when Lloyd George was Prime minister."

TLS p1595 D 24 '71 1100w

ROTZEL, GRACE. The school in Rose Valley; a parent venture in education; with contributions from teachers, parents, and children. 147p il $8.95 Johns Hopkins press

372.9748 Meylan, Pennsylvania. School in Rose Valley—History
ISBN 0-8018-1157-0 LC 70-144200

"In 1929 a group of Rose Valley, Pennsylvania, parents discouraged with the substance and style of teaching in the area's existing schools, decided to establish their own school. Grace Rotzel, who has been with The School in Rose Valley since its founding and served for many years as principal, tells of the problems they faced and how they solved them. . . . The school's founders emphasized first-hand experience, self-development, and the need for a balance between freedom and discipline." (Publisher's note)

"[This gracefully written account] is an index to American educational reform which articulates in bold relief some of the advanced educational thinking of our time. And it is strange that its history has been neglected. . . . Documentation, but no index or bibliography. Recommended."

Choice 8:1496 Ja '72 140w

"Among the books which have recently appeared detailing searches for a more meaningful education, this one is outstanding. It describes a school, founded on John Dewey's educational philosophy, which has been operating successfully [since its origin. One] reason for success was the choice of a principal who believed in Dewey's idea that education proceeds best in a social environment where children come into contact with their natural surroundings. . . . This inspiring book could save would-be innovators much time. The model for a better school already exists at Rose Valley." Marian Wozencraft

Library J 96:1696 My 15 '71 190w

ROUGIER, LOUIS. The genius of the West: with an introd. by F. A. v. Hayek. 222p $8.50 Nash pub. corp.

910.03 Civilization, Occidental
ISBN 8402-5001-0 LC 76-93466

"Beginning with the ancient Greek civilization, . . . Professor Rougier traces the development of Western civilization through the moral revolution of Christianity, the medieval technical discoveries, the scientific revolution of the 16th and 17th centuries, the Industrial Revolution, and on to the nuclear age of today." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This thoughtful and lucidly written little volume is an outstanding interpretive discussion of the major ideas that have occupied men's minds from ancient times until the present. Assuming a high level of sophistication on the part of the reader, it deals imaginatively with 'the basic myths on which civilization rests.' . . . Rejecting the economic determinism of classical Marxism, the author stoutly defends our modern 'civilization which has only begun to develop its full potential.' . . . Recommended for academic and large public libraries." Jack Clarke

Library J 95:2705 Ag '70 150w

"[This] book is a bad piece of history, devoid of any real scholarly distinction. . . . In order to make his case for Western civilization, Rougier freely distorts history, by omission, misrepresentation and just plain ignorance of the facts. . . . His discussion of the revival of the Greek language is . . . distorted. . . . Much of this book is devoted to the history of science, and here too Rougier treats us to a string of inaccuracies and clichés. . . . This book might well impress somebody who was specialized in none of the numerous subjects dealt with by Rougier, i.e., a very poorly educated reader, but good books ought to be made of sterner stuff." P. P. Witonski

ROUGIER, LOUIS—Continued

Nat R 24:53 Ja 21 '72 1450w

ROUHANI, FUAD. A history of O.P.E.C. 281p $17.50 Praeger

382 Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Petroleum industry and trade
LC 70-160479

"The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, a kind of trade association comprised mostly of Middle Eastern national governments, is the center of this work, which also contains . . . material about the international oil industry, negotiations between big oil companies and governments, and economics of world oil. Rouhani, an international lawyer, was the first Secretary of the Organization in the early 1960's." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The style is readable, pleasantly non-technical, and largely narrative rather than strictly analytical. Although the importance of the O.P.E.C. is probably exaggerated, the book will clearly be useful as a case study to students (including undergraduates) of world law, international economics, and diplomacy."

Choice 9:107 Mr '72 130w

"The book naturally tends to favor the oil-producing countries. This is useful if only because so many western books, consciously or unconsciously, favour the giant oil companies."

Economist 243:83 My 13 '72 50w

ROUNDS, GLEN. The cowboy trade; written and il. by Glen Rounds. 95p $4.95 Holiday

917.8 Cowboys—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8234-0206-1 LC 73-119804

In this account of the life style of the American cowboy, the author discusses "the details of a cowboy's dress, his tools, what he did on a cattle drive, at roundup time, in town, and during the winter." (Publisher's note) "Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Narrated with zest and affection, the book offers an honest, incisive look at . . . the American cowboy. . . . Unpretentious but interpretive sketches reflect the gusto of the text."

M. M. B.
Horn Bk 48:379 Ag '72 170w

Reviewed by J. E. Gardner
Library J 97:2954 S 15 '72 120w

"Rounds doesn't spend much time on the commercial wrangler. What disabusing needs to be done is accomplished very well in the context of the book itself. . . . The book is well proportioned for reading by 9 to 12 year olds and the illustrations, pen and ink, ramble across the pages and give a feeling of movement to the text. At first glance they look slapdash, no pains at all. Actually, they're so right and full of action I suspect they're the result of far more careful planning than one might be conned into thinking." Dan Cushman

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p31 My 7 '72 470w

ROUSE, PARKE. James Blair of Virginia, by Parke Rouse, Jr. 336p il $10 Univ. of N.C. press

B or 92 Blair, James. Virginia—History
ISBN 0-8078-1175-0 LC 70-159559

This is the biography of an influential colonist. "Born and educated in Scotland, . . . and serving as clerk in the Rolls Chapel, Blair was enlisted by the bishop of London to go to Virginia as a missionary in 1685. In the colonies, he proved a highly effective parish minister, and shortly after his arrival in Virginia was deputized by the bishop as his commissary. . . . He was the chief force in the founding of the College of William and Mary. . . . His strong ecclesiastical connections in London aided him in forcing the recall of three Virginia governors who opposed his ambitions and interests." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Rouse is both executive director of the Jamestown Foundation and author of several popular histories of the South. . . . [He] indicates, [that] 'the human side of James Blair will never be fully known for lack of family papers.' Yet even the public side of the Virginia cleric and councilor was rather enigmatic as the extremely varied testimonials dredged chiefly from church and public archives will show. 'There are so few biographies of persons in the middle period of colonial history that it belongs in even the most modest collections.'

Choice 9:128 Mr '72 120w

"The volume contains some fine detective work on the pattern of Blair's career before he came to Virginia but is almost without political analysis, although its subject was a pre-eminent politician, and is substantially devoid of philosophic context, although Blair is best remembered as a collegiate planner and widely published author of religious meditations. Rouse asserts . . . that Blair, 'although unknown and unknowable, unloved and almost unlovable . . . must nevertheless be reckoned a force for good in the colony's growth.' To this conclusion about a Scots cleric one can only return a Scots verdict: 'not proven.'" S. S. Webb
J Am Hist 59:126 Je '72 500w

"James Blair has needed a modern biography. To some extent this work fills that need. In dealing with Blair's struggles with Governors Andros, Nicholson, and Spotswood, Rouse gives an admirable picture of Virginia's political rivalries. The biographical detail on Blair is well woven into the larger political context in which he played so significant a part. However, only limited use has been made of some of the available monographic literature on the English background or on colonial religious thought and the book as a whole is somewhat disappointing."

Va Q R 48:lviii spring '72 110w

ROUSSEAU, JEANNE, jt. auth. Our Bruegel. See Claessens, B.ROUSSEL, ROYAL. The metaphysics of darkness; a study in the unity and development of Conrad's fiction. 194p $8 Johns Hopkins press

823 Conrad, Joseph
ISBN 0-8018-1187-2 LC 74-146458

This study "attempts to isolate Conrad's fundamental world view and reveal how the tenets of his perception of life find orderly expression in the major works. Roussel stresses the overall unity and development of the diverse novels, all of which mirror Conrad's concern with the alienated individual's search for solidity in the dark void of existence." (Library J) Index.

"As Roussel describes them, [Conrad's protagonists] are orphans because they come from absence and darkness, metaphysical bases which underlie all Conrad's works. . . . Roussel employs techniques of close reading which help show that Conrad's work is unified and that he was not, as critics such as Moser claimed, an author who suffered a severe falling off of his creative powers. The last novels, for Roussel, are worthy of serious consideration as representative of Conrad's commitment to investigating man's origins and future. This is an interesting book of limited value to specialists in the field."

Choice 8:1586 F '72 120w

"The discussion is intelligent, thoughtful, and basically sound, but it suffers from a belaboring of old, well-established, and largely unquestioned themes. A selection for only the most comprehensive collections on Conrad." T. W. Schultheiss

Library J 96:1714 My 15 '71 110w

"Roussel's singleminded exploration takes us through familiar territory, and his dry, predictable argument leads inexorably to destinations most readers will have long ago reached."

Lawrence Graver
Va Q R 48:315 spring '72 350w

ROWE, VIOLET A. Sir Henry Vane the younger; a study in political and administrative history; with a foreword by Dame Veronica Wedgwood. 298p $12 Oxford

942.06 Vane, Sir Henry, 1612?-1662
ISBN 485-13128-5 LC 73-21804

A biography of the "republican politician in the Long Parliament which overthrew Charles

I and then twice tried to govern the Commonwealth through an oligarchy." (TLS)

"The paucity of familiar letters . . . necessitates a heavy dependence on records and on accounts by [Vane's] contemporaries. Thoroughness of research in this class of materials is an outstanding feature of this book. Contemporary pamphlets and diurnals have been studied with much care. Parliamentary diaries are extensively employed, and by going to the original manuscripts Violet Rowe has been able to correct the printed versions at certain points. If gaps in the record lead her to speculate on Vane's role at various stages, the speculation is always informed and documented. . . . Vane's strengths as well as his shortcomings are . . . brought out in this exceptionally thorough study." P. H. Hardacre
Am Hist R 76:1543 D '71 430w

"A genuine need existed for a new life of Sir Henry Vane the Younger. . . . Dr. Rowe's admirably diligent researches, particularly in the Public Record Office and the Bodleian Library, have unearthed a large amount of material bearing on Vane's administrative career, and she has also discovered two anonymous pamphlets which she attributes to Vane. She has been so carried away by this material that she subtitles her book 'a study in political and administrative history' and skirts over or brushes aside some of the most dramatic incidents in Vane's life, such as his treatment of Strafford and his relations with Cromwell. . . . [Vane] deserves a biography in which his character and achievement are disentangled from an excess of detail."
TLS p1426 D 25 '70 650w

ROWE, WILLIAM WOODIN. Nabokov's deceptive world. 193p $8. N.Y. univ. press
813 Nabokov, Vladimir Vladimirovich
ISBN 0-8147-7353-2 LC 76-158968

This study of Nabokov is concerned with his "assonance, alliteration, foreshadowing, ironic hints . . . [and] rhetorical devices adapted from the Russian." (N Y Times Bk R)

"This welcome addition to Nabokov criticism presents a more meticulous, imaginative, and above all virile picture of Nabokov's work than does Page Stegner in Escape into aesthetics [BRD 1967] although it is not as balanced (nor does it try to be) as the standard Nabokov: his life in art [BRD 1967] by Andrew Field. Rowe's chapters on Russian influences are illuminating. . . . On the negative side, the book is very awkwardly documented and requires much footnote-chasing from the reader. . . . Appendices and footnotes constitute almost a quarter of the book; both, however, provide interesting reading in themselves. Index. The book reflects a tender and contagious love of Nabokov. Recommended."
Choice 8:1582 F '72 130w

"[This] book consists of three parts. While I have no great quarrel with the first two, entitled 'A Touch of Russian' and 'N. as Stage Manager,' I must protest vehemently against a number of indecent absurdities contained in the third part, entitled 'Sexual Manipulations.' . . . Who the hell cares, as Mr. Rowe wants us to care, that there is, according to his italics, a 'man' in the sentence about a homosexual Swede who 'had embarrassing manners'? . . . The fatal flaw in Mr. Rowe's treatment of recurrent words, such as 'garden' or 'water,' is his regarding them as abstractions. . . . I find unpardonable, and indeed unworthy of a scholar, . . . Mr. Rowe's twisting my discussion of prosody (as appended to my translation of Eugene Onegin) into a torrent of Freudian drivel." Vladimir Nabokov
N Y Rev of Books 17:8 O 7 '71 800w

"[This is an] earnest, academic explication of some of Nabokov's tricks. . . . Not so much criticism as lexicography, which has its uses but makes for catalogue entries, not books."
N Y Times Bk R p28 Ag 29 '71 50w

"As his title suggests, Nabokov's Deceptive World premises a rather unpleasant relationship between author and reader—unpleasant and irrelevant: Nabokov writes for himself and his wife, both of whom he loves. But Professor Rowe is out after tricks, not cheerful complexities, and of course he finds them. . . . Sex is the concern of more than half the book, as it ought to be. Alas, Rowe's analysis and his prose drain the life from it." J. D. O'Hara
Sat R 55:36 Ja 15 '72 480w

ROWELL, GEORGE, comp. Victorian dramatic criticism; sel. and introduced by George Rowell. 372p $12.75; pa $6.50 Barnes & Noble
792 Theater—Great Britain. Dramatic criticism
SBN 416-12320-1; 416-30010-3 (pa)
LC 76-59310j

The criticism in this volume has been "arranged under the categories of actors, theaters and audiences, drama, society drama, comedy, the coming of Ibsen, Shaw and the new drama, pantomime and the critic and his craft." (Choice)

"Given the scope and focus of this excellent anthology prepared by the foremost authority on the Victorian theater, a more accurate title might be 'English theatrical criticism 1802-1910.' While possibly all the contents of this volume could be found in major libraries through a diligent search of the collected essays and criticism of the 18 figures represented . . . Rowell is to be applauded for the rich, wise selection he has made—one that will appeal to specialist and casual reader alike. The ardent historian might regret the absence of any minor critics whose writings have never been republished, but no one can object to the emphasis on the stylish literary essayists of the beginning of the century (Lamb, Hunt, and Hazlitt) and on the keen journalistic critics at the end of it (Archer, Warkley Shaw, Grein, and the incomparable Max)."
Choice 9:229 Ap '72 200w

"One of the main pleasures of [this anthology] is the vivid evocation of particular moments in particular performances: Hazlitt on Kean's Othello, Clement Scott on Irving in The Bells, Archer on the flabbier sequences of Forbes Robertson's Hamlet, J. T. Grein on Martin Harvey's Sidney Carton, and Beerbohm's loving resurrection of Dan Leno's shoemaker sketch. . . . [The division of] subject-matter into sections and sub-sections destroys the overall chronology while serving very little purpose. Inevitably the reviews grouped under the heading DRAMA contain a lot of references to actors, just as those grouped under ACTORS are full of references to plays. . . . The book badly needs an index . . . it badly needs annotation . . . [and] much more considerate editing." Ronald Hayman
Encounter 37:82 J1 '71 450w

"[Mr. Rowell has] a period of slightly over a century from which to choose his excerpts, and it should be said straight away that it would be difficult to see how the job could have been better done. . . . There will be no quarrel in the pit over the merit of . . . [this] excellent compilation. It is performed with great éclat, and deserves an overflowing house."
TLS p712 Je 18 '71 1050w

ROWLAND, PETER. The last liberal governments: unfinished business 1911-1914. 405p $12.95 St Martin's

942 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century. Liberal party (Great Britain)
LC 76-188874

In this political history "of the last liberal Government coming to grips with problems of an unprecedented nature . . . [the author challenges the] assertion that the Liberal Party was a spent force by 1914 and its supersession by the Labour Party only a matter of time. The book concludes with a final survey of the Government's achievements and the things that still remained to be done—the unfinished business of the title—and assesses the impact of New Liberalism on the life of the nation." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:1192 N '72 150w

"[Rowland] writes from an openly partisan point of view. His loyalty and commitment are to the Liberal cause; and he writes of its failures and missed opportunities very much in the tone and manner of a present-day left-wing Labour supporter writing about the Labour government of 1946-70. . . . As a political narrative, apart from issues of interpretation, this book will always be useful. There is not enough original manuscript material (nothing except the Asquith papers outside London) and there are too many irritating slips (Battenburg, Gustav Princesps); but Mr. Rowland has read pretty well all the printed sources and has put pretty well all of them in."
Economist 242:52 Ja 15 '72 850w

ROWLAND, PETER—Continued

"This work, a sequel to Rowland's The last Liberal Governments: The Promised Land, 1905-1910 [BRD 1969] is political history at its best. . . . [The author draws] on an impressive array of sources, foremost among which are the papers of leading Liberal politicians. . . . Originality, witty erudition, and a smoothly flowing narrative style make this a splendid study which, while not likely to be the last word on the subject, can be recommended without reservation." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:2594 Ag '72 130w

"Rowland is a capable chronicler, but his limited range of sources prevents him from getting to the bottom of most of the episodes he covers." Cameron Hazlehurst

New Statesman 83:50 Ja 14 '72 150w

"Rowland's study of the Liberals in power between 1906 and 1914 . . . gives us an enjoyable excursion through the success and failures, the foreseeable and unforeseeable twists of fate which are the common lot of government. Certainly it is familiar ground, but he succeeds in making it completely real so that the reader feels he is a contemporary of the great men who then governed England, as well as a curious observer of their difficulties."

TLS p972 Ag 18 '72 450w

ROWSE, A. L. The Elizabethan Renaissance: the life of the society. (The Elizabethan age, [v3, pt 1]) 336p il $12.50 Scribner

942.05 Great Britain—History—Tudors, 1485-1603. Great Britain—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-684-12682-6 LC 70-172948

The author "continues to explore the England of Elizabeth. . . . He describes the foreign influences on Elizabethan society and tells how they entered through the court and spread along a network that went from city to town to village. He also examines the mores and mentality of all levels of society in relation to aspects of daily life, food, sex, pastimes, and beliefs about witchcraft and astrology." (Library J) For volumes one and two of the author's The Elizabethan Age series, see BRD 1951 and 1955.

Reviewed by A. J. Loomie
America 126:656 Je 24 '72 400w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 32:383 N 15 '72 120w

Reviewed by John Kenyon
Book World p10 My 21 '72 1050w
Choice 9:870 S '72 150w

"[The] sense of the immediacy of the past . . . gives Dr Rowse's writing its vivid quality, and . . . makes him stress the importance of survival—of buildings, of customs, and of folklore. It is this aspect of the book which is most interesting and most original. But the historian is not only an artist, and for this reason the book is disappointing. It is vague where it should be precise, anecdotal where it should be informative, and tendentious where it should be detached. The picture is impressionistic rather than analytical. Even so, this is a readable, amusing and informative book."

Economist 241:63 O 16 '71 380w

"[The author] uses interpretations of secondary sources and original research to present a work that goes beyond the more general ones to give a spirited portrait of the Elizabethans who created England's Renaissance." John Burmaster

Library J 97:682 F 15 '72 150w

"[This book brings us close] to the Elizabethan people themselves. . . . Unlike many historians, Rowse does not entrench himself within a card-index; he peregrinates. There can be few physical survivals which he has not seen, and related to the events and records of the period: he asserts repeatedly, and he is right, that the Elizabethan historian must learn to use his eyes. . . . This vastly entertaining book is full of . . . vivid details. . . . Readable books on social history are commonplace; what makes this one different is that the colour and squalor of the age are placed firmly in their historical setting by a historian who has spent a lifetime trying to understand how the minds of Elizabethans really worked." Paul Johnson

New Statesman 82:511 O 15 '71 1000w

New Yorker 48:115 My 27 '72 150w

"It is in his discussion of what some French historians would call 'collective mentalities' that Dr Rowse can here lay strongest claim to originality of approach. . . . Customs and superstitions, both at the local village level and among the educated, are vividly described and used with great skill to convey a general impression of Elizabethan society. . . . As for the chapter on sex, there are certainly some good stories, but generalization is necessarily based on a narrow range of authorities. . . . [On the] strictly economic side, Dr Rowse has used the papers, now at Chatsworth, of the redoubtable Bess of Hardwick to excellent advantage. . . . There is great talent and wide learning here, but a saddening lack of that humility essential to true scholarship and of the patient painstaking involved in large-scale historical research."

TLS p1366 O 29 '71 1200w

ROY, EDWARD VAN. See Van Roy, E.

ROYCE, JOSIAH. The philosophy of Josiah Royce; ed. and with an introd. by John K. Roth. 421p $8.95 Crowell

191
ISBN 0-690-61839-5 LC 76-146287

This anthology contains selections from Royce's "The Religious Aspect of Philosophy, The World and the Individual, The Philosophy of Loyalty [BRD 1908], and The Problem of Christianity [BRD 1913], plus an essay on Job and a brief autobiographical speech." (Library J) Bibliography.

Reviewed by J. A. Bracken
America 125:298 O 16 '71 270w

"Roth provides an excellent introductory volume in the thought of Royce, including an essay arguing Royce's continuing importance in American intellectual life. . . . There are a helpful chronology of Royce's life and a selected primary and secondary bibliography. The work will be useful to students who want a brief but wide ranging introduction. [J.] McDermott's University of Chicago edition of the basic writings [The basic writings of Josiah Royce BRD 1970] with its much more extensive selections and its fully annotated bibliography, is far more valuable to the student who wants more than a brief introduction. Roth's work is perhaps more useful as one of several texts in an American philosophy survey."

Choice 8:1188 N '71 120w

Christian Century 88:808 Je 30 '71 40w

"[This] is a representative sampling of Royce's work, sufficient for most readers and handier than having the social and religious philosophy in different volumes. Roth's introduction supplies a clear account of the main themes in Royce's philosophy, but fails to make the case that could be made for Royce's contemporary relevance, mainly because of a somewhat myopic view of the opinions of contemporary men and contemporary philosophy." P. W. Cummings

Library J 96:1983 Je 1 '71 110w

ROZANOV, VASILY. Dostoevsky and the Legend of the Grand Inquisitor; tr. and with an afterword by Spencer E. Roberts. 232p $9.50 Cornell Univ. press

891.7 Dostoevsky, Fyodor Mikhailovich—The brothers Karamazov. Gogol, Nikolai Vasilevich
ISBN-0-8014-0694-3 LC 79-37754

The author wrote this "analysis of Dostoevsky in 1891. It was the first serious attempt to fathom the complexities of the great novelist's ideological and artistic development. . . . [In his] meditation on 'The Legend of the Grand Inquisitor,' the central episode in The Brothers Karamazov. . . . [Rozanov makes an] effort to treat Dostoevsky as a seer, a prophet, and a source of revelation and the 'Legend' as Scriptural text." (Publisher's note)

"[Roberts] has produced a fine and idiomatic translation, with an interesting afterword on Rozanov. This book could be useful to Dostoevsky students were it in inexpensive paperback, but at this price, it is hard to accept."

Choice 9:976 O '72 190w

"Rozanov sides with Dostoevsky's belief that Russian orthodoxy is to be the salvation of man; and the author, who has placed Dostoevsky in the prophetic line of Russian Messianists, turns out himself to be just such a prophet. His comments on the decline of his own time—the fulfillment of Dostoevsky's prophecies—are fully as interesting as his literary criticism. This translation is welcomed, especially now that the prophetic-apocalyptic in Dostoevsky's work is gaining more critical attention." H. F. Babinski

Library J 97:1719 My 1 '72 140w

"[This] is a splendid piece of exegesis and ■ great pioneering exploit in its own field, quite unjustly neglected in the English-speaking world. The present translation does it justice."

TLS p838 J1 21 '72 1100w

RUBENSTEIN, RICHARD L. My brother Paul. 209p $5.95 Harper

225.9 Paul, Saint

SBN 06-067014-2 LC 72-124704

In this portrait of the Apostle Paul the author discusses such questions as "Why was it impossible for Paul to remain ■ rabbinic Jew and why was he impelled toward faith in a crucified and risen Christ? . . . Rubenstein sees Paul's developing religious consciousness as a direct result of his personal and psychic disposition. He sees Paul as a revolutionary Jewish mystic whose insights often anticipate the world of twentieth-century psychoanalysis. Rubenstein regards Paul's theological vision as having such universal relevance that it ultimately transcends the faith he helped to found." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] book is no easy and superficial reading of Freud into Paul. The author's own passion, never far from his account of Paul, and his informed appreciation of New Testament scholarship, keep the work from becoming a mere illustration of psychological truths. The approach is best described as that of phenomenology of religion: Paul is no more distant from me than my own psychological experience. This approach is at once the strength and weakness of the book. The proper foreignness in Paul may perhaps be smoothed over. Yet it makes possible new insight into Paul's experience, so influential in his doctrinal teaching. My Brother Paul is a provocative, informed and thoroughly contemporary reading of Paul's letters." Richard Clifford

America 126:487 My 6 '72 420w

Choice 9:984 O '72 180w

Reviewed by C. D. Hardwick

Christian Century 89:671 Je 7 '72 650w

"[In this] excellent and stimulating book, Dr. Rubenstein seeks to express his positive appreciation of Paul and his religious genius. He sees Paul to have intuitively understood that which is a basic insight of both religion and psychoanalysis—the reality of the unmanifest. . . . The letters of Paul are filled, according to Rubenstein, with the imagery and symbolism of primary process thinking, the id's level of mental functioning. The book's individual chapters seek in a not superficial way to demonstrate major instances of this. . . . The excellence of this book is that the author has ably combined the results of scholarly biblical research and the findings of depth psychology to portray effectively the profundity of Paul's religious genius." Edward Glynn

Commonweal 96:267 My 19 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Martin Marty

Critic 30:86 My '72 180w

"[This is an] intensely personal book which focuses on those aspects of the apostle Paul's life and thought 'of greatest relevance to [the author's] own theological development.' . . . [The author] sees in Paul one of the most influential Jews of all time, but one who has been frequently misunderstood and misrepresented. To demonstrate this point, he quotes widely from scholarly writings from many countries and many ages. . . . The result of the author's research and penetrating insights is a thoughtful and well-written book." J. A. Clarke

Library J 97:509 F 1 '72 110w

"Rubenstein's interpretation of Paul carries the dangers and deficiencies of the psychoanalytical method as an account of meaning and reality: projective judgment, emotional transference, reductionist analysis, and, finally, a confusion of mythologies. . . . Many Christians will fail to recognize Paul's faith in Rubenstein's account, not so much because it is by an unbelieving Jew as because it is by such a thoroughly believing 'psychological man.'"

N Y Times Bk R p7 My 7 '72 1050w

RUBIN, HAROLD. See Robbins, H.

RUBIN, JOAN, ed. Can language be planned? Sociolinguistic theory and practice for developing nations; ed. by Joan Rubin and Björn H. Jernudd. (An East-West Center bk) 343p $12 Univ. press of Hawaii

400 Sociolinguistics

ISBN 0-8248-0100-8 LC 70-129618

This volume is the result of a conference held at the East-West Center of the University of Hawaii in 1969. "The papers in the present collection are revised versions of those read and discussed at the meeting. The eighteen essays fall into four groups: the motivation of language policies; case studies of language-planning in Ireland, Israel, the Philippines, East Africa, Turkey, Indonesia, and Pakistan; general theories and approaches; research strategies for the future." (TLS) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"The emphasis of the present volume is on national policy and decision-making. It presents . . . an overview and discussion of general problems. . . . Would be useful as an adjunct or source in courses in political and social problems of developing nations as well as in courses concerned with the broad social context of language. Short, well annotated bibliography of introductory references, in the area of language planning; useful index."

Choice 9:543 Je '72 110w

"Generally, the focus is on the present, facing forward. . . . The book is a success. The theoretical sections may seem weighed down by the jargon of the social sciences, but what is more important is that they pay healthy respect to the varying demands of each situation, and particularly to cost analysis. The case-study section is admirably concrete and obviously based on a wealth of up-to-date, firsthand experience. . . . There might also have been a more detailed discussion of the contrastive and pedagogical aspects of language-planning. One of the book's great assets is its set of select bibliographies."

TLS p773 J1 7 '72 650w

RUBIN, MICHAEL. An absence of bells. 198p $6.95 McGraw

SBN 07-054190-6

LC 70-178933

"Donald Collins and Lynn Adler fall in love while they are students in an art school. . . . They decide to hire a house in Cape Cod where they pose as man and wife. It is a difficult decision for each one. Don must renounce the practice of his religion, antagonize his sister, a nun, and also his widowed mother who is a devout Catholic. Lynn gives up her husband and her young son, Jason. . . . [Lynn] has spent some time in a mental institution and there are periods when she seems almost unaware of Don's existence. But their greatest problem is with their families. Lynn's husband sends tapes regularly and in them begs his wife to return. She makes ■ nuisance of herself by phoning her son's school almost every day. Don's mother refuses to cash any of the checks he sends for her upkeep." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Stephen McKenna

Best Sell 32:58 My 1 '72 300w

"With admirable restraint, Rubin reveals the desperation and bewilderment of two uncertain lovers whose feelings of guilt over their vagaries almost destroy them. A briskly paced and compelling story, with the protagonists skillfully and convincingly drawn, and told in succinct yet vivid prose. By the author of In a Cold Country [BRD 1971]." A. J. Anderson

Library J 97:1461 Ap 15 '72 90w

"Rubin's writing is plain, and sometimes rather clumsy, but it serves his purpose. With a certain unsentimental yet unabashed compassion he describes the inner complexities of these very ordinary people. His perceptiveness is modestly unobtrusive, yet he manages gentle surprises from time to time. He is good at delineating how decent, psychically maimed people destructively feed into each other's neuroses, and how they also may manage somehow to help each other through sympathetic identification. He understands the workings of guilt, what triggers it and how it takes its toll, how powerfully it determines our 'luck.' . . . [Despite some weaknesses the novel has] a satisfying wholeness." Peter Sourian

N Y Times Bk R p7 Mr 5 '72 500w

RUBIN, MICHAEL—Continued

"[This book] is painful testimony to the hazards of teaching (or taking) a creative writing course. . . . [Rubin's] characters are exposition nuts, given to long, clear autobiographies and self-analysis. Even the minor characters are always on tiptoe, ready to Contribute to the Plot. . . . [For example,] an abandoned dog avoids the couple for two months; then the plot whistles for him, and he literally hurls himself against the kitchen door. Seldom has deus slid so often and so efficiently ex his well-greased machina. . . . Then there's the vivid writing: 'As usual she'd lined up all his packaged cereals on the sideboard like a display of pornographic books.' Like in what way?" J. D. O'Hara
Sat R 55:78 My 20 '72 550w

RUBIN, NEVILLE. Cameroun; an African federation. 259p maps $10 Praeger 320.967 Cameroun—Politics and government
LC 78-150705

"Cameroun is the only African country made up of former French and former British possessions. . . . [This volume] traces the process that led to the formation of the Federal Republic of Cameroun and outlines the institutions and policies that have taken shape in the new state. The opening chapters of the book deal with the country's geography, some of the many peoples who inhabit it, and Cameroun's complicated history before federation." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Rubin, a lecturer in African law at the University of London and recently on the faculty of the Federal University of Cameroon, provides a readable, concise summary of the political history of Africa's most successful federation. The book is most useful in its descriptions of Cameroon's present political, economic, and social problems, less so in its discussion of the tortuous paths that eventually led to the creation of the federation. The former discussions rest on the author's on-the-spot research and observations, the latter mainly on the work of other scholars of the Cameroon scene. . . . Recommended for school libraries and general readers. . . . Five useful appendices, including texts of the mandate and trusteeship agreements, and the Constitution of the Federal Republic."
Choice 9:418 My '72 180w

"Despite a few minor errors of fact and a few questionable conclusions, the work is valuable because it updates earlier studies."
J. J. Grotzinger
Library J 96:4093 D 15 '71 100w

RUBLOWSKY, JOHN. Black music in America. 150p il $6.95 Basic bks.

781.7 Negro music. Negro musicians. Music. American—History and criticism. Music. African—History and criticism
SBN 465-00697-3 LC 71-135553

"African music in its transplanted, American form has had a tremendous influence on both American and world music. Rublowsky traces that heritage from Africa." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"A weak book, of little substance. One-third of the 141 pages of text have passed before the coverage reaches America; there is no information presented not readily available elsewhere. . . . The text has many errors which suggest Rublowsky is not really musically educated. . . . Not only are musical examples absent, actual music is only slightly discussed (only the last 40 pages aim in this direction, albeit abortively); photos are provided of Charlie Mingus and Aretha Franklin, but these names appear nowhere in the text; and statements on characteristics of the music stop short of the most important and best known factors. Despite a promising title, this book should pass unnoticed."
Choice 8:1186 N '71 100w

"The musical aspect of the book is fresh and informative. The historical context is obvious to most people and it is questionable whether so many pages had to be devoted to 'history.' But the book should appeal to lay readers and to college and high school students interested in a general history of Afro-American music." Allen Cohen
Library J 96:3139 O 1 '71 190w

RUBY, ROBERT H. The Cayuse Indians; imperial tribesmen of Old Oregon, by Robert H. Ruby and John A. Brown; foreword by Clifford M. Drury. (Okla. univ. The civilization of the Am. Indian ser) 345p il $8.95 Univ. of Okla. press

970.3 Cayuse Indians
ISBN 0-8061-0995-5 LC 74-177345

"This study seeks to assess the role of a numerically small . . . tribe of Indians—the Cayuse of the Pacific Northwest. . . . [The] book recounts the impact of the fur traders, missionaries, and American immigrants upon the Cayuse during the 19th Century. The authors . . . discuss the . . . Whitman massacre, the Cayuse War of 1848, and the assignment of the tribe to the Umatilla reservation in the 1850's." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This work is] based on much work with unpublished as well as published sources and intended to be a sympathetic account. Perhaps Western history buffs will find it exciting. But unfortunately, like too many such Indian histories, it is written in a journalistic style with loaded vocabulary and gratuitous value judgments, without knowledge of recent anthropological and linguistic research, and without any guiding problem, theme, or even chronological table. For the student with a social science orientation the result is tedious and frustrating, usable only as a source of raw data. Recommended for libraries serving Northwest and Indian history programs."
Choice 9:1052 O '72 200w

"This book compares favorably with similar volumes. Its greatest contribution is its pulling together a once fragmented story; its chief weakness is its tendency to see Indian history as largely interaction between red and white men. Still, the study is useful and worth purchasing." W. D. Baird
Library J 97:2594 Ag '72 140w

RUDD, NIALL, ed. Essays on classical literature; selected from Arion with an introd. by Niall Rudd. 275p $7.50 Barnes & Noble 888 Classical literature—History and criticism
ISBN 389-04608-6 LC 73-152873

"The 12 articles that appear in this volume have been previously published in the first six volumes of Arion. . . . [The] journal of classical humanities of the University of Texas. The three sections . . . embrace four articles on Greek literature (C. J. Herington on the last phase of Aeschylus; Richmond Lattimore on Phaedra and Hippolytus; Douglas Young on formula and premeditation in Homer and Hesiod; Thomas Gould on Plato's hostility to art); four on Latin literature (Kenneth Quinn on Horace's Odes 1.5; William Arrow-smith on luxury and death in the Satyricon; J. P. Sullivan on Petronius as an artist; C. J. Herington on Senecan tragedy); and four on the classical tradition (D. S. Carne-Ross on the gaiety of the classical languages; H. A. Mason on Matthew Arnold's limited view of the classical tradition; Henry Ebel's reply to Mason's article; and Robert Fitzgerald on Dryden's Aeneid)." (Choice)

"Perceptive, highly literate, interesting, and pointed, these articles indicate the lively, fruitful, and right direction taken by much contemporary classical scholarship. Recommended for libraries of those liberal arts institutions that do not regularly subscribe to Arion."
Choice 9:1124 N '72 170w

"Here is Arion at its best, and much of it is very good. The writers set out, among other things, to be lively, and there is an energy here that is infectious, that sends the blood coursing again, through thirsty veins. Occasionally there is a faint suggestion of compulsory physical jerks, of a kind of criticism that is too lively by half, a chronic patient doing a frenetic jig; but generally the effect is tonic. The first hundred pages, as it happens, are a little uneven. . . . Those who have themselves been concerned with editing Arion come through strongly in this collection. . . . The other contributions have their own interests but some of them come terribly close to a particular danger of this kind of work: that of conceiving 'criticism' as an end in itself, of having little in particular to say until one comes to say it."
TLS p362 Mr 31 '72 1850w

RUDE, GEORGE. Paris and London in the eighteenth century; studies in popular protest. 350p $8.95 Viking

301.6 Paris—Social conditions. Paris—Riots. London—Social conditions. London—Riots
SBN 670-53332-9 LC 73-148267

Basing his book on "research in the libraries and archives of the two capitals [the author] explores the similarities and differences in urban protests and revolts during the eighteenth century." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Offering straightforward, detailed analysis rather than picturesque anecdote, the articles are well written if sometimes repetitious. . . . Recommended more for large than for small college libraries."

Choice 9:271 Ap '72 150w

"This collection of essays, all but one of which have been published previously in a number of journals, will be welcomed by students of 18th-Century English and French history. Rudé's work on the Wilkesite and Gordon riots and his investigations of French revolutionary mobs is well known (The Crowd in History [BRD 1965]). These essays, characterized by cohesion, integrity and clear purpose, portray the two great metropolitan centers during the preindustrial epoch, their sociopolitical structures, their similarities and differences. Seldom do an author's short pieces fit together so nicely as these, and seldom do such pieces so readily justify republication." R. R. Rea

Library J 97:70 Ja 1 '72 100w

"Rudé stresses—and proves—over and over again that it was soaring inflation of food prices that turned law-abiding citizens into passionate members of a mob bent on using force to secure economic justice. . . . [He] makes clear what every politician as well as historian should remember—that semiliterate masses vote not with their heads but their bellies. Every hopeful liberal would do well to read his admirable essay on the pre-industrial crowd with extreme care. Much of what Rudé attributes to the pre-industrial crowd is still active today." J. H. Plumb

N Y Times Bk R p6 My 21 '72 500w

RUDEEN, KENNETH. Jackie Robinson; il. by Richard Cuffari. 40p $3.75 Crowell

B or 92 Robinson, Jackie—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-690-45649-2 LC 75-139100

This is the biography of the first Negro to play major-league baseball. The year was 1947. The team was the Brooklyn Dodgers. "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"[The author's] skillful presentation of the bigotry Robinson faced—a concept and situation difficult to render and evoke in simple words—brings this biography distinction." R. R. Knudson

Library J 96:4202 D 15 '71 60w

"[This welcome for] another Jackie Robinson story . . . is due to the fact that it is written for very young children, and, so I am told, there are very few biographies written for this level. I think they will enjoy Rudeen's clear and gentle retelling of Jackie's life." Toni Morrison

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p43 My 2 '71 50w

RUDISILL, RICHARD. Mirror image; the influence of the daguerreotype on American society. 342p pl $30 Univ. of N.Mex. press

770 Daguerreotype. Photography—History
SBN 8263-0198-3 LC 79-137880

The author, "an assistant professor of art and photographic history at the University of New Mexico, believes that the daguerrotype exerted strong influences on American society from 1840 to 1860, as the earliest photographic mass medium in America. He suggests that daguerreotypy encouraged nationalism and defined the 'American character.' helped shift American society from an agrarian one to a technological one by introducing a reliable machine, and activated national faith in spiritual insight as derived from the works of God in nature." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"The superb collection of . . . images are for the most part hitherto unpublished; they include work by the masters: Albert Sands Southworth, Josiah Johnson Hawes, Mathew

B. Brady, and Marcus Aurelius Root. The bibliography . . . is admirable. . . . Indispensable for all libraries of the history of photography; recommended for collections of American art."

Choice 8:1446 Ja '72 200w

"Rudisill's discussion is sometimes murky, especially when he analyzes connections between the daguerreotype and Emersonian philosophy. Not everyone will accept the author's more sweeping assertions, for example: 'Had the daguerreotype not become available in 1839, it is likely that progress in the symbolic definition of America as a nation would have been retarded for at least a generation.' But these are welcome speculations, the results of careful analysis of evidence which historians have neglected in favor of the written word. The book is a stimulating exercise in the use of nonliterary documentation for social and intellectual history." H. W. Morgan

J Am Hist 59:136 Je '72 300w

"This scholarly treatment is complemented by 202 daguerreotype reproductions and footnotes, unfortunately appended at the back of the book. . . . Will appeal to all students of photography and mid-19th-Century Americana." J. W. Hall

Library J 97:66 Ja 1 '72 150w

"Richly informative. . . . Rudisill's research is better than his repetitive writing, which shows a tendency to base large assumptions on little evidence. Even though tedious, the book is a valuable reference work." David Vestal

N Y Times Bk R p43 D 12 '71 90w

RUDNER, RICHARD, ed. Logic & art. See Logic & art

RUDNER, RUTH. Wandering; a walker's guide to the mountain trails of Europe; with phot. by James Goldsmith. 329p maps $8.95; pa $3.95 Dial press

796.5 Europe—Description and travel—Guide books. Hiking. Mountaineering
LC 72-2894

"The book has two main parts. In the first Rudner writes about the pleasures and rewards of wandering and, along the way, provides advice on matters ranging from what to take in your rucksack, to hut protocol. . . . The second part, a trail guide, is drawn from the author's wanderings in the alps of ten countries, from Mont Blanc to the Tatras, from the Dolomites to Mount Olympus. There is a short section on Austrian climbing (for the agile) and . . . appendices of alpine association, climbing school, and tourist office addresses." (Sat R)

"Rudner sets out to give precise information about the do's and don'ts of hiking in European mountains. The success of this book is mixed. The section on do's and don'ts is wholly successful. . . . The section in which Rudner recounts her own hiking experiences, in effect a set of diary notes kept over a number of years, contains too little hard information for the volume of space it occupies. . . . This slightly mars a book that in other respects will provide for many readers a refreshing new slant on Europe." T. M. Robinson

Library J 97:2597 Ag '72 140w

"Rudner is a walker, a self-styled 'wanderer,' who, in this appealing book, becomes a Kate Simon of the alps. . . . [She offers] much helpful advice. . . . There are photographs throughout (by James Goldsmith), and area maps that (Must it be said? It must) should not be used as trail maps; accurate trail maps are available from the addresses in the appendices. The author's tone is quiet and understated, making the book seem both trustworthy and—appropriately, not unsatisfyingly—a trifle weary. Just the thing for wandering."

Sat R 55:101 O 7 '72 300w

RUDOLPH, PAUL. Paul Rudolph; introd. and notes by Rupert Spade; with 63 phot. by Yukio Futagawa. 134p $7.50 Simon & Schuster

720.973

SBN 671-20878-0 LC 77-139583

This account of the work of Paul Rudolph, the architect, "contains a . . . biographical

RUDOLPH, PAUL—Continued

introduction, followed by a hundred or so pages of photographs... and ... notes on the buildings illustrated." (TLS)

"[This is a volume] in Simon and Schuster's handsome and useful Library of Contemporary Architects. The photographs ... are all amply illustrative of the ... talents of the architect. ... Rudolph seems long on experimentation but ... makes an intriguing study."

Best Sell 31:102 Je 1 '71 30w

"[The introduction is] poorly written and ... [offers] little beside basic facts and some quotations from the architect ... and from other writers."

TLS p717 Je 18 '71 30w

RUEFF, JACQUES. The monetary sin of the West; tr. by Roger Glémet. 214p $6.95 Macmillan (N Y)

332.4 Money. Foreign exchange. Gold
LC 79-182450

This is an "examination and explanation of the current international monetary crisis.... The author evaluates the gold-exchange standard and monetary system of the West as it has evolved over the past decade.... He shows why the system of unconvertible currency cannot endure, what must be the logical outgrowth of the existing situation, and what changes are necessary to avoid economic disaster." (Publisher's note)

Economist 244:83 J1 1 '72 70w

"In 1961, in Le Monde, [Rueff] identified the sequence of events which would ensue as the consequence of the evolving fiscal relationships and interdependencies between the United States and other nations. In the present work he brings his arguments up to date and underscores the still greater perils which he sees as similarly inevitable unless drastic modification of the basic arrangements takes place.... A significant work for those concerned with economics and finance as well as with international affairs and public policy." Paul Wasserman

Library J 97:1009 Mr 15 '72 200w

"By its nature, this Rueff anthology is a bit repetitive, but the thesis bears repeating. It was sounded by the author at least as early as 1921, when he was a junior money manager himself. He advised his Government in a memorandum that the Great Depression had been provoked in large part by the inflationary effect of the gold-exchange standard.... The view that a little inflation is a good thing is reluctantly giving way under the hammer blow of events. Rueff may be less persuasive in his apparent belief that sound money (with only a modest assist from national credit policy) should guarantee prosperity almost automatically. This goes back to Adam Smith ... and certainly does not correspond to the French economy that Rueff knows. We may have to find a different mix. Meanwhile, says Rueff, hold on to your hats." J L. Hess

N Y Times Bk R p27 Mr 26 '72 1500w

RUIGH, ROBERT E. The Parliament of 1624; politics and foreign policy. (Harvard univ. Harvard hist. stud. v87) 434p il $15 Harvard univ. press

942.06 Great Britain—Politics and government—Stuarts, 1603-1714
ISBN 0-674-65225-8 LC 72-135548

This is a study of the Parliament of 1624, which under "the influence of Buckingham and Prince Charles, ... tried to assert itself more permanently in foreign affairs ... helped to establish precedents that would later prove dangerous to King Charles [and] was influential in moderating James I's course in Spain and in the Palatinate.... [The author traces] this Parliament through its organization, through the system of patronage employed by king, prince, royal favorite, and Parliamentarians."

"[This] is a... weighty tome, and sometimes rather heavy going.... In his best section—on elections and the patronage of various groups [Ruigh] has brought some extremely difficult and scattered research to a most successful conclusion. These three chapters are models of painstaking historical work, and there is nothing like them in the literature of Parliament. In the very close study of day-to-day diplomatic history and its reflections in the Commons, though, one sometimes loses the wood for the trees. This book will be a mine for future scholars." T. K. Rabb

Am Hist R 77:705 Je '72 1800w

"Although based on extensive research in MSS. sources, Ruigh's book is a disappointment, often because his detailed investigations (e.g. Chapters 2 and 3) lead to tepid analyses or to a confirmation of generally accepted views."

Choice 8:1077 O '71 100w

"Ruigh is a master of the historical microscope, and in applying his microscope with rigorous care to the events of 1624, he has greatly enriched our understanding of the tangled politics of the 1620s. This is a book of major importance, and will need careful study from everyone concerned with the history of the period. It incorporates an exhaustive programme of research. Dr Ruigh has used fifteen Parliamentary diaries, rightly concluding that that of Sir William Spring is the best. Some of his richest treasures, however, come from more unexpected sources, such as the Sackville manuscripts, the Duchy of Cornwall manuscripts, and the long-neglected Foreign Transcripts in the Public Record Office."

TLS p266 Mr 10 '72 900w

"Although the work occasionally suffers from too much detail and a consequently difficult prose, it has a much-needed focus on a single year and single parliament that will be of use to scholars of Jacobean England."

Va Q R 47:clxxvii autumn '71 110w

RULE, JOHN C., ed. Louis XIV and the craft of kingship. 478p il $12 Ohio state univ. press

944 Louis XIV, King of France
LC 72-79845

"Professor Rule proposes in this book to explore some historiographical problems of the reign of Louis XIV. He brings together a dozen essays by distinguished scholars in the field, four of whom had prepared their papers for a conference at Ohio State University in 1964. Rule frames the essays with two of his own, one surveying the major events, the other the bibliography of Louis's reign." (Am Hist R) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Not all of the essays are true to the book's title. Only four consider the 'craft of kingship' as such: Rule's one-hundred-page survey, which stresses the bureaucratic side of Louis's activities; both of John B. Wolf's essays, the first on Louis's preparations for kingship, ... the second on Louis as a 'soldier-king'; and A. Lloyd Moote's essay on Louis's concepts of law and justice as illustrated by his actual practices.... The most provocative [papers] include a revisionist essay by R. M. Hutton on Louis's foreign policy, an analysis of Louis's relations with the Church by H. G. Judge, a description by Andrew Lossky of the changing intellectual assumptions that lay behind Louis's actions, and a discussion by William F. Church of Louis's doctrine of reason of state." E. I. Perry

Am Hist R 77:526 Ap '72 750w

"This is a fine, worthwhile collection of articles which will be of value to all scholars interested in early modern Europe. Students will find Rule's 'Bibliographical introduction' of special value; it is the best recent annotated bibliography available in English. Adequate index. Should be in libraries of all colleges and universities and high schools which have strong history programs."

Choice 8:281 Ap '71 140w

RUMBELOW, DONALD. I spy blue: the police and crime in the City of London from Elizabeth I to Victoria. 250p il pl $11.95 St Martins

363.2 London—Police. Crime and criminals —London
SBN 333-10652-0 LC 70-171584

This is a "history of police and crime in the City of London. Beginning with the Privy Pykers nailed by the ears to the Cheapside pillory, Rumbelow shows how, in spite of being hamstrung by the powerful ward committees and by the unwillingness of the citizens to help them, the City Marshals tried to suppress the sanctuary men and . . . bullies of Stuart and Hanoverian London. . . . [The book also deals with] the first Commissioner, Daniel Whittle Harvey . . . [whose men] . . . slowly brought order to the [city]. (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book [traces] the long and gradual process by which the Night Watch was transformed into the beginning of a modern police force. . . . [It] is more than just a study in law enforcement; it is a valuable and well-researched contribution to London social history. Moreover, the colorful, if often unsavory, characters which fill [the] pages along with many contemporary illustrations make for fascinating reading." F. X. J. Homer

Best Sell 32:34 Ap 15 '72 550w

Choice 9:847 S '72 180w

"[The author utilizes] research in a wide variety of published and archival materials. . . . The story is an entertaining yet sordid one of the corruption, incompetence, and underpayment which beset the profession until Harvey's advent in 1839. . . . A useful introduction to an important area of social history." J. A. Casada

Library J 97:1434 Ap 15 '72 110w

"Though nominally intending to write the convoluted (and corrupt) administrative history of the force within that one square mile of central London known as 'the City,' Rumbelow in fact does much more: using police dossiers he reconstructs the brutalized lives of the substratum of beggars, pickpockets, ladies of the evening, 'shofulmen,' and 'swell mobsters' who overran the inner city. The pre-Peelite cops were ineffectual, underpaid, and despised. How they made ends meet by consorting with their adversary/allies, the offenders, is an interesting if not exactly edifying story."

N Y Rev of Books 18:34 Ap 6 '72 260w

"[The author's] research has been thorough and industrious: he has mastered the literature on the subject. . . . His notes and bibliography are a model for anyone seeking to write police history. The style in a few places leaves something to be desired but is generally adequate and clear. . . . The book is divided into two main parts; one concerned with the old order of policing up to the [City of London Police] Act of 1839; the other with the new order under Daniel Whittle Harvey, until his death in 1863. . . . Mr Rumbelow gives a vivid account of [this] first Commissioner appointed under the Act. . . . [His] documentation of [the] inner history of the force is very good. Another excellent feature of I Spy Blue is the substantial amount of space given to the social problems in terms of which the police had to work."

TLS p1637 D 31 '71 850w

RUSH, SHEILA. How to get along with Black people; a handbook for white folks; and some Black folks too, by Sheila Rush and Chris Clark. (Joseph Okpaku bk) 143p $5.95 Third press

301.451 U.S.—Race relations

ISBN 89388-018-3 LC 73-162960

The authors "attempt to provide guidelines—dos and don'ts—on behavior: a book of etiquette for black-white relations." (Library J)

"Initially much of the book, although well-written and frequently amusing, does not seem profound. Yet it prods the memory and reminds the reader of similar situations. And it makes us realize that we still are, as scholars and popularizers have stated, ultimately racists in at least some of our actions and that we still need reminders of how easily careless actions offend." E. W. Welsch

Library J 97:692 F 15 '72 110w

"The description of the lack of objectivity in the press raises the questions of who writes the news articles on racial incidents, the placement of articles in the paper, who is identified and quoted and who protected, adjectives used in describing black personalities, etc. A last section on art reviews and reviewers points out another area where objectivity is lacking. YA's will find this a good self-test of their own attitudes and expressions." Marcia Keller

Library J 97:1181 Mr 15 '72 200w [YA]

"This tells it straight and perceptively. One does wish for more irony and wit: the usual social intercourse between the races in America contains, after all, rather a large dash of absurdity (for which wit and irony are good solvents)."

N Y Times Bk R p28 Ja 9 '72 100w

RUSK, HOWARD. A. A world to care for; the autobiography of Howard A. Rusk, M.D. (A Reader's digest press bk) 307p $7.95 Random house

B or 92 Physically handicapped—Rehabilitation

ISBN 0-394-48198-4 LC 72-5263

"Starting with his World War II experience, the author reveals . . . how he became motivated to begin this movement toward rehabilitation, recalls actual patients he treated, tells how he raised money for the cause, and emphasizes his . . . efforts to promote the Institute of Rehabilitative Medicine (at New York University Medical Center) which he heads. Additionally, he weaves into the . . . narrative many facts about his own personal life experiences and viewpoints." (Library J)

"In this easy-to-read volume, Rusk offers a personal account of the development of a new medical specialty—rehabilitative medicine. . . . Although this type of book necessarily reflects the bias of the author and does not attempt to tell an objective story, it contains many valuable and significant memories of a person vitally responsible for today's progressive and excellent rehabilitative care." B. J. Kalisch

Library J 97:2744 S 1 '72 140w

"Dr. Howard Rusk, a pioneer in physical rehabilitation, is now one of its leading authorities. He became interested in the subject during service with the Air Force in World War II. Up to that time, paraplegics were expected to lie immobile and wait for death. Rusk worked with thousands of G.I.'s who had lost arms and legs or suffered paralysis. A modest and sympathetic man, Rusk gives final credit for the remarkable success stories to patients themselves."

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 1 '72 80w

RUSS, LAVINIA. A high old time; or, How to enjoy being a woman over sixty. 140p $5.95 Saturday review press

301.43 Retirement

ISBN 0-8415-0148-3 LC 70-154272

The author's suggestions relate to "such things as manners, appearance, clothes, family relations, finances, and leisure time and [she] lists numerous dos and don'ts on how to get along, in most cases recommending the conservative." (Library J)

"This might be called a geriatric guide for the sprightly or would-be sprightly. Lavinia Russ . . . [writes] for two classes so far as age is concerned: those under sixty and those over sixty. . . . She has been a housewife, mother, mother-in-law, grandmother, traveler, saleswoman, fashion stylist, book buyer, book reviewer, and TV commentator. I wish, though, that religion had played some part in her life, and that she had not preached quite so much." Sister M. Marguerite

Best Sell 32:68 My 1 '72 410w

"There is not much here that has not already been said, but Russ, writing with a light touch and telling it again from her own experience, has produced a book that should be of interest to women approaching the 'golden age.'" S. L. Steen

Library J 97:1030 Mr 15 '72 130w

RUSSELL, JOHN. Francis Bacon. 242p il col il $16.50 N.Y. graphic

759.2 Bacon, Francis

This volume on the English painter contains "over 100 plates, many in fold-outs of triptychs . . . The text tells of the artist's family background, his artistic development since 1946, and the sources of his visual references, including Muybridge's Victorian photographs." (Library J)

"[This study] has an extended critical essay in which Russell examines Bacon's work from four angles—in the context of the tradition of European figure, in its relation to the photographic image, in terms of the artist's style and development, and from the point of view of directions in art since 1945. Russell is an experienced and sensitive observer of modern art, and while the four views are not equally successful, taken together they provide an excellent guide to the understanding of Bacon's achievement."

Choice 9:500 Je '72 120w

"The popular belief is that Bacon is trying to degrade man by making freaks and putting them in helpless, nerve-wracked situations. But no, Mr Russell would convince us; Bacon does not regard any of his heads as nightmare images, nor is there anything wilful about the distortions he imposes. He wants people, so he says, to look as attractive as they really are. . . . One is left with innumerable unanswered questions at the end of this book—with what the author himself calls the 'irreducible Baconian element'—but it can be recommended." Economist 243:56 Ap 1 '72 200w

RUSSELL, JOHN—Continued

"Bacon's oozing figures, screaming mouths, mangled portraits, and contorted figure and animal studies are illustrated. . . . Many quotations from the ambiguous artist illuminate his private world and unique inner vision. The book is up to the moment, as a few of the paintings were created in 1971. A record of a highly ethical artist who expresses the anguish of our times." W. J. Dane
Library J 97:63 Ja 1 '72 150w

"Bacon, in leading critical circles, is beyond disparagement, the nation's best hope for a master [English] painter—an estimate in which Russell concurs if he does not foster it. Those who find Bacon's images uncharitable and his execution rather glib will find it hard to swallow this essay, which takes too much for granted, even bordering on hagiography. To say that the artist told him he did not mean his figures to look like freaks is not exactly weighty criticism; but there is an original discussion of photography's effects on the history of painting and a racy sketch of the artist's youth; and the illustrations are of excellent quality." Rackstraw Downes
N Y Times Bk R p7 D 5 '71 90w
TLS p279 Mr 10 '72 1100w

RUSSELL, JOHN comp. Vuillard. 238p il pl col pl $12.50 N.Y. graphic 759.4 Vuillard, Edouard
ISBN 0-8212-0281-2 LC 71-159807

This "is the book-catalogue for the retrospective exhibition [Russell] arranged that is now traveling the country; it [reprints texts by Vuillard's] . . . contemporaries—among them Gide, Signac, Maurice Denis. They explain Vuillard's unusual technical procedures and provide . . . memoirs of his . . . intellectual milieu." (N Y Times Bk R)

"This volume replaces a similar catalogue and book, A. C. Ritchie's Edouard Vuillard, that was written for the Museum of Modern Art's Vuillard exhibition of 1953, as the most comprehensive study of Vuillard available in English. . . . This is an important addition to any library interested in contemporary art." Choice 9:362 My '72 160w

"The technical virtuosity and lush beauty of Vuillard's work, particularly of the well-known interior views painted in his maturity, are shown to full advantage in excellent reproductions." P. S. Andersen
Library J 97:188 Ja 15 '72 150w

"Because of the growth of an educated but monolingual readership, recent books on art have made increasing use of translated original documents. John Russell's [book] is exemplary in its balance of an overview by the author and texts contemporaneous with the artist. Overshadowed by Bonnard, Vuillard emerged strongly as a realist of cluttered spaces and as a monumental decorative painter." Lawrence Alloway
Nation 213:665 D 20 '71 70w

"To illumine the early style the author explores the period's artistic ferment in an easy vein, but shies away from the more controversial late career. Happily he is discreet about the 'significance' of this painter, a quality of whose work is to elude being turned into art-historical milestones or Culture. The illustrations assemble Vuillard's large decorative schemes in their original groups some of which are now dispersed." Rackstraw Downes
N Y Times Bk R p7 D 5 '71 150w

RUSSELL, JOHN R., ft. auth. New tools for urban management. See Rosenbloom, R. S.

RUSSELL, JOSIAH COX. Medieval regions and their cities. 286p $8.95 Ind. univ. press 301.32 Population. Cities and towns
ISBN 0-253-33735-6 LC 70-172025

In this "study of the structure of medieval regions, [Russell] analyzes the relationship of their cities and the size and significance of their populations. He sets up a theoretical model for the rank-size series of medieval cities in relation to their regions and economic bases and . . . tests it against demographic data for the cities of England, Ireland, the Low Countries, Germany, Italy, Spain, and Egypt in the period A.D. 1000 to 1348, and of India in the seventh century A.D. The concluding chapter emphasizes the importance of the regions as a basis for late medieval society and their destruction by the plague, leaving conditions favorable for the rise of absolute monarchies and nations." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[The author] is delightfully modest and unhesitatingly indicates the limitations of his data. Since, however, there is no other work in our language, we accept it. He has devoted his life to population studies, and his writings are canon. . . . Ample maps indicate his definition of a region. . . . This book should be in all libraries." Choice 9:1009 O '72 100w

"The notion on which the book is based cannot stand unless the reality of regionalism in fourteenth-century Europe is convincingly defined and presented. Although reference is made in general terms to 'regional habits, dialects, customs, and even physical characteristics', the author presents virtually no evidence to support the reality of the regional boundaries whose existence he asserts. . . . If the reader remains unconvinced of the reality of medieval regionalism he will be unable to share the author's regret that 'the Age of regionalism was strangled by the depression caused by the depopulation of the Black Death' and will tend to find the book a somewhat sterile exercise in Procrustean statistics. . . . The theoretical framework [of this book] is unsatisfactory, since so much is based on undemonstrated assertions. . . . Students need to be warned against Professor Russell's book." TLS p396 Ap 7 '72 900w

RUSSELL, ROSS. Jazz style in Kansas City and the Southwest. 292p il $12.50 Univ. of Calif. press

785.4 Jazz music. Musicians, American
ISBN 0-520-01853-2 LC 72-138507

"Russell traces the development of Southwestern jazz from its . . . beginning in the blues, brass bands, and ragtime to its . . . style in Kansas City during the . . . days of the Pendergast regime. [He] moves from descriptions of the Kansas City 'scene' to studies of the early Texas bands, the Oklahoma City Blue Devils, Andy Kirk and the Clouds of Joy, the Count Basie Orchestra, the Kansas City Rockets, and the Jay McShann Orchestra, with eighteen-year-old Charlie Parker leading the reed section on alto saxophone. [There are] musical profiles of Charlie Parker, Andy Kirk, Count Basie, Jay McShann, Harlan Leonard, Jack Teagarden, Prof Smith, Walter Page, Jo Jones, and Lester Young." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Discography. Index.

"[Russell] makes much of the cultural isolation of Kansas City and of the 'Pendergast prosperity' that lured musicians to Kansas City during the depression—two factors that permitted the development of a distinctive jazz style. Unfortunately the average reader will be hard pressed to know just what this jazz style was—other than the suggestions that it was peculiarly influenced by folk song and that it emphasized the 'riff' as a musical device. . . . Most valuable are the chapters describing the early jazz bands of the region. . . . Despite the vulnerability of some of his enthusiasms, Ross Russell's book is the best that we have on the subject of Southwestern jazz and probably will remain so. It is well documented. . . and includes . . . excellent photographs." G. A. Boeck
Am Hist R 77:1179 O '72 350w

"A decade ago Samuel B. Charters and Leonard Kunstadt published a revealing history of activities in New York (Jazz: a History of the New York Scene [BRD 1962]), and now Russell adds a major document with his penetrating study of the Kansas City contribution. . . . [He] provides a well-written account of the musical, cultural, and social environment of the KC jazz world. . . . This book is not a musicological study, and it is much more than a jazz history." C. M. Weisenberg
Library J 96:2647 S 1 '71 220w

Reviewed by Charles Fox
New Statesman 83:117 Ja 28 '72 210w

RUSSETT, BRUCE M. What price vigilance? the burdens of national defense. 261p il $7.50; pa $2.45 Yale univ. press

355.03 U.S.—Defenses. U.S.—Appropriations and expenditures. U.S.—Military policy
ISBN 0-300-01359-0 LC 75-119475

"What determines how much the United States allocates for defense and how these funds are spent? . . . [The author] considers that Congress and the military-industrial-Congressional complex play the decisive role in determining defense spending . . . [He] also finds a close correlation between votes on the defense budget and on other Cold War issues, such as suspension of nuclear testing and the Consular Treaty with the Soviet Union." (Sat R)

"This admirable work is modern social science at its best. . . . The book makes no pretense at an exhaustive treatment of the war industry; it concentrates heavily on what perhaps is the most significant aspect—what determines the overall size of the military sector? . . . The approach is quantitative and statistical, using . . . the relatively simple techniques of rank-order correlation. . . . The work opens with a general discussion of the problem. . . . [One] chapter analyzes the roll call votes in the Senate in two years—1961-62 and 1967-68, with a scaling technique designed to create statistically emergent, rather than previously imposed, categories relevant to national defense. . . . [Another] chapter relates defense expenditure by states to the corresponding senatorial voting behavior. . . . The work concludes with a brief chapter on the military in American life, which, however, is sketchy and not up to the quality of the rest of the book." K. E. Boulding

Am Pol Sci R 66:217 Mr '72 1200w

"Peter Busch presents in an appendix a valuable review of the theoretical literature on arms races. . . . The book is both an objective analysis of the determinants of defense spending and a well-reasoned brief for reduced spending. Some conclusions seem stronger than the supporting evidence, and rather more ingenuity is devoted to explaining away negative findings than to questioning positive ones. Nevertheless, this is a careful candid, thought-provoking contribution to rational discourse in an impassioned field. Russett does not claim to measure the relative contribution of various influences to defense levels, only to demonstrate that factors other than objective requirements for national security have influenced defense burdens." C. T. Stewart

Ann Am Acad 394:135 Mr '71 480w

"Strangely absent from Russett's discussion, perhaps because he wanted to restrict himself to what can be studied quantitatively, or at least 'scientifically,' is any discussion of the Executive Branch procedures by which requests to Congress are developed and Congressional decisions implemented. . . . [He] does not discuss in any detail the critical role of the committees and therefore overlooks two of the most important developments affecting the arms budget in recent years: the increasing willingness of the Senate Armed Services and Appropriations Committees to cut defense spending, and the growing expertise—particularly on the part of the Armed Services Committee—in dealing with military programs." M. H. Halperin

Sat B 53:34 S 26 '70 400w

Reviewed by C. M. Moore

World Pol 24:127 O '71 1500w

RUSTIN, BAYARD. Down the line [the] collected writings of Bayard Rustin; introd. by C. Vann Woodward. 355p $10 Quadrangle bks.

301.45 Negroes—Civil rights. U.S.—Race relations
ISBN 8129-0185-1 LC 70-143569

This book contains Rustin's "essays, written over the past 30 years, expressing his philosophy and program for action. . . . His economic program calls for a redistribution of wealth. . . . His political program calls for a coalition of minorities." (Library J) Index.

"Rustin's goals include equality, integration, justice, and full employment, and his strategies encompass nonviolent resistance, voting power, and coalition politics. Liberals will welcome a book that praises not buries them. . . . All will welcome the philosophy of a man long active in the drive for freedom whether it be among American blacks, the Nisei in World War II, or Asian and African nations seeking independence. . . . The book deals only with the struggle of American blacks. In organizing his writings by decades the author includes some repetitious material, but his views are clearly presented. The fact that over half of the book contains material from the Sixties is an indication of the critical issues in politics, economics and philosophy that concern Rustin. Strongly recommended for high schools, colleges, and all libraries."

Choice 8:1618 F '72 220w

"Rustin's collected essays . . . record the wisdom and maturity of a man who has been able to harness both love and anger with a steady and clear-eyed realism. . . . These essays, often written in haste and to deal with immediate problems, still manage to capture the essential qualities of a great man." Dan Lacy

Commonweal 97:212 D 1 '72 50w

Reviewed by R. F. Kugler

Library J 96:2478 Ag '71 140w

RUTHERFORD, JOHN. Mexican society during the revolution; a literary approach. 241p $13 Oxford

863 Historical fiction. Mexican fiction—History and criticism. Mexico—History
ISBN 0-19-827183-2 LC 72-175364

"While the social side of the Mexican Revolution of 1910-17 has long been recognized as the single most significant phase of those years, exactly how the Mexican people fared has been scarcely touched upon. . . . [Rutherford has used] 30 Mexican novels of material which sheds . . . light on the subject. . . . [He] has related what is known about the roles actually played by major societal groups during the struggle, and, against, this backdrop, he shows what the turmoil meant to Mexico in human terms through the words of those authors who wrote up to 1925." (Choice)

"[This] book is more than just a series of strung together excerpts. . . . [The author's] literary approach contributes to knowledge of the period by both enforcing and weakening findings from other methodological approaches; i.e. the role of leadership played by the intellectual elite was inconsequential, and the total revolution was not at all times essentially an agrarian movement, as has often been represented. The book is interesting both in concept and results."

Choice 9:872 S '72 210w

"Based on a great deal of reading in Mexican literature, well-documented and presented, [this study] is unfortunately based on exceedingly shaky premises, and the author's claim . . . to have elaborated a body of 'socioliterary theory' proves to be hyperbolic. In fact by theory he means method, an epistemological confusion that pervades the work. . . . In his anxiety to rescue the novels of the Revolution as social documents, Mr Rutherford is obliged to play down the literary process and to suggest that the originality of these novels stems from their content, from characters and situations served steaming hot from life. By showing that character types recur, he assumes that this constitutes evidence of the prevalence of such characters in Mexican society. This is both inadequate as an account of character in the novel and, further, suggests that certain features of these novels common to all Latin America are found only in Mexico."

TLS p1093 S 22 '72 600w

RYAN, CHELI DURAN. Hildilid's night; il. by Arnold Lobel. unsp $4.50 Macmillan (N Y)

LC 75-146627

"Hildilid hates the night above all things. 'I do not know why nobody has thought of chasing away the night', she says and then proceeds to try to do so. But no matter what she does, whenever she looks out of the window, there it is—until, of course, the sun rises." (Publisher's note) "Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler

Book World p3 (children's issue) N 7 '71 40w

"[Hildilid's] activities and their outcome are incorporated in a true picture-book, since the careful hatch-line drawings create patterns of eerie strength and humor that second the words." P. H.

Horn Bk 47:602 D '71 100w

RYAN, C. D.—Continued

"Youngsters who are leery of the dark will sympathize with Hildlid. . . . The tongue-in-cheek story is perfectly matched by Arnold Lobel's pen-and-ink sketches." Linda Lawson
Library J 97:277 Ja 15 '72 150w

"A streak of ochre lights up the last few pages, underscoring the joke [on Hildlid]. . . . A curious, furious tale told in rich considered language that begs to be read aloud." J. B. Mercer

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p46 N 7 '71 100w

RYAN, MARY PERKINS. We're all in this together; issues and options in the education of Catholics. 166p $6.95 Holt

377 Church and education. Church schools. Religious education
ISBN 0-03-091390-X LC 73-182769

The author, active in Catholic educational and liturgical renewal, "attempts to assess the present status of education within the Catholic Church. She begins by exploring three different views of the Church and their effects on how one sees education. . . . She then explores the present educational scene in the Church both from the side of parochial schools and the more general area of religious education." (Best Sell)

"Mrs. Ryan gives some interesting suggestions for the kinds of questions that need to be asked (and answered) when the topic of opening, expanding, or closing Catholic schools is raised. Finally she suggests that the area of religious education generally is where the action is and will continue to be for the foreseeable future. . . . [Her] style is generally satisfactory although at points a little dry. For the general reader, this effort will probably offer a reasonably good summary of the thinking of professionals on the questions related to the education of Catholics. I wonder, though, how many general readers will, indeed, read the book. For those who are professionally involved in religious education there is nothing very new in this book." C. J. Keffer

Best Sell 32:189 J1 15 '72 250w

"[Mrs. Ryan] has always had an eye out for the center of issues; she and we all have come a long way since her Are Parochial Schools the Answer? [BRD 1964]. . . . She is back now, still faithful to the deepest values of Christian faith, still nettled by ecclesiastical trivia and traditionalism, still asking basic questions."

Christian Century 89:784 J1 19 '72 80w

RYAN, WILLIAM. Blaming the victim. 299p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

309.173 U.S.—Social conditions. Social problems
ISBN 0-394-41726-7 LC 69-15476

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Robert Coles

Am J Soc 78:448 S '72 1300w

Choice 8:1387 D '71 200w

Reviewed by G. P. Piperopoulos

Contemp Sociol 1:339 J1 '72 900w

RYAN, WILLIAM, jt. auth. Irish houses and castles. See Guinness, D.

RYCK, FRANCIS. Loaded gun; tr. by Norman Dale. 191p $4.95 Stein & Day

ISBN 0-8128-1401-0 LC 76-160353

"Ryck, recipient of France's highest mystery writing award, has created a . . . novel of espionage. Yako, a Soviet spy, is caught by the British and released in exchange for information. Without his knowledge the British have planted a tracking device they want to test, and Yako and agents of both sides are off on a . . . chase through France and Spain. In spite of the pressure, Yako for once has time to reflect on his life, to find friendship and love, and to make a most difficult choice." (Library J) Originally published in French in 1969 under the title Drôle de pistolet.

"The chase through France and Spain is embellished with a few new gimmicks but is marred by inattention to details and at least two toe-stubbing improbabilities. The predictable tenor of this unsuspenseful story is shaken only by some really astonishing sentimentality. A puerile tale which is to be made into a movie, better fate than it deserves." Henri Veit

Library J 96:3347 O 15 '71 160w

Reviewed by Jeanne Cavallini

Library J 97:2495 J1 '72 150w [YA]

"Hunt stories, when they are well written, are great fun. . . . [in this novel] by the French author . . . there is one hell of a good hunt story, one that keeps mounting in excitement until a resolution that not all will find convincing. . . . Ryck is a smooth performer and Dale's translation does him full justice. The style is economical, pointed, unsentimental, with a keen and sympathetic insight into character. [This book] is one of the better examples of its kind." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p48 N 14 '71 200w

TLS p1370 O 29 '71 50w

RYCK, FRANCIS. Woman hunt. 224p $6.95 Stein & Day

ISBN 0-8128-1489-4 LC 72-75510

"A wife shoots her husband when she finds him with another woman. She thinks he is an antiques dealer. He really is a Russian agent. She flees. Communist and French security officials chase after her; she may have a secret that they need." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Ryck's novel] is a translation from the French and not much better than his previous Loaded Gun [BRD 1972]. . . . Corpses and matter-of-fact violence are gratifyingly plentiful; the price, however, is outrageous." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:3186 O 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p14 Ag 27 '72 150w

"An international spy ring, a crime of passion, a fleeing murderess hounded by Russian and French agents are all ingredients for one of the most straightforward, low-key suspense novels to come along in a while. . . . The writing is spare, taut, totally without frills. A nifty chase culminates in a chilling denouement. . . . Ryck handles the genre with ease and blends the grim and gory into engrossing fare." O. L. Bailey

Sat R 55:80 S 30 '72 140w

"Few foreign crime stories break into our isolation, but this . . . is tight and takable."

TLS p612 My 26 '72 40w

RYDELL, WENDELL. Football. 128p il $3.95 Abelard-Schuman

796.33 Football

ISBN 0-200-71824-X LC 75-160109

Following a history of the game the author describes some of its outstanding players.

"[This book] is heavy with heroes—from Jim Thorpe and Red Grange to Johnny Unitas and Joe Namath. ('Why do the quarterbacks get to be glamour boys?' all the 300-pound defensive tackles can be heard grumbling.) A useful glossary tells, for instance, the F stands for flea flicker: 'a razzle-dazzle play which usually combines a lateral pass with a forward pass and any other legal maneuver which a desperate coach thinks might fool the opponents.' A note for scholar-athletes: Football dates back to a Roman game called harpastum." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 11 '71 80w

"A really catchy title, what? Rydall follows it with a hodgepodge of text and photographs . . . then on to running backs, passers, Lombardi, the Jets' Superbowl. If unity matters then this book doesn't." R. R. Knudson

Library J 96:4201 D 15 '71 50w

RYDER, NORMAN B. Reproduction in the United States, 1965 [by] Norman B. Ryder and Charles F. Westoff. 419p $13.50 Princeton Univ. press

301.32 Birth control. U.S.—Population
ISBN 0-691-98218-0 LC 78-120760

The results of a survey "of 5,600 married women under the age of 55 [who] are analyzed from the perspectives of race, religion, and socioeconomic differences in religion, attitudes toward contraception, use of the pill, Roman Catholic conformity before and after recent Papal pronouncements and attitudes toward abortions." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"The survey makes an ambitious attempt to measure all facets of reproductive behavior, including, for the first time, a large enough sample of Negro women to make some reliable judgments. Three useful appendices regarding the questionnaire and related publications. Not for the general reader but a valuable reference work for both the demographer and the teacher of population courses." Choice 9:142 Mr '72 160w

"The National Fertility Study of 1965, on which this book reports, is the third in the Growth of American Families series. . . . The volumes resulting from the 1955 and 1960 surveys were Family Planning, Sterility, and Population Growth, by R. Freedman [BRD 1961], and Fertility and Family Planning in the United States, by Whelpton, Campbell, and J. E. Patterson. . . . The authors are disarmingly honest in their reporting of findings. . . . The dramatic popularization of the pill during 1960-1965 is discussed. Curiously, the intrauterine device gets only a bare mention. . . . The reviewer has a few criticisms. The authors give very few comparisons of their findings with those of other students. They are aware of this shortcoming and plead lack of space and inconvenience. . . . [They] present no data whatsoever on the prevalence of reported abortion. Yet they present an elaborate analysis of attitudes toward abortion. . . . Despite the criticisms mentioned the book is of the first water. It deserves a better index than the skimpy one provided." C. V. Kiser Science 175:291 Ja 21 '72 1350w

RYLE, GILBERT. Collected papers, 2v. v 1 $16.50; v2 $19.50 Barnes & Noble

192 Philosophy

ISBN 0-389-04112-2 (v 1); 0-389-04113-0 (v2)

LC 70-28252

"Contents—v.1: Critical essays; v.2: Collected essays, 1929-1968. Ryle says of the first of these two volumes that it resurrects 'most of the thoughts that I had by 1968, written and published about individual thinkers.' Volume two consists . . . [mainly] of articles on philosophical topics and problems." (Choice)

"The collection is excellent. What is best in Ryle is always arguable, but there is no denying that having these essays together in one place, and reading through them, is immense fun, and still very profitable. Every undergraduate library should own this set, and undergraduate majors in both philosophy and classics should be encouraged to use them frequently. No index." Choice 8:1593 F '72 130w

"Ryle is probably the best known of Oxford 'ordinary language' philosophers and one of this century's outstanding ratiocinators. Aside from richness of outlook, there is originality, and a brilliant but delightful style." Marvin Kohl

Library J 97:503 F 1 '72 130w

RYTINA, JOAN, jt. auth. Marxist theory and Indian communism. See Loomis, C. P.

S

SAALMAN, HOWARD. Haussmann: Paris transformed. 128p il $5.95; pa $2.95 Braziller
711 City planning—Paris. Haussmann, Georges Eugène, Baron. Paris—History
SBN 0-8076-0583-2; 0-8076-0582-4 (pa)
LC 76-143399

This book describes the rebuilding of Paris, 1852-1870 with the addition of new streets, buildings, parks and services under the direction of Baron Haussmann. The author also sketches the history of Paris from Roman times . . . reviews the criticisms of previous authors and presents his own critical evaluation of the changes in the city." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This volume . . . offers a reexamination of the renowned and highly controversial rebuilding of Paris. . . . Where other critics of this vast undertaking have lamented what they consider a brutal and high handed disembowling of questionable urban, aesthetic, and social success, Saalman introduces a welcome different perspective by illustrating how Haussmann rather contributed to adjusting a burgeoning city to the changing needs of its time, and thereby, ensured its viability over time. The refreshingly brief text is accompanied by rich pictorial material." . . . ac- Choice 9:848 S '72 100w

J Aesthetics 30:571 summer '72 60w

"Here is an excellent summary of [events]. . . . Half of the book is devoted to an excellent graphic record of Paris in the form of photographs, drawings, and maps." E. B. Murphy Library J 97:1006 Mr 15 '72 100w SAALMAN, HOWARD, ed. The life of Brunelleschi. See Manetti, A. di T.

SAARINEN, EERO. Eero Saarinen; introd. and notes by Rupert Spade; with phot. by Yukio Futagawa. 130p $7.50 Simon & Schuster
720.973 Architecture, American
ISBN 0-500-58007-3 LC 171-8540011

This account of the work of Eero Saarinen, the architect, "contains a . . . biographical introduction, followed by a hundred or so pages of photographs . . . and . . . by notes on the buildings illustrated." (TLS)

"[This is a volume] in Simon and Schuster's handsome and useful Library of Contemporary Architects. . . . [The book fails] to give a color photograph of the exterior of the Deere building by Saarinen after an interesting discussion of how Saarinen came to use the steel that he did use. The volume on this architect is . . . exciting to the ordinary reader," because his was a peculiarly exciting talent." Best Sell 31:102 Je 1 '71 30w

"The . . . introduction [is] poorly written and [offers] little beside basic facts and some quotations from the architect and from other writers." TLS p717 Je 18 '71 30w

SABLE, MARTIN H. Latin American urbanization; a guide to the literature, organizations and personnel. 1077p $25 Scarecrow
016.3013 Cities and towns—Latin America—Bibliography
ISBN 0-8108-0354-2 LC 74-145643

This work lists 'literature on various phases of Latin American urbanization: natural and applied sciences (air pollution, health, public utilities), social sciences (education, urban history, city government and finance, transportation and communication, crime, juvenile delinquency, social security), and the arts and humanities (religion, literature, art, recreation). The entire bibliography is divided by subject field into two sections: 1) books, pamphlets, government publications, periodicals, proceedings, and theses; and 2) periodical articles." (Library J) Author index to bibliography section. Subject index to bibliography section. Index to directory section.

"A monumental achievement indispensable to all Latin American collections and reference libraries. Bilingual preface, introduction, and table of contents. . . . (The last year covered appears to be 1966.) A sampling of references revealed remarkable comprehensiveness, accuracy of subject referencing, and an absence of typographical and citation errors. Altogether a model of bibliography." Choice 9:48 Mr '72 120w

"While most of the items listed are in Spanish or English, some material concerned with urbanization in Brazil is in Portuguese. A few Western European publications in French and German are included. Entries are first arranged under broad areas and then by specific subject and by country. Within the latter subdivision, entries are included alphabetically by author. The work is supplemented by a directory of working organizations and specialists in urbanization. The main criticism is that the bibliography is not annotated. Especially recommended for academic libraries." A. D. Trejo Library J 96:3998 D 1 '71 160w

SACHS, MARILYN. The bears' house; il. by Louis Glanzman. 81p $3.95 Doubleday
LC 76-157621

"Life is grim for nine-year-old Fran Ellen. Father has deserted the family, mother has retreated into apathy and tears, and the five children shift for themselves. Fran Ellen's only joy is Baby Flora. Rejected at home and taunted at school, Fran Ellen adopts as her own the classroom doll house, compensating for her unhappiness with . . . fantasies in which its tenants, the three bears, adore her. Although the family has kept its plight secret a solicitous teacher discovers the truth. Distraught over the possibility that the household will be broken up by welfare authorities, Fran Ellen turns . . . to the refuge of the bears' house. . . . Ages nine to eleven." (Sat R)

SACHS, MARILYN—Continued

"A sober, touching story of a family of city children trying to manage without parents. . . . The grim situation is brightened by sprightly telling, by Fran Ellen's unself-conscious humor, and by the help that eventually comes from her teacher." B. R.

Horn Bk 48:52 F '72 170w

"Superb characterizations and uncommonly skilled writing draw the reader completely into the realities and fantasies of Fran Ellen's world and make this funny, touching story an essential purchase for any library." M. A. Dorsey

Library J 97:284 Ja 15 '72 240w

"What kind of a children's book is this? The best that Marilyn Sachs has written so far. Innovative in its use of psychosis. But it is something more—it is a shattering, a tragic book—tragic in the very truth of its picture of the need to love and be loved in return. Just one more thing—never have I seen what seems so clearly to be an attempt to assassinate a book through illustration. The smug, almost caricatured style of the drawings serves not only to distort the story. They create an overall appearance that leaves one thinking the book is inane." Ingeborg Boudreau

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p7 N 7 '71 800w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:46 D 11 '71 110w

SADDHATISSA, H. The Buddha's way. 139p $5.95; pa $1.95 Braziller

294.3 Buddha and Buddhism
SBN 0-8076-0635-9; 0-8076-0634-0 (pa)
LC 71-183184

The author "emphasizes the life and teachings of Buddha, the meaning of being a Buddhist, the practice and centrality of meditation, and the basic tenets of Buddhist philosophy." (Library J) Chronology. Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"A simple stated primer of Buddhism, clearly directed to the Western reader without background in religious studies. Its very elementary character . . . makes it better suited for public libraries than for college and university collections. . . . Appendices contain 30 pages of Buddhist scripture and translation; listings of Buddhist countries, census figures, principal shrines, festivals and historical events."

Choice 9:829 S '72 160w

"This is a short book, but a clear and concise one in which each word counts. The author, an ordained Buddhist, is a proficient scholar who has researched and taught his subject in the U.S., Canada, and England as well as India. . . . It is nonscholastic and self-sufficient, with appendixes of Buddhist festivals, shrines, chronological history, and selections from Pali scriptures. Slicing through centuries of accumulated variations and obscuring terminology, Saddhatissa's . . . mature, succinct approach makes this one of the outstanding introductions to Buddhism in recent years. Of special value to libraries with limited budgets who seek a serviceable purchase in this type of compendium." R. S. Haas

Library J 97:2413 Jl '72 200w

"This is a short introduction to Buddhism . . . aimed principally at the Western student who knows virtually nothing of Buddhism. . . . As such it is eminently successful. The essential doctrines are there, the Buddha's life, the four Noble Truths together with lucid notes on anicca, paticca-samuppada, anattā and kamma-vipāka. . . . [The book is] authoritative for the Theravada school with which it is alone concerned. It is also intended as a practical guide to Buddhist ethics and the section on the Eightfold Path is particularly good."

TLS p105 Ja 28 '72 200w

SADDLEMYER, ANN, ed. The collected plays [of Lady Gregory]. 4v. See Gregory, L.

SADDLEMYER, ANN, ed. Letters to Molly.
See Synge, J. M.

SADIE, STANLEY, jt. auth. Opera: a modern guide. See Jacobs, A.

SAGARRA, EDA. Tradition and revolution; German literature and society, 1830-1890. 348p $8.95 Basic bks.

830.9 German literature—History and criticism
SBN 465-08682-9 LC 75-150810

In this study, the author "outlines and evaluates . . . the status and preoccupations of the German writers between the revolutions of 1830 and 1848; the Peasant literature; Young Germany; the revolution in drama, in the work of Grabbe, Büchner, and Heibel; the Revolution of 1848; the German novel (including a . . . re-assessment of the work of Karl Gutzkow); German Realism of 1840-1880 and the [writers] of the realist novella, Stifter, Keller and Storm; and the emergence of the literature of Imperial Germany, with special attention to Fontane and Raabe." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[This] is one of the few comprehensive and comprehensible works on [this] subject in English. The author's blend of social history and literary interpretation enables the reader at all times to see the creative process not only as a passive reflection of reality, but also as an original response to it. From her discussions of individual writers and their works, many familiar to English-speaking readers, some not, we learn in each case what the landscape of the writer's vision was, how it came into being, wherein it accurately reproduced reality and wherein it transmuted reality, and what the writer's personal and artistic attitudes toward his material were." Robert Anchor

Am Hist R 77:1468 D '72 320w

"The author provides an arresting account of these six critical decades of the 19th century in a superbly written book combining lucid style with an unerring grasp of significant details. Yet she assiduously avoids overwhelming the reader with meaningless trivia, often the bane of studies such as hers. . . . The sensitive evaluation of the novels of Gutzkow merits special attention. This book, which also contains a good basic bibliography of the period should be on the shelf of every university-level library and serious scholar of 19th-century German literature."

Choice 8:1181 N '71 180w

"[The value of this book] lies in the accurate and detailed description it gives of German social and political life and the changes it underwent over this period, rather than in any particularly illuminating general judgment on the literary texts themselves. Some curious and out-of-the-way information is brought together, often from extraliterary sources, memoirs, foreign travellers' accounts, etc., which is only proper. . . . Nevertheless, the challenge of some general problems could have been met more resolutely."

TLS p1583 D 17 '71 310w

"The sheer amount of descriptive biographical information interspersed with plot summaries in the literary chapters makes the book into a convenient reference volume. But most of the material here collected is derivative and lacks a unifying critical perspective. . . . In spite of its shortcomings for the specialist, Tradition and Revolution constitutes a commendable general introduction to a crucial period in German cultural history."

Yale R 61:X Je '72 800w

ST. CLAIR, WILLIAM. That Greece might still be free; the Philhellenes in the war of independence. 412p 11 maps $14.95 Oxford

949.5 Greece. Modern—History
ISBN 0-19-215194-0 [72-186393]

"Almost 1,000 foreigners went to fight in the Greek war of independence, while many more sympathized and raised funds. These philhellenes are Mr St Clair's subject. . . . [He also presents a] history of the war and a . . . picture of emergent Greece. . . . The dominant theme is the contrast between the philhellenic vision of Greece and the Greek reality." (New Statesman) Index. Bibliography.

"It is fortuitous that Mr St Clair's . . . study of the part played by the philhellenes in the Greek war of independence appears at a time when the present state of Greece is arousing so much international interest. But though the book concentrates on the Europeans who set out to fight alongside the Greeks in their uprising against their Turkish masters, the examination of the motives that impelled them has some relevance to the present debate. . . . [This] work encompasses the backgrounds and the personalities of the figures whose names are now associated with the myth of the glorious fight for Greek freedom . . . [and also includes] sketches of the Greek leaders. . . . [The author] has added to the book's value by including many portraits, paintings and maps."

Economist 243:61 Je 3 '72 470w

"St. Clair recounts the philhellenes' futile history with clarity and intelligence. . . . His book is a readable and scholarly contribution to modern Greek history which should prove useful to all but the smallest libraries." M. H. Ridgeway

Library J 97:2394 J1 '72 150w

"[This book is] inspired by an urge to debunk the sentimental and uncritical philhellenism rife in western Europe from Byron's time to our own. . . . [It] is thoroughly researched, written with elegance and trenchancy, and altogether fascinating to read." Mervyn Jones

New Statesman 83:753 Je 2 '72 220w

"Mr St Clair . . . has quarried industriously in the vast literature of European philhellenism, as his bibliography attests. His book is replete with extraordinary anecdotes and contains useful descriptions of Greek irregular warfare and of the intrigues surrounding the loans raised by the embattled Greeks in London. Unfortunately he has flawed a basically good book by the unpleasantly condescending attitude which he adopts both toward the philhellenes and the Greeks themselves."

TLS p1024 S 1 '72 950w

ST. JOHN, BRUCE. John Sloan. 156p il col il $15 Praeger

759.13 Sloan, John

LC 74-117478

This is a "biography that focuses on Sloan's role in the Armory Show, an event that had . . . an inopportune effect on his art." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography.

"[This is a] well-illustrated and well-documented critical [biography] . . . that will serve the general reader, the student, and the specialist. [It is] recommended for art collections and public libraries." M. E. Landgren

Library J 96:2483 Ag '71 20w

"[This] easygoing biography . . . is equipped with . . . illustrations whose quality is barely adequate for the price." Rackstraw Downes

N Y Times Bk R p77 D 5 '71 70w

ST. JOHN, ROBERT. Ben-Gurion; a biography. 360p $6.95 Doubleday

B or 92 Ben-Gurion, David

LC 71-150915

The first edition was published under the title Ben Gurion: the biography of an extraordinary man (BRD 1959). This edition has been expanded to include a chapter on the last 12 years and a recent interview with Ben-Gurion. Index.

"A human, highly personalized narrative of David Ben-Gurion, an outstanding leader in the agitation for and development of the state of Israel. It is easy reading. . . . The book has neither the pattern nor the tone of history or of definitive biography but it is enthusiastic and interesting." Elbridge Colby

Best Sell 31:274 S 15 '71 300w

"An articulate and sympathetic journalist offers a rather anecdotal and uncritical portrait of the major leader of the State of Israel: David Ben-Gurion is heroic in many ways, but St. John does little delving and analysis into the complexities of the man and the situations he found himself in before and after the founding of Israel. . . . The general reader will find the book satisfying."

Choice 9:428 My '72 140w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 96:3596 N 1 '71 40w

ST. JOHN-STEVAS, NORMAN. The agonising choice; birth control, religion and the law. 340p $10 Ind. univ. press

261.8 Birth control. Catholic Church. Paul VI (Giovanni Battista Montini) Pope—Humanae vitae
ISBN 0-253-10070-7 LC 77-163516

The author "begins with a survey of birth control from the earliest times until today. . . . [He] then turns to the traditional Christian teaching on birth control . . . [and] describes the movement for a change in Catholic teaching. . . . [He discusses] the Encyclical Humanae Vitae . . . [and] ends with an analysis of world population problems and the part that should be played in solving them by individual Christians and the Christian Churches." (Publisher's note) Index of names. Subject index.

Choice 8:1486 Ja '72 160w

"I am not certain that [this book] . . . would impel me to wage a campaign on its behalf. . . . [It is] informative in . . . [its] specialized way . . . [and is a] valuable library item. [But the topic is] a bit played out at the moment. . . . [It] will be useful as a balanced overview of the whys and wherefores of the Catholic Church's position [on birth control] by one who stands on the progressive side." John Deedy

Critic 30:87 Ja '72 350w

"For Mr St John-Stevas the 'agonising choice' was between loyalty to Pope and his conscience. . . . His masterly and . . . courageous account of the background and reactions to Humanae Vitae . . . deserves to be read by [lay Catholics]. . . . His treatment of the logic of the encyclical is devastating. No one could accuse him of skirting the issue; as he perspicaciously observes, most Catholics do, avoiding it both in the confessional and conversation, or rejecting it without bothering to argue the case. . . . No less admirable is his account of the aftermath of the encyclical."

Economist 240:55 J1 24 '71 700w

"If Mr St John-Stevas is not . . . to be accused of provoking schisms, he must therefore make his case very delicately; and I think this sometimes involves giving unhelpful evidence rather less consideration than it deserves. For example, he says that if it were established that recourse to contraceptives increased lust and promiscuity, that would be grounds for banning them. Fortunately for Mr St John-Stevas, he has found no such evidence. How hard, one wonders, has he looked? Apart from high-powered theology about primary and secondary purposes of marriage, and some detailed discussion of the infallibility question, a favourite weapon of Mr St John-Stevas's is mockery. He is adept at picking out colourful pieces of information about birth control which may appear to be peripheral but in fact are artfully patched together as part of the argument, mainly to show the bad logic of much anti-birth control thought." Corinna Adam

New Statesman 82:117 J1 23 '71 750w

"[This] detailed study of the whole controversy is a valuable work of documentation. . . . [The author] does not conceal his own opposition to the encyclical and to the validity of its arguments, but his book is in no sense intended to fan the flames of controversy. . . . He brings a lawyer's judgment to bear on the validity of the arguments and a journalist's perception on the abundant expression of opinion that was aroused by the encyclical."

TLS p939 Ag 6 '71 600w

SAINTENY, JEAN. Ho Chi Minh and his Vietnam; a personal memoir; tr. from the French by Herma Briffault. 193p pl $6.95 Cowles

B or 92 Ho Chi Minh. President Vietnam (Democratic Republic). Vietnam—History
LC 72-183826

This biography is mainly concerned with the period from 1945 to 1966 during which Sainteny conducted negotiations with the Vietnamese leader. Chronology. Index. Originally published as Face à Ho Chi Minh.

"Although this [book] . . . suffers from what must be had translation, it is an important and valuable addition to the literature on Viet-Nam and Ho Chi Minh. It offers the reader some fascinating and revealing glimpses of the Vietnamese leader. . . . He emerges as a complex but understandable human being often confused about his options and his own doubts and fears and yet absolutely and incontrovertibly dedicated to a united and independent Viet-Nam. It is the latter fact that the author recognizes, accepts, and yet finds impossible to communicate to his government. More important it is often forgotten, glossed over, ignored by the author in describing French and Vietnamese negotiations and meetings."

SAINTENY, JEAN—Continued

Choice 9:703 J1/Ag '72 180w

"This is indeed 'a personal memoir,' and little more than that. Sainteny [was] a French diplomatic representative to the new Viet government following World War II... [who] developed a particular friendship with Ho and hosted him for a time during his visit to France. The author's reminiscences... include a number of anecdotes about and accounts of conversations with Ho. For these... the book might be of interest to some. However, it doesn't offer the general reader much. Sainteny is chatty and interpretive rather than informative, and his chapter on Ho's life is not as good as David Halberstam's recent biography Ho [BRD 1971]." Collin Clark

Library J 97:1315 Ap 1 '72 140w

"[This] cannot be called a good book, yet it is not so bad as it is superfluous, in spite of the fact that it contains material no one else could supply, as well as a description of certain incidents no one else has witnessed. These, however, are well known to students of contemporary Vietnamese history, for Sainteny had already described them nine years earlier in his book Histoire d'une paix manquée.... While Sainteny recalls incidents that will certainly strike some readers as new, much of what he relates in this recent book is utterly banal.... [However] it is to Monsieur Sainteny's credit that he consistently avoids belittling or maligning Ho Chi Minh." Joseph Buttinger

Yale R 62:138 O '72 1800w

SAISSELIN, R  MY G. The rule of reason and the ruses of the heart; a philosophical dictionary of classical French criticism, critics, and aesthetic issues. 308p $10.95 Press of Case Western Reserve univ.

840 French literature—Dictionaries. French literature—History and criticism
SBN 8295-0178-9 LC 70-90859

"This book focuses on the philosophical and aesthetic concepts underlying the literary productions of the Classical period in France. Part 1 contains 'expository and interpretive essays,' arranged alphabetically, on critical and aesthetic terminology. Part 2 deals with specific works of writers including Diderot, F  nelon, Corneille, Fontenelle, Montesquieu, Rousseau, and Voltaire... stressing their role in the evolution of aesthetic theory." (Library J)

"The omission of certain 17th-Century writers is regrettable. Numerous cross references facilitate use of the work, which will recommend itself primarily to scholars in the field. Recommended for academic libraries." E. A. Jones

Library J 95:3762 N 1 '70 110w

"[While the author's] method of presentation forces... [him] into occasional repetitions, it is suitable to his use of the dictionary form, and allows him to approach several key subjects from different points of view.... This book is a worthwhile effort to show both the theoretical background and the practice of French classicists. It is a helpful volume, and, with exception of several misprints, mainly in the French passages and titles, has been turned out handsomely by the publisher." Robert Mitchell

Mod Lang J 56:250 Ap '72 600w

SAKOL, JEANNIE, jt. auth. Purr, baby, purr. See Goldberg, L.

SALA, GEORGE AUGUSTUS HENRY. Twice around the clock; or, The hours of the day and night in London [1st ed reprinted; with an introd. by Philip Collins] 392p il $10.50 Humanities press

914.2 London—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-7185-5008-0 LC 170-28586

This work originally appeared as weekly articles in The Welcome Guest magazine in 1858, and in book form in 1859. "Sala starts at 4:00 a.m. in Billingsgate Market, sees The Times newspaper put to bed at 5:00, and ends the whole process at 3:00 the following morning with a bal masqu   and the night charges at Bow Street. In between come such... items... Opening Shop (at 8:00 a.m.), trooping the guard at St James's Palace, the Pantheon bazaar, Tattersall's, the Opera, a Scientific Conversation, Evans's supper-rooms." (TLS)

"The theme is life in the great Wen during a period of 24 hours. Each hour is chronicled and the reader is transported from the seeming turmoil of Covent Garden Market to fashionable West End clubs and the House of Commons.... [This] is the highly readable record of a journalist who was equally at home with the workers and the wealthy in the London of his day and whose acuity was recognized by such luminaries as Dickens and Thackeray. The book is amply illustrated and should prove a worthy addition to any library of English social history."

Choice 9:123 Mr '72 130w

"The whole thing is an (almost) complete microcosm of London which for sheer brilliance of rendering has never been surpassed. It has, of course, its shortcomings: Sala was doubtless paid by the line, and he never let one word do his work when he could use two. His style, also, is an exceptionally florid one... [however], it was the mode expected of him.... Yet in spite of all this, the gusto, the verve, the genuine helter-skelter zest in the fantastic panorama that goes flashing past his very observant eye, make the book, taken as a whole, a triumph of instant evocation.... This photographic reprint of this classic of journalism is well introduced by Philip Collins, and its page is black and legible. Only the forty-seven illustrations... are disappointing in reproduction."

TLS p181 F 18 '72 750w

SALE, R. T. The Blackstone rangers; a reporter's account of time spent with the street gang on Chicago's South Side. 186p $5.95 Random house

301.18 Blackstone Rangers. Juvenile delinquency. Negroes—Chicago
ISBN 0-394-46254-8 LC 76-102318

"Sale's book about the organization of young black men... on the South Side of Chicago is based upon a series of interviews with members of that group." (Best Sell)

"[Sale] employs some of the techniques of the novel and, for this reader for one, disturbs the book's attempted integration of style and theme.... Readers familiar with the contemporary black movement in the United States will not find a wealth of new material here. The interviews the author obtained are interesting but he rarely goes beyond those interviews to attempt to examine critically what he was told.... Despite these weaknesses, [the book] is worth reading. Mr. Sale has an ability to reconstruct dialogue in an interesting fashion.... He does not, I feel, probe deeply enough into the motivations of a man like Joel Hampton, but he does go far enough to show us a troubled intelligent human being." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 31:490 F 1 '72 450w

Choice 9:890 S '72 170w

"This description of ghetto and street life has real human dimensions. However, because it relates events and encounters that took place almost four years ago, the book loses some of the impact that a more contemporaneous publishing would have brought. Not essential." Topsy Smalley

Library J 97:694 F 15 '72 100w

"Choosing to stick with three-year-old material, Sale has fashioned it into a fact-as-fiction novel    la Joan Didion: supersparse, frequently elliptical. At his best, he conveys an impression of deadly heat.... He also has a good ear for the language the Stones use.... [But there are] depths of ambiguity that this book creates but fails to clear up. Are the 4,500 Stones basically well intentioned; their 4,000 enemies, the Disciples, evil, as Joel suggests?... Or is morality just a front?... While Sale's dialogue is often rich and tough, it dwindles into pedestrian banter that marks time between [the book's] more significant episodes." William Kennedy

Sat R 55:33 Ja 8 '72 850w

SALETAN, ALBERTA L., jt. auth. Zambia's president: Kenneth Kaunda. See Polatnick, E. T.

SALISBURY, HARRISON, E., ed. The eloquence of protest; voices of the 70's. 334p $7.95; pa $3.95 Houghton

322.4 Dissent

ISBN 0-395-13758-6; 0-395-13653-9 (pa)
LC 79-184116

"More than 60 items are abbreviated from speeches, letters, calls to action, etc.—mostly from the last three years. Various New Left groups, revolutionary youth, blacks, and even angry conservatives are represented. The book reflects . . . rage at and attack on contemporary establishments and the values of Western civilization. The contributors include, among others, Daniel Berrigan, Bernadine Dohrn, Spiro Agnew, Bella Abzug, Tom Wicker, Bob Dylan, and George Jackson; more than half are from the U.S." (Library J)

"Outstanding among the almost universally rewarding contributions . . . are those of Chief Judge Charles Wyzanski on liberty of conscience; Thomas Winship on objectivity of the press; Benjamin Kluger's 'How Fair Was My Newark'; 'Crow's Account of the Battle' by Ted Hughes; 'I Believe I'm Going to Die' by Fred Hampton and Deborah Johnson; Tom Wicker's 'This Old War'; the Bruyn family's 'Letters to Our Friends'; and Russell Baker's 'Sleep.' . . . [The book] begs for an index, but more urgently for Volume II." C. L. Holbert

America 127:371 N 4 '72 700w

"Instant anthologizing of dissent by a savvy New York Times man. With the exception of a few pieces smuggled in from the 1960s, these antiestablishmentarian essays are all very recent. They are less strident than the protest literature of four years earlier, and—we surmise—they fall on more nearly deaf ears in complacent America."

Christian Century 89:853 Ag 30 '72 60w

"This raw material is uneven in quality, but it does reflect the crisis of the contemporary world. The items are divided roughly into nine categories with only brief editorial notes. The book has the inherent weaknesses of most similar anthologies, but could be useful as another source book of statements of protest." Hubert Humphreys

Library J 97:2073 Je 1 '72 200w

SALISBURY, LORD. Lord Salisbury on politics; a selection from his articles in the Quarterly review, 1860-1883; ed. with an introd. and notes by Paul Smith. 387p $21 Cambridge

320.942 Great Britain—Politics and government—19th century. Salisbury, Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne-Cecil, 3d Marquis of
ISBN 0-521-08386-9 LC 74-174256

These essays written before Lord Salisbury became Prime Minister "range from his criticism of Gladstone's budget and Russell's Reform Bill in 1860, through his . . . polemics against Reform in 1864-7, to his attack on Chamberlainite Radicalism in 1873, and his famous warning of 'Disintegration' (of the nation and the empire) in 1883. Each article is briefly introduced and annotated, and the general introduction, as well as analysing the content of Salisbury's Conservatism, seeks to discern its roots in his personality and to relate it to its political context." (Publisher's note) Index.

"An expensive collection of seven of Salisbury's essays on domestic politics in England published . . . before he became Prime Minister. The articles illustrate his continuing fears concerning the imminence of democracy and all it might entail, including domination of English politics by trade unions, workers outvoting Rothschilds, and dangers to the Church of England and to property. With exaggerated political rhetoric, he castigates Gladstone, radicals of every hue and his own leaders, Lord Derby and Disraeli, for furthering the evil advance of democracy, promoting the compromises of party government and failing to uphold Conservative (equals constitutional, equals patriotic) interests in religion and property. [The editor] . . . has written a good 109-page introduction . . . which deserves reprinting in a more accessible form. For research libraries only."

Choice 9:1193 N '72 170w

Economist 244:53 Ag 19 '72 200w

"[Smith's survey] of Salisbury's view of politics . . . [and journalistic career] is full of unfilled holes and categorical assertions unbacked by evidence. . . . What we actually get when we turn to the 260 pages of the second part [of this volume are a number of] articles arbitrarily selected from the Quarterly and reprinted in full. Salisbury, as Mr Smith admits, was a verbose and repetitive journalist none of whose articles justify this reverent treatment." Richard Crossman

New Statesman 83:532 Ap 21 '72 1300w

"[These articles] read today with as much arresting force and bite as when they were written. They are, as was usual in those days, reinforced by parallels from the classics and the Bible, but they owe little to literary art and virtually nothing to English literature. . . . The statesman's nephew, Algernon Cecil, who himself had a mastery of delicate style and an enviable appreciation of these matters, has pointed out that these political articles of his uncle have long been recognized as a rare model of restrained, pungent and vigorous English. . . . They are still a pleasure to read and succeed in giving readers a thrill of pleasure as they watch an argument neatly driven home by a master-stroke. To each of the articles Mr Smith gives a helpful introduction, and he also includes a sprinkling (but not a drenching) of notes to explain the text. The result is instructive and enjoyable."

TLS p766 Jl 7 '72 950w

SALK, JONAS. Man unfolding; planned and ed. by Ruth Nanda Anshen. (World perspectives, v46) 118p $6.95 Harper

573 Man

ISBN 06-013739-8 LC 74-181642

This book, by the "developer of the Salk anti-polio vaccine, is intended to suggest how ways of thinking that make use of the . . . biological knowledge at the molecular, cellular, and organismic levels we have acquired during recent decades can be extended and applied to some of the vital social, psychological and ethical problems we face. Dr. Salk proposes that we develop a 'theoretical-experimental way of thought' for evaluating our problems rather than continuing to rely on the more traditional speculative methods. . . . [He] believes that change is now our principal problem; the 'new man' arising is one who can accept change and contribute to it." (Publisher's note)

"Salk sets forth his view of man as a biological phenomenon. He draws striking parallels between well-known biological principles and the psychology and sociology of mankind. . . . This work is not a high-circulation popularization of science, but a closely reasoned work of biological philosophy, recommended for quality collections." R. L. Hough

Library J 97:2624 Ag '72 150w

"[Salk] attempts to throw light on the general nature of man, his place in the world, and the ways in which he might come to a fuller realization of his inherent potentials. The effort is not so spectacularly successful as his earlier conquest of a disease, but Salk's homily contains much wisdom, and it must be hoped that the world will heed it. . . . One of the salient characteristics of this book is the way in which Salk emphasizes the importance of the challenge of the environment. . . . [However] in his striving to make meaningful statements about the high level responses of well evolved organisms to the challenges of the environment, [Salk] is inclined to treat rather cavalierly the problems of building bridges between the molecular and the organismic." C. H. Waddington

N Y Times Bk R p32 O 22 '72 1350w

SALKEY, ANDREW, ed. Breaklight; the poetry of the Caribbean; ed. and with an introd. by Andrew Salkey. 265p $7.95 Doubleday

811 Caribbean poetry—Collections

LC 79-178835

A collection of poems by forty-two native West Indian poets, ranging in age from twenty-four to fifty-eight years. The selections are "grouped into five sections. Each section represents a major theme: . . . the search for identity, the desire for involvement, the struggle to exist, and the desire to 'break light' on the spiritual and social conditions of their people." (Library J) Index of poets and titles. Index of first lines.

"Contains sufficient genuine poetry to justify its addition to libraries serving students of black literature or miscellaneous readers interested in the modern Caribbean. . . . The book will not be popular in tourist hotels or travel agency waiting rooms. The poems tend to be short, short-lined, short-stanzaed, and short on punctuation and capitals. . . . Footnotes (but not enough) and thumbnail biographies (also not enough)."

SALKEY, ANDREW—Continued

Choice 9:976 O '72 230w

Reviewed by R. F. Cayton

Library J 97:1814 My 15 '72 200w

"[The] poets—leaders of revolutionary youth movements, literary critics and novelists, lawyers and engineers, teachers and students—represented in this well-knit volume reveal the need of their people for an identity and stress that now is the time to become involved. The images employed are local, but the book is not limited to descriptive lyrics about the lush beauties and natural terrors of Caribbean island life. . . . The style of these British/American educated natives . . . appeals to the intellect, as well as to the emotions. Moreover, the protest message is one with which many people of highly developed nations as well as of newly developing nations can identify." C. P. Hebel

Library J 97:2491 J1 '72 180w [YA]

SALM, PETER. The poem as plant; a biological view of Goethe's Faust. 149p $5.95 Press of Case Western Reserve Univ.

832 Goethe, Johann Wolfgang von—Faust
ISBN 0-8295-0204-1 LC 71-141461

This study is concerned with "the way in which Goethe's vision of nature becomes the structure of the Faust drama. . . . Beginning with a discussion of Goethe's theories of color and plant morphology (and showing how these are cast in one mold), [Salm] explains . . . three characteristics of vegetative growth which Goethe formulated: polarity, metamorphosis, and heightening. He demonstrates how these three principles similarly unfold in Faust: how the schema underlying Faust is . . . [an] expanded and deepened version of the plant. . . . [In addition] Goethe's natural philosophy is used . . . [as an] interpretive tool to help resolve the mysteries of Faust's poetic design." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[Salm's] approach is significant for two reasons: G.'s scientific theories could illuminate difficult sections and apparently obscure imagery in his literary works; and if Salm's basic premise is correct, then G.'s works would have a much greater unity than was previously assumed. . . . In drawing analogies the author frequently overstates his argument. The evidence points to the more modest judgment that Goethe's creative imagination conceived of Faust in terms of the dynamics of a natural process. The basic premise of the book should stimulate further inquiries into the relationship between G.'s scientific sensibility and his literary vision." H. S. Daemrich

J Aesthetics 30:407 spring '72 380w

"In the seemingly unending controversy about this work whose creation accompanied Goethe through 60 years, Salm . . . brings a consistent argument to bear on the essential unity of Faust. Recommended for collections strong in Goetheana." Edith Lenel

Library J 96:2510 Ag '71 150w

SALOMA, JOHN S. Parties; the real opportunity for effective citizen politics, by John S. Saloma III and Frederick H. Sontag. 390p $7.95 Knopf

329 Political parties. Politics, Practical
ISBN 0-394-48097-X LC 72-717

The authors "assess the contemporary American political party system and tell how it may be used by citizens who are anxious to participate in politics. While other commentators have forecasted a diminished role for parties in the next decade, these authors see the party system as still integral to politics and urge concerned citizens to become familiar with it at every level." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by P. G. Steinbicker

America 127:73 Ag 5 '72 300w

Choice 9:1356 D '72 190w

"Both authors have good credentials. John Saloma, founder of the Ripon Society, is an M.I.T. professor of political science with pragmatic instincts. Frederick Sontag is an experienced professional in practical politics. . . . The book is a citizen's handbook for political action. It deals with the inner workings of the parties and describes in detail how all of us can mobilize support and bring it to bear on the decisionmaking processes of government at every level. If you want to influence political decisions, elect candidates and promote the issues of your choice, 'Parties' offers a wide range of do-it-yourself ways of getting it done. It is surprising how ready-to-hand these ways can be. Professional politicians should also be interested in this book—they can't afford not to be." Roscoe Drummond

Christian Science Monitor p11 Je 14 '72 400w

Reviewed by W. J. Lanouette

Commonweal 97:282 D 22 '72 390w

"This action-oriented book . . . is geared for a lay audience, but it has ample citations from scholarly literature for those readers who may wish to examine the subject further. An 'Action Guide' serves as an excellent index, directing readers with specific queries to the pertinent pages in the text. Most general collections will wish to purchase." Hindy Schacter

Library J 97:2373 J1 '72 160w

Reviewed by D. J. C. Brudnoy

Nat R 24:962 S 1 '72 350w

"I agree with the authors that the parties—and, therefore, we—would benefit from more participation, coherence, responsibility, professionalization and intellectual exercise. . . . But . . . I would venture that we are not, cannot be, and even should not be, on the way to clear-cut, discipline, party government. I do not think we can have anything like a British system of politics. We do not have their tradition of civility and restraint; they do not have our regional, economic and social diversity. Furthermore, our parties are quadrennial improvisations."

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 4 '72 650w

SALSBURY, STEPHEN, jt. auth. Pierre S. Du Pont and the making of the modern corporation. See Chandler, A. D.

SALTER, ELIZABETH. Daisy Bates. 266p 11 $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

B or 92 Bates, Daisy

LC 73-175277

A biography of the author of The Passing of the Aborigine (BRD 1939), a "self-taught anthropologist who defied Victorian convention by leaving her husband to live and work in the bush with Australia's aborigines. Born in Ireland in the 1860's, and sent to Australia at twenty-one, Daisy Bates' . . . marriage to a . . . cattleman . . . [failed], and she took up what was to be her life's work: living in the bush with the aborigines and championing their cause through her books and articles." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Jean Stafford

Book World p1 Mr 19 '72 700w

Choice 9:726 J1/Ag '72 190w

"To translate [Daisy Bates] into contemporary terms, she was a political conservative who ardently championed the 'third world.' It is this paradoxical quality that Elizabeth Salter has so finely caught, though to say this doesn't begin to suggest the scope of what is actually a thoroughly scholarly and perhaps definitive treatment of a mercurial subject. . . . Miss Salter has seen her clear and whole, and has not scanted Daisy's less attractive frailties. . . . She has quoted liberally from Daisy's vast legacy of journals, articles, letters, books, allowing her to speak in her own words whenever they are most effective (Daisy was a mannered but lucid and telling stylist), keeping herself offstage, observing the conscientious biographer's best manners. The hugely gratifying result is an arresting portrait of a gifted, idiosyncratic woman." D. L. Parker

Christian Science Monitor p12 Ap 20 '72 1100w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 83:569 Ap 28 '72 330w

"A biography of a pertinacious, original, troublesome. . . . woman, who . . . never lost her zest, energy, and resourcefulness, and [whose] initial curiosity about the Australian natives led her to amazing feats of endurance and scholarship. Her biographer avoids hagiography: Mrs. Bates helped native children but failed her own child; frequently a prophet without honor, she tended to blame 'enemies,' and responded tactlessly to opportunities. Nevertheless, she emerges as a very rare kind of person—someone who could move right into another, wholly dissimilar culture and appreciate its alien crudities and niceties as if to that manner born."

New Yorker 48:104 Je 17 '72 140w

SALZANO, FRANCISCO M., ed. The ongoing evolution of Latin American populations. See The ongoing evolution of Latin American populations

SAMAY, SEBASTIAN. Reason revisited; the philosophy of Karl Jaspers. 300p $10 Univ. of Notre Dame press

193 Jaspers, Karl
LC 72-160423

This is an "account of Jaspers as a systematic philosopher. . . . [Samay] proceeds by examining the concept of reason in both its metaphysical and existential contexts, and tracing Kantian and realistic tendencies in Jaspers' handling of the problem of ontology and its transcendence. Samay concludes that there is an essential tautology in Jaspers' concept of objectification, as well as an element of paradox in the generally fruitful treatment of philosophy as symbolic." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[This is a] sympathetic yet critical study of Jaspers' theory of Reason in relation to the existential elements of his philosophy. Samay does a good, at times excellent, job of keeping the 'dialectical balance' of these two aspects of the late philosopher's thinking. . . . [He] renders a service to scholarship by searching out the rational core of Jaspers' difficult, confusing, and all too many books. . . . As one of the best scholarly works yet to appear in English [this] should be in all libraries. As an introduction to Jaspers' thought, it has relevance to the educated layman in philosophy. The style is clear and straightforward."

Choice 9:659 J1/Ag '72 170w

"An exceptionally lucid [study]." C. R. Thomas

Library J 97:1721 My 1 '72 120w

SAMISH, ARTHUR H. The secret boss of California: the life and high times of Art Samish, by Arthur H. Samish and Bob Thomas. 192p $5.95 Crown

B or 92 California—Politics and government
LC 75-151022

This is the "story of Art Samish, lobbyist to the California State legislature . . . [who] worked for a variety of interests—liquor, beer, cigarettes." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Political buffs should enjoy this easy-to-read biography. . . . Those not politically inclined should . . . gain some valuable information about how political deals are made and how the public can be manipulated. Samish occasionally is a bit too all-knowing. . . . He has the irritating habit of bringing up a particularly difficult case he worked on, and then, without a detailed explanation, simply proclaiming that he took care of it for his client. . . . But he does get specific enough on sufficient occasions to give us a good glimpse of California politics of the 30's and the 40's. And, of course, in doing so, he gives us a glimpse in embryo of the way all state legislatures were and, to some measure still are, conducted. . . . His book reveals that he did much good and a certain amount of wrong in his life in politics. But he does come through as a man consistent to his own principles." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 31:207 Ag 1 '71 450w

"Here is Samish in his dotage: unrepentant, boastful, and maudlin, rambling into the tape recorder. What made Artie run? Well, he sees himself as a sort of Horatio Alger type, a 7th-grade dropout who made it to the top over all those college snobs. How did he do it? By corruption, bribery, and blackmail—all 'strictly legal,' you understand. Why? Greed and power, of course, but also for Mother—the heart just sort of went out of him when she died. . . . It is not that Samish isn't a suitable subject for a book, or that his autobiography couldn't be both fascinating and revealing; but the revelations of this mawkish apologia are superficial, the man himself unrealized, lacking in dimension. A repellent book, but consider for collections on California or American government." Clayton Brown

Library J 96:2490 Ag '71 220w

"[This is a] political document of rare importance." Carey McWilliams

Nation 213:122 Ag 16 '71 50w

Reviewed by Francis Carney

N Y Rev of Books 17:30 O 7 '71 700w

"[Samish] is retired now and looks back with pleasure on his career. A good portrait of the lobbyist in action."

N Y Times Bk R p29 Je 13 '71 140w

SAMKANGE, STANLAKE. African saga; a brief introduction to African history. 222p $5.50 Abingdon

960 Africa—History

ISBN 0-687-00954-5 LC 70-162457

The author offers "a general overview of the history of the African continent from its pre-historical foundations to the period of colonial consolidation following the Berlin Conference of 1884-1885." (Library J)

"Although Samkange's The origins of Rhodesia [BRD 1969] won the 1970 Herskovits Award for the best book about Africa, this work is at the other end of the spectrum. Intended as an introduction to African history for the general reader, it is barely adequate for secondary school students. The one map of contemporary political Africa has nothing to do with the text. Should not have been published."

Choice 9:418 My '72 90w

"This work by a Harvard Rhodesian is anti-colonialist in instincts and outlook."

Christian Century 89:176 F 9 '72 10w

"While [Samkange's] interpretations will appeal greatly to students of cultural nationalism and Pan-Africanism, others . . . will lament his reliance on secondary works and his shrill insistence on the blackness of all Africans, past and present, including Egyptians, Libyans, and Nubians. . . . One wishes [he] would not preach at us so. But in spite of his hortatory tone, he has presented a remarkably compact, well-organized, and well-written book. . . . [It is especially good] about the earliest, prehistoric ages and about the political development of ancient Mali, Ghana, and Songhai. Of particular note are the sections dealing with Zimbabwe (Rhodesia), Samkange's homeland and area of scholarly expertise." Robert Koester

Library J 97:70 Ja 1 '72 160w

SAMORA, JULIAN. Los mojados: the wetback story; by Julian Samora, with the assistance of Jorge A. Bustamante F. and Gilbert Cardenas. 205p il $6.95; pa $2.95 Univ. of Notre Dame press 325.2 U.S.—Immigration and emigration. Mexico—Immigration and emigration. Mexicans in the U.S.

ISBN 0-268-00442-0; 0-268-00445-5 (pa)
LC 71-143190

"A survey of the conditions surrounding the illegal alien from Mexico, popularly known as the 'wetback.'" (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"There are only 146 pages of text divided into eight chapters. Two appendices and an understandably limited bibliography complete the volume. Dr. Samora admits that this study is only a guide and an outline. . . . Chapter 7 relates the experiences of Jorge A. Bustamante F., a graduate student of Samora, who in a participant-observer role posed as a wetback, crossed the Rio Grande with two other Mojados, was apprehended and returned to Mexico. The final chapter . . . [offers] the opinions and recommendations of the author for a solution to the wetback problem. . . . I sincerely hope that in addition to being read by social scientists, this little book comes into the hands of the legislators of the United States and Mexico." J. J. Bodine

Am Anthropol 74:873 Ag '72 1000w

Reviewed by John Caughey

Ann Am Acad 403:227 S '72 360w

"[This is] a fairly comprehensive account. The chapter recounting the personal experiences of one alien is of particular interest. The statistical data succeed in making clear the scale and sources of these migrations from Mexico. Samora questions the economic value in illegally crossing the border. The pay is low and charges are exorbitant. . . . The major [beneficiaries] are the employer and smuggler. . . . [The book] will be of interest to some general libraries and to specialized collections."

SAMORA, JULIAN—Continued

Choice 8:1387 D '71 150w

"Professor Samora, a well-known sociologist, states that his aim in this work is only to present a guide to and an outline of the problems involving the Mexican illegal alien in the U.S. Actually he does much more. With sympathy for his subjects, yet observing the rules of scientific research, he gives a grim and detailed account of a group of people (the number apprehended in 1968 was 151,680, of whom 18,681 were women and children) who are continually entering the U.S. illegally, often taking dangerous risks and suffering abuse in their search for a nonexistent Utopia. . . . Recommended for subject collections in public and academic libraries." A. D. Trejo
Library J 96:2292 J1 '71 150w

SAMPSON, ANTHONY. The new anatomy of Britain. 773p $12.50 Stein & Day

914.2 Great Britain—Civilization. Great Britain—Politics and government—1945—
ISBN 8128-1456-8 LC 78-186150

A rewriting of The Anatomy of Britain (BRD 1963) which was revised in 1965 after Labour came into power. In this third version Sampson describes "Britain since 1962; what has remained the same seems even more so—the diplomatic service, the Bank of England, the Royal Family, the seesaw of Labour and Conservative Party politics. . . . [Then Sampson] leads his readers into the mainstream of change [in] British life: the schools, the arts . . . the police, crime, race questions, trade unions—and finally Prime Minister Heath and the vistas opened up by Britain's entry into the Common Market." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by W. H. Archer
Best Sell 32:68 My 1 '72 650w

Reviewed by John Ardagh
Book World p12 My 7 '72 1200w

Choice 9:870 S '72 160w

"What a different Britain it is from the Britain of 1962! . . . And yet it is still Britain, a distinctive, civilized society that keeps its head and continues to muddle through. . . . In this election year in the United States, we are hearing a lot about populism, about the popular disaffection with government and institutions, about the gap between 'we' and 'they.' Reading this book, we are constantly reminded that this mood is not peculiar to America. . . . The only trouble about this American edition of Mr. Sampson's new book is that his publishers have failed irritatingly to provide it with the end-papers to which he refers a couple of times in the text and which, if they were there, presumably would be a visual aid to understanding his theme." Geoffrey Godsell

Christian Science Monitor p9 Ap 27 '72 800w

"Mr Sampson and his publishers deserve praise for producing a guidebook to political Britain that is so comprehensive and so up to date. But they have provided little else. The nation is left untouched. New phenomena, new trivia, litter his text. . . . This is a book of other people's leavings, snippets of other people's research, a précis of other people's conclusions. The danger of this compendious approach is that it is so vulnerable to error. [Sampson's] summary of education expenditure is wrong, that of the civil list incomplete; his account of Lord Beeching's court reforms is misleading. . . . For all that, his kaleidoscopic impressions and reflections alone make the book worth reading."

Economist 240:66 S 25 '71 550w

"Now here is the anatomy of Heath's Britain—as usual beautifully produced, and timed to perfection so as to herald a third Prime Ministerial epoch and, at the same time, provide us with the first assessment of its place in history. Mr. Sampson has promoted himself from journalism into the elite of contemporary historians but he still has the nose for the fashionable and the newsy which made him the best political gossip-writer of his generation. In terms of sales I predict that he has done it again. . . . The full length study of Heath matches that of Wilson (which means it is very good indeed). . . . The trouble comes in the character studies." Richard Crossman

New Statesman 82:405 S 24 '71 950w

"A swiftly moving account of the men and institutions running England. . . . Sampson's book has several powerful flaws. Northern Ireland is ignored, . . . religion is brushed aside, and Scotland and Wales are barely mentioned. His chapter on newspapers . . . hardly deals with the essential appalling quality of the British dailies, the inwardness, the unreadable stories, the lack of balance between England and the rest of the world. . . . Perhaps most disappointing, Sampson's 'Anatomy' somehow probes the face and heart of Britain but not quite the mind. . . . But even with the flaws [the] book is an achievement. The sheer detail, the gently mocking tone . . . the self-assurance . . . the bluntness and the humor are acidulously accurate." Bernard Weinraub
N Y Times Bk R p1 Je 18 '72 1300w

TLS p1136 S 24 '71 1100w

SAMUELS, CHARLES THOMAS. The ambiguity of Henry James. 235p $3.50 Univ. of Ill. press

813 James, Henry
SBN 252-00173-7 LC 70-140035

"Samuels attempts to differentiate between success and failure in [James's] art. He maintains that evaluative distinctions among the novels must be made if James's true greatness is to be perceived. Each novel, holds Samuels, signals a conflict between James's taste for civilized society and his love for an innocence society does not foster. The two obsessive questions in his work are 'How sound are morality and innocence?' and 'How bad are the upper classes?' By examining James's methods of evading or confronting these issues, Samuels (attempts to show) that we can form a standard for judging his work." (Publisher's note)

"This study makes a major contribution to the understanding of James's celebrated ambiguity. Mr. Samuels is less concerned with psychological than with conceptual analysis. . . . [His] point of view . . . illuminates the whole James canon. Only in his discussion of The Portrait of A Lady does Mr. Samuels seem to falter." L. B. Levy
Am Lit 44:328 My '72 600w

"Samuels has written an ambitious book. . . . He wants nothing less than to . . . establish 'the sort of canon that exists' for James's peers—Hawthorne, Melville and Faulkner. . . . According to Samuels, the struggle between innocence and worldliness becomes the struggle in James's work. Those books in which the scales are loaded (usually toward innocence) are flawed; the successful ones expose the latent blindness and tyranny of innocence, along with a tough awareness of the duplicity of worldly society. At its best, this categorical framework articulates the significance of The Ambassadors; at its worst, it prefers The Awkward Age, in which innocence gets its comeuppance, to the immensely more impressive Portrait of a Lady. If the strain of Samuels' argument is caused by creaking categories, the success of the book lies in the power of those same categories to organize the author's insight into a comprehensive judgment." P. M. Weinstein
Am Scholar 41:310 spring '72 1750w

"An excellent beginning for undergraduates reading James' novels and tales. . . . Samuels' critiques are invariably interesting, yet they will arouse considerable dissent, partly because a critic who becomes negative for the purpose of pointing out faults in a literary work almost always provokes sympathy for the author. At times Samuels seems unfair—e.g. his evaluation of the ghosts in 'The turn of the screw' begs the question of their reality, and his conclusions about Merton Densher and Milly Theale show undue skepticism about religious experience. Yet even in these discussions he remains loyal to James, and repeatedly he comes to the points from which further criticism must proceed. This is a major book among recent Jamesian studies."

Choice 9:62 Mr '72 160w

"This perceptive critique was triggered by (and its title borrowed from) Edmund Wilson's seminal essay of 1934 (later revised and conveniently available in Gerald Willen's A Casebook on Henry James's The Turn of the Screw [BRD 1961]). . . . Samuels insists that James 'is America's greatest novelist,' and claims that his own book will 'demonstrate why that is so by first acknowledging why it might not have been.' No collection of James criticism is complete without this undogmatic yet outspokenly judgmental survey." B. W. Fuson

Library J 96:4096 D 15 '71 180w

Reviewed by D. K. Kirby
New Eng Q 45:137 Mr '72 750w
TLS p957 Ag 18 '72 500w

SANCTIONS for evil [ed. by] Nevitt Sanford, Craig Comstock & associates. 387p $9.50
Jossey-Bass

301.2 Social ethics. Social conditions
ISBN 0-87589-077-6 LC 79-129769

A revision of papers originally presented at a symposium held by the Wright Institute on The Legitimation of Evil. "Several social scientists have analyzed the acts and rationales for evil . . . [of our] Western civilization. Among the . . . authors are Robert Jay Lifton, Irving L. Janis, and Fritz Redl. Among the topics discussed are My Lai, Kent State and Jackson State, [and] people like Kitty Genovese, Father Berrigan and Angela Davis." (Choice)

"This is a book which is relevant in the best sense of the word. But it falls short of being 'reflexive' social science: there is no explicit effort to analyze the role that social science plays in dehumanization through its conceptions and practices. . . . [Moreover] despite many circumscriptions, even definitions, of 'evil,' no contributor mentions that it might be best to define it (and other crucial phenomena) according to one's knowledge and conscience, rather than by relying either on an inexplicit definition or on somebody else's, preferably 'most professionals.' This is one sense in which the book is reformative and liberal, not radical." K. H. Wolff

Am J Soc 77:1229 My '72 800w

"[This] very disturbing book is certainly one of the most hard-hitting works of recent years. . . . Edward Olfon points out how our daily television diet of violence makes possible the violence of our soldiers on the battlefield. Redl talks about the anonymity of the uniform and its contribution to violence. Sanford does his usual fine job in penetrating psychological analysis of factors associated with violence. All of the contributions are excellent and it is not really fair to single out a few. Throughout references are made to the dehumanization of the enemy. . . . The editing job is unusually excellent and the style is smooth. Highly recommended for concerned social science majors, philosophy majors, and those in religion."

Choice 9:404 My '72 200w

SANDERS, ED. The family; the story of Charles Manson's dune buggy attack battalion. 412p maps $6.95 Dutton

364.15 Manson, Charles. Crime and criminals—U.S.
ISBN 0-525-10300-7 LC 77-125906

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Paul Delany
Canadian Forum 52:67 My '72 1200w

Reviewed by S. C. Rose
Christian Century 89:344 Mr 22 '72 950w

Reviewed by Phil Tracy
Commonweal 95:428 F 4 '72 850w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman
Library J 97:296 Ja 15 '72 170w
New Repub 166:28 F 26 '72 240w

SANDERS, RONALD. Reflections on a teapot: a personal history of a time. 385p $8.95 Harper

B or 92
ISBN 06-013754-1 LC 78-181643

The associate editor of Midstream and author of The Downtown Jews (BRD 1970) describes his "boyhood, beginning in the 1930s and reaching maturity in the 1950s. . . . Born of a Liverpool musician father (whose song 'I'm a Little Teapot' once nearly made the 'Hit Parade') and a Brooklyn Jewish mother [he grew] . . . up in the streets of New York. . . . Incidents and people . . . form the substance of the book. . . . Concurrently with the varied events of [the author's] young life came a slowly developing commitment to the Judaism of his mother's family, a theme that weaves throughout the book and, in the end, shapes his maturity and the direction of his life." (Publisher's note)

"This book is an enjoyable experience which can be savored chapter by chapter. Each one presents a thesis and develops and analyzes it in the framework of conditions as they are. The findings are always logical and true, revealing a superior intellect in the process. The writing is excellent. . . . Mr. Sanders may have written his autobiography at an early age, but he has said more than most who have lived longer." L. G. Crane

Best Sell 32:260 S 1 '72 600w

"In this book [the author] deftly and sensitively recreates his family—especially his father—in entertaining and lively detail. . . . Sanders pictures himself as a developing author, soldier and romantic; at the same time he stresses his kinship with both his Yiddish heritage and with the modern world of the 1970's." H. M. Kapenstein

Library J 97:2578 Ag '72 160w

SANDERS, RUTH MANNING. See Manning-Sanders, R.

SANDERS, WILBUR. John Donne's poetry. 160p $8.50 Cambridge

821 Donne, John
ISBN 0-521-07968-3 LC 75-149436

The author "asks of the love poetry and religious poetry alike, where is Donne speaking in his own voice, when is he adopting a persona, what is the effect of his irony? And, he goes on, what affects us as true and fine; when is Donne the prey of his own manner and his self-irony; when is he conventionally amorous, cynical or pious? From this consideration Dr Sanders returns with a central body of poems which he considers great and unique." (Publisher's note) Index of poems discussed.

"This study . . . will be useful for advanced students well acquainted with Donne and his critics. It is at its best when it provokes revaluation of one's own attitudes; but too often what is intended to be provocative turns out to be merely provoking. . . . Use of contractions throughout seems inappropriate to the formal matter of this book, and occasional infelicities like the pompous 'most importantly' . . . also distract. Virtues include close reading of Donne's verse, recognition of the importance of Donne's tone, measure, and manner, and an attempt to read the verse aright. The sections on Donne's logical structure and his satire are especially useful."

Choice 8:1180 N '71 300w

"The originality of [Sander's] spare, full book, lies in his being able to read Donne himself, by himself and for himself, since as he points out 'it often comes about that when a writer is conceded classic status he stops being read—at least in any important sense of the verb "to read".' Mr Sanders is responsive to the complex energy of Donne's poetry, and capable of defining what Coleridge called its 'intensity and peculiarity of thought': sensitive to the bounding life, that is, and able to draw the wiry line. . . . His writing has a tutorial intimacy of talk, enticing, provoking, rebuking, which to me is engaging but to some may be irritating." William Walsh

Encounter 38:61 D '71 300w

SANDERSON, KENNETH M., jr. ed. Mark Twain: the critical heritage. See Anderson, F.

SANDLER, IRVING, ed. Alex Katz. See Katz, A.

SANDOZ, ELLIS. Political apocalypse: a study of Dostoevsky's Grand Inquisitor. 263p $8.95 La. state univ. press

891.73 Dostoevsky, Fyodor Mikhailovich—
The brothers Karamazov
ISBN 0-8071-0936-3 LC 77-152707

The author "here examines the meaning of 'The Legend of the Grand Inquisitor' from the Brothers Karamazov. Not a literary analysis. [this study] is, first, an examination of the intellectual and theological background out of which Dostoevsky's thought comes, and then [an] . . . examination of the 'Legend' itself. Against the background of Russian religious and quasireligious thought mixed with Western revolutionism and Hegelianism that Dostoevsky knew in his time, [Sandoz suggests] the 'Legend of the Grand Inquisitor' can best be understood as a 'political apocalypse.' Which is to say, an 'unveiling or revealing' of the relationship of man to God and man to the world." (Nat R) "Index." (Library J)

SANDOZ, ELLIS—Continued

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

Best Sell 32:236 Ag 15 '72 250w

"What makes this book so good is its lucid historical account of the rise of socialism, atheism, and sectarianism—the plagues of modern man for Dostoevsky—in 19th-Century Russia, and Sandoz's sensible interpretation of Dostoevsky's reaction to them as embodied in the 'Grand Inquisitor' section of The Brothers Karamazov. The not so obvious differences between Western and Eastern European Christianity and politics, especially with regard to Messianism and apocalypse, are illuminated through the author's political, theological, philosophical, and biographical research. As a result, the 'Grand Inquisitor' becomes more intelligible, and what Dostoevsky meant is not so ambiguous. Although the book focuses on what Dostoevsky considered his finest artistic achievement, it sheds light on all of his works." H. F. Babinski

Library J 97:1017 Mr 15 '72 120w

"Sandoz [is] equipped with the formidable armory of Voegelin-style political and theological analysis. . . . [This is an] impressive study. . . . Dostoevsky, Sandoz makes clear, does not try to immanentize the eschaton. General Readers, beware. Dostoevsky buffs and Voegelin buffs, this is for you." G. B. Tennyson

Nat R 24:857 Ag 4 '72 220w

SANFORD, NEVITT, ed. Sanctions for evil.
See Sanctions for evil

SANGSTER, JIMMY. Your friendly neighbourhood death pedlar. 255p $5.95 Dodd

ISBN 0-396-06508-2 LC 77-184188

English middle-class Anthony John Bridges is living with an upper class "young girl who, with eyes glued on matrimony, introduces him to her parents. Her father, a paragon of oddity, in order to disentangle daughter from lover fixes Bridges up with a strange though lucrative job running guns to South America, although it takes Bridges . . . three-quarters of the book to find this out." (Library J)

Best Sell 31:546 Mr 1 '72 80w

"There is something appealing about a klutz, and Anthony John Bridges . . . is no exception. . . . Sangster is a very witty writer; the picaresque plot is sufficiently addled and the characters knavish and original enough to keep sympathy on the side of Bridges. He emerges at the end untouched and ready for anything." Henry Veit

Library J 97:904 Mr 1 '72 100w

"There are some funny things in the book. The gun runner, not the most efficient operator in his class, ends up owing the United States Government $49,482,903.37. This is for a shipment to one of those dictatorships. The Russians have the same idea. . . . So they send a boatload of munitions, and there is a confrontation. An American officer starts things off: 'On that ship over there are Russians and just everyone knows that Russians are the enemy. Do you understand that? The enemy! I kill 'em because, sure as God made little green apples, that's the only way we're going to get peace in this world. Right?' Broad satire, this, but effective." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p43 Ap 23 '72 190w

"Mr. Sangster's enchanting touchfeather touch is missing in this farcically contrived thriller."

TLS p253 F 26 '71 30w

SANKEY, BENJAMIN. A companion to William Carlos Williams's Paterson. 235p il $8.50
Univ. of Calif. press

811 Williams, William Carlos—Paterson
ISBN 0-520-01742-0 LC 72-121193

The author uses manuscript material to help elucidate the poem Paterson (BRD 1946, 1948, 1950, 1951 and 1959). He seeks to show "how it was built out of many experiments with language, and traces the part it played in the poet's metrical development. He tries, from first to last, to illuminate one of the central metaphors of Paterson: 'the sea as the receptacle of all rivers, and hence, death as a receptacle of all life.' (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[A] very thorough and intensive study not only of the form of Williams' epic but also the sources and underlying historical and cultural context of the poem. The book is highly successful in its aim of providing a formalistic-cultural analysis of the themes and verbal nuances of the poem, and also of furnishing basic information for future scholars and critics. . . . Except for some reservations expressed in the conclusion, the book is strangely un-critical—what did Williams leave out, distort, or hide? In spite of this failing, the book is still a valuable contribution to the exegesis of an important work. Recommended to college and graduate school libraries."

Choice 9:371 My '72 180w

"[Sankey] offers a detailed explication of the poem, book by book and almost line by line. . . . [This volume] offers assistance to any serious, willing reader in pursuit of the poet-hero's quest in Paterson. And it is not blind to either the faults or the larger failures of the poem—or even to Williams' manifest inability to really bring his long poem to an end. But in his final chapter, Sankey argues that even its 'failure' as poetic synthesis of American experience and landscape has to be viewed as 'success,' as impressive experiment. Certainly indicated for college, university, and large public collections." J. R. Willingham

Library J 96:2775 S 15 '71 220w

SANSOM, KATHARINE. Sir George Sansom and Japan; a memoir. 183p il $15 Diplomatic

B or 92 Sansom, Sir George Bailey
ISBN 910512-13-2 LC 78-164855

Most of this biography of her husband "consists of letters written over the years by Lady Katharine to members of her family and to her friends, in which the favorite topic of conversation is Sir George." (Library J) Index.

"[This volume] is too slim to provide much information, either for the student of modern Japanese politics or for someone interested in the methods of an historian."

Choice 9:862 S '72 100w

"In any discussion of Western scholars of Japan, the name of the late Sir George Sansom (1883-1965) will inevitably crop up. His widow, in this warm and charmingly written memoir, presents us with a portrait of her husband . . . [in which] we are able to catch inimitable glimpses of the peerless scholar at work—occasionally at leisure—producing his monumental studies and indulging himself in his wide-ranging interests. Extracts from his lectures and correspondence, both official and personal, reveal his political vision, historical insight, artistic maturity, and good-natured humor and wit. For all serious students of Japanese history and culture and for all historiographical collections." Hyman Kublin

Library J 97:2578 Ag '72 160w

SANTAYANA, GEORGE. Lotze's system of philosophy; ed. with an introd. and Lotze bibliography by Paul Grimley Kuntz. 274p $11.95 Ind. univ. press

193 Lotze, Rudolf Hermann
ISBN 253-33610-4 LC 72-135008

"This previously unpublished doctoral dissertation of Santayana, written under Josiah Royce, is a critical account of the philosophical system of Rudolf Hermann Lotze, a German metaphysician of the mid-19th-century." (J Aesthetics) Bibliography. Index.

"Excellent contribution to the understanding not only of a great American philosopher, but also a German philosopher whose present reputation is undeservedly low. Kuntz's study of Lotze's system of philosophy comprises approximately a third of this volume and is the most important essay to appear on Lotze in the last 50 years in English. . . . This is a very important contribution not only to the understanding and rehabilitation of Lotze and Santayana but also to an understanding of Whitehead. . . . Santayana's thesis is important in its own right. He was later in life displeased with his 'dull dissertation,' but it was an exercise which contributed to his own development in numerous ways in spite of the many criticisms he makes of Lotze."

Choice 8:1188 N '71 250w

"[This book] provides considerable insight into the early influences on S.'s thought and the development of his philosophy. The delightful introduction by Kuntz includes comment on S.'s relation to Lotze, a sketch of Lotze's philosophical system, and a brief account of Lotze's influence on Anglo-American philosophy and his relevance to contemporary philosophy. Kuntz also discusses the marginalia in the copies of Lotze's Logik and Metaphysik which S. used in writing the dissertation. Included is a bibliography of over five hundred entries, covering Lotze's writings and secondary literature." W. L. Blizek

J Aesthetics 30:276 winter '71 110w

"A new book by Santayana? Never before published? Yes. . . . Santayana's appraisal of Lotze is sympathetic but detached. The chiseled prose of Santayana's later work can be savored here only in flashes, but the dissertation shows an extraordinary perceptiveness." William Gerber

Library J 96:1615 My 1 '71 100w

SANTIDEVA. Entering the path of enlightenment; the Bodhicaryāvatāra of the Buddhist poet Śāntideva; tr. with guide by Marion L. Matics. 318p $8.50; pa $2.95 Macmillan (N Y) 294.3 Buddha and Buddhism LC 73-110466

This is "the first complete English translation of the Bodhicaryāvatāra. . . . Śāntideva, an eighth-century poet and monk at the Buddhist University of Nālanda, describes and explains the various steps one must take in order to become a Bodhisattva. This work offers practical explanations and methods for realizing the Prajñā-pāramitā vision of Mahāyāna Buddhism." (Choice) Bibliography. Glossary.

"Matics' translation reads well, giving an idea of the literary artistry of Śāntideva. His long and valuable guide to the work places Śāntideva and the Bodhicaryāvatāra in their historical and philosophical contexts, and examines the unique contribution of Śāntideva to the growth of Mādhyamika. The appendices include excellent notes, references, and bibliography useful to both the lay reader and scholar. This work, with its emphasis on the normal nature of the Bodhisattva, is a valuable contribution to Mahāyāna literature." Choice 8:1190 N '71 190w

"[This poem is] luxuriant in imagery. . . . Matics' scholarly approach and rather esoteric subject make this a work mainly of interest to students of Buddhism and to larger comparative religion collections." R. S. Dillon

Library J 95:4180 D 1 '70 120w

SANTUCCI, LUIGI. Meeting Jesus: a new way to Christ; tr. from the Italian by Bernard Wall. 222p $7.50 Herder & Herder 232 Jesus Christ—Biography ISBN 665-00020-0 LC 78-167865

In narrating the story of Christ the author begins "with the birth of Jesus and the events surrounding it, and he ends . . . with the passion, death, resurrection and ascension. Between these two chronological accounts . . . he has grouped what the Gospels relate into [four] homogeneous sections; . . . first the miracles; . . . next come the parables. . . . The following section . . . describes Jesus' human encounters. . . . Finally, just before the Passion account, come the author's reflections on the relations of Jesus with the city he loved." (America) Originally published in Italy in 1969 entitled Volete andarvene anche voi?

"[The author here attempts] to tell the gospel story over again in the light of the poet's imaginative reflections. It would not be amiss, perhaps, to retitile the book 'The Gospel According to Luigi Santucci'—it has that sort of impact. . . . In some ways it is very old-fashioned: the author takes quite literally the stories of the Annunciation, the Nativity, the shepherds, the angels and the wise men [and] the miracles are presented just as they are in the gospel texts. . . . In other ways there is much of fantasy here: there are imaginary soliloquies which Jesus holds with himself; there are conversations that have never been recorded; there are descriptions of places, of situations, of relationships, of events, whose imaginative coloring may be unjustified. . . . What [Santucci] has given us can be seen as one long poetic, and loving, prayer." Quentin Lauer

America 126:182 F 19 '72 900w

"A prize-winning Italian novelist . . . the author is essentially orthodox without being fundamentalist. His Christ is both God and man, continuously present in the world. Nevertheless, Santucci's faith is distinctively the faith of a complicated literary artist living on the brink of the 21st Century. Christians of other centuries might be surprised more at the questions he raises about the psychology and motivation of Christ than at the answers he proposes. Santucci writes beautifully, with poetic intensity of thought and emotion. In a way, his book is as much an autobiography as it is a life of Christ. The translation is a literary triumph; the work should have wide appeal." G. M. Casey

Library J 97:1334 Ap 1 '72 190w

"To most readers, the life and teachings of Jesus are familiar, at least in a general way—but what do they really mean? Santucci attempts to tell us in an unusual little book that has had considerable success on the Continent. Phrases and sentences from the New Testament narratives serve as jumping-off points for the author's sensitive, intelligent comment and improvisation. The improvisations include interior monologues, imaginary conversations, scenes and incidents that expand and illuminate the barebones Biblical record. The style is literate, perceptive and free of sentimentality. Readers of various religious persuasions—and of none—will find the approach rewarding."

N Y Times Bk R p10 Mr ■ '72 110w

SARACEVIC, TEFKO, ed. Introduction to information science; comp. & ed. by Tefko Saracevic. 751p il US & Canada $25; elsewhere $27.50 Bowker

020 Information sciences

ISBN 0-8352-0313-1 LC 77-108783

This volume "is arranged in four major parts. The first contains articles related to . . . the nature and properties of information and communication processes; the behavior of information users; the structure and dynamics of knowledge and literature; and relevance as a measure of effectiveness in the communication process. The second part deals with the structure and internal organization of information systems, with stress placed on retrieval. . . . The third part [studies] the workings and performance of information systems in general and information retrieval systems in particular. . . . [The final part is] a study [on general communication theory] by William Goffman." (Publisher's note) Index.

"This book is a collection of sixty-six papers by various authors. Most of the papers have previously been published elsewhere, and all are quite recent. . . . Their collection into a single volume is a single service for which we owe Professor Saracevic and The Bowker Company a debt of gratitude. . . . This book should be purchased by every library that has even a minimal collection in the area of librarianship or information science. A very regrettable feature . . . is that in his general introduction, the editor does not help to clarify what this discipline that he calls 'information science' is. . . . [It is also] regrettable that [the book] does not contain an author index. This might have been more useful than the rather poor subject index that is provided." K. L. Cartwright

Col & Res Lib 33:144 Mr '72 550w

"At three cents a page, the book's a bargain! If one were to photocopy the 66 journal articles in this sourcebook, the cost would be commensurate with the quoted price. . . . But the book is much more than a collection of papers. It is organized as an 'educational text for learning and teaching,' and the editor has attempted to give an overall structure and context for the important basic and experimental work in the field. . . . The General Introduction and the short sectional introductions provided by the editor contribute to the cohesiveness of the text taken as a whole. . . . This reviewer laments the fact that the editor did not see fit to include a glossary of terms used. . . . All in all, this is a successful attempt to unify the work of the 1950's and 1960's in information science, to exhibit the various orientations evident in the field, and to begin to resolve the problem of structuring the field. Much more than a 'reader' this book is worth the price to both student and library alike." Pauline Atherton

Library J 96:807 Mr 1 '71 850w

SARAN, VIOLA. Sino-Soviet schism, a bibliography, 1956-1964; issued under the auspices of the School of int. studies. Jawaharlal Nehru university. 162p $10 Asia pub. 016.327 China (People's Republic of China)—Foreign relations—Russia—Bibliography. Russia—Foreign relations—China (People's Republic of China)—Bibliography. ISBN 0-210-98155-5 LC 74-29951

"Listed in this bibliography [dealing with the] Sino-Soviet ideological dispute and its impact on the international Communist movement are 2,030 documents covering the years 1956-1964. The . . . documents surveyed consist of speeches, statements, resolutions, communiqués, letters, editorials, and reports of the Communist and Workers' Parties of the world. Non-Communist literature is also covered." (Publisher's note) Author index. Subject index.

"In addition to books on the subject, the compiler drew from a most impressive list of periodicals in many languages, Eastern and Western. The bibliography is divided into three sections: Theory; International Communist movement; and International relations. Within these sections are many subsections, which are poorly organized, thereby making the book less convenient to use. . . . Recommended for all academic libraries." . . . Choice 8:1572 F '72 120w

"Citations were gleaned by Saran from a variety of American and foreign monographs and periodicals, but are limited to those published originally in English or translated into English. . . . The cross referencing is uneven. . . . May be useful in some collections in spite of its limitations." E. A. Engeldinger Library J 97:60 Ja 1 '72 170w

"The bibliography . . . fails to mention valuable books published in the USSR over the period under consideration which, while not speaking directly on the schism, nevertheless provide excellent background for the strife. . . . In spite of . . . [this] the book is a useful summary of the material published on the subject during the Khrushchev era." J. J. Solecki Pacific Affairs 45:323 summer '72 360w

SARASON, SEYMOUR B. The culture of the school and the problem of change. 246p $8.95; pa $3.95 Allyn 370.19 Educational innovations. Education—U.S. LC 70-116572

Concerned with the need for reforms in American schools the author describes the complexities "that characterize the roles of teacher, principal, and student. . . . [He points to the] difficulties encountered by each of these three major participants in the educational process as they try to reconcile their ideal expectations . . . with the actualities and possibilities in the prevailing culture of the school . . . [and offers advice on] how to begin and whom to involve in the process of change." (Sat R) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:414 My '72 80w

"The former head of the Yale Psycho-Educational Clinic grapples with some difficult problems in this illuminating book. Basing it largely on his own experiences, he has tried to describe, much as an anthropologist would, some facets of school culture and the process of change. He believes that the failure to introduce meaningful change, as with the new math, often results from the ignorance that both outsiders and insiders have about school culture. . . . Much educational research has been based on individual psychology [but] this study is an arresting example of other possible directions. Clearly written, it will be most useful to students and educators." F. L. Cinquemani Library J 97:871 Mr 1 '72 150w

"This is a rare and beautiful book. Good sense, sound scholarship, genuine concern for and love of children and learning are combined and communicated in an elegantly simple style of writing. The layman will find himself at home, but so will the professional educator. . . . This book is an absolute 'must' for anyone seriously concerned with education. That includes parents, students, teachers, teachers of teachers, principals, superintendents, members of boards of education, university trustees, and college professors. On this book one can begin to build both theory and practice." M. M. Tumin Sat 54:70 My 22 '71 1250w

"[Sarason's] book is a unique and valuable addition to our scanty understanding of how schools function. However, microscopic empiricism seems to me an insufficient basis for the pragmatic advice he attempts to derive from his findings. By focusing on 'the life of classrooms' and the behavior of teachers and principals, his study neglects the roles of boards of education, school superintendents, and teacher-training programs of State Education Departments. Such a confined scope is, of course, unobjectionable in a scientific and scholarly study. When, however, the study seeks to draw general policy conclusions, such a selective emphasis weakens the argument." Ronald Gross

Teach Col Rec 73:465 F '72 1500w

SARNOFF, IRVING. Testing Freudian concepts; an experimental social approach. 276p $8.50; pa $5.95 Springer pub.

150.19 Psychoanalysis. Freud, Sigmund ISBN 8261-1192-0; 8261-1191-2 (pa) LC 70-146658

"This book presents a way of using the experimental method of research as a tool for investigating the scientific utility of Freudian concepts . . . [and presents] guidelines for theoretically . . . methodologically . . . and ethically acceptable experimental tests of Freudian hypotheses." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"[The] title is misleading as this is an auxiliary textbook for use in courses on research in personality and social psychology and only employs experimental investigations of psychoanalytic propositions as examples of general research methodology. No unique or tailor-made methods for specifically testing Freudian concepts are presented. The distinctive character is Sarnoff's mixture of considerations of ethics, humanitarianism, self-analysis and misgivings of the investigator, and methodological skills. . . . The chapter dealing with the appropriateness of interactive design for psychoanalytic research is the most worthwhile. . . . [Sarnoff's] style is pedantic, tedious, and overelaborate. . . . The research specialist will find rewarding the many valuable and provocative formulations scattered throughout the work." Choice 8:1514 Ja '72 170w

"Sarnoff, evidently a strict Freudian, chastises the experimental psychologist for his failure to leap at the chance to animate his studies with Freudian ideas. . . . Sarnoff's philosophical arguments and experimental designs simply do not support the contention that Freudian theory lends itself to experimental test. Of possible interest to college and university libraries." H. B. Taub Library J 96:2655 S 1 '71 180w

SAROYAN, WILLIAM. Places where I've done time. 182p il $6.95 Praeger

B or 92 LC 70-178227

The author of Days of Life and Death and Escape to The Moon (BRD 1970) writes about sixty-eight key places in his life, which range from the YMCA on 23rd Street in New York City to The Champs-Élysées in Paris. He also relates anecdotes about the human beings, both famous and unknown, whom he associates with these places.

"This is a book for Saroyan fans. It is a book of memoirs from a man who seems to be an irrepressible rememberer. . . . These 'places' have been juxtaposed, reinterpreted and shaped into a rather delightful, floating autobiographical work which reverberates with Saroyan's personal celebration of the human comedy. Let the reader beware, however; this is not a book for everyone. In fact, it is a book for Armenians. Saroyan has written an almost perfectly useless book, and his creation is a happy affirmation of man." J. C. Hawley

America 126:324 Mr 25 '72 370w

Reviewed by Sister M. R. Weir

Best Sell 31:560 Mr 15 '72 450w

Choice 9:632 J1/Ag '72 50w

Christian Century 89:374 Mr 29 '72 20w

"Despite the unusual format—scrambling chronology and omitting connective tissue—this collection of two-to-three-page episodes adds up to a kind of autobiography. It's so skimpy, and yet it leaves one feeling acquainted with the man, or with the man's view of himself. Here are flashes of the boyhood utilized for fictional purposes in 'The Human Comedy' [BRD 1943], for example. Here are the playwright's backstage emotions if not a complete run-down of the facts. In a seemingly haphazard shuttling between a California orphanage in 1912 and the Champs-Élysées in 1969, the author is a unifying presence. Yes, he's simplistic about politics and other things. But he's also simple in a better sense, as he takes you with him when he recalls his Armenian family." Roderick Nordell

Christian Science Monitor p19 Mr 23 '72 480w

Reviewed by R. H. Donahugh
Library J 97:492 F 1 '72 60w

"This is [the author's] fifth book of memoirs. I've read one other, Here Comes, There Goes, You Know Who [BRD 1962], and this new book is better. All his life Saroyan has been criss-crossing his life in his work, and his new book even treats some of the incidents of Here Comes—at a different angle. . . . If he hasn't really grown he is at least much the same. Some of the places in Places deliver good quick stabs of feeling. (The most ironic section is one in which Saroyan, the perennial boy, can't communicate with his own children.) The book is sometimes gassy, and sometimes gooeey, but it's never fake. . . . The best thing about Saroyan is that he didn't choose to do it that way, he had to do it that way, and sometimes in this book—it's lovely." Stanley Kauffmann

New Repub 166:21 Mr 25 '72 1200w

"Admittedly Saroyan can be sentimental and silly; boastful and repetitive too. . . . Yet books of his such as My Name is Aram, [BRD 1940] that glowing bit of radium extracted from the pitch-blende of a rather grim Fresno childhood, will certainly be read a hundred years hence. . . . For a number of years now Saroyan has been producing volumes of autobiographical reminiscence. There are strong scenes in some of them, such as 'Not Dying' [BRD 1963], and 'Here Comes There Goes You Know Who.' A firm editorial talent might have made one solid volume out of the lot. 'Places Where I've Done Time' is the latest and the most sketchy of these haphazard collections." Peter Sourian

N Y Times Bk ■ p3 Ap 2 '72 1100w

New Yorker 48:142 Ap 29 '72 90w

SARTI, ROLAND. Fascism and the industrial leadership in Italy, 1919-1940; a study in the expansion of private power under fascism. 154p $8 Univ. of Calif. press

335.6 Industry and state—Italy. Fascism—Italy. Syndicalism—Italy
ISBN 0-520-01855-9 LC 79-138636

Sarti's "aim is to describe and evaluate the relations between the leadership of Italian industry and the fascist government by examining the activities of the most powerful manufacturers' pressure group, the Confindustria. He explains the success of the industrialists in dominating the limited areas of policy-making which interested them." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Although the author's] documentation and arguments are convincing, one still wonders how the Confindustria fared so much better than the League of German Employer Organizations, which was co-opted within three months after Hitler came to power. Sarti's answer is that the Fascist regime was not really as totalitarian as it claimed, that Mussolini was more of a mediator than is usually believed, and that the Italian industrial elite was particularly resourceful in its dealings with him. Sarti does not hide his pro-labor and Marxist sympathies, but his presentation is scrupulously balanced and fair to all parties." E. R. Tannenbaum

Am Hist R 77:545 Ap '72 340w

"[The] book illuminates the mentality of Italian industrial leadership, pressure group operation, and the nature of the corporate state. The book is well written, and the footnotes, index, and bibliographical essay are valuable to the specialist. Highly recommended for college and university libraries."

Choice 8:1376 D '71 100w

SARTON, MAY. A durable fire; new poems. 80p $6 Norton

811

ISBN 0-393-04362-2; 0-393-04375-4 (pa)
LC 79-38464

These poems range from "glimpses of the natural world [and] . . . nostalgic evocations of the past [to] . . . tensions of the inner world of intellect." (Choice) Some of these poems appeared in such periodicals as Yankee, Poetry and Beloit Poetry Review.

"These poems contain the delights of meditation; quiet, aged meditation possessing a mellow and confident vintage. . . . Only in the 'Letters to a Psychiatrist' section where a dry urgency obtains is there a nick or two on the silver. When nature in New England receives celebration, names such as Frost and Thoreau come to mind. Miss Sarton, need it be said, has neither the range nor the power of these writers. She does approach the disciplined rhythms and observations of Robert Francis' work, however; he exhibits greater ingenuity, but both poets are happy in their solitude, gathering consolation from trees, flowers, rivers, clouds and the seasons. . . . A demon lives beneath Miss Sarton's lines, yet their graphic regularity suggests that he's been successfully domesticated; still there, mind you, but on the leash. Iambics and rhyme structure most of the poems." T. O'Hara

Best Sell 32:69 My 1 '72 400w

"[These] poems by the distinguished New Hampshire poet . . . provide rewarding experiences to the sensitive reader. . . . The opening poem, written as the author approached her 60th birthday, reads more like an invitation to the challenge of life than the acceptance of its quieter reaches. In fact, many of the poems give the impression of having exploded rather than been composed, though there are moments of deep stillness and quiet wisdom. . . . [Sarton's] voice, hitherto, for the most part serene and lyrical, has achieved amazing strength and vigor."

Choice 9:1132 N '72 180w

SARTRE, JEAN-PAUL. Socialism that came in from the cold. See Liehm, A. J., The politics of culture

SATTERTHWAITE, GILBERT E. Encyclopedia of astronomy. 537p il pl $15 St Martins 520.3 Astronomy—Encyclopaedias
ISBN 0-600-41106-0 LC 71-162370

This volume contains "more than 2,000 entries, covering every aspect of astronomy and the necessary branches of physics. . . . [It includes] accounts of optics and optical instruments . . . the history of astronomy . . . [and] biographies of famous astronomers." (TLS)

"The entries are amazingly extensive and complete. . . . Unfortunately, the discussion of technical concepts is often sadly out of date or, especially for astrophysical items, clearly in error. The historical and biographical material, on the other hand, is both thorough and accurate. Throughout, the style is clear, readable, and accessible to all readers beyond junior high level. In spite of the errors, this work is so full of useful information that it should be available in all libraries."

Choice 8:1602 F '72 70w

"The book is a positive mine of information as well as being extremely comprehensive and easy to follow. . . . It is, I think, only fair to add that I wrote the Foreword to Satterthwaite's book. I point this out only in case some unkind person accuses me of prejudice. In fact I am not prejudiced; it is my considered opinion that this is the best book of its kind produced for a great many years, and since obtaining my copy of it, a few weeks ago, I have referred to it constantly. It will be of equal value to the beginner, the serious amateur, and the student. I imagine that it will become accepted as a standard work." Patrick Moore

Encounter 36:72 Ja '71 190w

"Information is arranged alphabetically by subject, and there are many extensive entries. The writing is clear, the cross-indexing good, and the many line drawings and photographs are a real asset. The book has one fault: much recent astronomical information (especially discoveries about the moon and planets made by various space programs) is missing. . . . The book seems to give an outstanding overview of astronomy as it was several years ago, but the omission of recent discoveries is a serious limitation." R. L. Hough

SATTERTHWAITE, G. E.—Continued

Library J 97:185 Ja 15 '72 150w

"[The author] has used his experience to give descriptions of the fundamentals of astronomy which are very readable and show a real appreciation of the problems and of their solution. . . . The work has been directed towards the British market—not altogether an unwelcome change. . . . [However] the more prominent features of the surface of the Moon and Mars are listed separately. While this may appeal to the specialist, it seems rather unnecessary in a work directed to the layman and student and a reduction in these entries might have resulted in a corresponding reduction in the high price of this volume. . . . The reader may also find some peculiar formulas and numerical results, which are probably printers' errors. These are small defects."

TLS p1201 O 16 '70 450w

SAUER, CARL ORTWIN. Sixteenth century North America; the land and the people as seen by the Europeans. 319p il maps $10 Univ. of Calif. press

973.1 America—Discovery and exploration
ISBN 0-520-01854-0 LC 75-138635

The author has drawn on contemporary accounts to provide "a view of the Indians and the land of North America as they were before repeated contacts and settlement caused everything to change. . . . The visitors told often and at length of friendly and ceremonious reception, of native skills and habits, good life and good order. . . . The Europeans came mainly in expeditions that were sent to advance the interests of nation states. Their movements were thus of strategic importance in the developing game of geopolitics and the author has sketched in the background of European rivalries and political motivations which determined where the travelers went and what they sought." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The study focuses principally on physical environment, flora, fauna, the human inhabitants and their societies. To explain the circumstances under which the observations occurred, Sauer outlines motivations, and imperial rivalries that produced European voyages and expeditions, and sketches itineraries. . . . Sixteenth-century Europeans sought profit in North America from such activities as plunder, capturing slaves, gathering mineral wealth, fishing, or trade. . . . Sauer suggests that these activities . . . may well have set afoot the movements and rivalries among native tribes that characterized the tumultuous next century. Sauer's printed sources do not provide him with new material. His synthesis and his point of view, however, set forth his evidence in fresh perspective. Moreover, his pages capture some of the wonder and delight with which Europeans first experienced the environment he describes." W. J. Griffith

Am Anthropol 74:862 Ag '72 500w

Reviewed by K. R. Andrews

Am Hist R 77:326 Je '72 300w

"The rather staccato account is accompanied by reproductions of contemporary illustrations and with a dozen and a half maps (some 16th-century and some modern) which are—regrettably—of uneven quality and interest. [Sauer's] bibliography attests to his familiarity with the original sources, from some of which he has made his own translations; useful index. Serious students and interested laymen have here a resource of immeasurable worth."

Choice 8:1640 F '72 200w

"Whether or not specialists accept all [his] judgments, it is clear that Sauer has traveled over his ocean of material with great authority and in the process produced the best single brief volume available. The publisher has treated the work as it deserves. The book is handsomely made. . . . with excellent maps, as one would expect from a professor emeritus of geography at the University of California."

D. F. Hawke
J Am Hist 59:122 Je '72 500w

"Sauer tops his previous fine efforts—The Early Spanish Main [BRD 1966] and Northern Mists [BRD 1968]—with this scholarly and engrossing record of the European exploration of North America during the 16th Century. Certain shibboleths, such as those concerning Indian savagery, are shattered, while fresh viewpoints are presented provocatively and persuasively." L. E. Spellman

Library J 96:3757 N 15 '71 60w

SAUL, MARGARET. Melcher on acquisition. See Melcher, D.

SAUNDERS, J. J. The history of the Mongol conquests. 275p $10 Harper

950 Mongols—History

ISBN 0-389-04451-2 LC [72-883985]

This "general history of the Mongols of the thirteenth century . . . opens with a chapter on Eurasian nomadism and an account of the Turkish conquests, seven centuries before those of the Mongols. The author deals . . . with Chingis Khan and his achievements both as a soldier and as an administrator, and goes on to describe the Mongol drive into Europe and the Christian response to it. Mongol rule in China and Persia is discussed and the period of Mongol dominance in Russia is also covered. There is a final chapter on the Mongol age in retrospect, which . . . includes a comparison between the Arab conquests of the seventh century and the Mongol conquests of the thirteenth." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"[Saunders'] notes are substantial and illuminating. The preface is an excellent introduction to the historiography of the field. The six maps, glossary, genealogical tables, and notes on transliteration also strike the balance between excessive detail and oversimplification appropriate to a general history. Highly recommended for general and college libraries."

Choice 9:1022 O '72 160w

"The author, who draws upon a growing store of scholarly knowledge concerning the 13th-Century Mongol Empire, has written a fascinating general history of the period."

J. C. Shipman

Library J 97:2594 Ag '72 170w

"[This history] does not add much that is new, though it has a useful bibliography for the reader who wants to start his own general reading. It begins with an unsatisfactory geographical sketch. . . . There follows a rapid, inadequate survey of pre-Mongol Turkish history in Mongolia. . . . Passing on to the early Mongols, we are informed that 'they followed the life of hunters and stock-raisers; indeed they had no choice, since the land is, or rather was, unsuited for agriculture or mining'. Here the curious distinction between the present and past tenses is not explained; but the truth is that in Mongolia both agriculture . . . and mining have been intermittent, though not everywhere continuous, from the Stone Age onwards. . . . In the main body of the book the chronological narrative is clear and well-told. The interpretation, however, is throughout conventional."

TLS p887 J1 28 '72 600w

SAUNDERS, JOHN, ed. Modern Brazil: new patterns and development. 350p il $12.50 Univ. of Fla. press

918.1 Brazil—Civilization. Brazil—Social conditions

ISBN 0-8130-0300-8 LC 72-630255

"This book explores Brazil's potential for the achievement of major power status within the next century. . . . [A] group of authors, both Brazilian and American, examines Brazil's progress . . . and the problems created by [its] emergence as a modern nation. Analyzed are the geography and demography of Brazil, the role of education, political and legal life, the evolution of labor legislation, foreign and domestic economic development, agricultural development, the change in social classes, urban development, and the evolution of Brazilian literature, music, and art." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The contributors] are obviously not writing for the general reader; e.g. T. Lynn Smith on people of Brazil, William Nicholls on agriculture, Anísio Teixeira on education, Dorival Teixeira Rivera on industry. Some essays barely relate to either the modern period or the subtitle of the book. One is hard put to it to detect a strong or even any editorial hand or guidance, and some chapters require considerable knowledge of Brazil to be understandable. . . . A few not too well chosen photographs. No map. No general bibliography. . . . Inadequate index."

Choice 9:569 Je '72 270w

"As a whole this volume, which gives a promising picture of Brazil's future, forms a useful compendium. On the other hand, after reading it one would never know that the present military government is one of the most vicious and repressive in the world. Also neglected is Brazil's emerging role as the South American subimperialist power. For larger libraries specializing in Latin American materials." H. A. Spalding

Library J 97:2422 J1 '72 130w

SAVACOO, JOHN K., ed. The American Shakers. See Desroche, H.

SAVILLE, JOHN, jt. ed. Essays in labour history, 1886-1923. See Briggs, A.

SAWA, YUKI, jt. comp. Anthology of modern Japanese poetry. See Shiffert, E. M.

SAWATZKY, HARRY LEONARD. They sought a country; Mennonite colonization in Mexico; with an app. on Mennonite colonization in British Honduras. 387p il $11.50 Univ. of Calif. press

301.45 Mennonites in Mexico

ISBN 0-520-01704-8

LC 78-92673

"This book deals with the Old Colony Mennonites who left Canada in the 1920's to settle in Mexico. The author describes . . . the religious and political conflicts that forced these . . . farmers to migrate to Mexico and provides a . . . treatment of the religious, agricultural, and economic aspects of the Old Colony settlements. A 37-page appendix describes the Mennonites' more recent settlement in British Honduras." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The final chapter, 'The Quality of Living,' is concerned in a very central way with what is conventionally thought of as sociocultural anthropology. From this perspective the book is superficial in failing to come to sophisticated analytical grips with major contemporary social challenges faced by Mennonites in Mexico. Its principal (and very considerable) value to anthropology will lie in its excellent professional characterization of the history and technoeconomic circumstances of a people whose adaptive potential is very strongly conditioned by ideological considerations." J. K. Jaquith

Am Anthropol 74:875 Ag '72 650w

"The account is difficult to follow, largely because it has no map to show the colony sites, which are described textually with precision but not clarity. The map for British Honduras does what one or two could do for Chihuahua and Durango: pinpoint locations so the goings and comings of the fragmented Mennonites might be more readily followed." E. K. Chamberlin

Am Hist R 77:1187 O '72 430w

"Sawatzky relates the story of the Mennonite migration from Manitoba to Mexico and he tells it reasonably well. Peasant stubbornness and slyness are revealed as rather negative traits. . . . The concluding chapter, 'The quality of living,' is at times quite moving, and it is regrettable that this particular calibre of writing could not have been sustained throughout the book. Puzzling indeed is the absence of archival material, particularly Mexican sources. Overall, a worthwhile contribution and recommended for all libraries."

Choice 9:272 Ap '72 110w

Reviewed by W. D. Hunsberger

Library J 96:3133 O 1 '71 140w

SAXTON, ALEXANDER. The indispensable enemy: labor and the anti-Chinese movement in California. 293p $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

301.451 Chinese in the U.S. Labor unions.

California—Politics and government

ISBN 0-520-01721-8

LC 72-115494

In this "case study of the anti-Chinese movement in California . . . Saxton analyzes the ideological rationale of the . . . white majority along with related labor and political developments with the aim of developing a theory concerning California's 'indispensable enemy.' He concludes that the purported menace of cheap Chinese labor was used as a powerful organizing tool by both local labor leaders and petty politicians. Moreover, the fear acted as an impetus for the consolidation of the heterogeneous white community and stimulated the rehabilitation of the Democratic party in California following the Civil War." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by E. V. Stonequist

Ann Am Acad 399:221 Ja '72 380w

"An important book on the confrontation between whites and Chinese in California from the Civil War to the Progressive Era. [The author's] foci are the labor movement and the Democratic party. Two introductory chapters provide important background information; a concluding 'Forward glance' is suggestive, but all too brief. [The work] is tightly organized, thoughtfully argued, and carefully researched. (It rests primarily on Saxton's reading of newspapers and periodicals). [It] breaks new ground."

Choice 8:1244 N '71 130w

"Saxton succeeds in giving modern and illuminating insights that are superior to anything previously available. . . . This notable accomplishment is not free from problems. First, the breadth of treatment keeps Saxton's monograph in only precarious balance between sufficient stress on its special subject and a tendency to slide off into other topics. Second, although the author looks back to the Jacksonian era for the origins of political ideology, he picks up the Chinese issue only in the late 1860s, when in fact widespread anti-Chinese agitation had existed since the spring of 1852. . . . Finally, and much less importantly, this reviewer must protest against a scholarly book that has a one-page bibliography and haphazard footnotes." R. W. Paul

J Am Hist 58:1031 Mr '72 430w

"Although heavily oriented toward the economic aspects of the anti-Chinese agitation at the expense of the more subtle social implications, this skillfully written work is recommended for larger public and academic libraries." P. A. Kalisch

Library J 96:2316 J1 '71 140w

SCADUTO, ANTHONY. Bob Dylan. 280p pl $7.95 Grosset

B or 92 Dylan, Bob

ISBN 0-448-02034-3

LC 72-144064

A biography of the singer and song writer. Discography. Index.

"Scaduto's book is a fair piece of journalism, but not a good one, and a comprehensive biography, though by no means an exceptional one. Where the author has ample opportunity to transform his book into an incisive and perceptive analysis, he mishandles the chance. As a result, his product lacks a concurrent theme of any interest." R. J. Rafalko

Best Sell 31:560 Mr 15 '72 460w

Reviewed by James Heckel

Library J 97:1439 Ap 15 '72 110w

"Scaduto's somewhat adulatory biography . . . is as complete as most fans will want. . . . The four-letter words may be offensive to some, but this book will undoubtedly be in demand wherever Dylan recordings are played." Regina Minudri

Library J 97:1631 Ap 15 '72 80w [YA]

"Scaduto's biography is especially good at untangling [the] lies woven when Dylan and his flacks first practiced to deceive his fans, peers, and potential employers. Scaduto won Dylan's partial and temporary approval, and the resulting conversations are both readable and enlightening. They do away with many of the old stories about Dylan's childhood—the cruel parents; the rebellious kid who ran away eight times and was brought back seven; the wanderer from Gallup, Cheyenne, Sioux Falls, Fargo, Burbank—and they make it clear why Dylan wasn't that kind of kid: he was too busy studying." J. D. O'Hara

New Repub 166:26 My 20 '72 800w

"[This] is painstakingly researched and full of gossip detail, and there is no doubt that Scaduto does what he sets out to do. But I still come away from the book with a feeling of impatience and malaise. . . . For the most part the book reads like one of those awful theses graduate students write about dead poets: details accumulating without real significance, and the self-conscious exegeses of texts which can only speak for themselves. In a few of its moments the book deeply reveals life, especially in those few pages dealing with Dylan's visit to Texas in the raw aftermath of the Kennedy assassination. But its usual tone is one of plodding and corrosive scholarship." Peter Marin

SCADUTO, ANTHONY—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p4 F 20 '72 500w

SCANZONI, JOHN H. Opportunity and the family. 247p $6.95 Free press

301.42 Family
LC 70-84935

"Scanzoni reports on the original family in terms of economic integration, self-esteem, anomie, companionship, alienation, empathy, and many other variables but always with the Exchange Theory (the reciprocity of status and family relations) in mind. A direct relation between husband's occupation, social status, and marital interaction is explored." (Choice)

"Here is a study family sociologists should examine. . . . Methodologically and stylistically [it] raises several . . . questions. . . . [However] the author . . . states that the major purpose of the book is to gain 'theoretical leverage' on the family, and to propose exchange theory as useful for the sake of dialogue, not as a final answer. I would agree that Scanzoni has accomplished his aim . . . [in] a most stimulating and valuable contribution to the archives of family research." B. N. Adams

Am J Soc 78:471 S '72 1400w

"The type of book that is desperately needed in the field of the family; a concern with the integration of research with theories of human behavior. . . . More broadly, the study is concerned with the interdependence of basic systems, whereas most family research is illustrative of one particular approach to family problems. . . . Most appropriate for graduate study. Limited index."

Choice 8:921 S '71 140w

"[In this book, the author] has built an intriguing and consistent theoretical framework around the concepts of family cohesion and economic attainments. . . . Based on data gathered from more than 900 randomly selected households in a major urban area and building on contributions from other sociologists, the . . . [author's] propositions are unique in the sociological study of the family. Tables, data gathering and sampling procedures, and interview items are included. The book is not for beginners but it is a 'must' for any serious student of family interaction." M. W. Hicks

J Home Econ 63:629 N '71 200w

SCARR, DERYCK, jt. ed. Pacific Islands portraits. See Davidson, J. W.SCARRY, RICHARD. Richard Scarry's great big air book; written and il. by Richard Scarry. 69p $3.95; lib bdg $4.39 Random house

533.6 Air. Flight
ISBN 0-394-92167-4 LC 77-146649

"Various animal characters demonstrate ways air is used. Rudolf Strudel, a fox in a World War I German helmet and plane, shows how an airplane flies. Benny Baboon compares a balloon with a jet engine, and Charlie Crow demonstrates how a bird flies. . . . The changing temperatures of the air are represented by seasonal activities. . . . A depiction of orchestra practice shows how air transmits sounds. . . . Preschool to grade three." (Library J)

"Lowly Worm, whose moment of glory comes when he knots the airlock and saves the lives of the astronauts. . . . is a genuine original. The illustrations are very carefully drawn: watch the changing angles of Charlie Crow's wing feathers, the remarkable collection of vintage aircraft, and also the accurate liveries of the airliners. It's a genuine puzzle, however, why children's illustrators feel a compulsion to slip in pieces of Victoriana, such as corn in sheaves and puffer trains, which are going to puzzle the toddlers of the 1970s far more than the jet engines and power shovels will."

Economist 241:68 D 18 '71 210w

"Suited to educational use with groups because of the successfully conveyed concepts, this will also appeal to individual children who will be able to identify specific characters and locate the labeled objects on the colorful, activity-filled pages." Patricia Vervoort

Library J 96:3894 N 15 '71 270w

"Some small children enjoy factual realistic information however fantastically dressed-up. . . . [This book] . . . looks pretty unpromising but proves to be admirable light-weight science, very professional, not a wasted line, half-picture, half-diagram." David Gentleman

New Statesman 82:664 N 12 '71 60w

TLS p1517 D 3 '71 70w

SCHAFER, FRANK. The new town story; with a foreword by Lord Silkin. 342p il $8.50 Humanities press

711 Cities and towns—Great Britain. City planning
LC 75-528399

This is an "account of the British efforts in large scale planning and community development, which gives a . . . picture of the problems, shortcomings, solutions, and achievements to date. . . . Schaffer deals with aspects such as government powers, the development corporation, selection of areas for new towns, planning objectives, financing, the present status of the 20 new towns under way, and the future prospects." (Choice) Index.

"[The book] focuses on the overall philosophy of the new towns and the way they are built, in contrast to F. Osborn and A. Whittick's New towns [BRD 1964] which emphasizes the history of each new town and the detailed study of their individual achievements. The two books supplement each other nicely, and, considering that new towns are increasingly recognized as the way to relieve the pressures on existing cities, as a mechanism for the planned distribution of new urban growth, and as a tool for improving the quality of life, they both deserve serious consideration."

Choice 7:1704 F '71 130w

"One is struck at last by the really conservative nature of the New Town ideal. It imagines that cities can and should be kept the same, or if possible rolled back to some earlier, better, less 'dense' time. This can be accomplished by decanting out 'overspill' instead of increasing the size of the container in height or girth. The evidence that has recently been piling up shows how limited the opportunities, how provincial the life, and how deprived the culture is of new towns." Nathan Silver

Encounter 35:81 S '70 450w

SCHAFLANDER, GERALD M., jt. auth. Passion and politics. See Lipset, S. M.SCHALK, ADOLPH. The Germans. 521p $10 Prentice-Hall

914.3 National characteristics, German
ISBN 0-13-354175-4 LC 77-151663

"Schalk, an American journalist . . . lived for eight years among the German people under the sponsorship of Atlantik-Brücke (Atlantic Bridge), an organization devoted to fostering American-German friendship. . . . His aim, he writes, 'is to describe the Germans as I found them, as I know them and, with all my foibles and shortcomings, as I love them,' with all their foibles and shortcomings." (Sat R)

Reviewed by P. H. Merkl

Ann Am Acad 403:193 S '72 250w

"Despite the title, the book essentially ignores Germans in contiguous Switzerland and Austria, treats the German Democratic Republic almost as an afterthought, and ends up being about the Federal Republic with which the author appears best acquainted; a chapter on Germans in the U.S. is an unfortunate aberration. The observations expressed are interesting and the judgments made may well be true, but the sociological data here published were too unsystematically collected to withstand serious scrutiny. . . . [An] appendix, 'Some distinguished Germans,' lists many not mentioned in the text and ignores others who are. Obviously the book is intended for a general audience, not for an academic one."

Choice 9:568 Je '72 160w

"Although Schalk may lack Barzini's literary touch, he sets out to do for Germany what [L.] Barzini did for the Italians [The Italians BRD 1964, 1965]: to provide an informal portrait of the complex German society living in the shadow of both a long romantic past and a recent terror-filled one. Something for everybody."

Christian Century 88:1422 D 1 '71 50w

Reviewed by G. N. Shuster

Commonweal 97:46 O 13 '72 650w

"[Schalk who] has served as German correspondent for American Catholic periodicals... concentrates on certain aspects of living conditions, cultural problems, and the national mentality in postwar Germany. He... has a remarkably full command of his subject and is a shrewd analyst whether he's dealing with the situation of the workman, the tensions within the Catholic Church, the problems of the small Jewish community, the new opportunities for women, the crisis of the universities, or the generation gap, to mention but a few topics. . . . An excellent introduction to Germany today." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 97:893 Mr 1 '72 330w

"Schalk knows a great deal about present-day Germans and he writes in a brisk, no-nonsense style. . . . [He] offers the reader a kind of guidebook that out-Baedekers the irrepressible Karl. Every phase of German life, from abortions to cafés, from nudist clubs to Lederhosen, is carefully scrutinized through a rose-tinted magnifying glass. Schalk deftly copes with such topics as German nationalism . . . the national guilt complex, the generation gap, 'the vanishing Gretchen,' and 'the great American inundation.' [He devotes much of the] volume to persistent behavior patterns of the Germans. Had Schalk been more attentive to the meaning of national character . . . and had he recognized its limited validity, his work would be even better than it is. . . . [Nevertheless, this book is] . . . a journalistic gem." L. L. Snyder

Sat R 55:65 Ja 29 '72 450w

SCHAM, ALAN. Lyautey in Morocco; protectorate administration, 1912-1925. 272p maps $8.75 Univ. of Calif. press

964 Morocco—Politics and government. French in Morocco. Lyautey, Louis Hubert Gonzalve

ISBN 0-520-01602-5 LC 74-92680

The author attempts to survey and assess the achievements of Lyautey "as Resident General in the Sherifian Empire (1912-1925), a period that saw the establishment of the key institutions of the Protectorate. Later chapters describe in turn the organizational changes that the French effected in four fields: government, property administration, education, and the judiciary. Central, municipal, and tribal government receive detailed attention because the most sweeping changes occurred in this sector." (Publisher's note) Chronology of Residents General, 1912-1956. Chronology of Sultans, 1873-1970. Glossary of Arabic terms. Bibliography. Index.

"Whatever may have been the excesses of his successors, Lyautey created the institutions and set the policy that led to the overthrow of the protectorate. There is little new in the story of the French failure in Morocco. But the author has provided in [this book]; something that is new: a detailed description of the governing institutions of the Sherifian Empire before and after the protectorate was established. Here lies the great value of this book. The author also has provided nine appendixes of reference material . . . and an extensive and valuable bibliography." L. B. Blair

Am Hist R 77:816 Je '72 400w

"[This is] a well documented and elegantly written monograph [about] . . . the accomplishments of France's most celebrated colonial administrator during his long proconsulship in the French protectorate of Morocco. . . . Lyautey as an opponent of the 'assimilationist' attitudes prevalent among other French colonizers . . . [favored] a policy which would contribute to modernizing the protectorate without necessarily uprooting the organic structure of a traditional Islamic society. Based primarily on French official printed sources, the book naturally tells the story from the French standpoint and tends to neglect the reaction of the native élite to the social and economic transformations brought about by Lyautey's reforms."

Choice 8:126 Mr '71 130w

SCHEFFER, VICTOR B. Little calf; adapted from The year of the whale; decorations by Leonard Everett Fisher. 140p il $5.95 Scribner

599 Whales—Juvenile literature
LC 79-123836

"As a starting point of his tale, the author has chosen a quiet month in autumn in the northeastern Pacific Ocean, where a sperm whale calf is born. Month by month, through the full circle of the year, the reader follows the adventures of the Little Calf; and in the process he learns about the birth and death of whales, the migrations of whales and their courtship, and the fierce battles they wage in the sea." (Publisher's note) "Grade six and up." (Library J)

Reviewed by E. M. Graves

Commonweal 93:205 N 20 '70 20w

"[This book] adapted from the 1969 winner of the Burroughs Medal for natural history, [BRD 1969] tells the story of one year in the life of a sperm whale. The author, a biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, brings a vast knowledge of whale biology and lore to bear, and demonstrates . . . ability to combine scientific information with a fine writing style. . . . He emphasizes the interdependence of all forms of life and captures both the miracle and transience of life. The entire format of the book suggests the hidden depths of the ocean: Fisher's illustrations, like the print, are all a deep sea-like blue." Janet Kuenstner

Library J 96:1524 Ap 15 '71 120w

"A poem in prose, an essay on marine biology." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 53:39 N 14 '70 50w

SHELL, ORVILLE. Modern China: the story of a revolution [by] Orville Schell & Joseph Esherick. 149p il lib bdg $5.49 Knopf

951 China—History—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-394-92062-7 LC 75-181026

"In their recounting of China's modern history from the Opium War through the Communist revolution, [the authors] attempt to show how war, famine and social change affected the ordinary peasant. They do this by incorporating full quotations from observers on the scene—sometimes from peasants themselves as they become more articulate in the present century." (N Y Times Bk R) Bibliography. Index. "Grade ten and up." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by D. A. Parente

Best Sell 32:99 My 15 '72 110w

"In an intriguing account, the authors have presented these years of history succinctly and with insight. Superior to [Robert] Goldston's The Rise of Red China [BRD 1967], which provides more factual material, this book presents information in a more readable and understandable manner—the authors are concerned with the causes of events rather than with the factual presentation of them. . . . The tone of this volume—aimed at understanding China and aiding the development of common ground—is excellent for readers in our era of 'Ping-pong diplomacy.' Unfortunately, the slick production of the book detracts from the excellent text." A. S.

Horn Bk 48:279 Je '72 230w

Reviewed by Carey McWilliams

Nation 214:829 Je 26 '72 70w

"[The authors] relate events in China to the American scene in a way that students can identify with. The Western nations' plunder of the coastal cities, and the missionaries carrying their religion inland, are compared to foreigners sacking Washington and traveling throughout the land preaching an alien creed. Their contrasts between China under Chiang and China under Mao are black and white. Mao is shown not without weaknesses, but when the Communists take over the mainland in 1949, his policies such as the Great Leap Forward and the Cultural Revolution are treated uncritically. Still, the authors are justified in concluding that since Chinese history is different from our own, their solutions will also be different." Merle Schoenbrun

N Y Times Bk R p8 My 14 '72 270w

SCHERMAN, THOMAS K., ed. The Beethoven companion; ed. by Thomas K. Scherman and Louis Biancolli. 1230p $15 Doubleday 780.92 Beethoven, Ludwig van
LC 74-125530

"Combining biography, analysis, and appraisal, [this work] examines the man and the creator period by period, development by development, and [ideals also with the] . . . diversity of [Beethoven's] compositions from the start of his career to its close. . . . Each of the six sections summarizes the events of a given span of years. This resume is followed by reminiscences of those who knew [Beethoven]. . . . These, in turn, are followed by relevant letters, and finally a classified analysis of the individual works of those years." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a compendium for both amateurs and serious students of Beethoven. . . . The book gathers essays by . . . Peter Latham, Edouard Herriot, Daniel Gregory Mason, Ludwig Schiedermair . . . and many others of renown. . . . No devotee of the great composer should be far away from an edition of this book. Yet, in a sense, finishing even this big book leaves one with the impression of having only scratched the surface of the life of one of the finest composers who ever lived." L. D. Mitchell

Best Sell 31:542 Mr 1 '72 500w

"[This work] has no scholarly pretensions. Rather, it is an anthology of material about Beethoven's life and works, drawn from many sources. . . . Scherman has written special analytical essays on those pieces for which no suitable published analysis already existed. (Choice of analytical material was severely limited by the editors' decision to include no music examples, for the sake of the Beethoven lover who does not read music.) Most music libraries already have many of this book's sources. Possibly it may be useful for reference in large general libraries." Dika Newlin
Library J 96:2512 Ag '71 100w

SCHICK, JACK M. The Berlin crisis, 1958-1962. 266p $9.50 Univ. of Pa. press 327 Berlin. Berlin wall (1961- ). U.S.—Foreign relations—Russia. Russia—Foreign relations—U.S.
ISBN 0-8122-7683-7 LC 70-153425

This is a "study of the U.S.-Soviet confrontation over Berlin from the 'deadline crisis' of 1958, through the U-2 incident of 1960, the construction of the Berlin Wall, and the Missile Crisis of 1962. . . . [The author discusses] the dangers involved in Berlin, the miscalculations both the U.S. and the Soviet Union were prone to make, the difficult situation the U.S. is faced with in Berlin and how this . . . limits our course of action, and finally how important Berlin and divided Germany still are as keys to peace in the nuclear age." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This work] does not advance a reappraisal of either the origins or the principal events of the cold war, nor does the author purport to offer a theoretical addition to the literature of crisis diplomacy or conflict resolution. As a study of a particular subject, it is noteworthy not because of a unique interpretation or presentation of previously unavailable material, but for its thorough and coherent treatment in the traditional manner, its factual text embellished by numerous analytical judgments. . . . [This] is an admirable work as it stands, a piece of sound and articulate scholarship, and an important companion to the best of the available literature on the subject." Robert McGeehan
Am Pol Sci R 66:1091 S '72 1100w

"[This is an] analytical monograph for the student of recent American diplomatic history written in an alternately dull and lively style. . . . Secondary works, a few memoirs, published documents, and The New York Times make up the citations—an obvious problem until more national archives are opened. Meanwhile, a necessary study."

Choice 9:263 Ap '72 160w

Reviewed by Keith Eubank
J Am Hist 59:221 Je '72 300w

"Having conducted extensive research in newspapers, memoirs, and official publications, Schick, a research associate at the Washington Center for Foreign Policy Research and an analyst for the Center for Naval Analyses, has written a good [study. However] for a full picture of the important effects of this four-year crisis period on developments in Great Britain, France, and especially West and East Germany, the reader will have to turn elsewhere." B. D. Loynd

Library J 97:1013 Mr 15 '72 130w

"[This] book about the last Berlin crisis is a well-timed reminder of how abominable and frightening those times were. . . . Schick's account of these years is cool and a trifle superior; it is an extremely competent study in mutual misperception. To read it, however, is to congratulate oneself on being alive. . . . [His] judgment on how the Berlin crisis was handled is logical but unappealing." Neal Ascherson
N Y Rev of Books 18:29 Ap 20 '72 600w

SCHIFF, KEN. Passing go. 152p $5.95 Dodd
ISBN 0-396-06487-6 LC 71-180935

"An 18-year-old boy's day-by-day account of four bleak months spent in a mental hospital. . . . The mental patient relates, in his journal, incidents from his affluent but painful home life in suburban Connecticut, describing his incestuous involvement with his older sister, and her eventual death." (Library J)

Reviewed by John Druska
Commonweal 96:339 Je 16 '72 700w

"This readable novel is a curious blend of the real and surreal. Conveying the confusion in the narrator's mind by mixing past and present happenings with fantasy, the author leaves it to the reader to piece the story together. (Mood takes precedence over plot; rather than deciding what is real in the book, we feel the protagonist's emotional responses to what he sees as reality). . . . Raw everyday events in the sanitarium form a stark backdrop to this subtle yet passionate self-portrait of an adolescent in turmoil." J. W. Smothers

Library J 97:2436 J1 '72 150w

New Repub 166:29 Ap 15 '72 170w

"Schiff catches with beautiful simplicity the emotional range of his hero—from violent desperation to hopeful escape into 'open waters.' If this primitivism seems unduly naive, it seems also deeply felt." Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p23 Ap 2 '72 200w

SCHIFF, ZEEV. Fedayeen; guerrillas against Israel, by Zeev Schiff and Raphael Rothstein. 246p il $6.95 McKay

956 Fedayeen. Jewish-Arab relations. Guerrilla warfare
LC 72-188270

This study of the origins, organizations and activities of the Fedayeen, guerrilla groups organized by Palestinian refugees in their struggle against Israel, describes their terrorist raids and hijackings, their internecine squabbling, their meteoric rise and fall in Jordan, their impact on the chances for peace in the Middle East. Index.

Reviewed by E. D. Schmiel
Best Sell 32:273 S 15 '72 190w

"The book is marred by vague generalizations, false assertions, and factual errors. . . . Frequently, the information amounts to little more than a compilation of headlines with no thoughtful analysis. . . . The occasional bits of unique and interesting information presented are called into question by the errors in other sections. . . . No bibliography; inadequate index; useful pictures. . . . Recommended only for libraries acquiring everything written on the Arab-Israeli conflict."

Choice 9:1042 O '72 180w

"[The authors,] an Israeli and an American, . . . explain the current guerrilla disarray and warn that major hostilities may ignite at any time. Unfortunately, the book is disorganized and uneven; it varies between an understanding presentation of the growth of Palestinian nationalism and an arrogant portrayal of Arab ineptitude and brutality. Some parts of the work distort the historical record, recounting Arab terrorism of the 1920's and 1930's but almost completely ignoring comparable Jewish acts." E. R. Hayford
Library J 97:2409 J1 '72 200w

"[This study] amounts to a short course in the Palestine liberation movement. The authors, both of whom work for Israel's leading newspaper, Ha'aretz, are calm in their discussion and sympathetic to the bitter plight of the Palestinian exiles, and they bend over backward to be fair. . . . [They] review the history of the various fedayeen outfits, with particular focus on the principal one, Fatah. It is all very instructive and, at times, absorbing, but . . . one despairs of any kind of peaceful solution to a terrifying problem. The authors, certainly, offer no hope of one."

New Yorker 48:72 S 2 '72 160w

SCHIFFMAN, JACK. Uptown; the story of Harlem's Apollo theatre. 210p $6.50 Cowles 792 Apollo Theatre, Harlem, New York (City)
ISBN 0-402-12062-0 LC 76-146812

"This reminiscence by the son of the white founder/owner of Harlem's . . . Apollo Theatre . . . relates anecdotes about black performers, with chunks of Harlem social history and a brief history of Afro-American popular music." (Library J)

"[This account] is written in a breezy, informal style that suggests show business autobiographies. . . . Even though Uptown is too rambling to really hold one's interest, many readers will find it pleasant. Many will find Schiffman's view of Harlem and its residents unpleasant, however, for he frequently seems to condescend; although this is clearly not what he had in mind and one respects his intentions. For insights into black music, one should turn to LeRoi Jones's Black Music [BRD 1968] and some sections of Albert Goldman's Freakshow [BRD 1971], but there are collections that will want to have Uptown as a browsing item." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:2536 Ag '71 140w

"Nostalgia occasionally dampens a page; but for the most part this is a good, light chronicle of black variety theater since the thirties and, incidentally, of Harlem's changing social scene."

N Y Times Bk R p29 Je 13 '71 50w

SCHILLEBEECKX, EDWARD. World and church; tr. by N. D. Smith. 306p $7.50 Sheed 201 Christianity
ISBN 0-8362-1351-3 LC 78-103361

These "essays point out the dangers of a secularization which neglects the sacred dimensions of the world and its subjection to the Lord of History; the need for humanism to bow humbly before the gift of the Spirit; new roles and dangers for priests and laymen as they plunge into the secular and rub shoulders with 'anonymous Christians' among Marxists and unbelievers; the Christian meaning of human bodiliness; the nuanced approaches needed by modern Christians in health, social, and educational services; and the identity crises of 'Catholic' hospitals and universities." (Library J)

"This book consists of . . . essays and speeches dealing with the general theme of Christian humanism. It will do much to show readers the inadequacies of 19-century pieties. The author strongly recommends that devout Catholics should give themselves to the humble service of the world in union with men of good will everywhere." E. S. Stanton

America 126:547 My 20 '72 80w

"This translation of the third volume of the author's collected essays contains material published between 1949 and 1969. . . . The discussions are pertinent; unfortunately, the author's dense style is not helped by the flawed translation." W. C. Heiser

Library J 97:690 F 15 '72 130w

SCHILLER, GERTRUD. Iconography of Christian art, v 1 il $25 N.Y. graphic 704.94 Christian art and symbolism
LC [78-588343]

This first of a five-volume work, translated by Janet Seligman from the second German edition of 1969, deals with "symbols of the incarnation, followed by descriptions of events in Christ's childhood, baptism, temptation, works, and miracles." (Choice) Bibliography.

"A valuable reference work particularly for the range of illustrative material included. . . . The work is not a dictionary. Thematic material is presented logically on the basis of theological concepts and Biblical sequence. The text is authoritative, well written, and excellently translated. Page headings orient the reader. Major themes are fully covered with emphasis on representations from the earliest beginnings through the 15th century. References to recent literature are comprehensive. . . . The 585 illustrations, in good black and white and adequate size, are alone worth the price of the book. Indispensable to both the art historian and the historian of religion." Choice 8:378 My '71 180w

"This first volume is concerned with the iconography of the life of Christ up to the period of the Passion. . . . Iconographic studies are useful for the light they shed on different attitudes over the centuries, and this volume is an excellent addition to iconographic literature. It is quite complete in itself, though the thematic index announced for Volumes 1 and 2 will add greatly to its convenience. The text is well organized, with references to various sources; the volume includes . . . an index of Biblical and legendary texts cited. The illustrations cover a wide range of periods and art forms, including manuscript illumination, painting, relief, and the decoration of candlesticks and other objects. The catalog of plates gives pertinent information, and the photographic credits show how widely the author has cast her net for materials. . . . It can be recommended for larger academic and art libraries. Theological libraries should consider purchase also." Julia Sabine

Library J 96:1355 Ap 15 '71 320w

"[This] is not to be regarded as a scholar's publication. Gertrud Schiller is at some pains to explain in her preface the condensed nature of some of her material 'in order to maintain the required size and not to overburden the reader'. . . . [She] defines her approach as an investigation into the origins of individual pictorial themes, their development in relation to devotional writing and liturgy, and in broad outline how they interrelate. It is obvious that some limitation should be brought to a study as ambitious as this, but the first volume . . . does tantalize. . . . It is the examination of origins which is a little disappointing. . . . For the general reader, however, Gertrud Schiller has done a great service in gleaning the numerous journals and specialized publications of the past few decades, and has made readily available to the interested public this sum total of authoritative information in one opus."

TLS p692 Je 18 '71 900w

SCHILLING, EDMUND. The German drawings in the collection of Her Majesty the Queen at Windsor Castle; the Supplements to the catalogues of Italian and French drawings, with a history of the Royal Collection of Drawings, by Anthony Blunt. 239p pl $30 Phaidon

741.9 Drawings, German—Catalogs. Drawings, Italian—Catalogs. Drawings, French—Catalogs. Windsor Castle
ISBN 0-7148-1446-4 LC 73-111053

"The latest volume of the . . . series of catalogues of the drawings in the Royal Collection [for which Sir Anthony Blunt is the general editor] begins with the description of just over sixty German drawings. [Reproductions of twenty-seven are included]. . . . As the catalogue of German drawings is so thin . . . it was decided to add the new information and corrections for the Italian and French drawings as an appendix." (TLS) Concordances. Index of agenda and corrigenda.

"The title of this volume is misleading in that far more text is given to supplements of the Italian and French drawings, over 700 of the former and 37 of the latter. . . . As it has become to be expected of this series, the illustrations are fine and the level of scholarship at its highest. All the volumes in this series are a must for libraries dealing with drawing connoisseurship. And this volume is necessary to update the volumes on Italian and French drawings already issued."

Choice 9:54 Mr '72 200w

"It was particularly fortunate that the expertise of Edmund Schilling was available to tackle [the German drawings]. Nobody today can claim an equal grasp of the material. . . . Though full of fascinating and important material, [this] is inevitably a hybrid and will—especially in conjunction with the previously published volumes—be cumbersome to use. . . . [It] will be the answer to the prayers of examiners of the classification and cataloguing papers for the diploma in librarianship, for the contents require cross-references to no fewer than eight volumes and as many authors. This said, it must be recorded how much new and fascinating information is contained in [the] supplement. Sir Anthony Blunt has relied upon, and scrupulously acknowledged, the views of many specialist scholars."

SCHILLING, EDMUND—Continued

TLS p1104 S 17 '71 400w

SCHIRMER, DANIEL B. Republic or empire; American resistance to the Philippine war; pref. by Howard Zinn. 298p il $8.95; pa $3.95 Schenkman pub; for sale by General Learning Press

327.73 U.S.—Politics and government. Philippine Islands—History
LC 74-189100

This is a "study of the Anti-Imperialist League centered in Massachusetts which mustered . . . men in various walks of life for goading the American people into action against their government's harsh suppression of the Filipino bid for independence (1899-1904). A preface, written by Harold Zinn, shows parallels between happenings in Vietnam and those in the Philippines—at the turn of the century." (Best Sell) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Obviously motivated by public concern over Vietnam, Schirmer has delved into America's other 'unpopular' war of this century. His research of primary sources has been meticulous. While the book is designed more for students of American history, it is worth a reading by the general public." J. C. Dougherty

Best Sell 32:140 Je 15 '72 370w

"[This is] a good account of the 'anti-imperialist' movement of the turn of the century. As Howard Zinn points out, the book corrects the historic imbalance in which the war against Spain became 'a splendid little war' to which the ugly sequel of the taking of the Philippines was 'a shadowy anti-climax.'" Carey McWilliams

Nation 214:823 Je 26 '72 70w

"[This] book should be read as a historical interpretation of the anti-imperialist movement, not as a parable on present-day troubles. . . . Despite the rather simplistic overall interpretation resulting from Schirmer's preoccupation with economic factors, this is an important book. It would have been even better if he had broken out of the confining mold of New Left history and ranged more widely in his examination of motivations and actions—particularly of the imperialists and their large following." Frank Freidel

N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 23 '72 950w

SCHLEE, ANN. The strangers; il. by Pat Marriott. 151p $4.50 Atheneum pubs.

LC 72-175562

"In April, 1651, Kate Nants' home on the island of Tresco, one of the Scilly Isles, became the scene of a frightening and dangerous adventure for her when a ship bound for France with Royalist refugees went aground on the rocks. Kate's fisherman-father, who had helped in the rescue, brought home two of the survivors—a gentlewoman and her son Lum, both near exhaustion. [They are the strangers]." (Horn Bk) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"The influence of the sea is ever present in this well-written historical adventure, as is the awareness of the bitter conflict between the Roundheads and the Royalists. The harsh and primitive life of the island folk is vividly re-created. The setting, action, and excitement of the story are suggested effectively in the line drawings. Although the events will be of particular interest to readers with a knowledge of the history of the period, this story of courage and loyalty is complete and satisfying in itself." B. R.

Horn Bk 48:276 Je '72 170w

"The story, based in part on an actual incident, is compact and action-filled and excellently portrays the islands and their inhabitants. Lum's gradual change from a spoiled, selfish boy to a more mature, responsible one, the innate dignity and wisdom of Nants, and Kate's bewildered fascination and growing fondness for the strangers are very well drawn, and even the secondary characters are admirably depicted. An outline map is included and black-and-white line drawings deftly capture physical surroundings." Nancy Berkowitz

Library J 97:1608 Ap 15 '72 300w

Reviewed by Ann Thwaite

New Statesman 82:662 N 12 '71 50w

"What lifts this above the usual run of such adventures is the power with which physical sensations (like the feel of sand to bare toes near a bonfire) and the natural background are described, often by unexpected metaphors, like 'bright jostling waters.'"

TLS p1322 O 22 '71 300w

SCHLEGEL, RICHARD. Inquiry into science; its domain and limits; il. by Al Nagy. 108p $4.95 Doubleday

500 Science

LC 74-144295

The author "seeks to define the domain and limits of scientific study—science as a continuing quest for knowledge, challenged by the limits inherent in the methods of science and by the unpredictability found in nature itself. [He covers the] range of the scientific realm from quantum physics and astronomical cosmology to the interrelationships of science and the arts." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This book] can be read with profit by the practitioner of science, as well as by those non-scientists who are not quite sure what science is all about but are inquisitive enough to want to find out. It could also be used profitably as collateral reading in science courses for non-science majors." C. J. Keffer

Best Sell 32:20 Ap 1 '72 180w

"[This] is a much-condensed version of . . . [the author's] celebrated 1967 book Completeness in science [BRD 1968] with extra chapters on 'Science and the humanities' and 'Science and the universe.' In some respects, this is the better book, since Schlegel gives us a succinct, precise introduction to the nature of science and the philosophy of science, avoiding much of the rigor and detail which his previous book contains and to which the reader can turn for further elaboration and explication. . . . The section on cosmology is beautifully written and explained, and his treatment of Godel's theorem may be the best nontechnical summary in existence. All in all, an excellent little book which lives up to Schlegel's reputation as a physicist and philosopher."

Choice 9:670 J1/Ag '72 180w

"Written as a discussion of the limitations and completeness of science for the 'young student or the layman,' the book is certainly a failure. On some occasions the author carefully explains a scientific point, but on others he refers extensively to things about which the reader could not be expected to have any knowledge. Several individual (brief) discussions are quite interesting (e.g., general relativity), but are not always germane to the intent of the book. The illustrations and photographs are poor and frequently irrelevant to the text." R. A. Rudin

Library J 97:1726 My 1 '72 80w

SCHLEMMER, OSKAR. The letters and diaries of Oskar Schlemmer; sel. and ed. by Tut Schlemmer; tr. from the German by Krishna Winston. 425p il $19.95 Wesleyan univ. press

B or 92

ISBN 0-8195-4047-1

LC 77-184362

"The widow of the painter Oskar Schlemmer, a member of the Bauhaus in Weimar and Dessau from 1920 to 1929, has selected portions of his diaries and of his letters and connected them with chronologies to illustrate his artistic endeavor and his life. Schlemmer was considered a 'degenerate artist' by the National Socialists, but he was unwilling to leave Germany and spent the years of Nazi rule doing menial work, testing paints, and designing camouflage against air attacks. He died in 1943. [Included are a] description of the conflicts and uncertainties in the Bauhaus and . . . details of the life of a politically suspect artist . . . [as well as] . . . passages on the artist's search for his art—a mixture of symbolic abstraction and naturalism, or, as he called it, humanism." (Library J) Chronology. Index of names.

"These expertly translated memoirs were not meant for publication and are, therefore, uneven. The philosophical ruminations tend to be banal, but the more gossipy entrees are fascinating because they often reveal the less idealistic aspects of the Bauhaus . . . Schlemmer scholars, what few there may be, will want this book. . . . The dozen reproductions have only documentary interest. The true value of this book is that it is an authentic and complete primary source as are the journals of Eugene Delacroix and the letters of Van Gogh. Their worth will be determined on one's assessment of Schlemmer and the Bauhaus experience."

Choice 9:957 O '72 180w

"There is a lack of monographic material on Schlemmer, but a study of his work teaches more about his art than the searching statements in his writings. For larger scholarly library collections in the field of 20th-Century art." J. L. Dewton

Library J 97:2078 Je 1 '72 250w

SCHLEMMER, OSKAR. Man; teaching notes from the Bauhaus; ed. by Heimo Kuchling; tr. by Janet Seligman. (A Bauhaus bk) 159p il $8.95 MIT press

741 Anatomy, Artistic. Figure drawing. Drawing—Philosophy. Bauhaus
ISBN 0-262-19095-8 LC 72-151722

"Schlemmer, who taught life drawing and directed the theater department from 1920-29 at the Bauhaus, evolved a course, 'Man,' toward the end of his tenure there. He systematized his theories and described his teaching methods in a set of notes, which have been edited and published here for the first time." (Choice)

"This book will interest scholars specializing in Bauhaus history; to others, it will probably seem simplistic, fragmentary, and academic. There are nearly 70 plates, mostly of Schlemmer's drawings, some of those svelte, mechanistic, robot-like figures which people his painting, while others are more naturalistic. These latter reveal that Schlemmer was a slick draughtsman who was surprisingly inept in constructing the human figure."

Choice 8:1169 N '71 120w

Reviewed by A. C. Birnholz

J Aesthetics 30:552 summer '72 500w

"With the publication of Schlemmer's notes the M.I.T. Press has not only rescued more Bauhaus material from oblivion but has given the collector an easy way to plug a hole. . . . [Schlemmer's] 'notes' are just that—fragments, ungainly outlines, sketches, loose ideas on man, space, norm, and form. Great care has been taken by the editor, the translator, and the artist's wife to preserve and reproduce these writings exactly as Schlemmer set them down; hence, the documentation in this volume is above reproach. However, the volume never seems to shake off a certain lifelessness and therefore is of interest only as a period piece. For intensive collections only." P. A. Andersen

Library J 96:3598 N 1 '71 160w

Reviewed by Lawrence Alloway
Nation 213:665 D 20 '71 90w

SCHLEMMER, TUT. ed. The letters and diaries of Oskar Schlemmer. See Schlemmer, O.

SCHLESINGER, ARTHUR M., ed. History of American presidential elections, 1789-1968; ed. by Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr.; Fred L. Israel, associate ed. [and] William P. Hansen, managing editor. 4v $135 Chelsea house pubs; McGraw

329 Presidents—U.S.—Election. U.S.—Politics and government
ISBN 07-079786-2 LC 70-139269

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Booklist 69:365 D 15 '72 1400w

Choice 8:1638 F '72 170w

Reviewed by D. E. Fehrenbacher

J Am Hist 59:113 Je '72 1150w

SCHMANDT, HENRY J. Milwaukee; ■ contemporary urban profile [by] Henry J. Schmandt, John C. Goldbach, and Donald B. Vogel. 244p $10 Praeger

320.9775 Milwaukee—Politics and government. Milwaukee—Social conditions. Milwaukee—Economic conditions
LC 71-167622

"The first chapter . . . outlines the environmental context—social, economic, cultural, political, and physical—of the Milwaukee community and the second its formal governmental structure. . . . Chapter 3 examines the roles of . . . the central city mayor and the county executive. . . . Chapter 4 looks at the question of community power. . . . The [next] two chapters . . . concentrate on . . . finances . . . and race and housing. . . . The final two chapters extend the problems and issues of the metropolis . . . to the suburban and county governments in the area and to higher levels of public authority in the state and the nation; and [take] a speculative look at the future of the city and region." (Pref) Index.

"Much of the volume is reflective of the activities and style of the Mayor of Milwaukee, Henry W. Maier. . . . The authors substantiate that Maier has put into practice his theory of urban leadership, enunciated in his previously published work, Challenge to the Cities [BRD 1966]. The Mayor has been far more successful in consolidation power than his counterpart, the County Executive. . . . The authors have written an informative and perceptive volume. It should be read by all interested in Milwaukee and urban political systems." Nelson Wikstrom

Ann Am Acad 402:166 Jl '72 700w

"The approach wavers between that of an old-fashioned administrative study and a modern power account. The most interesting parts deal with the mayor's difficulties with the local press and Father Groppi's organization of black discontented. The major theme is that even stable, happy Milwaukee, home of good government, beer, and baseball cannot escape racism, labor problems, and the spiraling costs of city services. Recommended for urban, power study, and university collections. Well documented by reputable authors."

Choice 9:251 Ap '72 140w

"This book initiates a welcome new series [Urban Profiles series] that should serve to document the dilemmas of the smaller metropolitan areas. Milwaukee is engaging for several reasons. The chapter devoted to organizational matters succeeds in making a dull subject interesting. And, in the other accounts, the political personalities, the struggles for more revenue, the problems of fiscal disparities, out-migration, and housing are considered in concise, useful form. In all, this micro view of Milwaukee and its environs gives the full flavor of political reality." D. L. Norrgard

Library J 96:3629 N 1 '71 150w

SCHMIDT, JOHANN KASPAR. See Stirner, M.

SCHMIDT-NIELSEN, KNUT. How animals work. 114p il $5.95 Cambridge

591.1 Physiology, Comparative. Animals
ISBN 0-521-08417-2 LC 77-174262

In this "analysis of how animals work and function, Schmidt-Nielsen . . . [gives an] understanding of comparative physiology in relation to body size, form and function, energy supply, and environment." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book is a little gem; it treats in an authoritative and charming manner a number of physiological and morphological adaptations which animals evolved in coping with certain environmental exigencies. . . . What really ties the chapters together is the attention to evolutionary finesse which often leads to energy saving in the performance of gross metabolic activities. The book is short, and even though it treats a few general topics only, it covers a lot of ground. Through the selective marshaling of facts, it strives, successfully, and effortlessly at that, toward the exposition of principles. . . . I recommend [this book] to fellow biologists of all ages as one of the better buys of its kind." J. E. Bardach

Science 177:1183 S 29 '72 700w

"These sharp, lively lectures, [are] meant for readers at the undergraduate biology level. . . . Professor Schmidt-Nielsen moves so masterfully within this classic domain to display his simple solutions to hard questions that the reader is both delighted and enriched. . . . In spite of what seems like a promise, the book ends without making it quite clear why the basic metabolic rate of warm-blooded animals rises not proportionately to their heat-losing surface area but to that area raised to a power a little above 1.1." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 227:122 O '72 1300w

SCHMITHALS, WALTER. Paul & the Gnostics; tr. by John E. Steely. 279p $9 Abingdon 227 Paul, Saint. Bible. Gnosticism
ISBN 0-687-30492-X LC 70-175130

This is an "examination of the heretical movements that lie behind Paul's letters to the Galatians, the Philippians, the Thessalonians, and the brief passage in Romans 16:17-20.... Schmithals maintains that the various heresies of the Pauline churches constituted in fact a single Gnostic religious movement that flourished in these communities beginning 54 A.D." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Many New Testament scholars, e.g. Helmut Koester and Guenther Bornkamm, would disagree with Schmithals, holding instead that not one but several kinds of heresies were operative during this period. However, Schmithals' case is meticulously and cogently defended and warrants serious consideration by scholars in the field of Pauline studies and early church history. The reader will regret the absence of an index to this useful work but will be grateful for the five-page bibliography."

Choice 9:382 My '72 130w

"In the opening chapter . . . Schmithals argues that the Galatian heretics were Jewish Christian Gnostics. Few will find this thesis convincing, and even fewer will find the author's distorted and extreme exegesis compelling. Schmithals writes as if, having had a vision of truth, he must now force all the evidence into the shape of that vision. . . . [Though this book] confirms the skepticism which greeted Schmithals' earlier work Gnosticism in Corinth, one must be careful not to throw out the baby with the bath water. In this book Schmithals does offer some positive and sound contributions." K. P. Donfried

Christian Century 89:696 Je 14 '72
350w

SCHMITT, GLADYS. The Godforgotten. 312p
$6.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-136065-0 LC 77-182333

This novel concerns a legendary community living on "an isthmus separated from mainland Europe [in 998 A.D.] by a tidal wave. The islanders, descendants of the Benedictine community there, believe that the world has ended, that God forgot only their promontory in the general destruction. They are more amazed than consoled when in the year 1096 A.D. Father Albrecht, a monk from Cologne, arrives on a papal mission to investigate and instruct. When he leaves, after several dramatic months, they are back in the tradition." (Library J)

"On the premise, rather unlikely even for the tenth century, that the members of a religious community isolated by flood and earthquake would not only assume they had been overlooked on the Day of Judgment but that during a century none of their descendants would question the notion, Miss Schmitt has constructed a grim, intelligent novel examining the nature of Christian doctrine. The tale is full of action and outrage." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:113 Je '72 70w

Reviewed by W. A. C. Francis
Best Sell 32:195 Jl 15 '72 650w

Reviewed by Margaret Wimsatt
Library J 97:1348 Ap 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by A. B. Masters
Library J 97:3474 O 15 '72 100w [YA]

"The question Miss Schmitt asked herself was: 'How would people live in a world devoid of meaning and purpose?' Her answer seems to be, 'Rather badly.' The change that is of the greatest interest to Father Albrecht is in sexual mores. . . . The effect of the novel owes much to the evenness of tone that Miss Schmitt maintains through all the turns and twists of the plot. . . . If her diction is always selfconscious, it is only rarely opaque. Historical novels often have allegorical elements, and they are sometimes ruined by them. 'The Godforgotten,' although it deliberately presents a parallel to the present, is a novel about people, believable people, in a special world artfully shaped by the creative imagination." Granville Hicks

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ag 20 '72 650w

Reviewed by Mayo Mohs
Time 99:89 Je 19 '72 300w

SCHMITZ, CARL AUGUST. Oceanic art; myth, man, and image in the South Seas [tr. by Norbert Guterman]. 405p il col il $35 Abrams

709.9 Art, Oceanian
ISBN 0-8109-0351-2 LC 69-12797

In this book Schmitz attempts to tie "together the history, religion, and art of Melanesia, Polynesia, and Micronesia." (Library J) Bibliography.

"This book superbly meets the best technical standards in presenting 337 illustrations including 50 hand-tipped color plates. Schmitz, an expert in Melanesian art and curator of the Museum für Völkerkunde, Basel, before his early death, has chosen many items from this justly famous collection. . . . However, in limiting his choices to wood and stone artifacts (a Western orientation), Schmitz ignores works in basketry and other organic materials which are of aesthetic as well as ethnographic value. Despite the subtitle, 'myth,' ethnographic and ideological contextual explanations are superficially treated. . . . As art [this volume is] a beautiful addition; as information, substandard, but in a field of art for which there is still need for exposure to the vivid imagination of Melanesian artists. Buy it."

Choice 8:1530 F '72 200w

"Schmitz was one of the world's leading authorities on Oceanic art. In this book . . . there is an excellent introductory section providing the layman with a concise overview of the history of Oceania from early man to the present, and a summary of the basic art traditions. Each of the three culture areas is discussed in detail; New Guinea is described in a separate chapter reflecting Schmitz's primary area of interest. Maps of the area are included in the text, making the geographical relationships very clear. Well written, and the illustrations are outstanding." G. E. Evans

Library J 97:673 F 15 '72 100w

"[The author] bases his culture-area survey on a theory of Melanesian culture history which, while highly contestable in modern social anthropological circles, is always extremely scholarly and does impose some order on a wide range of heterogeneous material. A major disadvantage, however, would seem to be that while some 335 pages are devoted to Melanesia, Polynesia gets only 55, while Micronesia gets 15." Nathaniel Tarn

N Y Times Bk R p7 D 12 '71 250w

Reviewed by K. O. L. Burredge
Pacific Affairs 45:471 fall '72 320w

SCHNAPP, ALAIN. The French student uprising, November 1967-June 1968; an analytical record by Alain Schnapp and Pierre Vidal-Naquet; tr. by Maria Jolas. 654p $17.50 Beacon press

378.1 Students—France—Political activity—Sources

ISBN 0-8070-4388-5 LC 74-156452

This book deals with "the student movement in France and its relationships with similar movements in other countries. It presents 232 documents selected from among thousands published in France during the student uprising from November 1967 to June 1968. Each document is . . . analyzed and placed in its proper setting." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index. First published in France in 1969 as Journal de la Commune Etudiante: Textes et Documents Novembre 1967-Juin 1968.

"[The authors] attempt to catch the mood of the French university community during the tumultuous period resulting in the downfall of the de Gaulle government. The information is copious and unless one is interested in European revolutionary rhetoric or familiar with the French situation, the documents are tedious." D. F. Sharpe

Best Sell 31:542 Mr 1 '72 300w

Choice 9:94 Mr '72 70w

"Anyone who undertakes a serious study of student unrest in Europe during the 1960's will have to peruse this extensive collection of source materials . . . [which] range from pamphlets to posters and manifestos, from mimeographed handouts to scholarly appraisal of the problems of the French university. There is humor in a few pieces, anger in the majority, and a concerned social conscience in all of them. The book is amply footnoted, and an excellent multilingual bibliography on 'The Student Movement in the World' is appended. Recommended for academic and large public libraries." J. A. Clarke

Library J 96:2770 S 15 '71 150w

"This book tells only half the story, and does not pretend to do more than that. . . . But within its self-appointed limits [it] is most valuable. . . . It is a mine of information for the general reader and should stimulate passionate debates on subjects such as reform and revolution or spontaneity and organization." Daniel Singer

Nation 214:312 Mr 6 '72 1100w

"[This] mammoth compilation of sources . . . is virtually a moment-by-moment account of the French student uprising. . . . The editors avoid special pleading and obvious explanations of the internal dynamics of student protest—e.g., 'generational conflict'—but their ardent belief in the 'absolute originality of the event' doesn't square with the claim that the students 'reenacted, like mummies, the Petrograd Soviet.' . . . An introduction by Vidal Naquet places the student movement in an international setting, using Berkeley and Columbia as well as events in Italy and Germany to show what the different movements have in common. This is a valuable, if sometimes excessively detailed, study."

N Y Rev of Books 17:29 D 30 '71 250w

Reviewed by R. O. Paxton

N Y Times Bk R p48 S 24 '72 120w

SCHNECK, STEPHEN. Nocturnal Vaudeville. 191p $6.95 Dutton

ISBN 0-525-16822-2 LC 74-133581

This novel features the productions of a late-night television network show which focus on murder, sex, and violence. "Owned and operated by the Dead Circus Network, Nocturnal Vaudeville gives America the dreams and fantasies it wants. Their first creation was the legendary Apples Bonet, whose brief but meteoric career ended with a rifle shot on her wedding night." (Publisher's note)

"Schneck has written a macabre fantasy about the macabre fantasies which, he assures us, dominate the nation's dreams. The writing is clever, sometimes brilliant, but fantasy plus fantasy adds up to a geometric progression (bad mathematics but good nightmare logic), and the credibility gap extends to the dark side of the moon. One ends by admiring the author's performance and forgetting the realities that provoked it." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:109 F '72 70w

Reviewed by R. J. Williams

Best Sell 31:533 Mr 1 '72 700w

"This frantic and bizarre novel defies classification. . . . [The murder of Apples] makes sense. The rest of the book is a curious mixture of movie argot, philosophical asides, and weird dialogues. The reader who outlasts the author's strident prose may well yearn for the good old days of real vaudeville. At least it was entertaining." H. E. Hutchinson

Library J 96:4109 D 15 '71 80w

"Schneck's surreal new novel. . . is not only a variety act of tricks and sexual stunts, but fantasy's entrepreneur, the genius of the powerful Dead Circus television network. Schneck's show of a novel is so slick and so dull, so full of glib images and worn ideas that it must be a Dead Circus production. . . . Are your lusts, manias, fetishes all mass-produced? Is a peepshow into yourself anonymous as a TV screen? Are you your boob tube? Schneck's novel raises all of these questions, but none of them is very interesting. [His novel] has neither smashing style, nor depth of thought nor real originality nor more than occasionally electric images." Josephine Hendin

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ap 2 '72 300w

SCHNEIDER, BEN ROSS. The ethos of restoration comedy [by] Ben Ross Schneider, Jr. 201p $8.50 Univ. of Ill. press

822 English drama—History and criticism
SBN 252-00151-6 LC 70-140670

The author "holds that Restoration comedy is satiric in method, mirroring society in such a way as to criticize it. . . . [He] shows that its ethical dimension derives from the traditional aristocratic notion of generosity, which in the seventeenth century encompassed liberality, courage, 'plain-dealing,' and love. His study is based on a survey of 1,127 characters in 83 plays. It includes . . . comedies of Etherege, Wycherley, Congreve, Vanbrugh, and Farquhar, and several plays by Dryden, Cibber, Mrs. Behn, Shadwell, Crowne, Steele, and Mrs. Centlivre. An . . . examination of Congreve's Love for Love illustrates the integration in a single play of the ethical principles considered in the book." (Publisher's note) List of plays on which this study is based. Index.

"The author corrects earlier criticism's mistaken view of a hedonist rake-as-hero and shows that in most of the plays the key ethical principle is Generosity (which he traces back to Aristotle). . . . Writing with smooth authority, the author exposes the reader to the delights of many relatively unknown and unread plays. . . . This is an important work and it is necessary to anyone who wishes to understand these plays' meanings. There is a good index; bibliographical information is in the footnotes on each page."

Choice 8:1340 D '71 170w

"Satire is ultimately a comparative mode that pits the observer's conception of an ideal against his perception of that ideal debased in reality. On such a notion is this study (delimited by computer methods) . . . based. Long regarded as morally valueless, these characters are assessed by Schneider as being morally instructive." H. G. Hahn

Library J 96:3614 N 1 '71 100w

SCHNEIDER, CLEMENT, jr. auth. Retirement in American society. See Streib, G. F.

SCHNEIDER, HAROLD K. The Wahi Wanyaturu: economics in an African society. (Viking fund pubs. in anthropology no48) 180p il maps $6.95 Aldine pub.

330.9678 Wanyaturu (Bantu tribe)

ISBN 0-202-01074-1 LC 70-102764

"The Wahi Wanyaturu are a 'Bantu speaking' people of central Tanzania. . . . Professor Schneider adopts as his frame of analysis what he calls 'the competitive approach to African society,' and he makes the basically 'traditional' economic system of the Turu his starting point. He eventually concludes that, at the time of his fieldwork (ending in 1960), this economic system was still 'intact,' despite the intrusion of alien economic and political forces for the past eighty years and more." (Am J Soc) "Bibliography. Index." (Choice)

"In explaining his approach to the economic system, Schneider announces that as against the usual 'communalistic' view of anthropologists he intends to stress the 'competitive' dimension. But . . . throughout much of the economic analysis his viewpoint is, if anything, even more communalistic than has been recently customary. . . . Nevertheless, this is a good book for economic anthropologists. The information is there and if anyone doesn't like the communalistic viewpoint that sometimes obtrudes itself he can easily supply his own labels or reinterpretations. . . . Some of the chapters were previously published as separate articles and are presented here with little revision. This may account for the failure to consistently follow the policy of interpretation announced at the outset. There is some evidence of haste in compiling the book." R. F. Gray

Am Anthropol 73:1341 D '71 650w

"The author makes good use of folktales as sociological models for particular structural sets at various points in his analysis. . . . This adds life and 'cultural reality' to a book which is occasionally flat and insufficiently illustrated with ethnographic materials. . . . Schneider makes little effort to explore the comparative implications of his analysis. . . . Proofreading in this otherwise admirably produced book is sometimes sloppy . . . and there are tables . . . which are not listed in the table of contents. Despite these minor quibbles, however, this is a very valuable addition to the ethnography of central Tanzania. It also represents a complete justification, on theoretical grounds, of a mode of analysis advocated by an anthropologist who has already contributed greatly to the field of economic anthropology." Peter Rigby

Am J Soc 77:326 S '71 1950w

"Most of the book is straightforward ethnographical description . . . rather too brief for the specialist, and, on language and lineage, too technical to be of interest to the non-specialist. The rest of the book is Schneider's own very peculiar interpretation of economic life as greed, rivalry, aggression, and hostility. He has been shouting this angry message at his anthropological colleagues for years, to expose what he thinks is their systematic bias in presenting African economic life as co-operative and communal. . . . In all this, Schneider is unintentionally entertaining. It is as though a Mafia Boss, having learned bits of economics from an illiterate Marxist, wrote a treatise on human nature. It must be said, however, that Schneider's 'Manure Index' proves irrefutably that those Turu with more cows acquire more manure." George Dalton

SCHNEIDER, H. K.—Continued

Ann Am Acad 396:147 J1 '71 240w

"Although the literature on the peoples of western Tanzania is limited, and this is the first monograph in English on the Turu of that area, it is a rather old-fashioned ethnology which hardly deserves its subtitle. Nearly all of the chapters have already been printed in collections of journals, and Schneider's approach is essentially taxonomic. Even his chapter, 'People as wealth,' is woodenly styled. The historical chapter is particularly weak. There is no overall theme which distinguishes this from other monographs. For specialized libraries."

Choice 7:1744 F '71 90w

SCHNEIDER, LAURENCE A. Ku Chieh-kang and China's new history; nationalism and the quest for alternative traditions. (Calif. Univ. Center for Chinese studies. Publication) 337p $11 Univ. of Calif. press

951.04 Ku, Chieh-kang. China—History—Historiography
ISBN 0-520-01804-4 LC 73-129608

This book consists of an "analysis of Ku's reevaluation of the nation's heritage . . . [and] discussion of Ku's own conception of the Classics as history, in which context the original creation of . . . Confucian orthodoxy is seen as the work of Ch'in and Han scholars preoccupied with the political issues of their own time. . . . [Ku] found in China's own intellectual heritage . . . a heterodox tradition capable of inspiring an incisive and relevant critique of China's past orthodoxy. And in that same heritage Ku also found the basis for China's new culture which, according to his historical arguments, should be a culture of the people, guided by the scientific intellects of a politically neutral intelligentsia." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. A. Rickett

Ann Am Acad 402:150 J1 '72 550w

"The study of this prominent Chinese historian is . . . invaluable because it skillfully illuminates fundamental problems of writers, intellectuals, and educators generally in modern China—the gnawing questions of identity, the definition of China's past, the problem of 'drawing near' to the masses, the growing disaffection with the social and political order in the 1920's and 1930's, and the anomalous position of the liberal elite. Ku's historiography (he was a pioneer in the study of Chinese folklore) and Schneider's Levensonian-like approach to it may not attract a very wide audience, but the study's mastery of Chinese sources, its penetrating analysis, and readable prose make the book a major contribution in the field of modern Chinese intellectual history."

Choice 8:1632 F '72 110w

"To study the 20th-Century Chinese thought revolution through the particular keyhole of historiography is a rewarding undertaking. . . . Schneider has successfully met the challenge to erudition and writing skill that such a study presents. He has managed to explain simultaneously the Chinese tradition being reevaluated, the modern controversies surrounding the reevaluation, and the position of his own subject, the historian Ku Chieh-kang, on these controversies. The result is an important and probing contribution to our understanding of the revolutionary confrontation of modern Chinese intellectuals with their past." A. J. Nathan

Library J 96:3609 N 1 '71 140w

"The middle chapters [of the book] ('From Textual Criticism to Social Criticism,' and 'The Past Reorganized') sparkle with brilliance. One's only regret is that Dr. Schneider is strong in neither Chinese history nor Chinese classics. This weakness is occasionally betrayed through some textual entanglements. But these are small blemishes." Jerome Ch'en

Pacific Affairs 45:99 spring '72 600w

Va Q R 48:lxiv spring '72 180w

SCHNEIDER, RONALD M. The political system of Brazil; emergence of a "modernizing" authoritarian regime, 1964-1970. 431p $13.50 Columbia Univ. press

981 Brazil—History. Brazil—Politics and government
ISBN 0-231-03506-3 LC 75-154860

In this volume, which is part of a projected two volume work, the author seeks "to analyze the Brazilian military's decision in March, 1964, to oust President João Goulart and to describe the evolution of the crisis that led the reputedly legalistic Brazilian Armed Forces to intervene so decisively in the political life of the nation. . . . A second book [entitled] Modernization and the Military in Brazil, 1889-1964 will examine Brazilian political development and crisis politics from the late nineteenth century through the impasse of the early 1960's." (Pref) Index of names. Index of subjects.

"In guiding the reader from the 'manipulated democracy' of the early part of Castelo Branco's regime to the 'descent into dictatorship' of the last part of Costa e Silva's regime, and on through the first year of Garrastazú Médici's regime, Schneider supplies copious comments of Brazilian observers and a useful section on military education. . . . Apparently writing late in December 1970, [he] finds that 'from December, 1968 on, the decay of military unity has been painfully evident,' and that Médici's 'prospects for serving out his full presidential term would seem to be no better than the average for the Brazilian Republic—less than a fifty-fifty proposition.'" J. W. F. Dulles

Am Hist R 77:855 Je 72 400w

"This volume should properly include the reference to the military in the title [since] . . . the author concentrates almost exclusively on the military. Professor Schneider has done an outstanding job of putting a confused epoch of Brazilian history into some sort of intelligible order. His thorough research lists the cast of characters and their roles in a depressing period of Brazilian history. . . . Careless editing has marred the book although the author's appendix on the biographies of 1964 army leaders and the essay on his sources are real contributions. [Some of] the translations from Brazilian sources . . . [are] too literal to be readable. [Nevertheless, this] careful study contributes much to our understanding of the place of the military in the Brazilian political system." E. E. Godfrey

Ann Am Acad 399:195 Ja '72 900w

"Schneider relates the Brazilian experience to analytical constructs of political development, especially that of Samuel Huntington. Highly recommended for all graduate and undergraduate libraries."

Choice 9:282 Ap '72 100w

"[This volume] uses the Brazilian example to test theories on the role of the armed forces in Latin America and in other developing areas. Nine well-documented chapters present theoretical considerations, outline background material, and treat events since 1964, while an appendix provides biographical data on military leaders. In all, the book is a good summary and contains useful discussion. . . . The widespread use of repressive measures including torture, however, is mentioned only briefly and might have been allotted more space. For libraries collecting materials on the area." H. A. Spalding

Library J 96:2521 Ag '71 100w

SCHNITZER, MARTIN. The economy of Sweden; a study of the modern welfare state. 252p $12.50 Praeger

330.9485 Sweden—Economic conditions. Finance—Sweden
LC 79-122086

In this account "of the Swedish economy about one-half is devoted to Sweden's fiscal structure and policy, the remainder especially to the credit system and labor management." (Choice)

"Little in this book is entirely new to readers who are familiar with Skandinaviska Banken quarterly review and other periodical literature on these subjects (e.g. articles by Erik Lundberg, Leonard Silk.) But students and teachers (at both graduate and undergraduate levels) of public finance, comparative systems, and business cycles should appreciate having all this information available between two covers, even though there is much repetition in the text and many statistical data are given in absolute figures where percentages would have shown relative magnitudes more forcefully. Numerous tables; no index."

Choice 8:267 Ap '71 160w

"Some 252 pages of the Swedish economy gone through with an American toothcomb, and scented with a largish squirt of ideological comparison between communist and capitalist systems."

Economist 237:65 D 12 '70 80w

SCHOLEFIELD, ALAN. The young masters.

210p $5.95 Morrow

LC 78-151903

"In South Africa in the late 1930's, Paul, an orphaned child, heads for the open road with Luther, a Zulu family retainer. Paul is seeking his aunt, but he is delayed en route first by a tramp and then by an eccentric old lady of means. [The second part of the book takes place] several years later at boarding school. Paul's feelings of equality and empathy are tested by the bigotry and typical schoolboy viciousness he encounters. And since Luther had been sent away by Paul's aunt, Paul will always remember him as a symbol of a good man treated cruelly because of color." (Library J)

Reviewed by Rev. J. M. Murphy

Best Sell 31:467 Ja 15 '72 470w

Reviewed by Paul Theroux

Book World p2 Ja 23 '72 550w

"The writing is smooth, and individual scenes are distinguished by warmth and humor. However, the structure and style make the work seem like two separate stories—the first one almost Dickensian, the second 20th-Century nostalgia. In addition, some of the English and South African slang may bother American readers. A rather special book for those who like exoticism in their coming-of-age novels." R. H. Donahugh

Library J 96:3778 N 15 '71 170w

"Scholefield seems to be asking himself how many ways a young boy can be let down and betrayed. On the road, Paul is kidnapped by a tramp, then abducted by a madwoman. He is terrified by the Dickensian overseer of an orphanage, and brutally separated from Luther, his friend, guide and father figure. Years later at school he is bullied by sadists and haunted by childhood trauma. Readers of Mr. Scholefield's earlier novels will know that he is a regional storyteller of formidable talent. This time he achieves a cheaply-won pathos by assembling a too-convenient continuity of elemental agonies." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk ■ p26 Ja 30 '72 210w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:81 F 19 '72 80w [YA]

"An air of the professionally cobbled hangs over Scholefield's new offering. Suspicion is first promoted by his acknowledgement: 'Some of the material in this book has appeared in a different form in Argosy, England, and the Cape Times, South Africa.' Mr. Scholefield has, it appears, married two or more stories to make the one novel, yet . . . this somewhat dubious procedure can be forgiven, for the job has been done with admirable skill. The theme is the evolution of Paul Thompson's awareness of the nature of South African life. . . [In Part Two] we are treated to some lively schoolboy humour . . . well written and funny."

TLS p465 Ap 23 '71 330w

SCHOLES, MARIE V., jt. auth. The foreign policies of the Taft administration. See Scholes, W. V.

SCHOLES, WALTER V. The foreign policies of the Taft administration, by Walter V. and Marie V. Scholes. 259p $9.50 Univ. of Mo. press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—East (Far East). U.S.—Foreign relations—Latin America. Taft, William Howard. Knox, Philander Chase

ISBN 0-8262-0094-X LC 70-122310

"This book attempts to examine and evaluate the consequences of Taft-Knox diplomacy in two specific areas—Latin America and the Far East. . . [A] discussion of the key diplomatic personalities involved in implementing policy introduces the book, and both the Latin American and Far Eastern sections are preceded by introductory essays outlining American policy in each area immediately prior to Taft's inauguration. The Latin American section includes chapters on Nicaragua, Guatemala, the Dominican Republic, and Mexico, while the Far Eastern segment contains discussions on Knox's 'neutralization' plan, the railroad imbroglio, and the China loans." (Ann Am Acad) Bibliography. Index.

"Some aspects of American foreign policy during the period 1909-1913 are omitted altogether—Anglo-American and Canadian-American relations, for example. But this is a weakness more in title than in purpose and the authors can be applauded for their general success in describing and analyzing 'dollar diplomacy' in the designated regions. The vehicle for this type of work is the case-study method that, despite certain limitations, serves this subject adequately. . . The outstanding section in this book is that dealing with Far Eastern problems. Each chapter shows superb research and deftness in the handling of complicated material. . . Unfortunately, the section on Latin America is weak. . . Throughout, there is a tendency to focus more on Philander Knox than on Taft." C. W. Hines

Ann Am Acad 398:183 N '71 500w

"[The authors] have investigated both American and British archives, together with microfilms of the Japanese archives, and have examined the major collections of personal papers, and the result is an analysis that will not have to be redone. . . The contribution of the present volume is its utter reliability, for the authors have let their materials lead them, and not vice versa. . . Readers will be grateful for a work of . . . diplomatic history written with great clarity and good judgment." R. H. Ferrell

J Am Hist 58:785 D '71 380w

SCHON, DONALD A. Beyond the stable state.

254p $7.95 Random house

301.2 Social change. Systems analysis

ISBN 0-394-47293-4 LC 73-159372

"The author's argument is that under the impact of technological change, the stable state (i.e., the constancy and predictability of the ideas and institutions governing our lives) is forever lost. Continuing transformation has become the central fact in contemporary society. He seeks to establish the ways in which social institutions can become effective 'learning systems' able to manage the exponential growth in information. . . Schon dismisses rational scientific modes of understanding since they depend on a continuity and predictability that is now a thing of the past, and advocates . . . an existential strategy for coping with the flow of information and the rapid rate of change." (Library J) Bibliography.

"For those unfamiliar with . . . systems analysis, cybernetics, communications models, technological diffusion, and future studies, this book may seem like a letter from a foreign country. . . While [the author's] discussion of existential learning is regrettably brief, it does represent a most suggestive convergence between the prevailing technocratic outlook and that of the counter-culture. On this ground alone, Schon's book, based on the Reith Lectures which he delivered in 1970, is an intriguing glimpse into the future." H. J. Steck

Library J 97:504 F 1 '72 210w

"[Dr. Schon appears] with instant diagnoses of America's ills, from the boot and shoe industry to revolution and counter-insurgency. For everything, there is, he claims, as befits [the] . . . President of OSTI (Organization for Social and Technical Innovation), a technological fix. . . Dr Schon's thesis is relatively straightforward. His unstated premise is that it is possible to analyse any social phenomenon . . . according to techniques which are a grandiose version of operations research, systems analysis and cybernetics. So obvious does this proposition appear to him that he does not even feel it necessary to defend it. . . This is really technological consultancy gone mad."

TLS p957 Ag 13 '71 400w

"Schon's reasons for the stagnation of many contemporary institutions, including government, are convincing, as is his thesis that our institutions must become learning systems. His examples are interesting, and are carefully selected from a wide and often surprising range of material. Both the style and organization of this book exhibit a remarkable clarity and order that is bought at the expense of the complexity of the ideas presented, but as a result the book is an excellent choice for the general reader. Serious scholars will find the chapter on social change the most interesting."

SCHON, D. A.—Continued

Va Q R 48:cv summer '72 250w

SCHONBERGER, HOWARD B. Transportation to the seaboard; the communication revolution and American foreign policy, 1860-1900. (Contributions to American history, no.8) 265p $9.50 Greenwood pub. corp.

380.5 Transportation—History
ISBN 0-8371-3306-8 LC 75-105979

This work is concerned with "the problem of cheap transportation from the American interior to exporting seaports and with demands for state regulation of railroads and Federal support for internal improvements; [with] the international aspects of the Interstate Commerce Act; . . . [and with] three trunk-line railroad executives who concerned themselves with expanding trade to Europe, Latin America, and the Orient." (Choice)

"Schonberger succeeds in making a strong case for the thesis with which he introduces his study. Faced with the difficulties of presenting the results of his researches in a very large body of literature, he has further succeeded in organizing a readable and even interesting narrative out of what might well have been a hardly intelligible account. Since the book grew out of a doctoral dissertation at Wisconsin, I recommend it particularly to those concerned with such matters as an example deserving of their close attention. It is an excellent piece of work." R. V. Clemence
Ann Am Acad 404:312 N '72 600w

"Schonberger's writing is pedestrian, though generally free of errors. . . . Libraries would do well to acquire this book, but not before L. Benson, Merchants, farmers, & railroads [1956]; [W.] LaFeber, The new empire: an interpretation of American expansion 1860-1898 [BRD 1964]; and G. H. Miller, Railroads and the Granger laws (1971)."

Choice 8:1640 F '72 150w

"This book is a mixture of the obvious, the useful, and the unproved. . . . Schonberger argues that in this period farm surpluses formed an important part of the roots of the modern American empire. If this seems obvious and familiar, it is nonetheless useful to have a fairly systematic account of the interrelationship between the transportation revolution and the search for wider markets. But it is in failing to demonstrate the influence of this interrelationship upon 'foreign-policy makers' (to employ his phrase) that the book fails to come off. . . . He has not been successful in his revisionist effort to place the periphery in the center of American expansionism in the years 1860-1900." J. A. Rawley

J Am Hist 58:1035 Mr '72 500w

SCHÖNZELER, HANS HUBERT. Bruckner. 190p il $7.95; pa $3.95 Grossman pubs.

B or 92 Bruckner, Anton
ISBN 0-7145-0144-1 LC 74-556529

This is an account of the life, work, and musical career of Anton Bruckner. Annotated bibliography. Index.

"This concise study is a welcome addition to the meager material so far available in English on this controversial 19th-century composer. . . . [It] is a good introductory biography . . . [with] plentiful illustrations and systematic dating of the versions of the symphonies. . . . It gives an overall view of Bruckner's life and work in a style that is more congenial to the undergraduate reader than that of any Bruckner biography yet published. Annotated reading and listening lists, a chronological listing of Bruckner's works, and an index of persons and places make it especially useful. . . . Most academic libraries will want to own [it]."

Choice 8:683 JI '71 180w

"The biographer is driven by the sheer un-conventionality of [Bruckner] and [his] music into apologetics. Mr. Schönzeler presents us with an apologia pro ejus vita. He is driven into a similar uncomfortable attitude of at once conceding and rejecting Bruckner's peculiarities in the vexed question of the different versions and the cuts made in the various editions of the symphonies. . . . Bruckner himself was constantly revising his symphonies. The author devotes a whole chapter to this tangled textual problem. . . . The critical discussion of the symphonies is . . . devoid of musical illustrations. Pictorial illustrations, however, are copious and constitute an important feature of the new biography. . . . Taken all in all, though Bruckner's status remains ambiguous, this is a useful biography, in which adequate attention is paid to the religious music, and a credible portrait emerges of a very odd character."

TLS p287 Mr 12 '71 470w

SCHOOLER, DEAN. Science, scientists, and public policy [by] Dean Schooler, Jr. 338p $6.95; pa $3.95 Free press

320.973 U.S.—Politics and government—20th century. Science and state
LC 70-122274

"The roles and influence of physical, social, and behavioral scientists [in the U.S.] are examined in twenty areas of policy making in defense, economy, and environment. Major emphasis is given to scientists' participation on national levels in space, defense, arms control, weapons, conservation, pollution, foreign aid, agriculture, weather, transportation, health, and other issues. . . . Part One [is entitled] Science, scientists, and American national policy: the post-war years, 1945-1968. . . . Part Two [considers] Science, scientists, and public policy making: the 1970's and the year 2000." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] is a useful, though uneven, synthesis of work done by social and political scientists on the relationship between scientists, science and public policymaking. The book is essentially an elucidation of a conceptual framework and typologies developed around policy types, policy processes and policy arenas. Schooler is at his best in training these typologies, but as is common to typological approaches, this lends itself to tautological elucidations or a belaboring of the obvious. In his introduction, Schooler asks the right questions. . . . Regrettably, he avoids coming to grips with [them]."

Choice 8:734 JI '71 140w

"Schooler concentrates on the influence of scientists within the executive branch of the federal government during the period 1945-1968. . . . There are serious deficiencies in [his] work, most of them related to the way in which he attempts to provide evidence to support his arguments. . . . The crucial variable which the study seeks to explain is the level of scientists' influence, yet Schooler admits that 'describing scientists' influence is a matter of judgment. No . . . visible evidence exists. . . . The book is also verbose and terribly repetitious. Despite its limitations, however, [it] is an important contribution to the literature of science and public policy."

J. M. Logsdon

Science 175:1351 Mr 24 '72 1250w

SCHOOLS and inequality [by] James W. Guthrie [and others]; foreword by John W. Gardner. 253p $10 MIT press

370.19 Education—Finance. Discrimination in education. Equality
ISBN 0-262-07044-8 LC 79-137470

The authors scrutinize the "notion that there are links attaching (1) the level of financial input to (2) the quality of services delivered to (3) the level of student achievement to (4) the post school performance of pupils. . . . The objectives [of the authors] . . . are to expose educational inequality, to provide a guide for legislative and judicial remedies, and to attempt a definition of the . . . concept of 'educational opportunity.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] should receive consideration for inclusion in course syllabi in a wide range of subjects and disciplines: surely in many education courses, as well as in courses on social stratification, human capital, social economics, and local governmental structure and finance. . . . The book concludes with a useful chapter on how we might begin to finance schools for equality, reversing our present course of perpetuating a rather rigid class system through an unequal school system."

Jon Van Til

Ann Am Acad 401:206 My '72 450w

"An important monograph which undertakes to show that present educational finance policies can be construed to be in violation of the equal protection clause of the U.S. Constitution's Fourteenth Amendment. The text studies school services in Michigan, and (assisted by the National Urban Coalition) the research was intended to serve as evidence in a suit filed by the Detroit Board of Education which alleged discrimination in the state's distribution of resources to schools. Despite the abstruseness of much of the data (the monograph can be fully used only by advanced students in economics and finance), an eloquent foreword . . . translates much of its data into an intelligible ideology for the layman."

Choice 8:1496 Ja '72 200w

"The authors, social science and education experts, received substantial professional foundation support for their highly technical study of a Michigan school district. . . . The index and bibliography, as well as the format and printing, are of high order. Extensive appendices document the statistical and computer analysis of the work. Recommended." H. R. Weiner

Library J 97:1428 Ap 15 '72 110w

SCHRADER, PAUL. Transcendental style in film: Ozu, Bresson, Dreyer, 194p il $10 Univ. of Calif. press

791.43 Moving pictures. Ozu, Yasujiro. Bresson, Robert. Dreyer, Carl
ISBN 0-520-02038-3 LC 73-157824

The editor of Cinema "believes that directors from varied cultural backgrounds have, by their approach to specific films, created a common style to express the sacred, and that this commonality shows through each director's individual choice of subject and philosophical assumptions, and can be recognized through detailed criticism. To develop his theory, Schrader focuses on the work of three directors." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"[A] stimulating, informed, poorly written critique. . . . [It] seems meant to Americanize the theological film approach of Amedée Ayfre. But Schrader's main achievement is a much more professional use of art history and speculative aesthetics than our official film critics have been capable of. For once the comparison with Gothic cathedrals is made technically, not inspirationally. It is unfortunate that Schrader's theoretical argument about the Bresson-Ozu style requires the uncomplex 'primitive' artist savaged by historians. Critically, [the book] is most complex and exciting with Dreyer's films, but the Ozu chapter may be cribbed more often for film society notes. Good bibliography."

Choice 9:1146 N '72 160w

"It does not seem probable that this earnest attempt at a religious aesthetic of film will join the ranks of valuable books on the cinema. . . . The chapters dealing with each director are richly detailed; there is a marvelous comparison of Ozu's scene compositions with Zen painting. The least satisfactory analysis is of Dreyer, the greatest and most complex of the three men. . . . The study carries film criticism to the point of distortion; the author seems to find more in the films than the director put there. Film students will find helpful technical discussions here, but the thickly textured prose makes for difficult reading. . . . This book may be of most value as a philosophical treatise. . . . It is an example of carefully selected films supporting an elaborate aesthetic theory." R. S. Bravard
Library J 97:1737 My 1 '72 260w

SCHRAG, PETER. The decline of the WASP. 255p $6.95 Simon & Schuster

301.44 Social classes—U.S. Protestants in the United States. U.S.—Social conditions
SBN 671-21059-9 LC 73-163495

Schrag examines what he claims is "the WASP myth ('History made the WASP; then the WASP made history; and now history has apparently abandoned him'), the reality of a WASP-imposed culture on a diverse and complex society, . . . and the consequences of the WASP's declining power." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by D. R. Bishop
America 126:272 Mr 11 '72 440w

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin
Best Sell 31:491 F 1 '72 420w

"This [is a] boldly conceived, often flashing, splendidly unsentimental book. It is a hard one to break into with 'yes, buts.' Its movement is swift and eye-catching; its main point—that the 'melting pot' was in fact forced accommodation to Wasp wants—is overdue. But questions do remain, all the same. Schrag comes down too hard, in this historian's view, on some good aspects of WASPism, such as the social conscience of generations of reformers. . . . He needs restraint—and debate. But he is saying things that ought to be meditated on."

B. A. Weisberger

Book World p6 F 6 '72 1300w

Reviewed by Gabriel Fackre

Christian Century 89:582 My 17 '72 420w

Reviewed by R. J. Cattani

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 10 '72 800w

Reviewed by Martin Marty

Critic 30:94 Mr '72 800w

Reviewed by H. A. Larrabee

New Eng Q 45:578 D '72 1650w

"Schrag is extraordinarily malicious and righteous; his work is slapstick sociology, a sort of long-winded smear of the WASP. . . . [It] operates wholly within the currently indecorous and schismatic conventions for 'making it': overstate the case, be sure, confront. Schrag's tone is persistently one of contempt, a steady verbal tomato-pelting of the WASP."

There remains the question of whether Schrag is right about WASPs and WASPism. I find him wrong on, essentially, two counts—wrong primarily because easy polemical generalizations about big fuzzy social entities are bound to be wrong . . . and wrong secondly because WASPs and WASPism . . . have never been the whole hog, and therefore never the clear and simple villains Schrag makes them out to be." Reed Whittemore

New Repub 166:25 Ja 22 '72 1300w

Reviewed by E. Z. Friedenberg

N Y Rev of Books 18:30 F 24 '72 2350w

Reviewed by Robert Alter

N Y Times Bk R p40 Mr 5 '72 1050w

New Yorker 48:116 Mr 4 '72 90w

Reviewed by Fred Darwin

Sat R 55:66 Ja 29 '72 750w

"What once made America great? What now makes America fairly awful? Schrag's answer to both questions: the Wasp. [Schrag] potshots all the easy targets in sight: Disneyland and Playboy, Pat Nixon and Doris Day, Billy Graham and flavorless bread—blaming them all on the WASP. . . . [It is regrettable that Schrag fails] to recognize that the case against the WASP has already been made—by WASPS. From Nathaniel Hawthorne and Henry James through Sinclair Lewis and J. P. Marquand, the WASP novelist has chosen as a favorite theme the moral decay within his breed. Schrag is correct, if obvious, in decrying 'conformity.' . . . But in calling for 'diversity and dissent,' he fails to supply enough of these qualities to his own polemic."

Melvin Maddocks

Time 99:71 Ja 31 '72 310w

SCHRAG, PHILIP G. Counsel for the deceived; case studies in consumer fraud. 200p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

343.7 Consumer protection

ISBN 0-394-47999-8 LC 70-39719

"The author uses his experience as chief counsel for the department of consumer affairs of New York City to . . . illustrate the delays, frustrations, and defeats the department faced in trying to apply the law." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:110 S '72 70w

"This [is a] volume of case studies in consumer fraud. Schrag and his staff managed to win a few of the cases; but the majority were losses or at best draws. And Schrag does a very good job of illustrating why. . . . Can consumers be protected? . . . Buy this interesting book . . . read and talk and think; then decide." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 32:176 Jl 1 '72 400w

"[This book] shows how the frustrations of dealing with the Establishment could push young public service-minded professionals from reformism to a more radical posture. Associated with the department from its founding in the late 1960's, Schrag observed at first hand the negative role of private pressure and public indifference in passing a strengthened consumer bill. Above all, he learned that bench and bar could not only thwart, but even pervert the purpose of the bill. Several specific cases, showing the duplicity and indebtedness in which the buyer can become hopelessly immeshed, make interesting reading. . . . Relevant, readable, and recommended." J. M. Carroll

SCHRAG, P. G.—Continued

Library J 97:1805 My 15 '72 140w

SCHRAMM, PERCY ERNST. Hitler: the man and the military leader; tr, ed. and with an introd. by Donald S. Detwiler. 214p $10; pa $2.95 Quadrangle bks.

B or 92 Hitler, Adolf. World War. 1939-1945—Germany
SBN 8129-0166-5 LC 72-78316

As a reserve officer, the author "was given the assignment of recording the war diary of the German high command from 1943 to 1945. . . . [This volume contains] his introductions to a volume of Hitler's 'table conversations' and to the 'war diary' of the high command." (Library J) Portions of this book were first published in 1963 and 1965 in Hitler's Tischgespräche im Führerhauptquartier 1941-1942 by H. Picker, edited by P. E. Schramm, et al.; and in 1961 in Kriegstagebuch des Oberkommandos der Wehrmacht (Wehrmachtführungsstab) 1940-1945, introduced and edited by P. E. Schramm. Index.

"Schramm here does a commendable job of analyzing Hitler's motives, values and rationales."

Christian Century 88:913 J1 28 '71 20w

Reviewed by Graham Wootton
Christian Science Monitor p7 Ag 25 '71 160w

"The late Professor Schramm, a luminary of the University of Göttingen, was a recognized authority on medieval history. . . . Schramm's analysis of Hitler aroused considerable controversy in West Germany when it was published there some years ago, for he did not hesitate to give Hitler credit for certain human qualities. . . . Schramm warned also against belittling Hitler as a strategist, since during the first half of the war he had developed schemes regarded as masterly even by many skeptical experts. One may strongly disagree with Schramm's judgments at times, but he deserves careful reading. . . . Recommended for academic libraries of all sizes." F. E. Hirsch

Library J 96:954 Mr 15 '71 300w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough
N Y Rev of Books 19:37 O 19 '72 1300w

SCHRAMM, WILBUR, ed. The process and effects of mass communication; ed. by Wilbur Schramm and Donald F. Roberts. rev ed 997p il $15 Univ. of Ill. press

301.16 Mass media
SBN 252-00197-4 LC 74-152000

"This new edition . . . contains only four articles from the 1954 edition. . . . [It considers] mass communication's media, messages, audience, effects, innovations, and technological future." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Author index. Subject index. For the first edition see BRD 1955.

"The label 'revised edition' is a misnomer. This is virtually a new work. . . . [The four articles retained from the first edition] are old classics as valid today as when originally penned, such as Walter Lippman's 'The world outside and the pictures in our heads' (1922). This edition reflects the abundance of research in communications since 1954 and the number of fields and disciplines now involved in communication research, i.e. sociology, politics, psychology, etc. . . . This work is another standard reference for all scholars in all fields interested in mass communication process, effects, theory, and research."

Choice 9:76 Mr '72 160w

Reviewed by D. G. MacRae
Encounter 38:75 Mr '72 320w

SCHRECKER, JOHN E. Imperialism and Chinese nationalism; Germany in Shantung. (Harvard Univ. East Asian research center. Harvard East Asian ser, 58) 322p $12 Harvard Univ. press

327.51 China—Foreign relations—Germany. Germany—Foreign relations—China.
ISBN 0-674-44520-1 LC 73-129119

This is a study of "the impact of German imperialism on the upsurge of Chinese nationalism. . . . Schrecker describes the three approaches of the Chinese towards the Western challenge: (1) the pragmatic mainstream approach to which a man like Li Hung-chang subscribed in trying to control the foreigners; (2) the approach of the ideologically oriented militant conservatives who opposed all innovations from the West and whose ideas influenced the Boxer Movement; (3) the approach of the reformers under K'ang Yu-wei who favoured institutional changes in order to preserve the sovereignty of China." (Pacific Affairs) Bibliography.

"Schrecker's book definitely bridges a wide gap in the study of Western imperialism and China's response in the modern period. Furthermore, it is based on thoroughly digested Chinese and German source materials practically unused so far. It is mainly for this reason that it is a significant scholarly contribution. . . . The resilience of Chinese culture, the ability of Chinese officials, and, what is most important, the rapid spread of nationalism among the Chinese people, particularly the intellectuals, have been too often belittled or ignored as factors contributing to the restraint of foreign influence in China. . . . Schrecker has especially stressed these factors, and his approach is undoubtedly sound." Tien-Yi Li

Am Hist R 77:485 Ap '72 600w

Reviewed by O. I. Janowsky

Ann Acad 401:169 My '72 550w

"According to this work, the Chinese were remarkably successful and effective in arresting the German thrust in Shantung province by 1905. . . . By focusing on the unsuspected Chinese vitality in meeting the German threat in Shantung after 1898, this volume follows the general revisionist approach to Chinese history of the late Ch'ing that was set by China in revolution: the first phase, 1900-1913 [BRD 1969] edited by the late Mary Wright."

Choice 8:391 S '71 150w

"[The author] shows in which way German imperialism with its linkage of military power, science (von Richthofen), religion (German missionaries in Shantung), and economic enterprise (railways and mining in Shantung), helped the Chinese to a clearer understanding of their national interests. The growing self-consciousness of the Chinese and the decreasing power of Germany to enforce her influence make fascinating reading. Schrecker's book can be recommended not only to nostalgic Old China Hands in Germany but to all readers seeking explanations of the confusing trends in modern Chinese history."

Bernard Grossmann

Pacific Affairs 44:610 winter '71-'72 600w

SCHROLL, HERMAN T. Harold Pinter: a study of his reputation (1958-1969) and a checklist. 153p $5 Scarecrow

822 Pinter, Harold

ISBN 0-8108-0402-6 LC 77-157056

"This overview of the critical writing about Harold Pinter's work is based on articles published between 1958 and the autumn of 1969: it is limited to productions in London and New York. Section one, arranged chronologically, concentrates on Pinter's themes and techniques, on the negative opinions about his work, and attempts to educe any clearly defined attitudes found in the . . . criticism. Section two is a checklist which includes bibliographies, books and book references, articles, and production reviews." (Choice)

Choice 9:386 My '72 100w

"Unfortunately Schroll does not include a list of Pinter's plays in print, and no attempt is made to decide if Pinter 'is more than a good writer.' This book will be useful to anyone researching Pinter's playwrighting and a helpful tool for contemporary theater collections." William White

Library J 96:3998 D 1 '71 100w

SCHUETTINGER, ROBERT LINDSAY, ed. The conservative tradition in European thought; an anthology. 385p $6.95 Putnam 320.5 Conservatism. Political science—History
LC 69-18194

This anthology "investigates the European conservative tradition from its roots in Plato and Cicero to the contemporary viewpoints of Hayek and Oakeshott. The selections span the eighteenth, nineteenth, and twentieth centuries with particular attention to the classical origins of many of our political ideas. . . . The book is organized into five major divisions: 'Man and Society,' as developed by thinkers such as Edmund Burke and Samuel Taylor Coleridge; 'Nature, Law, and History,' as exemplified by Hegel and Leo Strauss; 'The Distribution of Power,' as seen through the works of Disraeli and Otto von Habsburg; 'Liberty, Equality, and Authority,' as presented by De Maistre and Lord Acton; 'Contemporary Conservatism in Europe,' which focuses on the political philosophy of Winston Churchill." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography.

"For anybody willing to learn, [this anthology] is a political education . . . [and] a refreshing contrast with current twitterings and modish hysteria. . . . [It] has a useful introduction and notes by its editor, Mr. Schuettinger suggests that conservatism is a disposition rather than a set of doctrines, and he lists a number of what seem to him its defining attitudes." Anthony Lejeune

Nat R 23:88 Ja 26 '71 400w

"[This collection does] fill a potential need since there is little available of much value dealing with the great traditions of political thought in the way, i.e. well chosen, well edited, and reasonably priced source books. Whether [this book does] in fact fill the need may be questioned. . . . [The readings are] perhaps too long. Or else they are too short, for the enormous areas they purport to cover. . . . Historians are likely to quarrel with the plan of organization, which is for the most part not chronological but topical." R. N. Stromberg

Social Studies 63:84 F '72 200w

SCHULER, STANLEY. Gardens are for eating. 326p il $9.95 Macmillan (N Y)

635 Gardening
LC 74-126511

"In this book for the gardener who wishes to plant a 'food garden,' the author first discusses the basics of gardening—when to plant, where to plant, soil preparation and pest control. The chapters in part two deal with the growing of specific plants—vegetables, herbs, fruit trees, small fruits, tropical and subtropical fruits, and nuts." Index.

Reviewed by Phyllis Hanes

Christian Science Monitor pB10 My 4 '72 30w

"This strikes me as the best book on its subject in some considerable time. . . . Schuler is well acquainted with his subject and is able to impart his knowledge and ideas clearly. He deals sensibly with such basic matters as soils, pests, appropriate garden size, etc., and even makes a bow in the direction of soil-less culture. In the main body of the work he discusses each vegetable and fruit in considerable detail giving lists of recommended varieties. It could be argued that some of the latter are too extensive. . . . There is a useful chapter on culinary herbs. . . . Recommended." F. C. Hall

Library J 96:647 F 15 '71 130w

SCHULTZ, JOHN. Motion will be denied: a new report on the Chicago conspiracy trial. 376p $11.95; pa $3.95 Morrow

343 Trials. Dellinger, David T. Seale, Bobby. Chicago—Riot, August 1968
LC 72-172378

This account of the Chicago conspiracy trial includes "the Bobby Seale story, the government's undercover agents, the meaning of laughter in the courtroom, and . . . [the author's] interviews with two of the 'dissenting' jurors." (Publisher's note)

"The language of the book is quite salty, reflecting the atmosphere of the time and the trial. The author is given to long sentences, to pointed advertisement of his previous writings, and to the expression of his own very definite opinions. There is no doubt as to where he stands." I. R. Hill

Best Sell 31:561 Mr 15 '72 650w

"Schultz's book, contrary to its subtitle, is not a new report on the trial even in the sense that it has been about a year since the last book about it was published. Substantial portions of Motion Will Be Denied, in a somewhat different ordering of words, appeared some time ago in the Evergreen Review. . . . As one who observed much of the conspiracy trial at first hand, I wish that people would read Motion Will Be Denied right now. It is a good bad book. . . . The prose style veers dizzyingly between a kind of phony Hemingwayesque . . . [and] ersatz psychosociology. . . . Too often [the book] is a strident, even petulant, brief instead of an analysis. . . . [But] its perceptions have not been shared by others. . . . Sometimes, when he is not being Hemingway, Schultz's insights are accompanied by passages of startlingly good writing. . . . This is a useful guide to the conspiracy case." J. R. Waltz

Book World p4 F 20 '72 1200w

Choice 9:1206 N '72 130w

"[The book is] worth reading and worth filing away for the day when society is ready for a more distant second look at the trial and its aftermath."

Christian Century 89:228 F 23 '72 100w

"This book attempts to rekindle the fervor of this now infamous trial, as well as to add new insights into the proceedings. The author attacks Judge Hoffman's judicial behavior while lending credibility to the defense, and maintains a novel-like effect through an excellent treatment of the court room emotions. Through a careful paraphrasing of the testimony and court room outbursts, the reader is spared the abusive language associated with the trial, while being presented with ample evidence of the court's bias. What the book lacks in timeliness is offset by the author's interpretative style, and the quality of his writing. However, it is as an historical study that the book gains its merit. Schultz's approach is refreshing; and the postjudgment commentaries, including interviews with two of the jurors, are invaluable in understanding why this became a political trial."

Library J 97:1081 Mr 15 '72 180w

SCHULTZ, MICHAEL JOHN. The national education association and the black teacher; the integration of a professional organization. 224p $7.95 Univ. of Miami press

371.1 National Education Association. Segregation
ISBN 0-87024-162-1 LC 70-121684

The author "furnishes an historical overview of the NEA and the black teacher-community over a chronological continuum which is segmented (1884-1967) . . . [and] which depicts the . . . response of the NEA to a neglected black constituency." (Choice)

"The volume's chief merits are that its scope is not limited to developments within a single organization, but also provides a capsule history of the Negro in American life since the Civil War, and that its author has made a meticulous analysis of his sources. It would be difficult, in fact, to find any volume that has explored the published sources on the National Education Association more intensively. . . . Dr. Schultz has also utilized professional journals Negro periodicals, newspapers from many localities, and such magazines as Life, Newsweek, and Scholastic Teacher. . . . [He offers] an excellent review of the past history of his chosen subject. New and emerging trends that might give the reader greater insight into the future in this area, however, have not been developed nearly as well." Frederick Shaw

Ann Am Acad 398:205 N '71 450w

"A penetrating historical analysis of the NEA (largest independent teacher organization in the U.S.) and the black teacher. . . . As part of NEA history, the monograph is an important supplement to E. B. Wesley, NEA: the first hundred years [BRD 1957]; and it furnishes a new dimension in the history of American teacher organizations. Fully documented with index. Recommended."

Choice 8:715 Jl '71 170w

SCHULTZ, THEODORE W. Investment in human capital; the role of education and of research. 272p $8.75 Free press

331 Human capital. Education—Economic aspects
LC 77-122273

This book deals with "the pervasiveness and heterogeneous nature of human capital . . . [and] their relationship with the . . . economic growth 'residual.' The costs of human capital formation are traced from 1900-1956 with emphasis on the important and changing nature of foregone earnings. Some consideration is given to rates of return to formal education and the role that they play—and could ideally play—in allocating resources more efficiently. A . . . section is devoted to an analysis of research and development expenditures. Information resulting from such expenditures that is appropriate can be transformed into new skills and materials that represent new forms respectively of human and nonhuman capital." (Ann Am Acad) Index.

SCHULTZ, T. W.—Continued

"There are two aspects of this book of which the reader should be aware at the outset. First, as the author states in the preface, the exposition is on a level 'meaningful to readers who would shy away from technical economics.' Second, most of the material has appeared previously in various journals. Consequently economists hoping to find a book full of new insights from an innovator in the human capital field will be disappointed. On the other hand, the book does serve admirably as a means for bringing together and synthesizing the author's many contributions to the field. . . . The most unfortunate [omission] but one that because of publication lags could not be avoided, is that there is no mention of the important advances made in the human capital field over the past two years under the auspices of the National Bureau of Economic Research." T. J. Wales

Ann Am Acad 399:247 Ja '72 500w

"To make the book intelligible to non-economists, an attempt is made to minimize technical economics. The first part is general, repetitious, and poorly organized. . . . The second part is far superior to the first. . . . Extensive references to recent research abound. Empirical estimates of educational costs (including opportunity costs) and earnings are presented. A section analyzing the likely effects of uncertainty on the allocation of human capital investment is outstanding. . . . Suitable for the specialist and nonspecialist alike. Well indexed."

Choice 8:878 S '71 180w

SCHULTZE, CHARLES L. Setting national priorities: the 1972 budget [by] Charles L. Schultze [and others]. 336p $8.95; pa $2.95 Brookings 353.007 Budget—U.S.

ISBN 0-8157-7756-6; 0-8157-7755-8 (pa)

"The President's budget and selected economic and foreign policy statements set forth our national priorities. Brookings published Setting national priorities: the 1971 budget [as the first of these studies]. This publication continues the precedent by analyzing the President's 1972 budget. . . . Appropriate statistical data as well as future revenue and expenditure projections are presented. Particularly policy decisions, as demonstrated by budgetary choices and amounts, are allotted individual chapters. The following areas are covered in detail: international affairs and defense, revenue sharing, welfare programs—job creation, social security, medical care—environmental quality, transportation, housing, agriculture, and several special issues." (Choice)

"This volume is well researched by members of the able staff of Brookings. . . . The outstanding feature is the consideration of available alternatives in each of the special areas considered—their costs and benefits now and in the long run. The writing style is clear and straightforward. The work is not heavily documented and is skillfully written for the interested reader. Although the publication will soon be obsolete, every library should have it on display today."

Choice 8:1223 N '71 170w

"[Schultze] considers not only the budget presented to Congress in January, but also the various choices which were available to Mr. Nixon when he made his decisions on how to allocate the country's resources for the coming year. . . . [This study] is almost essential reading for anyone who wants to understand the directions in which the United States is, or might be, moving."

Economist 240:63 S 18 '71 190w

"'Priorities' is one of those unlikely words, like 'ecology,' that have suddenly sprouted on book jackets. The call for 'new priorities' means simply that the Government should start spending its money on cities, rivers and poor people instead of planets, highways and the upper middle class. How far has the movement gotten? How sensible are its proposals, and what are their prospects? Some of the answers are here, and they are not encouraging. [This] is the second in a series of annual commentaries on the Administration's budget proposals. It is a superbly lucid and intelligent book, unsentimentally calling the role of Federal programs and recording the arguments pro and con." Leonard Ross

N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 13 '71 900w

SCHULZ, GERHARD. Revolutions and peace treaties, 1917-1920; tr. by Marian Jackson. 258p $12.50 Barnes & Noble 940.3 European War, 1914-1918—Peace.

Europe—Politics—1918-1945

SBN 416-15940-0 LC [72-188452]

"This is an account of popular movements, political convulsions and settlements that led to and resulted from the climax of the First World War and its aftermath. . . . [Schulz considers] the aims, achievements and failures of both the Allied and Central Powers, the major international changes which took place during and just after the war, and finally the significance of the newly shaped Europe and Near East which emerged from the peace treaties." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] a translation of Revolutionen und Friedensschlüsse, first published in 1967, before the appearance of Arno Mayer's provocative Politics and diplomacy of peacemaking [BRD 1968]. Basically a synthetic account of interpretive works on the crucial questions of 1917-20, it deals less with 'revolution' and peace treaties than with movements and developments in the major countries of central and eastern Europe. Apart from sober perspectives on the Versailles Treaty, the book contains little that is new, and its oversimplifications could mislead the general reader. . . . The main lines of interpretation are often blurred and original interpretations, such as Mayer's, are obscured. A useful addition to the literature, primarily for introduction, but should be used with great caution."

Choice 9:1193 N '72 130w

"Our review of the German edition said it 'is written with beautiful clarity and shows balanced judgment' (TLS, September 28, 1967)."

TLS p664 Je 9 '72 50w

SCHUMAN, PATRICIA. Materials for occupational education; an annotated source guide. 201p U.S. & Can$9.95; elsewhere $10.95 Bowker

016 Vocational guidance—Bibliography

ISBN 0-8352-0406-5 LC 75-126017

"This publication covers 63 major instructional areas in vocational and technical education, listing for each of these the names and addresses of organizations that supply/provide books, periodicals, manuals and other multimedia aids that are valuable for curriculum planning and/or instruction for all-inclusive reference to most occupations." (Choice) Index of occupational categories.

"[This is] a most welcome reference for the technical school and junior college offering training in vocational occupations. . . . There is no other publication that compares with this. A must for colleges and universities preparing teachers and administration for the two-year institutions."

Choice 9:628 JI/Ag '72 80w

"The bulk [of this book] . . . consists of alphabetically arranged chapters devoted to broad curriculum areas, with subheadings for specific courses. Within categories, the sources—professional and trade associations, federal and other government agencies, publishing firms, and other businesses—are organized alphabetically, with a very informative annotation for each source under the most pertinent heading and cross-references to this main entry from other subjects. . . . What the author has included is fine, but there are significant omissions. For example, the H. W. Wilson Company is not listed in the section on 'Library Technology' and none of its valuable bibliographies show up in 'Further Sources of Information.'" Leonard Grundt

Library J 97:473 F 1 '72 500w

SCHUR, MAX. Freud: living and dying. 587p
$20 Int. univ. press

B or 92 Psychoanalysis. Freud, Sigmund
ISBN 0-8236-2025-5 LC 71-143379

"I shall consider in detail the multiple factors which contributed to the development of Freud's ideas about living and dying: his physical—primarily cardiac—symptoms; his nicotine addiction; his precarious financial situation; his promethean struggle for insight into the uncharted region of 'the unconscious'; his proclivity for alternating between a generally depressive mood involving a certain letdown in creativity and a feverish 'frenzy of activity.' I shall discuss some phobic and obsessive-compulsive mechanisms and, above all, Freud's self-analysis which generated not only thoughts about death but a preoccupation with specific aspects of the end of life." (Introd) Bibliography. Name index. Subject index.

Choice 9:885 S '72 250w

"For the last decade of Freud's life, Schur served as dedicated physician and devoted friend. He later became an eminent psychoanalyst, and here he chronicles the origins of his patient's personal and scientific attitudes towards life, illness, and death. From Freud's letters to his friend, Wilhelm Fliess, Schur traces Freud's heroic self-analysis and shows how the developments of psychoanalysis were inseparable from events in Freud's life. . . . Using unpublished data, firsthand knowledge, and Freud's voluminous correspondence, Schur reveals the man who solved the riddle of the dream. This book is indispensable to all those who concern themselves with the human condition." S. L. Pomer

Library J 97:1449 Ap 15 '72 130w

"Schur lacked the literary skill . . . to marry successfully a clinical account of Freud's illness and a human one of Freud's courage and endurance in the face of suffering. . . . [Also] Schur brought to his project a quality which I can only call intellectual innocence. He seems . . . oblivious of the ironies and paradoxes involved in applying psychoanalytical concepts to the very person who first conceived them—and indeed of the methodological pitfalls that surround psychoanalytical biographies in general. . . . He is also entirely haphazard in his selection of which characters . . . require introducing to the reader and what terms, social conventions, etc., require explanation. . . . [It is my] opinion that Schur committed an error of taste in recounting the clinical details of Freud's final physical decay in a book intended for the general reader." Charles Rycroft

N Y Rev of Books 19:12 Ag 10 '72 2200w

"[This book] is far more than a medical case history. . . . Dr. Schur tried to connect Freud's 'scientific formulations' as they developed in the course of his life with Freud's 'personal attitudes toward the integral problems of life and death.' Viewed from the standard of Schur's highest ambition, his book is a failure; the task of making such connections seems beyond [his] powers. . . . [He] exhibits Freud's words more often than he penetrates them. . . . As a memoir, by a splendid and devoted disciple with special knowledge of his master's heroic endurance of suffering, Dr. Schur's book is moving and decently informative. . . . From [it] the reader can acquire a number of superb details of Freud's greatness as a mere man. In order to grasp Freud's greatness as a mind, study Freud." Philip Rieff

N Y Times Bk R p23 Je 18 '72 2000w

Reviewed by R. S. Stewart

Sat R 55:52 Jl 29 '72 2500w

SCHURR, SAM H. Middle Eastern oil and the Western world: prospects and problems [by] Sam H. Schurr [and] Paul T. Homan; with Joel Darmstadter [and others]. 206p il maps $16 Elsevier pub. co.

338.2 Petroleum industry and trade
ISBN 0-444-00094-1 LC 72-135059

"Part I describes the interdependence between Western world and Japan oil importers and Middle East oil exporters, and assesses likely developments in oil trade for the 1970's. Part II examines the economic importance of oil for oil-exporting countries. The changing relationship between host countries and major international oil companies, including a review of trends in concession terms, organized action by exporting countries, and greater participation by national oil companies, is discussed in this section. . . . Index." (Choice)

"This study, co-sponsored by the Rand Corporation and Resources for the Future, Inc., at the request of the Ford Foundation—which also provided financial support—immediately becomes necessary reading for any sophisticated and balanced appreciation of oil as a key economic variable in Middle East and non-Middle East international relations. . . . The analytical approach of the study is admirably precise, the conclusions clear and bold wherever possible but logically cautious where the variable simply disallows dogmatic conjectures." Rawley Farley

Ann Am Acad 399:248 Ja '72 700w

"A comprehensive description of oil as an energy source and as a major foreign exchange and government revenue source for Middle Eastern oil producing economies. The factual details of the study approach encyclopedic proportions, with a 17-table statistical appendix, some one-eighth of the text comprising tables, charts, and maps. Suitable reference for those interested in petroleum as an energy resource and, perhaps, for Middle East specialists. . . . This book is more a natural resource study than an economic analysis of the oil trade. Authors discuss oil supply and oil pricing issues with respect to technological, geological, geographic, and political factors rather than with reference to oligopolistic and oligopsonistic market behaviour."

Choice 8:1065 O '71 190w

SCHUSTER, MEL, comp. Motion picture performers: a bibliography of magazine and periodical articles 1900-1969. 702p $15 Scarecrow

016.79143 Actors and actresses—Bibliography. Moving pictures—Biography—Bibliography

ISBN 0-8108-0407-7 LC 70-154300

This volume "indexes periodical articles about movies actors. . . . Under each actor the entries are arranged chronologically." (Library J)

"Reviews of actual performances are omitted and the choice of articles is otherwise oriented in terms of cautious private gossip, i.e. studio handouts. Neither Confidential nor Playboy is listed as a source, because they were not indexed in Reader's guide nor Biography index! What Mr. Schuster is selling is an availability list of English-language magazine material, comprehensive for the respectable American press, about studio contract players, mostly post-sound. There is nothing on many silent stars or supporting players . . . because Schuster's chief fanzine source, Photoplay, was less of a gossip magazine in the twenties than later. Incompletely, Schuster covers the nonfilm publicity about Jim Brown and Ronald Reagan, but often skips the movie-production accounts of other-media stars."

Choice 9:386 My '72 170w

"Although the decision not to include newspapers is understandable, exceptions should have been made for a select few, such as Variety and Section 2 of the Sunday New York Times; and foreign language magazines, particularly French ones, should have been indexed. . . . Since some of the articles are by writers like Walter Kerr and Joseph Morgenstern, at least a partial author index would have been helpful. The publishers have gone to no trouble to bind this volume attractively or to make the layout pleasing to the eye. Still, within its limitations, it's a serviceable book, probably the most useful of the Scarecrow movie reference titles." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:185 Ja 15 '72 150w

SCHUTJER, MARLYS, jt. ed. Science, sex, and sacred cows. See McConnell, J. V., ed.

SCHUTZ, ALFRED. Alfred Schutz on phenomenology and social relations: selected writings; ed. and with an introd. by Helmut R. Wagner. 327p $12.75 Univ. of Chicago press

301.01 Social psychology—Philosophy. Phenomenology
ISBN 0-226-74152-4 LC 73-102072

"The editor begins with a brief account of Schutz's intellectual development. The remainder of the introduction is devoted to a systematic survey of Schutz's conceptual edifice, arranged and discussed in a . . . progression of . . . themes. The following selection of Schutz's writings, which make up most of the book, are arranged in . . . chapters paralleling these themes. . . . The more specialized phenomenological terms which appear in the writings are explained in an 8-page glossary located at the end of the text." (Am J Soc) Bibliography.

SCHUTZ, ALFRED—Continued

"This well organized and highly readable book is a must for anyone who is interested in any branch of interpretative social science or who seeks to understand society as something other than simply a giant cranked-up machine. Gratitude is due its editor . . . for providing us with the first systematic representation of Alfred Schutz's sociologically relevant life work. For all too long most sociologists have either ignored or not been able to recognize the seminal nature of Schutz's contribution. . . . Wagner, as executor of the conceptual estate of this great predecessor, has accomplished a difficult task which will make it much easier for us, the successors, to benefit from the rich and variegated inheritance which Schutz has left us." Rolf Kjolseth
Am J Soc 77:1245 My '72 650w

"The selections are illuminated by Professor Wagner's superbly organized introduction. It not only endeavors to clarify many of the basic phenomenological concepts exploited by Schutz but also attempts to show the affinities among the perspectives of phenomenology, the philosophical approaches of William James, John Dewey, and Henri Bergson, and the sociological orientations associated with George H. Mead, Charles H. Cooley, W. I. Thomas, and the more recent sociological approaches currently labeled 'symbolic interaction' and 'ethnomethodology.' Wagner has performed admirably as editor, translator, interpreter and sympathetic critic of Alfred Schutz's significant efforts to establish a phenomenological sociology." Harry Alpert
Contemp Sociol 1:51 Ja '72 650w

SCHWARTZ, BERNARD. The Bill of rights: a documentary history. 2v 1234p set $59.50
Chelsea house pubs; McGraw

342.73 U.S. Constitution—Amendments
ISBN 07-079613-0 LC 71-150209

"What these volumes seek to do is to present the history of the federal Bill of Rights in documentary form. . . . The great documents of Anglo-American liberty which led up to the 1791 Bill of Rights . . . [are] included, as well as explanatory material to show their significance. The arrangement is essentially chronological, covering 1) the English antecedents; 2) the Colonial period; 3) The Revolutionary Declarations and Constitutions; 4) developments under the Articles of Confederation; 5) the federal Constitution; 6) the state ratifying conventions; 7) the legislative history of the federal Bill of Rights, and 8) the ratification by the states." (Pref) Index.

"This is by far the most complete compilation of documents dealing with the Bill of Rights from its English and colonial antecedents to its final ratification by the states. Schwartz's comments are as valuable as the documents themselves. Each is a brilliant, incisive, often original interpretation of the meaning, importance, and relevance of the subjects. These volumes could easily serve as a model for other documentary collections and will be an asset to any library."

Choice 9:276 Ap '72 160w

"Many compilations purport to trace the origins and history of constitutional liberties, but surely none match this one in including the lesser documents which annotate and illuminate the greater ones. . . . [Schwartz uses] the works of William Penn, the archives of the colonies, the papers of the founding fathers, contemporary newspapers, etc. Even scholars who have all of these sources at their disposal may still be grateful for the editor's skillful selection and organization, and the insight of his commentaries." Marian Boner
Library J 97:498 F 1 '72 90w

SCHWARTZ, BRIAN B., jt. ed. Scientific manpower. See Brown. S. C.

SCHWARTZ, EDWARD. Will the revolution succeed? rebirth of the radical democrat. (Criterion bks) 204p $5.95 Abelard-Schuman 320.5 Right and left (Political science). U.S.—Social conditions. Radicals and radicalism
ISBN 0-002-71855-X LC 77-160104

The author who was active in the student movement in the 1960's here examines the background of American radicalism today. He discusses its ideology and suggests strategies for action, urging "the acceptance of justice as the standard against which all issues, all institutions, all politics must be measured." To achieve this end, Mr. Schwartz calls for the formation of alliances between community organizers, developers of counter-institutions, and radical professionals." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Dennis Hale
Commonweal 96:433 Ag 11 '72 750w
Reviewed by Carey McWilliams
Nation 214:829 Je 26 '72 30w

"It is the great merit of this book that it reminds us of the moral claims put forward by this nation's founders. . . . above all, the claim that the ideal of this society is to establish justice. . . . [But] Schwartz's brash tone and careless style are irritating. His logic is often defective—his arguments support conclusions other than those he advances. . . . [Then too, his] book has many more than its fair share of typographical errors. . . . [The author] proposes a number of plausible programs that imply a concern for distributive justice, very much in the American grain. . . . These programs are offered in a somewhat slapdash, al fresco manner, but that seems fair enough. They make sense even if Mr. Schwartz can offer no blueprints. . . . He is concerned to treat as men and brothers those persons customarily traduced, exploited and patronized by movements of reform." Emile Capouya
Sat R 55:64 Mr 11 '72 1350w

SCHWARTZ, FELICE N. How to go to work when your husband is against it, your children aren't old enough, and there's nothing you can do anyhow, by Felice N. Schwartz, Margaret H. Schifter [and] Susan S. Gillotti; with assistance from Marilyn Mercer. 348p $8.95 Simon & Schuster

331.4 Woman—Employment
ISBN 0-671-21130-7 LC 74-165539

A guide "to the problems and rewards of returning to work after years of being an educated family woman. Written under the auspices of Catalyst, a foundation dedicated to the effective retraining and use of the neglected brain power of American women locked into the traditional role of homemaker, the book includes case studies, material on educational opportunities, job applications, part-time possibilities, and a . . . 'Career Baedeker.' The latter contains description of some 53 professions, with information on training and education, necessary skills and aptitudes, current needs and salaries, recommended readings, and sources of additional information. . . . Bibliography." (Library J)

"For all the seeming levity, this is a very serious book and librarians and counsellors ought to be aware of it. . . . The rationale for seeking employment is succinctly but clearly, even forcefully spelled out, examples are developed, and there is a fine career Baedeker with all sorts of information about jobs."

Best Sell 32:190 Jl 15 '72 100w
"An intelligently prepared and lucid guide. . . . Highly recommended." E. G. Detlefsen
Library J 97:182 Ja 15 '72 100w

SCHWARTZ, JOEL J., jt. ed. Library lit.—the best of 1970. See Katz. B.

SCHWARZ, BORIS. Music and musical life in Soviet Russia, 1917-1970. 550p $13.50 Norton 780.947 Music, Russian—History and criticism
SBN 393-02152-1 LC 72-200965

This is 'a history of music, [and an] . . . exploration into a nation's musical life and culture during a half-century of Soviet rule. . . . Schwarz describes not only music in Russia but also the large number of institutions devoted to it; the opera and ballet theatres, the orchestras, the libraries and museums of 'musical culture', the conservatories and the research institutes. . . . [The book is also a study of the] relationship between artists and authority." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"To be exhilarated and depressed to a terrifying degree is the virtue of this magnificent book. The text runs to 500 pages; textual apparatus fifty more. It is written with a surgical intelligence equipped with every professional skill, severe historical conscience and human sympathy. It surveys half a century of one art which is a key to human conditions. . . . Schwarz uncovers, microscopically, without hedging, what happened to music in the Soviet Union from inception to the year before last. . . . If his book is noticed in Moscow, wondrous will be the reviews; it may never be acknowledged. For, from a court of dispassionate, compassionate justice, Schwarz's verdict is murder in the first degree." Lincoln Kirstein

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ap 16 '72 1600w

"Not surprisingly, [this] book is a record of incredible bungling and vacillation on the part of Soviet bureaucrats, many of them composers. . . . There is a certain method in the madness of bureaucratic control—the idea that music should be accessible to the masses. But the spectacle that Dr. Schwarz presents is not an elevating one to Western eyes."

New Yorker 48:148 My 6 '72 210w

"[This] book aims at nothing less than an encyclopedic review of all aspects of Soviet music from the Revolution onwards. A gargantuan task, to put it mildly; one moreover which could easily end up as a huge panorama of names and dates, as dull as a laundry list, and useful only as a source for recondite cross-references. Happily, this book is nothing of the sort. Professor Schwarz has achieved wonders of condensation. All the essential facts are there, including quite a number that have not previously been available to Western readers. And yet the narrative flow is very rarely silted up by overconcentrated information, or disturbed by factual error."

TLS p333 Mr 24 '72 1150w

SCHWARZ, MICHAEL. The age of rococo; tr. by Gerald Onn. 194p il pl col pl $9.95 Praeger 759.04 Painting, Rococo LC 73-147093

The book covers "Genre painting, satirical art, portraiture, townscapes, landscapes, still-life painting, religious and mythological painting. Watteau, Boucher, Fragonard, Chardin, Hogarth, Goya, Greuze, Canaletto, Gainsborough, Reynolds, Guardi, Tiepolo, Piazzetta, and . . . others [are discussed]." (Best Sell) Index of artists.

"In an excellent translation . . . from the German, this work traces the various elements of the painting of the period which has sometimes been dubbed, rather superciliously, as the 'decay of the baroque.' The book is illustrated with forty page color plates, forty more in black-and-white, with another forty 'text illustrations.'"

Best Sell 31:229 Ag 15 '71 150w

"A survey of European Rococo painting (not the 'age') written to a fundamentally informed audience. Nine chapters discuss Rococo painters. . . . The responsible text . . . includes recent and respected scholarship. All illustrations appear within sight of the text in which they are discussed, with the color plates more satisfactory than the black and whites. Recommended for undergraduates."

Choice 8:1169 N '71 180w

"A good basic introduction to 18th-Century painting and drawing, this book has the appropriate problems as well as advantages. On the one hand, the text portrays questionable points of interpretation and method just as casually as it does simple facts or accepted doctrine. On the other hand, it is well organized and pleasantly readable; and it is generously appointed with nice reproductions. . . . Recommended for general libraries, as well as comprehensive academic collections." Andrew Robison

Library J 96:3598 N 1 '71 80w

SCHWARZ, RICHARD W. John Harvey Kellogg, M.D. 256p il $5.95 Southern pub. assn. B or 92 Kellogg, John Harvey LC 75-137496

This biography of Dr. Kellogg "of Battle Creek Sanitarium traces the seventy-year career of the . . . doctor 'who changed many of America's eating habits, who contributed to an awareness of the relationship between many 'common' and 'simple' habits and personal health and physical well-being, who was an early proponent of what today is called 'preventive medicine' and who helped to established a tradition of health doctrines and social service among Seventh-day Adventists." (J Am Hist)

"One does not come away from this book with any sense of understanding the personality of its hero or of the intellectual forces that turned him from a fundamentalist into something of a pantheist and a believer in organic evolution. We are never quite sure how much of Kellogg was showmanship, egotism, and avarice for money or for power and how much was genuine Christianity and humanitarianism, although it must be admitted that such profiles would be difficult to draw." D. L. Cowen

Am Hist R 77:838 Je '72 400w

"Schwarz distilled this biography from the extensive materials he collected for his doctoral dissertation at the University of Michigan, which had a more pertinent title 'John Harvey Kellogg: American Health Reformer.' Intended as an historical biography of larger perspective than Gerald Carson's Cornflake Crusade, [BRD 1957] the book is a comprehensive portrait of Kellogg. . . . [The author] writes with more love than criticism for the domineering physician promoter. . . . The most serious omission of the biography relates to Kellogg's place in medical history. Schwarz has presented a dynamic personality in terms of health pioneering, institution building, and nutrition development, but fails to tell us why the field of medical history has ignored Kellogg." P. F. Erwin

J Am Hist 58:783 D '71 550w

"Unfortunately I cannot think of many individuals who will be seriously interested in Schwarz's flat treatment of one of yesterday's contradictory personalities. . . . Kellogg surely was an important figure at the turn of the century. However, as a headliner he faded long ago. Libraries will probably find very little call for this slim biography." D. G. Gustafson

Library J 96:1359 Ap 15 '71 140w

SCHWED, PETER, jt. ed. The fireside book of tennis. See Danzig, A.

SCHWEITZER, GERTRUDE. The ledge. 275p $6.95 Delacorte press LC 77-178718

"Recovering from a nervous breakdown suffered after she saw her fiancé killed, Catherine Beauchamp accepts a job as secretary to former Senator Amos Kent . . . whose first wife died under very mysterious circumstances and second wife has made startling accusations about him. Arriving at High View, Catherine discovers that her employer is a moody, reticent man, living as a recluse. . . . Gradually [she] overcomes her misgivings about Kent and finds herself falling in love with him." (Library J)

"There are identifiable echoes of Jane Eyre and of Rebecca [by D. Du Maurier. BRD 1938] and [Catherine's] deliberate denseness makes the book seem longer than it is. Also, $6.95 is getting to be quite a lot of money for this sort of thing." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:519 F 1 '72 90w

"Schweitzer has written an entertaining modern gothic romance—the plot is intriguing, the characters are interesting, the descriptions of the crumbling estate are well-done. Recommended for young adult and adult collections with a demand for more gothic novels." Brenda Gray

Library J 97:1934 My 15 '72 120w [YA]

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p27 F 20 '72 90w

"This is a ladies' gothic complete with a nervous-making house and servants to match. Need I say, though, that instead of chilling me with horror The Ledge simply left me cold?" Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:104 Mr 25 '72 80w

SCHWEIZER, EDUARD. Jesus; tr. by David E. Green. 200p $7.50 John Knox press

232.9 Jesus Christ

ISBN 0-8042-0330-X LC 76-107322

The author "focuses on the historical development of our understanding of Jesus.

SCHWEIZER, EDUARD—Continued

After describing Jesus as the man who fits no preconceived formula, Schweizer considers the diverse New Testament views of Jesus (judge, exalted Lord, crucified Savior) and of his earthly ministry. The last chapter moves to the church of the second century. "The church must continue to make fresh statements of who Jesus is," says Schweizer in his conclusion." (Publisher's note) Index of modern scholars. Index of New Testament references.

"Schweizer's book is not a penetration behind the New Testament record but rather explores the meaning of Jesus from the whole New Testament, even its latest books. . . . Schweizer insists that each age must write its own life of Christ, stressing what is relevant and needful. The New Testament is not a series of propositions but a dialogue between the reader and the book. How each school and author handled the traditions about Jesus is detailed. This balanced, informed and personal synthesis is highly recommended." R. J. Clifford

America 125:462 N 27 '71 120w

Choice 9:663 J1/Ag '72 90w

"There were many 'Jesuses' in the early church and there have been many since, for various believing subcommunities have apprehended the meaning of Jesus in differing ways. Schweizer relishes the pluralism and asks today's church to share in this sense of flexibility.

Christian Century 88:1117 S 22 '71 40w

"This is a good book for the learned for whom it was not written and not nearly so good (the author calls it an 'unpretentious survey') for those for whom it was. . . . Schweizer is refreshing for the independent stands he takes on critical questions too long dominated by partisan presuppositions, notably evangelical theology wearing the disguise of critical method." G. S. Sloyan

Commonweal 96:438 Ag 11 '72 400w

"The author's aim is to show that the various witnesses of the New Testament, who encountered God's acts in Jesus, developed fresh understandings and insights into the meaning of Jesus according to their different circumstances of place and time, and that we today must do the same. While some may quarrel with details of his presentation [Schweizer's] basic theme will be generally acceptable." Sakae Kubo

Library J 97:77 Ja 1 '72 100w

SCHWERNER, ARMAND. The tablets I-XV: presented by the scholar-translator; transmitted through Armand Schwerner. 47p $10; pa $4.95 Grossman pubs.

811 Satire

ISBN 670-68998-X; 670-68999-8 (pa)

LC 74-149520

"The tablets of the title purport to be the poetical artifacts of a society approximating the Sumero-Akkadian of pre-Biblical times, presented with notes and commentary by a modern 'scholar-translator,' as Schwerner calls him. They deal with 'the emptying,' a seasonal rite of fertility with Gnostic overtones, and are to be followed, we gather, by other cycles in forthcoming books." (Nation)

"[The] whole title and an inner thematic one, 'The Emptying' play upon the intricate, ironic parody that delights one here. As with proper play it can grow serious; i.e., a quasi-footnote says, 'for all its hope and spiritual valor, we are in this twentieth century at an end. It is a mere 5,000 years since, and the story near over.' Several of these ostensible cuneiform tablets have appeared in Peshlema's [quarterly] Caterpillar, they merit the praise they've received. The poetic parody goes on and on—a mandala (?) appears; a musical score from cuneiform sign (?); curses; riddles; fertility rites. The whole astonishes with its coherence, inventiveness, plausibility; a blend of concrete, sound, conceptual modes, with lyric flashes. Highly recommended." H. C. Burke

Library J 97:687 F 15 '72 150w

"The poems in The Tablets are rude, funny, learned, barbarous, poignant elaborations of what just such a text might be. In it are our preconceptions and preoccupations, our yearnings about the primitive condition—an uncontrollable mystery on the bestial floor. . . . And these are played upon satirized, satisfied. A joke, then, on the literary occasion, on Whitman and Gilgamesh, on first and last things, on us. Our surrogate is the scholar-translator, whose modern sensibility is desiccated, whose familiar motives are suspect." Allen Planz

Nation 214:827 Je 26 '72 1400w

SCIAMA, D. W. Modern cosmology. 212p il $8.95 Cambridge

523.1 Astronomy, Universe
ISBN 0-521-08069-X LC 73-142961

A fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, "presents the main features of our knowledge of cosmology—the expansion of the universe and the various theoretical cosmological models. [He] discusses in detail the main discoveries of recent years—radio source counts, quasi-stellar objects, the microwave background—and ranges . . . over . . . subjects such as the origin of the elements, the helium problem of 'missing mass.'" (Choice) Author index. Subject index.

"[Sciama] is well known for the clarity and brilliance of his discussions on cosmology. [This book] will appeal to a wide audience. . . . is informative and easy to read. Its one defect is the absence of references and bibliography."

Choice 9:233 Ap '72 110w

"One can't help wondering whether Sciama doesn't mean Big-Bang Cosmology by his title. . . . In this book he has essentially discounted the steady-state model. He stays close to contemporary observations, relating historical incidents and frequently illustrating his points with graphs and pictures of all kinds of phenomena. . . . Although there are many references to persons, particularly in the later chapters where recent work is under discussion, there are regrettably few detailed references to the literature." G. B. Field

Science 176:650 My 12 '72 1000w

"In his well-produced book, Dr Sciama has kept his mathematics down to a reasonable level, and there is nothing here that a student with a moderate knowledge of physics and mathematics could not follow. It is a stimulating work, clearly but concisely written, and containing much that is difficult to find in any other single volume."

TLS p198 F 18 '72 400w

SCIENCE and archaeology; Robert H. Brill, editor. 288p il col il maps $30 MIT press

913 Archeology—Research
ISBN 0-262-02061-0 LC 70-113731

This is a collection of "articles on a series of laboratory techniques used in the analysis of archaeological materials. The examples chosen are both prehistoric and historic." (Choice) Index

"The range of physical materials covered includes ores and finished metals, ceramics, stone, amber, bones, and glass. . . . The geographical coverage of the volume (Afghanistan to the Valley of Mexico), as well as the range of problem areas (economics to museum-keeping), provides the anthropologist, Old World or New, with familiar illustrative and applicable material. The index of names, sites, materials and analytical techniques further broadens the usefulness of the volume. . . . [A number of the papers] point up the possible cultural implications of data derived from analytical techniques. . . . It is to be regretted that these papers were so delayed in publication and . . . [that] the publisher was apparently unaware of the British journal bearing the same title as the reviewed volume." P. C. Hammond

Am Anthropol 74:1499 D '72 600w

"This volume provides a full coverage of the use of scientific techniques in archaeology. [It is] needed where courses in anthropology or archaeology are taught. . . . [The examples chosen] are well documented, well illustrated, and well referenced. Worthwhile addition to a library."

Choice 8:1498 Ja '72 80w

"The material is divided into three categories. The first is object oriented with consideration given to method of manufacture and place in the history of technology of individual objects or small groups of objects. The second section is the most extensive. . . . These studies deal with the chemical composition of large numbers of artifacts from numerous sites. . . . The analyzed specimens can be classified according to provenience and date. . . . The last section deals with four methods of dating archaeological objects. The book is profusely illustrated and the reproductions are good; there are two color plates. . . . On the negative side the book is too expensive. . . . Double columns with very wide margins add to size and expense." Marie Farnsworth

Class World 66:115 O '72 380w

"[This volume which] contains 21 papers presented at the Fourth Symposium on Archaeological Chemistry in Atlantic City . . . [makes it] clear that radio-carbon dating not only is the granddaddy of scientific archaeology but is still its greatest single preoccupation. More space is devoted to it than any other analytical technique; neutron activation runs a distant second. It is also clear that if chronological problems are soluble by this method they are still far from being solved. . . . Almost all of the research on which these articles are based has appeared in journals, so these are reruns of reruns." J. E. Fitting
Science 175:976 Mr 3 '72 360w

SCOTCH, NORMAN A., jt. ed. Social stress.
See Levine, S.

SCOTT, JACK DENTON, jt. auth. Antoine Gilly's feast of France. See Gilly, A.

SCOTT, PAUL. The towers of silence; a novel.
392p $8.95 Morrow
LC 79-166355

"This is the third in a projected sequence of four novels depicting the twilight years of British rule in India. The first [was] The Jewel in the Crown [BRD 1966]. . . . The Day of the Scorpion [BRD 1968] continued the story into the crisis years of the early 1940's. This new book carries the sequence little beyond the second. . . . Attention focuses on Barbara Batchelor, the retired mission-school teacher, and many . . . of the events are seen through her eyes." (Library J)

Reviewed by Sister J. M. Anderson
Best Sell 31:564 Mr 15 '72 350w

Reviewed by A. C. Foote
Book World p6 F 20 '72 700w
Choice 9:647 J1/Ag '72 140w

"Only about one-fourth of the material is new. The value of the book lies in its depiction of British India during this time, but even that tends to be lost in the excessive verbiage and repetitiousness." S. L. Hopkinson
Library J 97:700 F 15 '72 160w

"By now, the faithful followers of Paul Scott's quartet of Indian novels will have assimilated number three in the sequence. . . . Possibly they regret as I do, having digested such a lot of cardboard. Mr Scott has all the organising skill of Herman Wouk, but none of his facility for bringing even an over-documented scene to life. The characters who populate Scott's India seem to be concocting its social history between them when they should be muddling along in the midst of it. The novel is of a grand design, and meticulously detailed, but the picture could not have come out looking more flat and uninviting if it had been painted by numbers." R. R. Davies
New Statesman 82:706 N 19 '71 110w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p26 F 20 '72 200w

Reviewed by N. W. Ross
Sat R 55:58 Je 24 '72 500w

Reviewed by John Skow
Time 99:94 Mr 27 '72 320w

"Scott never falters in the control of his material, which is complex and many-sided. The events of the earlier volumes provide a commentary on the new situations, and are viewed again from fresh angles. His imaginative stamina copes unlabouriously with a very large enterprise. Symbols loom on all sides, more powerful in their effect for being sometimes enigmatic. . . . This elegy on the decline and fall of the Indian empire sounds harsh notes, but is moving as well. Mr Scott has the trick of being sympathetic without ever losing his clear sightedness." TLS p1199 O ■ '71 600w

SCOTT, PETER. The swans [by] Peter Scott and the Wildfowl Trust. 242p il $15 Houghton 598.2 Swans
LC 77-187120

"Eight chapters written by experts in the field cover classification, distribution, food, reproduction, mortality, art and mythology, exploitation, and conservation." (Library J)

Choice 9:1309 D '72 160w

Economist 243:77 My 13 '72 100w

"Scott, champion sailor and glider pilot, war hero, and premier waterfowl artist, founded the Wildfowl Trust in 1946. The Trust maintains the world's largest collection of ducks, geese, and swans and fosters related research. This thorough monograph on the eight species of swans is another attractive publication in the tradition of the Trust, which publishes annually the book-sized Wildfowl. The Swans is fully documented with 350 references, 48 plates (mostly photos), nine appendixes, plus numerous line drawings, tables, and maps. . . . This volume should stand as the authoritative reference work on swans for many years. The professional ornithologist and the interested lay reader should find it equally attractive." H. T. Armistead
Library J 97:3172 O 1 '72 150w

"In this comprehensive account a band of enthusiastic members of the Wildfowl Trust, under the direction of Peter Scott, have combined to produce an exceptional book. Many have contributed to the text, which covers every aspect of a swan's world both in life and in history. . . . [This very thorough monograph] is embellished throughout with charming line-drawings, not by any means all by Commander Scott and his talented family: prominent among other artists being Robert Gillmor, Colleen Nelson and Carol Ogilvie (Plantlife), with a striking 'Leda and the Swan' by Keith Shackleton. The book opens with an introduction by Peter Scott describing the many journeys he has undertaken to distant lands to study the swans in their own environment. . . . An interesting chapter contributed by Mary Evans and Andrew Dawnay discusses the swan in mythology and art." TLS p611 My 26 '72 500w

SCOTT, RACHEL. A wedding man is nicer than cats, Miss; a teacher at work with immigrant children. 192p $4.95 St Martins
370.19 Education, Elementary—Great Britain. East Indians in Great Britain. Pakistanis in Great Britain
LC 73-177263

"This book is about children—little Indian and Pakistani children who have been switched, with no preparation, from their village homes in the Punjab to a manufacturing town in the West Riding of Yorkshire. The children's efforts to come to terms with a strange new life, with the routine of an ordinary English school, with an alien climate, with foreign eating and social habits, and with a . . . new language [are described in this] study of the problems—social, religious and medical as well as educational—that the arrival of the immigrants has brought." (Publisher's note)

"This anecdotal narrative explores the social, religious, and genuinely human problems of any young child uprooted from the security of well known patterns. . . . Always compelling, often touching, the book is interesting reading for all teachers, students, and parents who are concerned with the development of the child. Sybil Marshall's foreword states that the book is educationally sound and lauds the author's warmhearted, commonsense approach to race relations. The praise is deserved. . . . The perspective the book provides for all those who deal with the dialectically different or Spanish speaking child in the U.S. is enriching and even inspirational."

Choice 9:555 Je '72 200w

Reviewed by Neil Millar

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 17 '72 500w

"A delightful account of the meeting of two cultures. . . . Scott's book relates the problems of the English school where the children were introduced with understanding, tolerance, and love to their new language and customs. . . . Throughout the book, it is obvious that the two teachers—'Infants Miss,' with her two cats, and the author—use sound pedagogy when they have the children act out routines that are confusing to them, such as riding a bus and shopping in a grocery store. . . . This book tells fascinating stories of immigrant children and their reactions in a school setting to strange Western ways." Marian Wozencraft
Library J 97:2182 Je 15 '72 150w

"Rachel Scott's description of the Indian and Pakistani pupils who have come to a Yorkshire manufacturing town is very funny, but also touching in its affection for the children and patient understanding of their parents. Most of all, the book is impressive for the picture it gives of the tolerance and elasticity of the school personnel of an English town, and of a community absorbing an alien people with grace." Zena Sutherland

SCOTT, RACHEL—Continued

Sat R 55:76 Je 17 '72 100w [YA]

SCOTT, ROY V. The reluctant farmer; the rise of agricultural extension to 1914. 362p $8.95 Univ. of Ill. press

630.71 Agricultural extension work—History
SBN 252-00091-9 LC 70-102023

The author "has presented an account of 'the search for a teaching device effective with rural adults.' He reports, state by state, the development of agricultural education through the medium of local fairs, college or state-promoted farmers' institutes, college-directed short courses and extension activities, business-oriented demonstration trains, model farms, and crop-improvement campaigns, to the emergence of the county agricultural agent. . . . [He also discusses] the work of Seaman A. Knapp and of William J. Spillman in laying the foundation for the Smith-Lever program." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"[Scott's book] replaces Alfred C. True's long outdated and insufficient work, History of agricultural extension work in the United States, 1785-1923, as the standard one in the field. . . . The book is far less narrow than the subject would indicate, and deserves a place in the library of any institution interested in economic and social development, past or present."

Choice 8:873 S '71 180w

"The principal strength of Scott's volume rests in his extensive research and synthesis of the available data. He has consulted a wide range of materials—correspondence relating to the activities of pioneer leaders in agricultural demonstration, farm journals, general periodicals, publications of the United States Department of Agriculture and the state agricultural colleges, reports of trade organizations interested in agricultural improvement, and most of the existing monographic literature. His work provides a thorough survey of the subject. . . . [This survey] is the best yet in print, but one still lacking in analytical depth." M. W. M. Hargreaves

J Am Hist 58:790 D '71 470w

SCOTT, TONI LEE. A kind of loving; ed. by Curt Gentry. 205p $5.95 World pub.

B or 92
LC 76-115803

"Having lied about her age, Scott appeared at the age of 14 as a night club singer in San Francisco. At 19 she lost a leg and became known as 'a singer with a cause.' . . . Her life is told in detail— . . . 54 operations, five husbands, countless jobs, emotional ups and downs, creation of a foundation to help amputees, and involvement in Bill Sands's The Seventh Step, an organization that helps rehabilitate convicts." (Library J)

"Miss Scott comes through as too much of a human being for the book to be even the least bit dull. She talks of her amputation and of the strength it took to overcome what some might call her tragedy. She reveals herself as a very human person, a person with much strength, much goodness, and with some definite desires for revenge when the occasion warrants. . . . [This] is an excellent and extremely readable book. Much of the credit must go to Miss Scott, born Antonia Paula Theresa Di Georgi, who talks about her triumphs without false pride, her failures without false humility. And surely a word of credit must go to Gentry . . . who proves himself a first class editor as well as writer." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 30:252 O 1 '70 300w

"The writing is mediocre, humorless, and, in spite of melodramatic moments, spiritless and sentimental. Toni is said to put soul into her singing, but there's none in her book. Except for metropolitan branch libraries on the West Coast, public libraries will do better with Louise Baker's Out on a limb [BRD 1946], still in print." Polly Anderson

Library J 95:2461 J1 '70 180w

SCOTT-HERON, GIL. The nigger factory; a novel. 242p $5.95 Dial press
LC 78-37439

This novel "deals with three days of a major crisis at an all-black Virginia college—a crisis as much of values as of race, that pits the students against both the administration and each other in a hopeless struggle over demands that are not only just, but relatively trivial. It begins in defeat, proceeds through . . . confusion, and ends in catastrophe." (Book World)

Reviewed by L. J. Davis

Book World p11 Mr 12 '72 350w

"Scott-Heron's style is neither readable, convincing, nor artistic. All his characters, from the university president on down, speak in a dialect ('You wanna say somethin?'; 'Wuz he?') or in stilted exposition. It is hard to take, and that is unfortunate because of the vitality of the subject matter."

Choice 9:817 S '72 90w

"Without resort to verbal fireworks or black humor, [Scott-Heron] depicts the tensions dividing the black community, tensions that have economic and social roots and are exacerbated by personality differences. . . . The novel proceeds by means of short scenes, like small fires started here and there, which grow and coalesce into one large, fearsome conflagration—swift, all-consuming, and irresistible. The author, only 23, a teaching fellow at Johns Hopkins, who has published a volume of poems and is already at work on his third novel, is an active composer and performer as well, and clearly a little fire in his own right, one worth watching." A. L. Fessler

Library J 97:517 F 1 '72 200w

"An unexceptional campus-confrontation story, briskly told by the young author, who seems to know a good deal about black people and black institutions but who has pushed his characters into postures that seem too conveniently rigid."

New Yorker 48:139 My 20 '72 70w

SCRIBNER'S monthly, 1871; introd. by Charles Scribner, Jr. 3v in 1 il $10 Scribner

051 U.S.—Social life and customs
SBN 684-12488-2 LC 72-155058

This volume contains "the 1871 issues of Scribner's monthly, republished in celebration of the 125th anniversary of the Scribner house. . . . [Included are] two local-color travel sketches; a scientific article on ships, bridges, bugs, or the weather; much sentimental poetry; two stories fit for the Young Woman; an article on the moral character of one or more of the great men of the times; an installment of Wilfrid Cumbermede, and 20 pages of editorial commentary on politics, manners-and-morals, and art here and abroad." (Choice)

"[These issues] are not vintage Scribner's; there are none of the famous engravings, Southern regional fiction, or essays on the American scene. The magazine was still too close to its roots in the Presbyterian magazine Hours at home (1865-1870). The picturesque, the sentimental, and the pious predominate. . . . The student of American culture might better turn to Harper's in the library, or wait and hope Scribner's celebrates the bicentennial in as extravagant a fashion."

Choice 9:647 J1/Ag '72 180w

"Scribner's is a . . . good guide to that costive little world that well-to-do Victorians liked to believe in, with its genteel taste in prose and verse ('where beats the surf on ledges evermore') and its wide-ranging democratic interests—nature lore; exotic lands; 'heathen Chinese' laborers, so superior to 'the scum of Liverpool and London and the refuse of Ireland with their tendency toward Trade Unionism; the late Queen of Italy, that 'calm, full-orbed moon' whose 'majestic beauty dazzled the beholder like the sun in his glory.' Something more than nostalgia seems to be at work here." Paul Showers

N Y Times Bk ■ p4 D 5 '71 200w

SEABORG, GLENN T. Man and atom; building a new world through nuclear technology, by Glenn T. Seaborg and William R. Corliss. 411p il maps $10 Dutton

621.48 Atomic energy. Nuclear engineering
SBN 0-525-15099-4 LC 70-122795

The "authors explore the . . . range of peaceful applications through which nuclear energy . . . can help to solve many of modern man's . . . problems. . . . [They consider] such areas as the diagnosis and treatment of disease, the irrigation of arid land with desalted water, the production of more food, . . . the exploration of the universe, and the development of new cities on Earth, under the sea, and in outer space. . . . [The authors also appraise] the Atoms for Peace program and efforts toward international control of nuclear power." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Glossary. Index.

"An up-to-date, comprehensive, authoritative . . . semipopular account. . . . Marred by a gee-whiz style and by excessive emphasis upon and promotion of U.S. programs, the book nevertheless displays a, perhaps, unique breadth of vision and coverage."

Choice 8:1466 Ja '72 150w

"This book is a useful reminder of the benefactions derived from nuclear sources. Seaborg and the Atomic Energy Commission have been synonymous for many years; and partisans and critics alike owe Man and Atom a careful reading." R. E. Bilstein

Library J 96:2528 Ag '71 80w

"This book may be a timely one, consisting as it does of a justification of the activities of the Atomic Energy Commission in supporting research on and development of peaceful uses of atomic energy. For in spite of its all-encompassing title, that is precisely what the book is. It is somewhat difficult to decide which segment of the population the authors were trying to address, for it cannot be said that this book will appeal to the general public. In spite of valiant attempts to explain such difficult concepts as half-life and, indeed, radioactivity itself, the book is replete with charts and diagrams which it is doubtful a layman not already versed in mechanical concepts would be able to understand. And on the other hand, these explanations might appear superfluous to those who can comprehend the details of the working principles of, for example, a breeder reactor." A. V. Crewe

Science 175:372 F '72 470w

SEABURG, CARL. Boston observed. 328p il $12.50 Beacon press

917.44 Boston—History

ISBN 0-8070-5176-4 LC 78-156453

"A 'literary and pictorial approach' to the history of greater Boston from geological times to the 1970's. Eight chapters of historical essays by Seaburg are separated by seven 'interludes' of documentation. . . . An appendix presents brief historical summaries of more than 40 contemporary suburbs of Boston." (Choice) Index.

"The source materials are quoted from authors ranging in time from John Winthrop to Malcolm X. More than 300 illustrations, also from a wide selection of sources and complement the text. . . . Readable and well written."

Choice 9:574 Je '72 100w

"Seaburg, a writer and Unitarian minister, has . . . limited this first book to the following aspects of the town: its geology; the harbor trade; war and protests; fire and its prevention; crime and punishment; the religious life; and the trolley, park, and water systems. The chapters are cleverly separated with brief period accounts depicting the mores of the day. Descriptive lists of the harbor islands and surrounding towns will serve those readers not familiar with the area, while those acquainted with Boston's past will also enjoy Seaburg's choice of illustrations and his ability to relate the familiar with fresh vigor." David Bower

Library J 97:682 F 15 '72 170w

SEABURG, CARL. Merchant prince of Boston, Colonel T. H. Perkins, 1764-1854 [by] Carl Seaburg and Stanley Paterson. 478p il $16 Harvard univ. press

B or 92 Perkins, Thomas Handasyd
ISBN 0-674-56910-5 LC 71-165419

This is an account of the life and business career of Thomas H. Perkins who was "six years old at the time of the Boston Massacre . . . [and] who lived almost to the eve of the Civil War. For more than half a century, as apprentice clerk, and partner in the West Indies, the Far East, and North America, he carried on the trade in sugar and slaves, sea otters and sandalwood, opium and tea that made him a millionaire and one of the foremost citizens of his native Boston. Some of his mercantile profits went into manufacturing, hotels, and other investments that caught his fancy and seemed to promise profit. . . . Bibliographical note. Index." (Choice)

"All aspects of [Perkins'] life and career receive meticulous attention from the businessmen authors of the book . . . which is a descriptive, not an analytical, account of Perkins and his world. Well and clearly written, broadly based on secondary works, and rich in intimate details culled from Perkins' papers, this study should be of interest to all students of American history."

Choice 9:855 S '72 210w

"While most of the book covers [Perkins'] firms' reappings and occasional failures locally and around the world, the authors have not failed to capture the true spirit of a very active family and civic life. Perkins makes a fascinating subject; and Seaburg and Paterson have vividly portrayed, within an accurate historical background, his fashionable residences, his Federalist politics, his 'good causes' (the most well known being the Perkins School for the Blind), etc. Although not low-priced, this is an excellent, readable book." D. A. Bower

Library J 97:868 Mr 1 '72 190w

"[The book fails] to bring Perkins to life. . . . [The authors organize] their material by dividing it in an inflexible chronological manner. As the continuum flows by, they chop it off and place each resulting piece in a compartmentalized chapter. Of these there are thirty-five. Sometimes the arrangement works well. An episode, inherently insipid or inept, is cut down to natural size—the Hartford Convention is an example. . . . Still, the volume as a whole remains a collection of episodes. Why, in view of the scholarship here displayed, this should be the dominant impression is somewhat of a puzzle. Inevitably the question arises whether the fault may not lie in Perkins himself. Although he acquired riches and dispensed them with insight, it may be that he was a dull man, too reserved or too calculating to strike fire." E. C. Kirkland

New Eng Q 45:283 Je '72 900w

"Perkins is a classic example of a pre-industrial entrepreneur. As such, [he] provides a possible focus for a perceptive look at early American economic growth and business history. Dwelling too much on personal anecdotes, chronicling rather than discussing the multiple threads of Perkins' life, this biography misses the opportunity and proves disappointing. Furthermore, frequent local and genealogical digressions disrupt the narrative without providing the needed background. . . . This book is not the contribution to early American history that it might have been."

Va Q R 48:lviii spring '72 150w

SEAGER, ROBIN. Tiberius. 300p pl maps $12.95 Univ. of Calif. press

B or 92 Tiberius, Emperor of Rome. Rome —History—Empire, 30 B.C.-476 A.D.
ISBN 0-520-02212-2 LC 74-185511

The author "examines initially Tiberius' career under Augustus, including his military successes, and describes the [events] . . . that brought him to the principate in A.D. 14. The story of Tiberius' reign deals first with the immediate problems of the accession, then with the careers of the princes Germanicus and Drusus. Tiberius' relations with the senate, magistrates, people and provinces, his social and religious policies, and his attitude to the notorious law of treason occupy the central section. This is followed by the narrative of the rise of the ambitious Seianus, of Tiberius' retirement to Capreae, and of the last dark years after Seianus' fall." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Chronology. Index.

"Seager's discussion of the emperor and his policies is good but not wholly successful. On a few questions the argument is inconsistent, on others—perhaps too many—it is not thorough enough. And since the interpretation throughout relies heavily on common sense, the occasional clarification of an overcomplicated issue is bought at the cost of the assumption that common sense was the distinguishing feature of the intrigues which riddled the imperial court. The maps lack detail. A readable survey which complements but cannot replace Marsh [Reign of Tiberius, BRD 1931] this is a good buy for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 9:862 S '72 170w

"Seager has drawn on [new discoveries and insights] . . . to produce a detailed and well-researched study of Tiberius. . . . The author does not merely chronicle events, but shows that the development of the Empire and Tiberius' personal history are inextricably linked. Seager has made good use of sources: archaeological, literary, and numismatic (a final section on literary sources is valuable for the beginning student); and the illustrations are well chosen. In sum, Seager provides a clear and well-written account which can be recommended to those interested in the development of the Roman Empire in general, and in the life of Tiberius in particular." J. P. Hershbell

SEAGER, ROBIN—Continued

Library J 97:2394 J1 '72 230w

"[Seager] writes well and clearly, if sometimes in a rather deadpan manner. His picture of Tiberius, an Emperor who hated his job, is confident and, in its general lines, the right one; but while Tacitean malice and distortion produced a fascinating monster, this just appraisal produces, it must be confessed, a somewhat tedious prince. . . . Tiberius is profusely illustrated and, in consequence, expensive. Though it avoids discussion of the complicated issues with which ancient historians concern themselves, it refers the reader to such discussions, and there is a very full bibliography."

TLS p550 My 12 '72 800w

SEALE, WILLIAM. Sam Houston's wife; a biography of Margaret Lea Houston. 287p $6.95 Univ. of Okla. press

B or 92 Houston, Margaret (Lea)
ISBN 0-8061-0926-2 LC 77-123341

A biography of the famous Texan's third wife. "Bibliography. Index." (J Am Hist)

"The author makes a heroic effort to treat Margaret Lea Houston as an individual and with sympathetic understanding, but even though she possessed many remarkable qualities her place in history obviously rests solely upon her long and devoted relationship to the most famous Texan of them all. . . . The central theme of Seale's biography is Margaret Lea's unceasing devotion to her controversial husband and to their children. The picture of her that inadvertently comes through is that of a frail, sickly, religious fanatic who suffered from melancholia and who could never come to terms with the Texas wilderness. . . . The present biography is well written, copiously documented, and attractively produced." W. E. Hollon

Am Hist R 76:1600 D '71 500w

"This book is a significant contribution to the literature about Sam Houston; it is also—and perhaps more importantly—a major addition to the social and cultural history of the West in the nineteenth century. For, in examining the domestic life of the Houston family, William Seale has gone into meticulous detail about everyday matters so often overlooked by historians. It is this that will give the book a lasting value. . . . [It] is a thoroughly researched and carefully documented work. And it is much better written than most scholarly treatises." S. V. Connor

J Am Hist 59:143 Je '72 400w

SEAMAN, BARBARA. Free and female; the sex life of the contemporary woman. 288p $6.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

301.41 Sex instruction. Woman—Sexual behavior. Civil rights
LC 70-172633

In her report on women's sexual needs and capacities the author comments on "men, love, marriage, orgasm, contraception, venereal disease, gynecologists, breast-feeding, [and] careers. . . . [Her book includes] a survey of the sexual attitudes and experiences of 100 high-achieving women." (Newsweek) Index.

"'Why do so many women not know how sexy they are?' asks feminist Barbara Seaman. Well, now they know, for Miss Seaman has told them in the first 139 pages of this book. . . . [In the chapter,] 'Liberate Yourself from Your Gynecologist,' . . . Miss Seaman cites doctors who are not interested in natural childbirth and she [notes] some alarming statistics. Each year some twenty thousand babies are lost and among the survivors an appallingly high number have. . . . nervous system impairments which can often be traced back to methods used at delivery. . . . [The author warns] that doctors are prescribing the pill without informing women of the hazards that accompany its use. . . . [This forthright book] should alert the woman reader to view [her] problems more intelligently. . . . Many of the ills depicted here are well known to women—perhaps men should read this book and discover some of women's problems." I. N. Pompea

Best Sell 32:141 Je 15 '72 500w

"The last chapter, dealing with rehumanization of males in this society, is especially moving and perceptive. . . . [This book] would serve as a good text for women's studies courses, people working in social agencies, as well as general reading for medical students. Should be read as an antidote to David Reuben's Everything you always wanted to know about sex [BRD 1970]."

Choice 9:885 S '72 200w

Reviewed by Martha Maring

Library J 97:3723 N 15 '72 100w

"[Seaman] is all confidence. She is a staunch feminist and an angry one. . . . [Her book] deals with the female orgasm in biological detail, the sexual capacity of women as compared to men, the paternalistic tyranny of gynecologists, a tough look at VD and contraception—both of which seem to be an evil male plot—and a glance at the children of liberated women. In many ways an excellent book, it gives information I've never seen anywhere else. It has always seemed to me a shame that we are a people who know more about heart transplants than we do about female orgasms, when we will probably have much more need in our lifetimes to know about the latter. Mrs. Seaman makes [W. H.] Masters and [V. E.] Johnson easy to understand [Human Sexual Response, BRD 1966; Human Sexual Inadequacy, BRD 1970]." Rona Jaffe

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ag 13 '72 300w

"Sensible advice is typical of Seaman's compassionate, personal approach to various crises in the life of the modern woman. . . . While [she] believes that the new feminism will encourage some women to terminate unhappy marriages, she also maintains that ultimately it will lead to more happy unions. . . . [This] matter-of-fact, unsensational work [is recommended]. . . . for women—and men—who want real food rather than cotton candy." J. A. Seligmann

Newsweek 79:71 J1 3 '72 650w

Reviewed by Caroline Bird

Sat R 55:55 Ag 26 '72 420w

SEARCH for peace in the Middle East; a report prepared for the American Friends Service Committee. rev ed 126p $4.50 Hill & Wang

956 Jewish-Arab relations
ISBN 0-8090-8573-5 LC 75-148238

This book, which explains the background, the issues, and the stands of the participants, is an attempt to examine the possibilities of peace between the Arabs and Israelis.

"[The writers] are among the most intelligent, most articulate and, in a way, most knowledgeable yet to approach this subject. But, for all their qualifications, their opinions must be judged as being those of 'private persons with no special political or military intelligence sources,' to use their own description of themselves. They see American, Soviet, Arab, and Israeli viewpoints almost exactly as the American, Soviet, Arab, and Israeli governments intend for them to be seen. . . . [The book is] concisely informative, . . . clearly written, and . . . [a] most valuable explanation. . . . In less than a hundred pages [it is] far superior to almost all of the 300-odd page back-breakers to be found on the subject." Miles Copeland

Am Pol Sci R 66:1078 S '72 1050w

"It is good to have a revised and updated edition of this brief but important book. . . . Based on careful research and a thorough personal knowledge of the area, it has been constantly revised and refined in the light of criticisms from all sides. It is eminently fair, and marked by deep sympathy for all the people involved. This may, perhaps, be a weakness in one sense, because 'sweet reasonableness' is not a feature of the Palestinian scene, and to that extent all books of this kind are somewhat misleading. Nevertheless, the proposals put forward here are serious, intelligent, and soundly based, and the book should unquestionably be read and pondered on by every person who is in any way interested in the problem. Strongly recommended for college and school libraries."

Choice 8:1091 O '71 160w

SEARLE, G. R. The quest for national efficiency: a study in British politics and political thought, 1899-1914. 286p $8.50 Univ. of Calif. press

320.942 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century
LC [77-129589]

This is an "examination of the concept of national efficiency as a motivating force in British politics from the 1890's to the First World War. . . . Searle traces the origins and 'ideology of national efficiency' and presents several case studies of its influence on such matters as the Committee of Imperial Defence, the Education Act of 1902, and the tentative efforts of Lord Rosebery and Lloyd George to create national nonparty governments." (Choice)

"[Searle's study] attempts to transcend the political historian's conventional concern with party, institutions, and policy. But [he] is most persuasive as a traditional political historian.

... [His] exploration of politics and political thought exclusively in terms of the machinery of government ignores the development of political thought and conduct as part of a larger revolution in social, economic, and political theory and practice occurring from the 1880s to 1914 in the closely related communities of scientists, men of letters, members of parliament, dons, bankers, and businessmen." R. N. Soffer

Am Hist R 77:793 Je '72 350w

"[This study] is based on extensive use of both printed and manuscript materials, and to an unusual degree succeeds in the difficult task of interrelating intellectual and political history. 'National efficiency' was a supposed remedy for Britain's growing economic and political insecurity which attracted support from politicians, journalists, and social reformers of the most diverse political backgrounds. . . . The book assumes a working knowledge of British politics and personalities and should thus be of interest primarily to advanced students."

Choice 9:123 Mr '72 180w

Economist 240:54 S 11 '71 550w

"Searle offers us a cautionary tale which politicians today might be well advised to ponder. He may not always convince his readers and, here and there, like a lady with her needlework, he seems too concerned to make everything fit into his pattern, but the resulting book is interesting and accomplished. . . . [He] is at his best in his mastery of the authorities and in his narrative of the events and people involved. . . . In his story there are two strands: the first tells us who were the efficient, what they did and whom they hoped to attract; the other strand, which is far more important, shows how the idea [of 'national efficiency'] cut across party and, even as late as 1910, could have led to coalition."

TLS p1245 O 15 '71 1050w

SEARLS, HANK. Pentagon; a novel. 371p $7.95 Geis

LC 75-134218

"A rifle bullet shot from Arlington Cemetery thuds into the Pentagon office of General Greenburg, chief of Chemico-Biological Warfare. . . . The purpose is to put the finger on the unregenerate military, secretly continuing research in an officially abolished field. Col. Lee Frost, head of Pentagon Counter-Intelligence, tracks [the perpetrator] down, discovering on the way that the Pentagon is huddled over three top secrets: a film of a more loathsome massacre than My Lai, a deal with Israel as a means of supplying planes to Greece, and a plan to sell the President on ending the Vietnam war by using 'nukes.'" (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Edward Gannon

Best Sell 31:253 S 1 '71 450w

"This is a familiar story, concocted of yesterday's headlines, today's sensations, and tomorrow's fears, but, unfortunately, to little purpose. . . . [It] is more a revelation of the Pentagon's sins than a novel. Much plot, many characters, a convincing mise en scene—but it all adds up to a book not worth shelf-space in any library, short of one with more money than selectivity."

Choice 9:817 S '72 100w

"While the story concerns an America where the sinister righteous play Russian roulette with naive bomb throwers, more [importantly] it is about a man attempting to come to grips with himself, his life, his duty as a soldier, and his attitude toward his country. With this novel the spy/adventure story leaves the Cold War behind as irrelevant and moves into the 1970's to examine the world of intrigue that surrounds the nature of government information, public relations, and censorship. Searls's insights are superb. A significant book with wide appeal." T. R. Bell

Library J 96:2793 S 15 '71 100w

"[This] is a rather sprawling affair, not notable for its deftness. But it does convey what goes on in that mysterious, threatening building. And what goes on—at least, in Searls's report—is not flattering either to the military or to industry. . . . 'Pentagon' is full of the kind of detail that could have come only with firsthand knowledge, a revealing look at a set-up that controls our destiny." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p26 N 7 '71 90w

SEATON, ALBERT. The battle for Moscow, 1941-1942. 320p il pl maps $7.95 Stein & Day

940.54 Moscow, Battle of, 1941-1942

LC [78-857317]

In this account of the German attack on Moscow, the author "examines the campaign and describes the varying fortunes of the generals and troops engaged in it. The coverage . . . [includes] sketches of the principals on either side to descriptions of the . . . conditions which in the end halted Russian as well as German troops." (Economist)

"Few are as well qualified to describe the battle for Moscow . . . as Colonel Seaton. . . . [His book] is thoroughly researched, lucidly written and admirably tailored for the general reader. . . . [The West] has tended to overlook the bloody battles waged in eastern Europe. Colonel Seaton's excellent book can be recommended to anyone seeking an antidote to this view."

Economist 240:50 Ag 7 '71 470w

"Those who have read Seaton's The Russo-German War 1941-45 [BRD 1971] will already be acquainted with many of his ideas concerning the German defeat and Soviet setback during that period. To a large extent the reasoning in that work also holds true for the battle which is analyzed in the present one. . . . Specialists will find the author's view of Zhukov interesting; in many respects the leading Soviet marshal comes off as a second-rater. Recommended for large and medium-sized libraries." A. S. Birkos

Library J 96:4093 D 15 '71 180w

"[This] is a competent narrative of military developments, which conveys little of the world-shattering drama of the defence of Moscow. . . . When the author strays into the domain of characterising the various political and military leaders on both sides he is usually at sea. He quotes numerous sources in German and Russian . . . but relies far more heavily on the German. He displays a bias . . . in favour of the Nazis. He is much more at home with General von something, and Colonel Graf von und zu something else, than he is with the leaders of the Red Army." Geoffrey McDermott

New Statesman 82:368 S 17 '71 260w

SECKLER, DAVID, ed. California water; a study in resource management. 348p il $15 Univ. of Calif. press

333.9 Water resources development

ISBN 0-520-01884-2

LC 76-139773

This "book is divided into four parts. Part One outlines the past, present, and future expectations of the California Water Plan and reviews some of the major points of criticism regarding it. Part Two surveys various aspects of the demand for water in California, urban and agricultural, its value in a natural setting, and, finally, the demand for water as an element in the ecology of the Bay-Delta region. Part Three covers the various means of water supply, from desalting to waste-water reclamation. . . . The last chapter of this part examines the use of water for the production of electrical energy in light of alternative means of energy supply. . . . [Part Four contains an] examination of the process of decision-making in water resources. . . . [and] an overview of the problems of evaluation . . . with reference to the particular problem of California." (Intro) Index.

SECKLER, DAVID—Continued

"This anthology . . . provides the layman with objective, non-technical information on the state's controversial water plan which has been the basic guide for water management since 1956. . . . As a current, clearly written, thoughtful treatment of specific water problems in troubled California, it has no comparable predecessor. As an anthology containing new perspectives on the larger problem of water management it also has broad applicability to undergraduate education on conservation and resources."

Choice 8:1608 F '72 170w

"The introduction points out that recent advances in technology provide an impressive array of alternative means of supply for meeting whatever demands arise and thus introduce a new era in water-resource management; a footnote states that after the book was in galley proof the California Department of Water Resources issued a bulletin (subtitled 'The California Water Plan Outlook in 1970') which 'reflects a basic change in the Department's thinking, a change much more in accord with the thinking in this book.'" H. E. Thomas

Science 175:400 Ja 28 '72 430w

SEELYE, JOHN. The kid. 119p $4.95 Viking
ISBN 0-670-41298-8 LC 71-171891

"One morning in 1887 a black man and a white 'kid' drift into a small Wyoming town. A tense yet comic showdown develops between the 'nigger' and the town tough. Suddenly, the black kills the tough. At a hastily called trial, the odors of dirty clothes, liquor, and dung mingle with the echoes of counsel's overblown Victorian harangues. A second grotesque turn leads to four more brutal deaths. The 'kid,' presumed to have been a boy, turns out to have been a young woman." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. A. C. Francis

Best Sell 31:565 Mr 15 '72 550w

"Seelye's narrator, a droll minor character given to outlandishly apt metaphors, uses the same kind of colloquial idiom and rhythm that Seelye used with such remarkable success in The True Adventures of Huckleberry Finn [BRD 1970]. Seelye's West, beneath its comic and virile swagger, is squalid, fetid, and brutal. This remarkably effective novel should be one of the year's best." Peter Dollard

Library J 97:517 F 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Anita Iceman

Library J 97:1627 Ap 15 '72 80w [YA]

New Repub 166:28 Ja 22 '72 210w

"[This] is a curious work because it is difficult to understand the author's intentions. There is a strong sense that the set-pieces and pat violence of the genre are being used here to comment upon a society that thrives on them for entertainment. Mr Seelye . . . has elements at work in this story that parallel present-day social concerns. . . . There is never any question of competence or control in the writing itself. But the author's deliberate reliance on commonplace effects and literary devices put this reader outside the story early on. . . . Perhaps I won't know its true effect until I read another Western. If the book was intended to extinguish any urge to do so, it is a success." John Deck

N Y Times Bk R p6 Ja 23 '72 950w

"This sure is a cute little tall tale, but as for that pretentious stuff on the dust cover about 'a parabola that includes a number of classic American novels in its backward curve.'—why, shucks, that don't mean nothing."

New Yorker 47:115 F 19 '72 110w

Newsweek 79:80 Mr 6 '72 230w

TLS p985 Ag 25 '72 300w

SEIDEL, M. Bruegel [by] M. Seidel [and] R. H. Marijnissen. 351p pl col pl $42.50 Putnam 759.94 Brueghel, Pieter, the elder
LC 77-156587

"The German photographer Max Seidel has undertaken to present the paintings of Pieter Bruegel in a series of reproductions of them as a whole and in many details. . . . A brief text by a Belgian art historian includes Carel van Mander's Bruegel biography in translation, gives the few documented data of Bruegel's life, sketches the political, cultural, and social characteristics of his times (with the support of a chronological table), and tries to unravel the strange personality of the artist." (Library J) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"A relatively brief text, but highly pertinent because much of it has to do with the quite precise meanings of Bruegel's pictorial metaphors. As in all art books, the illustrations are the real point of the production, and they are very fine indeed. There is a particularly generous supply of enlarged details, to counteract the loss of readability which is inevitable when six square feet of painting are reduced to the size of a book page." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 228:135 D '71 80w

"[Professor Marijnissen's] 60 large pages of introduction, catalogue, and notes say what there is to say with grace and precision, and without going off into personal judgments. The photographs are most of the book, and it is here that the personal enters in. . . . There are only a few color plates, and even these are largely of details. You can't do much to communicate the work of this supreme colorist in black and white, and the reproductions of entire paintings do not therefore give much pleasure. But in hundreds of plates the camera roams around picking out faces, gestures, objects, some of them much enlarged. These are the atoms of a great art, and we can study them here with an attention not possible in a museum. But the . . . photographer's . . . taste is for the virtuoso, the bizarre, the extreme." David Park

Book World p3 D 12 '71 900w

Choice 8:1580 F '72 160w

"The catalog of the paintings is not much concerned with authenticity and attributions, but sheds light on the subject matter of the paintings, especially the puzzling 'Proverbs' of the Berlin Gallery. The photos in color, all of details, are more satisfactory than those in black and white. The latter often lose clarity and distinctness. . . . The reproductions of whole paintings are sometimes cut off at the edge (bled), a fact especially disturbing if the cut-off part is discussed in the text. . . . Although many details, otherwise easily overlooked, are made accessible, the scholar, and perhaps even the layman, will be better served by F. Grossmann's Bruegel Paintings." J. L. Dewton

Library J 96:3747 N 15 '71 230w

"One book on a subject that would seem exhausted except for footnotes must be mentioned for its astounding illustrations, aside from a helpful text. I have never seen anywhere a book with enlarged details of paintings to equal [these] in number, quality and general interest. The color plates are a little harsh, but no matter. The monochromes are the thing here. Their revelations of texture and technique and their exploration of the details of paintings by the artist of all artists who most rewards such exploration make this book a treasure in the endless Bruegel bibliography." John Canaday

N Y Times Bk R p10 D 5 '71 100w

SEIDELMAN, JAMES E. Creating with papier-mâché [by] James E. Seidelman and Grace Mintonye; il. by Christine Randall. 56p $4.95 Crowell-Collier press

731 Paper crafts—Juvenile literature
LC 72-138026

The book provides "instructions for choosing and utilizing materials, and for creating forms and molds. [It also] includes ideas for papier-mâché objects and suggestions for starting a papier-mâché club." (Horn Bk) "Grades four to six." (Library J)

"Clear and precise instructions."

Horn Bk 48:165 Ap '72 30w

"Though a very attractive book . . . this contains surprisingly few specifics. . . . It provides an introduction to the craft, mentions various projects—e.g., masks, free-standing figures, and molds—and even suggests the formation of a papier-mâché club. But it fails to include measurements for ingredients, checklists of materials, labeled diagrams, step-by-step instructions, and even an index. . . . Most [intermediate children] would do as well with the appropriate chapter from [B. W.] Carlson's Make It Yourself [BRD 1950]; for high-school age and above, [Mildred] Anderson's Papier-Mâché and How To Use It is superior in content and format." M. M. Bauman

Library J 96:2133 Je 15 '71 120w

SELBY, HUBERT. The room, by Hubert Selby, Jr. 288p $5.95 Grove

ISBN 0-394-47588-7 LC 72-155129

"The novel, set in a prison cell, describes the mind of one man driven to paranoia by official injustice. Fantasies of violent, criminal sexuality follow the man's arrest by the police 'on suspicion.' But on suspicion of what? He does not know. . . . He suffers bewilderment and then outrage, which lead to a series of perverse fantasy acts and stimulate fragments of memory. . . out of proportion to the precipitating cause." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by J. J. Quinn

Best Sell 31:468 Ja 15 '72 270w

"Both language and scenes are typical of Selby—extremely crude. Those who felt that he had something to say in Last Exit to Brooklyn [BRD 1965] will be sorely disappointed with this new venture. Not recommended. (A section of the book previously appeared in Evergreen Review.)" Topsy Smalley

Library J 96:2348 Jl '71 130w

New Repub 166:30 F 19 '72 310w

Reviewed by Clive Jordan

New Statesman 83:248 F 25 '72 360w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards

N Y Rev of Books 18:19 Mr 9 '72 650w

"Selby writes with an obsessive concern for explicit detail, for the precise texture of skin and hair, the exact placement of bodies, particular human odors. We are told about [the nameless hero's] imaginary sexual assaults and sadism, fictions so brutal they render his real sexual memories oddly touching. . . . We recognize ourselves in the prisoner. . . . As a work of the imagination, I think [this book] assures Selby's place in the first rank of American novelists. His work has the power, the intimacy with suffering and morality, the honesty and moral urgency of Dostoevsky's. . . . [It is] a novel profoundly concerned, perhaps too deeply, with America and yet a novel that refuses to sentimentalize the American experiences. 'The Room' is a great, moral book." Dotson Rader

N Y Times Bk R p5 D 12 '71 1000w

"Selby is a clinician of male violence, an explorer of those recesses of consciousness where the question of sexual identity is always in doubt. [This novel] is about the same nexus of sexual chaos and cruelty that gave Last Exit to Brooklyn its remarkable force. . . . Cruelty is the stable center of living for Selby's hero. His loathing, self-hatred, and fury revolve around a core of venom hot as the sun. For in no encounter with the system, or with any man in it, has this man won. . . . Selby's genius is for writing of the unlovable 'with love' and with a strength and purity of style that make his work one of the most remarkable achievements in current literature." Josephine Hendin

Sat R 54:37 D 11 '71 750w

"The substance of the book lies in the man's fantasies of revenge on the two arresting officers. . . . [who] are tortured and humiliated until they become little more than pain-racked animals. . . . The sadism in these fantasies of power is unrelenting and the details are described to the last drop of gore. . . . The impression of a man crazed by an impotent fury and by a wild, hopeless need for revenge is intended and—undeniably—achieved. . . . [But] the bludgeon of sadism is wielded so excessively and with such force that the reader is soon clubbed into insensibility." TLS p209 F 25 '72 800w

SELDEN, MARK. The Yen'an Way in revolutionary China. (Harvard East Asia ser, 62). 311p maps $10 Harvard univ. press

335.43 Communism—China

ISBN 0-674-96560-4 LC 79-152272

This study of the Yen'an Way discusses "the social, political, military, and economic system developed by the Chinese Communists in the Shensi-Kansu-Ninghua border region during the 1930's and 1940's. Facing the dual challenge of civil war and Japanese invasion, the Communists set about winning grassroots support by . . . redistributing the wealth and land, and by encouraging popular participation and in local decision making. . . . This concept of popular participation and egalitarian values with its rejection of the traditional Chinese vision of man and society . . . generated a mood and momentum which have continued into the present." (Library J)

"Although based on considerable research [the author] under uses some sources of greater objectivity and firsthand value, notably the writers of Michael Lindsay, and in the upshot adds rather little to what is already known from sympathetic writers like Edgar Snow and Jack Belden. [The book] is written at the college level."

Choice 9:266 Ap '72 90w

"[Selden] believes that much of the third world can benefit from the Chinese experience, since generally once the common enemy is vanquished revolutionary fervor and cooperation wanes. He makes admirable use of Chinese and Japanese primary sources as well as the standard secondary works, and the result is a well-documented, erudite, and readable study." E. A. Engeldinger

Library J 97:498 F 1 '72 170w

"[The author] devotes considerable attention to the development of [the] ability to mobilize the masses, the most characteristic single achievement of the Chinese Communists. . . . [He also] introduces important new materials on the Communist achievement of a relatively stable government and economy in north Shensi during World War II. . . . [The author] has given a strong presentation of the undeniably formidable achievements of the Chinese Communists during the anti-Japanese war years. The previous paucity of materials for this crucial development makes Selden's book all the more essential for understanding the dynamics of the greatest revolution of our time." J. P. Harrison

N Y Times Bk R p18 F 20 '72 800w

"There are a few points on which one could challenge the balance of the author's account. For example, while he rightly emphasises the equalitarianism of the Yen'an Way as compared to the Kuomintang areas, the differences in living standards under the supply system were greater than is indicated in pages 155-57. Also, though 'labour heroes' are mentioned, the very successful individual farmers, such as Wu Man-you, received more publicity in the Chieh Fang Jih Pao and were probably more important in increasing production than the mutual aid teams which the author stresses. . . . These minor criticisms do not really detract from the value of an excellent account of the Chinese Communist system of government during this period." Michael Lindsay

Pacific Affairs 45:279 summer '72 600w

TLS p951 Ag 11 '72 850w

Va Q R 48:cxlv autumn '72 180w

SELSAM, MILLICENT E. The carrot and other root vegetables; phot. by Jerome Wexler. 48p $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Morrow

635 Root crops—Juvenile literature

LC 70-155994

The author "describes the fertilization, growth, and harvesting of the root vegetables: carrots, radishes, turnips, beets, and sweet potatoes." (Publisher's note) "Grades one to four." (Library J)

"[This book contains] a lucid text and exceptionally fine photographs. . . . [and is] delightfully simple [and] informative." I. G. Kelley

Library J 97:768 F 15 '72 80w

"An open format and large print are . . . assets of [this] book that is an excellent introduction to botany." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:60 N 13 '71 70w

"The text is . . . nontechnical although in one place it carefully names and describes the parts of the flower. The turnip, the beet and the sweet potato are briefly contrasted with the carrot. Children in the early grades who raise plants such as the carrot will find this book a pleasure and a guide. The scale of the pictures is not always made as clear as it might be." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 225:107 D '71 100w

SELZER, MICHAEL, ed. "Kike!" a documentary history of anti-semitism in America; ed. and with an introd. by Michael Selzer; foreword by Herbert Gold. (A Straight Arrow bk) 231p il $7.95 World pub.

301.45 Jewish question

ISBN 0-529-04471-4 LC 74-183095

"Selzer has gathered together an anthology on anti-Semitism, a documentary history of its rise in the words and pictures of its disseminators. Tracing it from the Dutch colonialists' anti-Jewish laws to the emergence of anti-Semitism as a social force and a tenet of the Ku Klux Klan, Michael Selzer looks . . . at prejudice as it exists today." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[The author] concludes that anti-Semitism is a 'moral aberration.' He hopes that his readers, recognizing some of these attitudes as their own, will cure the aberration by pitting their moral will against their 'will to evil.' Selzer's goal is worthy but unrealistic. The depth of emotion permeating the documents reveals anti-Semitism not as a 'moral' aberration, but as a complex psychological phenomenon too intense to yield to such a superficial method of change. Furthermore, Selzer provides no other evidence to support his thesis. . . . Some of the documents are repetitious or unnecessarily long. A few do not suggest particular attitudes, but rather a general dislike for Jews. . . . The final chapter is puzzling. It contains no documents for the past half decade. Instead, Selzer presents in this brief section an apology for blacks and the New Left." B. N. Smith

Library J 97:2746 S 1 '72 270w

"Selzer is . . . not different from critics of American-Jewish literature who refuse to define 'Jew' before they begin to label everything good as 'Jewish' (or vice versa). Selzer should define the Jew, perhaps in purely theological terms. By never limiting his point of departure (or arrival), he moves erratically in all directions. . . . [He] paces the selections well. He alternates long and short passages, prose and verse. The short passages are clearly the most frightening. . . . Although Selzer does little to explain the nature of anti-Semitism, he performs a valuable, necessary service in making us recognize that throughout our history many Americans have thought that 'Judaism is the antithesis of Americanism.' His selections shock and illuminate." Irving Malin

Sat R 55:64 Ag 26 '72 1000w

SEN, CHANAKYA. See Sen Gupta, B.

SEN GUPTA, BHABANI. The fulcrum of Asia; relations among China, India, Pakistan, and the USSR. 383p $8.95 Pegasus

327.5 Asia—Foreign relations
LC 70-105720

In this work "the relations of [China, India, Pakistan, and the USSR] . . . and their interaction upon each other during the two decades since 1947 are examined. Sen Gupta . . . [has] called them 'The Fulcrum of Asia' for obvious reasons: Russian aid toward India in its struggle to preserve its Himalayan frontiers exacerbates Sino-Indian relations, as well as those between Russia and China. Russian aid, in turn, causes Pakistan to seek stronger ties with China in order to offset what it considers India's growing military strength. This causes India to seek closer Russian and U.S. relations." (Choice)

"Sen Gupta's book contains 46 pages of notes with a total of 664 footnotes (some of them a full page long), no bibliography, [and] no maps. . . . [He] makes extensive use of contemporary newspapers and magazines as well as secondary sources. . . . Dealing as he does with four countries . . . Sen Gupta seems to have fallen into the error, common among specialists, of assuming that most readers will be as familiar with the geography of the areas under discussion as he himself is. I assume that this is why there are no end paper or other maps. . . . Sen Gupta has produced a . . . thought-provoking book on an area and problems about which, to date, there has been too much provocation and too little intelligent thought." L. W. Fessler

Am Pol Sci R 66:282 Mr '72 450w

"The present study complements the recent work of [A.] Stein, India and the Soviet Union [BRD 1970] on Russian relations during the Nehru years. Both works will be helpful to scholars and nonspecialists of the area."

Choice 7:910 S '70 120w

"[This is] a carefully documented analysis. . . . [The author] examines the changing alignments of the neighbors in the Kashmir war between India and Pakistan and the border war between China and India, and attempts to visualize future developments. Highly recommended." Shirley Hopkinson

Library J 95:2269 Je 15 '70 130w

"Since the author believes that international politics are too complex to portray as theoretical generalization, the narrative is wide-ranging, chronological and factually dense. In the thicket of the prose, the reader will find some genuine insights. . . . If this fine-grained contemporary diplomatic history is to be faulted, it is because it slights domestic political forces as major factors influencing foreign policy, because it practically ignores the effects of economic aid, international trade and domestic economic interests as foreign policy factors and because its properly limited time-frame exaggerates rates of change in Great Power presence in the region. As an innovative study, however, stressing the new importance of the Communist powers and the Communist parties in the region, it is a most welcome major resource." Wayne Wilcox

Pacific Affairs 43:421 fall '70 270w

SENCOURT, ROBERT. T. S. Eliot: a memoir; ed. by Donald Adamson. 266p pl $8.95 Dodd

B or 92 Eliot, Thomas Stearns

ISBN 0-396-06347-0 LC 79-169732

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by C. W. McCue

America 126:184 F 19 '72 320w

Choice 9:371 My '72 130w

Reviewed by George Steiner

New Yorker 48:134 Ap 22 '72 1250w

SENESE, HANNAH. Hannah Senesh; her life & diary; introd. by Abba Eban. 257p il $6.95 Schocken

B or 92 Jews in Hungary

ISBN 0-8053-3443-8 LC 77-179076

"A native of Hungary, . . . [Hannah Senesh] moved to Palestine just before World War II and later volunteered to join an elite parachute corps formed by the British. She dropped behind Nazi lines in Yugoslavia where she joined the partisans and later made her way across the border to Hungary to warn the Jewish population of their impending fate. She was captured, brutally tortured, and finally executed in 1944 at the age of twenty-three. [This book] includes not only the diary but many of [her] poems." (Publisher's note)

"The first entries differ little from those one would expect of a Hungarian teenager in the mid-1930's, but as the years pass, the problems of prewar Europe begin to intrude. . . . The diary itself is well written; and the short poems, translations from Hungarian and Hebrew, are moving (particularly 'Blessed Is the Match') less for their poetic quality than for their illumination of the thoughts and emotions of the young girl and their portrayal of the strong convictions which led to her sacrifice. It was the courage drawn from those convictions that made her a national heroine, and her story is worth reading."

D. W. Harrison

Library J 97:2386 Jl '72 230w

"Some of Hannah's poetry . . . where it is not girlish and charming and lush . . . is often stiffened with by-now trite Zionist sentiments. . . . To those who wish to relish certain tired arguments for the possibility of individual Jewish heroic actions during the Holocaust, a time of almost universal depravity, this book may be illuminating, and useful. For myself I was saddened to read of one so strong and true perishing in such a futile effort." Richard Elman

N Y Times Bk H p47 My 21 '72 1000w

"The opening chapter of this book is written by [Hannah's] mother, who portrays her daughter in terms larger than life. . . . The final chapter dealing with her imprisonment, like the first chapter written by her mother, is particularly interesting. Hannah's diary, letters and poems, which form the bulk of the book, give a clear picture of the making of this heroine. . . . The only regret aroused by this important contribution to the study of the Jewish resistance is that it does not tell more about the mission [to save the remnants of European Jewry] undertaken by Hannah and the rest of this special Palmach group."

TLS p1062 S 3 '71 1250w

SENN, ALFRED ERICH. The Russian revolution in Switzerland, 1914-1917. 250p $12.50 Univ. of Wis. press

940.3 Russians in Switzerland. Socialism—Europe
ISBN 299-05941-3 LC 76-143766

This is a "study of Russian revolutionaries in Switzerland between the outbreak of the First World War and the Russian Revolution. It embraces the affairs not only of Bolsheviks, Mensheviks and Social Revolutionaries but also of the small national émigré groups from the Baltic countries." (TLS) Index.

"Senn's work is a fascinating account of the role of the émigrés. He has made a notable contribution to the history of the Russian Revolution." George Charney

Library J 96:2500 Ag '71 110w

"Senn has written an immensely learned and detailed [study]. . . . The sources used are scattered and formidable in dimensions. They include the innumerable short-lived journals of the period, later reminiscences (published and unpublished) of those involved, the Okhrana archives and the German official archives. Senn has picked his way judiciously through this mass of sometimes treacherous material, and presents a picture which, though confused and inconclusive in many respects, inspires confidence in his fairness and reliability. It will be heavy going for the general reader . . . but the specialist in the pre-history of the Russian Revolution or in some of the obscurer back-stage intrigues of the First World War will be deeply indebted to this matter-of-fact and well-documented survey."

TLS p30 Ja 14 '72 180w

SENNETT, RICHARD. The hidden injuries of class, by Richard Sennett and Jonathan Cobb. 275p $6.95 Knopf

301.44 Labor and laboring classes—U.S. Social classes. Social conflict
ISBN 0-394-46212-2 LC 72-2254

The theme of this book is that "when the idea of natural equality ('all men are created equal') co-exists in society with actual social inequalities (class distinctions), the result is the crippling of the self-image and the dignity of those who experience the invidious consequences of being in socially determined and socially evaluated subordinate positions." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The authors claim to have discovered, by means of taped interviews with workers around Boston, horrendous social and ethical pressures afflicting blue collar workers. Since the beavering scholars have disguised the names and circumstances of the people interviewed, one can judge their conclusions only on the basis of their interpretation of very short, precise statements. And these interpretations all too often reveal a thick-eared insensitivity to the interviewees' quite adroit use of language, as well as the tacit assumption that any blue collar worker must be a bit stupid. One wonders which foot this shoe really fits." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:144 D '72 90w

Reviewed by J. J. Conlin
Best Sell 32:383 N 15 '72 300w

Reviewed by Sara Sanborn Commentary 54:94 D '72 2300w

"[This work] is based upon extensive observation and a large number of in-depth interviews of working-class families in the Boston area, the protocols from which make up by far the most interesting aspects of the book. What comes through with penetrating clarity is the degree to which the individuals take unto themselves the burden of responsibility for their situation, while in truth it is the external 'burden of class.' The authors feel that, while this situation with its attendant psychic stigmata may have had some functionality in the scarcity dominated past, it is no longer necessary in the affluent present."

L. S. Kaplan

Library J 97:2826 S 15 '72 200w

"The book is an exercise in secular prophecy, frequently involuted, sometimes contradictory and often brilliant. . . . In the end, Sennett and Cobb confess that the hidden injuries of class are America's familiar wounds. The middle class, no less than the working class, is crippled by the pursuit of success. The authors' plea for fraternity, for a genuine egalitarianism is moving. . . . In an oblique way [the authors] have written a profoundly political tract, interesting and disturbing, if not altogether satisfying intellectually." Norman Birnbaum

N Y Times Bk R p2 N 26 '72 320w

"The raw material came from a hundred and fifty interviews . . . and it may be that the authors are attempting to build too large a generalization on too numerically small a foundation. Nonetheless, their work is subtle, refined, and sympathetic. It is an excellent example of social-science work in which the authors do not pretend impartiality but state their values and allow their readers to learn from their findings and argue with their conclusions."

New Yorker 48:80 D 23 '72 130w

SEROFF, VICTOR. The real Isadora. 441p pl $10 Dial press

B or 92 Duncan, Isadora
LC 75-144385

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Economist 243:suppl 8 Ap 8 '72 440w

Reviewed by Arthur Marshall

New Statesman 83:569 Ap 28 '72 500w

N Y Times Bk R p33 Ja 30 '72 270w

TLS p635 Je 2 '72 360w

SERVADIO, GAIA. A Siberian encounter. 241p il $7.95 Farrar, Straus

915.7 Siberia—Description and travel. Russia—Description and travel
ISBN 0-374-26360-4 LC 79-161367

"In addition to southern Siberia, [the author] describes the Central Asia portion of the U.S.S.R., the Volga Steppes, Moscow, and Leningrad. . . . [Included are] observations on the characteristics of the people, their contemporary life style and mode of thinking . . . [as well as] background sketches of history." (Library J)

Reviewed by Paul Theroux

Book World p7 Ap 9 '72 550w

"[The author] has a predictably southern frame of reference. When she reaches Georgia in the Caucasus, she feels thoroughly at home and aptly compares the Georgians to the Sicilians. She inaccurately makes the Jesuits, rather than Orthodox priests, responsible for the early training of Georgia's most famous son, Stalin. But her political judgments about the Soviet Union are sharp."

Economist 242:53 Ja 15 '72 200w

"On a sentimental journey through the Soviet Union, an enterprising young journalist of Italian birth and British citizenship cast a critical eye at the land and people, and filled her notebooks with fascinating facts. . . . The author encountered a bit of romance in Siberia and contracted 'that special disease: Russophilia,' which may be contagious."

Horn Bk 48:80 F '72 230w

"Rather little is said about the physical characteristics of places. Although she paints an admiring portrait, Servadio could hardly be considered uncritical. The defects in this very well written work are minor. Recommended." Karen Harvey

Library J 97:500 F 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by Janet Prince

Library J 97:2975 S 15 '72 160w [YA]

New Yorker 48:106 Ap 1 '72 190w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:83 My 20 '72 70w [YA]

"At first glance [this book] looks like a dressed-up version of a private travel diary. At last glance this is what it looks like too. . . . It is, no doubt, very difficult to write accurately about life in the Soviet Union. Miss Servadio is strong on intuition and lamentably short on facts, to say nothing of registering the correct Russian appellation of things—the transliterations employed are frequently wildly wrong, for which the publishers can be blamed as much as the author. . . . [Her] account of her travels in the Soviet Union is warm, ingenuous, sometimes quite funny, and pregnant with the assumption that she has somehow found the key to that 'holy of holies'. One can appreciate her passionate assault on the citadel of reticence, but it does not really enlighten anyone much about what is actually happening inside."

SERVADIO, GAIA—Continued

TLS p212 F 25 '72 380w

SETON, MARIE. Portrait of a director: Satyajit Ray. 350p il pl $8.95 Ind. univ. press 791.43 Ray, Satyajit. Moving pictures—Production and direction
ISBN 0-253-16815-5 LC 75-108946

A study of the Indian director of the award-winning Pather Panchali and other films. The book "combines biography with critical study, goes into . . . detail on his methods of work, and considers his activities as writer, composer and designer—all of which . . . illuminate his film work even when they are not directly related to it—as well as his major preoccupation with the cinema." (TLS) Genealogy. Index.

"Seton, who has worked with Ray for some 15 years, has written an authoritative biography. . . . A valuable book for anyone interested in Ray's art."

Choice 8:1598 F '72 190w

Reviewed by Isabel Quigly

Encounter 37:63 J1 '71 350w

"Although the Indian director Satyajit Ray's American reputation has long been established, to most moviegoers he is still just a name, if even that; so there will be a relatively small audience for this profusely illustrated biographical-critical study. . . . [The book] is loose and informative in its presentation of Ray's background and life and lovingly detailed about the making of the films. . . . Ray's own writing is used for the appendixes and postscripts, which include an article on Jean Renoir." J. A. Avant

Library J 97:83 Ja 1 '72 120w

"This book is the result of long friendship with Satyajit Ray as well as deep study of his films. . . . In this breadth of study Miss Seton's is exceptional among film books: few film-makers have been accorded such a thorough biographical study. . . . One has to look back to Miss Seton's biography of Eisenstein [BRD 1952] for a film book half so wide and catholic in its terms of reference. Easily the most valuable and absorbing parts are those which relate Ray to his background in Indian, and specifically Bengali, life and culture. . . . [The book] is weakest and most open to argument in the purely critical sections, partly because Miss Seton seldom commits herself to any statement of personal opinion about the relative merits of Ray's films. . . . It is a pity Miss Seton does not include an adequate filmography but merely a list of titles and dates."

TLS p715 Je 18 '71 650w

75 YEARS of the comics; introd. by Maurice Horn. 109p il $9.95 Boston bk. & arts pub.
741.5 Comic books, strips, etc.
ISBN 0-8435-1010-2 LC 75-162320

This account of comic books, culled from an "exhibit held in the fall of 1971 at the New York Cultural Center, . . . contains early examples of newspaper single-framers ('The Yellow Kid,' etc.) as well as many examples of modern European strips . . . [and] contemporary strips such as 'X-Men' and 'Thor.'" (Library J) Bibliography.

"A vision of America, vast, amorphous, multifaceted, may be found in leafing through these comic strips chronologically assembled. Here, reflected without noticeable distortion, are America's informal history, sociology, its dreams, its crudities, even its pathos and subtleties. Yet this book also makes clear the English and European roots of this Americanism in the scathing satire of Gillray, the irony of Busch and Christophe. . . . [Horn] presents convincing evidence for the contribution of these strips to cinematic techniques in such matters as montage, 'shot,' 'scene,' and 'audio.' . . . A minor weakness is the lack of an alphabetical index. A complete chronological listing exists, however, and there is a fine bibliography.

Altogether, a highly satisfying volume, and one college libraries will wish to own."

Choice 9:796 S '72 190w

"Horn's premise in his introduction to the book is basically that comics aren't much fun anymore. . . . [This book is] recommended for any collection that emphasizes contemporary culture." Barton Wimble

Library J 97:65 Ja 1 '72 70w

"[Horn's book] has a nearly useless text, and the selection of strips, many of which are blurred in reproduction, are incredibly badly chosen: 'Terry and the Pirates,' for instance, without Dragon Lady; 'Tin-tin' without Captain Haddock, Milou or Tournesol; 'Steve Canyon' represented only by a gasping Poteet!" P. S. P.

Newsweek 78:120 O 18 '71 250w

SEVERN, BILL. Ellis Island: the immigrant years. 191p pl $4.50; lib bdg $4.29 Messner

325.73 Ellis Island, New York—Juvenile literature. U.S.—Immigration and emigration—Juvenile literature SBN 671-32473-X; 671-32474-8 (lib bdg)
LC 75-161516

"Severn sketches the history of Ellis Island from the 1850's to the 1960's, during which time millions of immigrants passed through its portals to 'the promised land.'" (Choice) Bibliography. Index. "Grade eight and up." (Best Sell)

"An absorbingly interesting book. . . . For all who enjoyed [B.] Greenleaf's 'American Fever' [BRD 1971], Severn emphasizes the place, whereas Greenleaf stressed the laws. Both books should be in every secondary school library—highly recommended."

Best Sell 31:387 N 15 '71 50w [YA]

"This slender volume makes no pretense at scholarship. Written by a man who specializes in writing for young people, its prose style is journalistic. . . . Obviously intended for the general reader. . . . No documentation; a few 'ho-hum' photos."

Choice 8:1486 Ja '72 70w

"Severn's book lacks the attractive format of [A.] Eisenman's From Many Lands [BRD 1971] . . . but it does provide more information about the Island itself." E. M. Porteus

Library J 97:787 F 15 '72 110w [YA]

SEVERN, BILL. The right to vote. 156p $4.50 Washburn

324.73 Suffrage
LC 76-165010

This is a "history of American suffrage from Colonial times through the ratification of the Twenty-sixth Amendment in June, 1971. Secret balloting, voting machines, the electoral college, election of the Senate by the people, social and civil rights of women, Negro rights (poll tax, literacy tests, Martin Luther King), and the struggle to achieve the privilege of voting for the eighteen-year-old are . . . considered." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"In the author's eyes, today's voter is a different breed than ever before, one seasoned by World War II, Korea, Vietnam, three political assassinations, vast TV exposure to world affairs, and greater freedom to express opinion. Recommended for high school level students." J. G. Gray

Best Sell 32:285 S 15 '72 120w [YA]

"[This is] an excellent, comprehensive survey of suffrage in the United States. . . . Severn objectively examines the subject, often on a state by state basis, and shows how voting was originally a privilege of the monied or landed class that through public action was gradually extended to all citizens 18 years of age and over. The lucid, factual style and inclusion of current material on the 18-year-old vote should satisfy the interest of young people regarding voting." V. P. Rilee

Library J 97:2967 S 15 '72 90w [YA]

SEWARD, DESMOND. The first Bourbon: Henri IV, King of France and Navarre. 235p il pl $7.95 Gambit

B or 92 Henry IV, King of France
ISBN 0-09-457260-7 LC 74-573613

The coverage of this biography extends from Henry's mistresses to his "abilities at war, to the development of the political and diplomatic situations and then back to the question of Henry's religious beliefs." (Economist) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 9:1345 D '72 180w

"The king's story is necessarily only a part of the incredibly complicated religious and social history of sixteenth-century France. It is a period where experts fear to tread—and those experts who look at Mr Seward's bibliography will wonder whether he really is in a position to dominate his subject. His tendency to mix long quotations with somewhat trite comments and inept attempts at humour does not help. But there is much in this book that is of real interest, and students and non-students alike will find it interesting and instructive."

Economist 238:58 Mr 13 '71 420w

"For the most part, Seward concentrates on Henry the man rather than on his royal administration. Hence Henry's youth in Gascony and Paris and his long series of mistresses receive a good deal of attention. One valuable feature of the work is the extensive use made of the contemporary comments of English travelers and diplomats." R. C. Hoffmann

Library J 97:67 Ja 1 '72 110w

"Except for declaring Paris to be worth a Mass and promulgating the Edict of Nantes, France's Henry IV is little known . . . by English-speaking people. To the French, however, he's in a class with Napoleon, a warm character about whom legends have clustered, the man who laid the groundwork for the Bourbon years (the most 'glorious' in France's history). Because works on Henry in English are few, this book is useful; because Seward writes well and uses his many sources carefully, it is important."

N Y Times Bk R p48 N 7 '71 80w

New Yorker 47:186 N 27 '71 240w

SEWARD, DESMOND. The monks of war; the military religious orders. 346p il $13.50 Archon bks.

255 Monasticism and religious orders. War ISBN 0-208-01266-4 LC 73-39239

In this "historical survey of the military religious orders . . . intended as a general introduction to military religious orders up to the Counter-Reformation" . . . [Seward] analyzes and evaluates the impact and role of the orders in the religious, military, political, social, and economic development of the Christian West. Index." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Taken as a whole, the volume achieves its objectives—it is a good, solid historical survey of Europe's military religious orders. . . . The appendices include a listing of all of the Grandmasters of the military-religious orders as well as a glossary of foreign and military terms. This scholarly apparatus is combined with a lively and enjoyable writing style which makes the volume pleasant reading for a layman as well as specialist. Books covering the development of the military religious orders are very rare; as a matter of fact, this is the only general introduction and survey of all of the orders published in the past century in English. All colleges and large public libraries should have it."

Choice 9:1193 N '72 180w

"Seward is almost at his best on the later days of the military orders: he lacks the gift of clear exposition, and though his scholarship is great, his theme both interesting and hitherto largely unexplored and his judgment sound, the more compressed chapters are slightly unclear. But he does not lack perception. Bernard of Clairvaux, inspirer of the crusaders and father of the orders, comes in for a good deal of criticism; but his achievement, or rather the orders', is spelt out."

Economist 243:72 Ap 22 '72 650w

"Never dull, . . . [this work] imposes no great effort on the reader, who will feel no obligation to remember names and facts from one page to the next; it is precisely the kind of history to attract those who are not academic historians. The general reader appreciates a flow of narrative; the academic requires a fabric of thought, with analysis and the dialogue of criticism. In these pages there is a great deal of Homeric fighting and highly-coloured incident. . . . The four great sieges of Rhodes by the Mamelukes (1444) and Turks (1480 and 1522), and of Malta by the Turks (1565), are retailed with great zest, and few will put the book down amid the mêlée. The book rests upon a wide reading of a few primary sources and of much secondary material. It never lapses into mere imagination. . . . [It] is undeniably the work of one who knows and accepts the standards of critical history."

TLS p912 Ag 4 '72 600w

SEWTER, A. C. Baroque and rococo. 224p il col il $6.95; $3.95 Harcourt

709.03 Art, Baroque. Art, Rococo

ISBN 0-15-110691-6; 0-15-504890-2 (pa)

LC 73-152765

In this survey of seventeenth and eighteenth century masters, the author "considers the individuals and their work, in painting, sculpture and architecture, in the light both of their genius and of the cultural context." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Two ages of art and architecture, compressed into one well illustrated volume. Of the 176 pictures, 29 are in color."

Christian Century 89:406 Ap 5 '72 20w

"The purpose of [this] book . . . is to provide a quick overview of an enormous chunk of art history. . . . [Sewter, a] highly regarded British scholar . . . [has] presented the essence of the period. . . . Layouts seem cramped and illustrations mediocre, but no more so than usual for small, inexpensive volumes of this kind. The bibliography [is] excellent and current." A. D. Ross

Library J 97:[2079] Je 1 '72 40w

SEXTON, ANNE. Transformations; with drawings by Barbara Swan. 111p il $5 Houghton

811

ISBN 0-395-12721-1 LC 71-156489

"A fifth book of poems by the author of To Bedlam and Part Way Back (BRD 1961), All My Pretty Ones (BRD 1963), Live or Die (BRD 1966) and Love Poems (BRD 1969).

"[Anne Sexton] maintains both the characters and plots of Grimm; but she has primed them with an evocative metaphoric fibre, a rich but simple imagery, and the ironic, often grotesque cast of her own poetic vision. The movement is nimble, the form loose but controlled, the tone matter-of-fact; and the effect can be moving or humorous. . . . She has used the depth and intensity of her experience—both technical and personal—to keep the stories on the edge of excitement and suggestive beyond anything that is present in their original forms. Each tale is full and provocative—and delightful. They were written, I think, not to be explained, but to be enjoyed."

Paul Kameen

Best Sell 31:348 N 1 '71 300w

Reviewed by Chad Walsh

Book World p12 Ap 9 '72 180w

Choice 9:817 S '72 170w

"Poet Anne Sexton . . . transforms herself from a confessional poet to a village storyteller. The old tales will never be the same. With the rueful humor of a little-girl-wised-up, Mrs. Sexton reveals that Snow White, who kept falling for the wicked queen's tricks, was a 'dumb bunny.' . . . [Her] technique is silky smooth, and as mod as a psychedelic poster. There may be a certain pleasure in feeling superior to the Brothers Grimm, in wise-cracking up a storm over their old legends. But it is a pleasure that soon palls. The overall effect of these 'Transformations' is a sort of Disneyland revamp of an ancient Gothic castle. Some of the terror still clings to the walls, but it is sadly attenuated by the flashing of the strobe lights and the piped-in boinging of the vibes." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p21 S 23 '71 370w

"Sexton has transformed 17 familiar tales from the Brothers Grimm . . . into poems almost totally her own. The plots and the characters remain, but the actions begin in Freud and continue in the vein of Sexton's [earlier work]. . . . [These characters] possessing the characteristic Sexton libido and strong ego, are themselves possessed by her demons, her private terrors: despair, horrors of the bourgeois life, madness, self-destructiveness. Thus Rumpelstiltskin is her Doppelgänger, Cinderella and her prince 'Regular Bobsey Twins' in their happy-ever-after state, Sleeping Beauty incestuous, Rapunzel's witch a lesbian. And Sexton's brilliant colloquial diction and firm control persuade us that this is how it should have been all along." Rozanne Knudson

Library J 96:2517 Ag '71 170w

SEXTON, ANNE—Continued

"All the tales skirt the edge of the fanciful-psychoanalytical but never fall over . . . the poet keeps her exemplary tales low-keyed, ironic, almost witty. . . . For all this and that, though, Transformations is a really interesting book. Not many books are least of all poetry books. I'd say that Mrs. Sexton is all the way back from Bedlam as a poet and the next book ought to be worth waiting for. But a little more language and more line," Mrs. Sexton please. You know you can do it," Louis Coxé

New Repub 165:29 O 16 '71 600w

"Transformations takes some Grimm tales, prefaces them with some grisly, hysterical maxims and launches into some strenuously updated re-telling. . . . This is a sad case of a small talent squandering itself in a gruesomely pointless enterprise. A nasty product."

New Statesman 83:842 Je 16 '72 90w

Reviewed by J. A. Smith

N Y Rev of Books 17:25 D 2 '71 190w

Va Q R 48:xxii winter '72 80w

Reviewed by L. L. Martz

Yale R 61:414 Mr '72 800w

SEXTON, BRENDAN, jt. auth. Blue collars and hard-hats. See Saxton, P. C.

SEXTON, PATRICIA CAYO. Blue collars and hard-hats; the working class and the future of American politics, by Patricia Cayo Sexton and Brendan Sexton. 327p $8.95 Random house

331 Labor and laboring classes—U.S. U.S.—Social conditions
ISBN 0-394-46150-9 LC 77-143821

"The working-class American and the poor have common economic and social grievances, say the authors. . . . Yet in backlash attitudes and conservative voting patterns, part of working-class America has set itself against the nation's poor. According to the Sextons, this antagonism is misdirected, and derives . . . from the very frustrations which should bind these two groups in a natural alliance. . . . The Sextons assert the need for an . . . awakening of genuine concern for the grievances of the working-class American. They call for progressive leadership . . . to forge from among liberals, radicals, the working class and America's poor a new coalition." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A New York University sociology professor . . . spent a year at the UAW Family Education Center at Black Lake, Michigan. The result is a wide-ranging account of what ails middle-income America. . . . The analysis is sometimes short on facts and long on emotion, but it is always readable. Especially disappointing are the unnecessary distortions in the brief discussion of industrial accidents and disease. For larger general libraries." William Gibelman

Library J 96:3151 O 1 '71 170w

"[The authors'] thesis has great potential, but the Sextons muffle it and produce an apologia for hard hats instead. . . . We could do with less true life sagas about 'Ronald Popham, Worker' and learn more about the origins of working class hatred for the poor—for blacks and chicanos, mostly. . . . The book never tells us about the 'future of American politics' on the left which it promises to do. The Sextons do suggest some issues which could rally a 'majority of decent and progressive voters.'"

New Repub 165:34 D 4 '71 350w

"[This book] details the worries and fears and preferences of roughly 65 per cent of white Americans (those within the family income range of $5,000 to $15,000 a year). . . . A cleanly written and quotable book, [it] contains the obligatory snide asides about academic liberals. . . . Because the work is richly documented as well, it's sure to become a speech-writer's staple. Still, the profile is compelling. . . . This is a finely seasoned unionist's analysis. . . . And the authors make policy suggestions accordingly: full employment, tax reform, subsidized health care, public works. . . . Still, [they] don't offer much help on a number of the hard, cutting issues among big-city workers. Crime, for example." Ralph Whitehead

Sat R 54:42 D 4 '71 600w

SEYMOUR, CHARLES. The sculpture of Verrocchio. 192p il $13.50 N.Y. graphic

730.92 Verrocchio, Andrea del
ISBN 0-8212-0375-4 LC 77-154326

The professor of art history at Yale offers an introduction to Verrocchio's sculpture. "Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"A useful book that is part of a new trend in art historical literature—well illustrated by the in-depth treatments of individual monuments . . . which departs from both the monographic and survey traditions. Essentially non-polemical, these works aim at providing a body of data which reveals where specialists are 'at' in their handling of a given problem. There is no 'new' Verrocchio here, rather a judicious weighing of past approaches against the scanty documentation that at present exists for the artist. . . . Numerous illustrations (unfortunately in a 'romantic-fuzz' tonality) and admirable supporting data: catalogue entries on works discussed, a document appendix and appendix on the base of the Colleoni monument. Much here for both scholar and neophyte."

Choice 9:804 S '72 200w

"History has not been kind to Verrocchio, as Professor Seymour points out in this well-illustrated general critique. Verrocchio's brilliance has lived on always in the shadow of both his pupil, Leonardo da Vinci, and his great sculptural predecessor, Donatello. The author takes pains to place Verrocchio squarely in his rightful historical context and to emphasize that, far from being a slavish follower of Donatello, he was a 'none-too-respectful rival.'"

Economist 244:49 Ag 12 '72 130w

"The author, with documentary evidence, has isolated examples of Verrocchio's originality amidst the artistic collaboration characteristic of the period. The equestrian statue of Bartolommeo Colleoni alone is ample evidence of Verrocchio's genius. More limited than G. Passavant's Verrocchio: Sculptures, Paintings, and Drawings [BRD 1970], this study is written with more ease and grace. Reasonably priced, this convenient, attractive guide is highly recommended." R. N. Van Note

Library J 97:1702 My 1 '72 150w

SEYMOUR, HAROLD. Baseball: the golden age. v2 492p $12.50 Oxford

796.357 Baseball—History
LC 60-5799

This second volume of the author's history of baseball, which covers the years 1903-1930, also includes social criticism. For volume one see BRD 1960.

Reviewed by R. L. Beisner

Am Hist R 77:1518 D '72 500w

"[The author is] a writer of readable, if unexceptional, prose. . . . [In this volume] we learn more than we have any right to expect about the game and, in the process, a surprising amount about the national character. It is a mark of Seymour's professionalism that he is unsparing in his criticism of the game and, by inference, the country. On one level, his account of baseball's . . . golden age . . . is a compendium of duplicity and cupidity. . . . This is not merely a baseball book; it is social history at its best—the heart and mind of America." Ron Fimrite

Book World p4 Ag 8 '71 800w

"Seymour's turgid writing style, which sometimes becomes pedantically didactic, reflects an effort to please both fans and academicians. For the sake of the general reader footnotes are eschewed while scholars are treated to a long and critical essay on sources which carries a warning that the study of American baseball is no task for the historian sans baseball experience nor for the sportswriter sans historianship. In short, as historian and ex-Dodger batboy, Seymour defines baseball history as a private preserve which colleagues ought not to poach upon. . . . Considered as a definitive work on baseball, Seymour's book is but a knothole view at a fancy price. But considered as a probing look into baseball's infrastructure—its politics, law, and economics—sports historians will welcome it as a contribution to our growing knowledge of American baseball." D. Q. Voight

J Am Hist 59:191 Je '72 500w

"With devastating documentation [Seymour] portrays the contrast between the beauty of the game on, the field and widespread dishonesty off it." Jonathan Yardley

New Repub 165:22 D 18 '71 210w

Reviewed by J. B. Segal

N Y Times Bk R p46 D 5 '71 30w

TLS p639 Je 2 '72 550w

"[This account] reawakens the classical controversies of those gorgeous years: Was the combination of Tinker to Evers to Chance really great or did F.P.A. simply make with the words? Was Merkle really forced out at second in the Cubs-Giants game in 1908? Ah, well. . . . This second volume by Mr. Seymour on the subject of baseball is one that at least some people can hardly do without."

Va Q R 48:xxxvi winter '72 130w

SEYMOUR, WHITNEY NORTH. The young die quietly: the narcotics problem in America [by] Whitney North Seymour, Jr. 192p $5.95 Morrow

613.8 Narcotic habit. Drugs

LC 78-166344

The "author explains not only how the heroin black market operates but why law enforcement agencies have been unable to end organized crime's . . . hold on drug smuggling and distribution, what causes drug addiction, which treatments offer hope, and why adolescents face special problems and what can be done to help them. A . . . portion of the book is devoted to soft drugs, including marihuana and the hallucinogens . . . [and] their use by young people. . . . The author [also] outlines an action program for all—government, schools, and family. This program covers prevention, treatment, and law enforcement." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The title gives little clue to its contents, since it is not primarily restricted to youth and is not about death. The content ranges widely with uneven results. . . . The anecdotal material on international traffic is excellent; the chapter on marijuana is ludicrous. There is no consideration of the major issues of drug law enforcement such as widespread violation or constitutional rights of the accused and involvement of agents in the traffic itself, and no serious discussion of the heavy use of prescription and over-the-counter drugs by millions of middle-Americans."

Choice 9:444 My '72 150w

"The U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of New York has attempted 'to bring together all of the basic facts about illegal narcotics traffic as a foundation for a program of affirmative action.' . . . [His] program is not new, and it has so many constructive elements that one cannot dispute its wisdom. Unfortunately, Seymour states his program in such vague terms that it is difficult to imagine how it would be carried out." R. H. Lipsett

Library J 97:80 Ja 1 '72 220w

"Much of the material here can be found in the raft of recent narcotics books. Some will argue with the author's suggestion that the 'logical response' to the spread of narcotics is stiffer penalties by suggesting that if the use of heroin is the result of self-destructive impulses (as some psychologists maintain) emphasizing its negative consequences won't do much."

N Y Times Bk R p14 F 13 '72 120w

SHABAN, M. A. Islamic history A.D. 600-750 (A.H. 132) a new interpretation. 196p maps $10.50 Cambridge

953 Islamic countries—History. Civilization, Islamic

ISBN 0-521-08137-8 LC [79-145604]

This work describes "the establishment of an Islamic regime in Arabia and its . . . expansion into an empire. Special attention has been given to the way the Arab tribesmen were settled in the various provinces, their relationship with the conquered peoples [and] . . . with the central government, and the attempts of the latter to establish its authority over the vast conquered territories. . . . [Shaban seeks to show that] Arab statesmen . . . were responsible leaders primarily concerned with the success of their policies, the preservation of their empire and the welfare of their followers in the circumstances of their times." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

Choice 8:1634 F '72 110w

"A fascinating, controversial interpretive essay on the period from the time of Muhammed to the Abbasid revolution and downfall of the Omayyads. Neither comprehensive in scope nor detailed, it explains selected events and movements in terms of sociopolitical classes, forces, alignments, and problems of political structure and government policy. Essential for sizeable Near East collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 96:3324 O 15 '71 60w

"Shaban [is] an Egyptian scholar who has recently come to the front rank of Islamic historians. In his latest book he expands the thesis of an earlier work (The 'Abbāsid Revolution [BRD 1971]) . . . to cover the entire Islamic world up until the overthrow of the Umayyads in A.D. 750. This is a period that has been well worked over in the past, and this careful and scholarly work is an object lesson in what can be done with familiar source material. . . . The overall picture [the author] presents of emerging and contending interests makes . . . sense of the events. Instead of being disconnected, baffling and sometimes even ludicrous, these now hang together as part of a constantly unfolding but clearly discernible pattern."

TLS p130 F 4 '72 500w

SHACKLETON BAILEY, D. R. Cicero. 290p $10 Scribner

B or 92 Cicero, Marcus Tullius

SBN 684-12683-4 LC 78-176156

This is an account of the life of Cicero who was born "of an old, well-to-do family at Arpinum near Rome in 106 BC, [and] was in the public eye throughout life as advocate, orator, patriot, and author. . . . He lived through a stormy and eventful period of Roman history, the last years of the Republic, and his writings reflect a wide range of contemporary attitudes and situations. . . . It is both in his public roles and as a private person . . . that Cicero takes the stage here, since this biography rests mainly on extracts from its author's . . . translation of Cicero's letters [BRD 1966]." (Publisher's note) Index of persons.

"Proportions [of this book] are determined by the extent of the available data, and, like so many, Bailey identifies his own values with those of the socially dominant class in Cicero's world. But, within these limitations the book is an authoritative presentation of Cicero's career and personality as he himself saw them, especially during the last 20 years of his life. . . . Bailey is hilariously donnish at times, but his complete control of his material generally produces a smooth, clear, fluent style which makes the book very usable. Recommended for any institutions with a program in classics, Latin, or ancient history, as well as for the larger public libraries."

Choice 9:1288 D '72 170w

"Shackleton Bailey has spent years studying [Cicero] and is left with sympathy but no illusions. He lets Cicero speak for himself as much as possible, and is equally accomplished in style as a translator and as an author. An amusing and enjoyable book, which leaves one still wondering why anyone took Cicero seriously, but the Romans paid more attention to eloquence and wit than we do."

Economist 241:62 D 25 '71 130w

"Much of the material will be familiar to students of Cicero and Roman history; but for readers without a background in ancient history, some extensive discussion of, for example, the Roman republican government and an explanation of terms would have been helpful. More important, the Letters do not provide a complete picture of Cicero. Some knowledge of his treatises as well as the philosophical thought and general history of the period are also important for an understanding of the orator. Bailey's own expansive, occasionally informal style sometimes jars." J. P. Hershbell

Library J 97:1802 My 15 '72 130w

"It is pleasant to have a short new life of Cicero written in English in the conciseness of modern specialism but with no more than minimal explanatory footnotes and references. Since D. R. Shackleton Bailey is so distinguished a scholar and has so lively a mind it goes almost without saying that this is a work of the greatest interest. . . . [The author] is persuasive, and he closely follows the text of Cicero's letters and writings, with the enormous range of which he is enviably familiar. He writes with that dry brilliance which seems to suit the study of Roman politics particularly well. He observes with an unsleeping keenness and describes human behaviour with an impartial zest."

TLS p158 F 11 '72 1300w

SHADEGG, STEPHEN C. The new How to win an election. 189p $6.50 Taplinger 329 Politics, Practical. Elections—U.S.
ISBN 0-8008-5510-8 LC 76-163887

This is an updated version of the author's How to Win an Election (BRD 1964) which describes his methods for a successful political campaign.

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2175 Je 15 '72 40w

"[This book] is staggeringly unreadable. . . . [It] is a (not very) updated version of a . . . book which talks mostly about campaigns in the Southwest during the early 1950's. The Vietnam war, the civil-rights movement, the Goldwater and McCarthy-Kennedy campaigns, go almost unmentioned; instead, we are told how to put Burma-Shave style billboards along Arizona highways to elect a sheriff, and a mélange of philosophical discourse like this: 'Our long accepted Judeo-Christian concept of the nature of man has been effectively challenged by the doctrines of Marx and Engels. If . . . we are to march forward together into a better tomorrow. . . . Instant Nytol.' Jeff Greenfield N Y Times Bk R p40 Je 4 '72 450w

SHAFER, BOYD C. Faces of nationalism; new realities and old myths. 535p $12.95 Harcourt
320.1 Nationalism
ISBN 0-15-164519-1 LC 72-174514

"Emphasizing the nationalistic implications of the French revolutionary period and . . . carrying his efforts through the economic and political changes of the 19th Century and the confusion after World War I, [Shafer seeks to] show how governments have extended their functions to become the major focus of loyalty for their peoples, and how economics, education, and many aspects of culture all reinforce national awareness. Two new chapters summarize the literature on nationalism in Asia and Africa and illustrate its ambivalence between attraction to European power and hatred of European arrogance." (Library J) Annotated bibliography. Index. For the earlier edition entitled Nationalism: Myth and Reality see BRD 1955.

"This clearly written monograph [surveys] . . . nationalism from its beginnings to the present. . . . [It] offers little to the scholar of nationalism but would be immensely useful to college students and to professors who are not specialists in the field."

Choice 9:1206 N '72 150w

Christian Century 89:552 My 10 '72 50w

"Shafer has revised and significantly expanded his [earlier book] and produced an important study of the development of nationalism including its present relevance to domestic and international relations. . . . With great scholarship and breadth, including extensive bibliographical references, [he] examines many elements of nationalism, real and mythical, and offers an invaluable synthesis of this still vital idea." E. R. Hayford

Library J 97:1715 My 1 '72 120w

SHAKESPEARE, WILLIAM. Shakespeare's songs; ed. by Alfred Harbage; il. with the original musical settings. 96p $5.95 Macrae Smith co.

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Songs and music
SBN 8255-4110-7 LC 73-127429

This "annotated collection of Shakespeare's songs . . . [includes] illustrations, featuring 11 early arrangements of the songs . . . [as well as] modern arrangements of eight of the songs." (Library J)

"The expansive format of this book and the meagerness of its material suggest that it is intended for the coffee table rather than the study. A library that has either . . . Songs and poems [by W. Shakespeare; ed. by E. Hubler BRD 1969] . . . or [P.] Songs [The vocal songs in the plays of Shakespeare (BRD 1967)], has no need for this collection of the text of 52 lyrics. . . . The book does include, however, as the others do not, settings—presumably the tunes sung in the original productions—for eight of the songs (seven of Shakespeare's plus Desdemona's 'Willow, Willow'): They are given in modern notation with the stylistically appropriate harmonization. . . . It is unfortunate that so little of the book is devoted to this genuinely useful material."

Choice 8:1176 N '71 190w

"The appended notes are illuminating, though it's unfortunate that they were not more meaningfully and conveniently placed in juxtaposition with the songs they explicate. But this is a minor criticism of what is on the whole, a valuable book, slender in size but substantial in content." Michael Cart

Library J 96:1515 Ap 15 '71 100w [YA]

SHAKESPEARE: his life, his times, his works; created by the eds. of Arnaldo Mondadori editore; tr. from the Italian by Catherine Jandine Hill; anthology by Louis Untermeyer. 167p il col il $4.95 McGraw 822.3 Shakespeare, William—Criticism, interpretation, etc.

SBN 07-001211-3 LC 76-95724

Topics covered "include the life of Shakespeare and the legends surrounding it, sources and analyses of the major works, [and] a history of the criticism of the works." (Library J)

"A quaint and curious volume. There is much to whet the appetite of the reader for further exploration. A short life of Shakespeare, with all too much reliance on unsubstantiated statement, is accompanied by a rather strange selection of summaries of plays—to be sure, the great tragedies are accounted for—and an enticing anthology compiled by Louis Untermeyer." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 31:439 Ja 1 '72 140w

"Provides a brief introduction to the life and works of Shakespeare. The authors have presented only a most cursory view of the topics covered. . . . Excellent illustrations add to the value of the book, but the lack of an index and bibliography detracts from its usefulness. As a simple but comprehensive outline of all major topics of Shakespearean scholarship, this slight volume pulls together themes that are usually covered in more detail by separate introductory works." John Burmaster

Library J 97:1017 Mr 15 '72 110w

SHALHOPE, ROBERT E. Sterling Price; portrait of a Southerner. 311p maps $12 Univ. of Mo. press

B or 92 Price, Sterling, U.S.—History—Civil War—Campaigns and battles
ISBN 0-8262-0103-2 LC 79-130670

This account of the life and career of Sterling Price includes his "Virginia beginnings . . . 'Old Pap's' rise to political prominence in Missouri . . . [his] Civil War years: the successes at Wilson's Creek and Lexington; and the failures at Pea Ridge, Iuka, Corinth, Helena, and on the 1864 Missouri Raid . . . [as well as] the two postwar-years of Price's life." (J Am Hist) Bibliography. Index.

"[Shalhope] tries to convince us that Price's prewar career is just as important as his wartime exploits. Why? Because Price was somehow representative of his generation, and through him we can better understand the tensions that drove antebellum Southerners to secession and war. Unfortunately, the facts of Price's prewar career do not lend themselves to such a sweeping interpretation. . . . [Price] stands out only because Shalhope adorns him with the historical baubles of status anxiety, the travail of slavery, and capitalist aspirations in a pre-capitalist environment. Shalhope also resorts to emotional and sometimes maudlin prose to win us over to his view of 'Old Pap.'"

Choice 8:1508 Ja '72 100w

"Three years ago, in a review published in this journal, the undersigned stated that Albert Castel's General Sterling Price and the Civil War in the West (BRD 1969) . . . was such an exhaustive treatment 'that no subsequent work is likely to give real challenge.' At least one prospective author disagreed. . . . [Shalhope's interpretations are] markedly different from those of Castel . . . and [he] presents a fuller treatment of Price's life. . . . Although Castel seems to present the most convincing case, both biographies must stand together on the shelf—with the choice left to the reader." J. I. Robertson

J Am Hist 58:1017 Mr '72 380w

SHANAB, ROBERT ELIAS ABU, it. ed. NLF; national liberation fronts, 1960/1970. See Hodges, D. C.

SHANE, ORRIN C. jt. auth. Blain Village and the Fort Ancient tradition in Ohio. See Pruffer, O. H.

SHANIN, TEODOR. The awkward class; political sociology of peasantry in a developing society: Russia 1910-1925. 253p $15.25 Oxford 301.44 Peasantry. Russia—Social conditions. Political sociology
ISBN 0-19-821493-6 LC 72-181311

This study attempts to show "that peasant society in Russia constituted a distinct and discrete society in Soviet Russia which could not be called capitalistic. There was no clear tendency towards polarization of wealth as the Communists contended. Instead there was a high degree of class mobility that tended towards both levelling and polarization in that poorer peasants moved upward economically while wealthier households became poorer through partition. . . . [Shanin contends] that peasant society would perpetuate itself unless changed by external forces . . . that the peasants acted as a brake on economic progress [and] that a severe jolt had to be administered to the peasants to stimulate economic growth in the Soviet Union." (Choice)

"[This] study is a most useful supplement to [M.] Lewin's Russian peasants and Soviet power [BRD 1969]. Lewin noted the chaotic and arbitrary character of the statistics used by the Soviets in describing peasant society in Russia in the 1920s. Shanin goes further. . . . Contrary to Lewin, he argues for a high degree of cohesiveness in peasant society. . . . The argument of this sometimes difficult sociological work is . . . complex. Well worth reading and should be in every collection dealing with Russian history."
Choice 9:848 S '72 200w

"Mr Shanin has expounded the different types of statistical analyses in great detail, with full reference to the sources in a way that will make his study very valuable to students of the subject. . . . [Unfortunately] he finds it necessary to flaunt what is no doubt the most up-to-date technical jargon. The widening or narrowing of the gap in wealth between different strata of the population is not a difficult concept. What is gained by wrapping it up in the guise of 'centrifugal or centripetal mobility'? . . . Mr Shanin has given us an excellent review of the statistical controversy, and shed interesting side-lights on Russian rural life in the period (including an illuminating appendix on peasant laws of inheritance); and his book is very welcome on that account. But his main conclusions leave us just about where we were."
TLS p775 J1 7 '72 2450w

SHANK, ALAN, jt. ed. Educational investment in an urban society. See Levin, M. R.

SHANLEY, J. LYNDON, ed. Walden. See Thoreau, H. D

SHANNON, DELL. Murder with love. 253p $5.95 Morrow
LC 73-170881

"Love can often prove as strong a motive for murder as hate, as [Lieutenant Luis Mendoza and his Los Angeles Police Department homicide squad] learn in the course of investigating assorted cases that crop up in the aftermath of an earthquake." (Sat R)

"A new Dell Shannon novel about Lieutenant Luis Mendoza . . . is always a bargain because the reader gets at least half-a-dozen well plotted mysteries for the price of one. . . . You can't go wrong with this one of which the title states the underlying theme of all the crimes."
Best Sell 31:435 D 15 '71 220w

"[This] is perfectly readable, reliable, and professional, a police procedural which takes place in California. However, a number of questions arise: is it possible that there could be quite so many homicides, felonious assaults, and accidents in 24 hours, even in Los Angeles? Need all the criminals be the young, the underserving poor, and the blacks, and all the victims middle-aged, respectable, and upright? In this whirlwind of self-congratulatory activity what in the world is a supposedly honest policeman, married and with several children, doing driving such an expensive car as a Ferrari? The solved mysteries are as nothing compared to the unsolved ones."
Library J 97:87 Ja 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar
N Y Times Bk R p33 Ja 9 '72 80w

"Though the interwoven cases hold the reader's interest throughout, Lt. Mendoza, whose sole characteristic seems to be his tendency to lapse into Spanish begins to bore."
Haskel Frankel
Sat R 55:71 F 26 '72 70w

SHAPIRO, DAVID. A man holding an acoustic panel. 64p $6.95; pa $2.95 Dutton

811
SEN 0-525-15140-0; 0-525-03940-6 (pa)
LC 70-158594

Some of the poems in Shapiro's collection have appeared in The American Scholar and The Wagner College Literary Magazine.

"The poems here are less personal, less occasional than [Shapiro's] preceding collection, Poems from Deal [BRD 1970]. There is also here a kind of brilliance in technique, especially in imagery not evident before. No longer limiting himself to lyrics and epigrammatic series, Shapiro plunges into the midst of important statements about humanity in such poems as 'Fire and life' and 'The destruction of bulwarks at Deal.' In these, Shapiro's demonstrates genuine insight worthy of one's re-reading and rethinking. But hints of the poet's previous tendency toward cuteness and obscurantism linger. . . . Recommended with some reservations."
Choice 9:507 Je '72 120w

"Shapiro here demonstrates his wit, his craft, and his penchant for experiment. If his poems belong to a tradition, it is the Surrealist tradition; if to a school, it is the New York school. Those affiliations may, more than any intrinsic qualities of the poetry itself, attract the attention of critics and scholars who interest themselves in contemporary literature; but one may predict with confidence that [this volume] will appeal to a very small group of readers." Robert Regan
Library J 96:3329 O 15 '71 140w

"Shapiro has several related styles all devolving on a wonderfully assured grasp of language as an object in itself. In the poems that reveal this most clearly, his method . . . [involves] ransacking the mind's attics and making improbable arrangements of the tatty, unseasonal stuffs shelved away there. The elements are sometimes linguistic . . . sometimes figurative and their process of assemblage is Dadaistic but in a most refined and civilized fashion. As in raw, original Dada, interpretation is a marginal (frequently impossible) matter. . . . Some of the poems are more conventional, but the essential unpredictability remains, a faintly eerie playfulness and an impressive dérèglement of the familiar."
N Y Rev of Books 17:40 D 16 '71 160w

SHAPIRO, REBECCA. A whole world of cooking; il. by the author. 70p $4.95 Little 641.5 Cookery—Juvenile literature
LC 78-169007

The table of contents for these recipes from various nations "is arranged by country, the index by type of dish. [Included are recipes for] Puerto Rican butter cookies, Armenian pilaf, Pennsylvania carrot mold, Japanese tempura, Navaho fry bread [and] Canadian fish chowder. [Index.] Ages ten to fourteen." (Sat R)

"Any one could have prepared [this book] from the many cookbooks of international cuisine already available. . . . [It is] not all that exceptional, either. Italian Spaghetti with Garlic and Oil, for heaven's sake! Pasta con Olio e Allio. That represents Italian cooking?"
Friede Gruenrock
Best Sell 32:178 J1 1 '72 80w

"[This book] includes a number of recipes that sound like fun. Among them is a Chilean mixture baked in packages of folded corn husks. . . . The recipes vary in quality, but it is all actual cooking, and that is all to the good." Julia Child
N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p8 N 5 '72 70w

"More for the young amateur than for the beginner, these recipes call for uncomplicated cooking procedures and, despite the international flavor, only standard ingredients. Breezy writing introduces each dish, but the instructions that follow are clear and businesslike." Zena Sutherland
Sat R 55:82 My 20 '72 60w

SHARF, ANDREW. Byzantine Jewry: from Justinian to the fourth crusade. (Littman lib. of Jewish civilization) 239p maps $7.50 Schocken

914.95 Jews in the Byzantine Empire—History
ISBN 0-8052-3387-3 LC 74-135519

The author "describes how Byzantine institutions influenced Byzantine Jewry in two fundamental respects. On the one hand, the recognition of the Jews as a permitted sect in the successive legal enactments of a strong centralized administration, together with a flourishing city life where Jews and non-Jews mingled freely, provided . . . [an] opportunity for a peaceful and prosperous existence. On the other hand, a . . . preoccupation with theology . . . and a large number of regulations intended to produce a homogeneous and loyal population occasionally produced fierce anti-semitic outbursts whether by the state or by individuals." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Scholars and students of the medieval Greek world and of medieval Judaism will welcome the present volume with a feeling of gratitude. This is a substantial contribution and fills a real need in Byzantine Jewish studies. . . . Careful scholarship and objective and critical use of the sources characterize this work, which attends to the concrete facts." D. J. Constantelos

Am Hist R 77:499 Ap '72 650w

"[This] volume makes no new contribution to the study of the Byzantine Jews and adds to the misinformation repeated about Byzantine history. There are some interesting stories, taken from Hebrew sources, about the lives of individual Jews; but the author does not attempt to weave these into an integrated whole or to interpret their value in a study of Byzantine Jewry. While interesting in part, the volume must be used with great care and requires constant checking with standard reference works on Byzantium." Martin Chasin

Library J 96:2639 S 1 '71 230w

SHARP, EVELYN. The IQ cult. 154p il $5.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

153.9 Mental tests
SBN 698-10460-9 LC 72-76676

"For years many educators and laymen felt that IQ tests were adequate and accurate predictors of intelligence. Of late psychologists have cast doubts on this belief, and parents have objected to the labeling and categorizing of their children through testing. Sharp [discusses] misconceptions concerning these 'intelligence' measures by examining the work of Binet, Terman, Wechsler, and Otis and by bringing in recent concepts of intelligence developed by Piaget and others." (Library J) Bibliography.

Christian Century 89:1042 O 18 '72 30w

"Presenting an expanded view of intelligence and the contribution which tests, if properly used, can make to education, this book will be useful to both parents and education students." R. W. Barber

Library J 97:3582 N 1 '72 120w

"[Sharp] has done a prodigious amount of research into the background of testing and a first-rate job of explaining the standard tests (including the Stanford-Binet, the Scholastic Aptitude, and the Wechsler Intelligence Scale for Children) along with the reasons for their being currently under fire. . . . [She] reports on several other theories of the nature of intelligence and learning development that are altering accepted concepts of how intelligence might better be measured. . . . What's important to determine, according to Piaget, is how far the individual is going. Sharp agrees and in this fascinating and useful book reports on tests to measure this that are now being developed at the University of Montreal."

Sat R 55:79 D 9 '72 310w

SHARP, MARGERY. The innocents. 183p $5.95 Little

LC 75-175473

"Innocent here is a gentle, archaic term for a retarded child. Antoinette Guthrie, aged three, is the daughter of a beautiful English woman and a wealthy American. She is confined to the care of an aging friend in East Anglia while her parents travel on the Continent. World War II interrupts the tour, and the parents must return directly to America, leaving their daughter in England for the duration. After the war, the mother, who has become a New York society figure, returns to England to reclaim her child." (Time)

Reviewed by C. M. Siggins

Best Sell 32:158 J1 1 '72 700w

"Though the little girl's progress is slow—up to the final page she has acquired far fewer than a dozen words—the author manages to inject a strong note of suspense into the story. She also manages to introduce a good deal of her own typical humor into what is, overall, an extremely tragic tale. Highly recommended for anyone who loves or lives with children, whether or not these children are retarded." L. B. Ames

Library J 97:2649 Ag '72 150w

"Margery Sharp's control is admirable: it makes the book, no more, no less. Her first-person protagonist settles comfortably into an economical walk: neither circumstances, nor impatience will induce her to break gait. The style is an environment, the voice of her small East Anglian village, its temper and preoccupations: weather first, flowers, animals housekeeping, gossip, then the retarded child who blurs into the village inventory like one of those puzzles, 'How many faces can you find in this picture?' When the frivolous, headstrong mother re-enters, she jars at once, surface noise on a recording of the last quartets. There is a mild surprise ending, somewhat callous, somewhat brutal—yet tone mitigates its harshness wonderfully." D. K. Mano

Nat R 24:962 S 1 '72 250w

New Yorker 48:74 J1 1 '72 150w

"[The plot] is only the shell of this wonderful, disarmingly fluty novel. . . . Antoinette's foster mother [an elderly spinster] who tells the story, speaks what at first seems a dithering Dame Margaret Rutherford prose. . . . Yet she possesses a ruthlessly unsentimental, almost primeval attachment to the retarded child, whose still, strange presence dominates her life—until the mother returns with blithe hopes and confident of 'curing' the innocent by psychotherapy. . . . The child's only fascination is her foster mother's garden, with its ambience of witchery, herbs, bullock's-eyes, dead frogs, dog droppings. Sharp is too intelligent to make explicit any metaphorical claims. But her solution, as the society mother is about to take her natural child back to Manhattan's concrete canyons, is a beautifully delicate stroke of paganism." Lance Morrow

Time 100:74 Ag 7 '72 300w

SHARPLES, WINSTON, JR. jt. auth. A primer for film making. See Roberts, K. H.

SHAW, ARNOLD. The street that never slept: New York's fabled 52d St; foreword by Abel Green. 378p il $10 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

917.471 New York (City)—Streets. Jazz music
LC 76-154776

This is a "history of the block (between 5th and 6th Avenues) known variously as 'Swing Street,' 'Swing Alley,' or simply 'The Street' . . . when it was lined with clubs featuring live music. . . . [Shaw] presents a series of histories of the clubs, followed by interviews with people connected with them." (Library J) Index.

"[This book] is tailor-written for people who enjoy talking and thinking of the days that were. . . . There is, no doubt, a certain amount of fiction enveloped in various paragraphs but, in the main, events and definite timing are most sagaciously employed. There are amusing and sad tales out of yesteryear and the highly emotional will easily identify with the protagonists. . . . This volume has a wealth of information on the various greats of the jazz world. . . . We are not shortchanged on names, as the index reads from A (Fred Allen) to Z (Zorita and her snake), with some gems recognizable only by those who inhabited the various spots along The Street. If you cannot wait to read about your favorite just turn to the index and, by golly, there he or she will be." Al Phillips

Best Sell 31:404 D 1 '71 410w

"This book draws on the recollections of a host of people who frequented the area during its heyday. . . . [Shaw recreates] a golden era in American popular music and theater. Readers of all ages will be enthralled by this work."

and scholars will welcome the first-person material and the thorough index, the discography of '52d St. Music,' and the liberal sprinkling of photographs." W. B. Bailey
Library J 97:200 Ja 15 '72 130w

SHAW, ARNOLD. The world of soul; black America's contribution to the pop music scene. 306p il $6.95 Cowles

781.7 Negro music. Negro musicians. Music. Popular (Songs, etc.)
SBN 402-12291-7 LC 73-90064

"The soul music that Shaw talks about is ultimately defined as the music of such persons as Nina Simone, James Brown, Jimi Hendrix, Otis Redding, Aretha Franklin, and Ray Charles. He reaches this definition through a discussion of the effects on commercial music of country blues, classic blues, urban blues, gospels, rhythm-and-blues, jazz singing, and modern blues, with a nod to rock-and-roll." (Choice) "Discography index." (Library J)

"Shaw is an extremely knowledgeable and sensitive writer who has been involved in the music business. His book is a valuable contribution to this continuing and somewhat confusing discussion which tends to be more emotional than rational. [The] book is a good companion to Phyl Garland's The sound of soul [BRD 1970]. Although he takes a somewhat narrower view of soul music, Shaw offers a broader historical background."
Choice 8:1186 N '71 230w

Reviewed by Laurie Rand
Library J 95:162 Ja 15 '70 250w

"A follow-up to [the author's] useful book on rock music The Rock Revolution [BRD 1969], is this longer, really good one on soul, that extends beyond a chronological cataloging of his records into an analysis of what soul music means to performers and listeners. . . . Only an inadequate photo section, which repeats half the pictures used in the rock book, detracts from an excellent look at soul music today." Collin Clark
Library J 95:1974 My 15 '70 150w [YA]

SHAW, EVELYN. Octopus; pictures by Ralph Carpenter. 61p $2.50 Harper 594 Octopus—Juvenile literature
SBN 06-025558-7 LC 74-135779

This account of the life cycle of the octopus describes "how the octopus escapes from her enemies, how she swims by 'jet propulsion,' and what she eats. The reader will also learn that the octopus can change shape and color [and] lays eggs." (Publisher's note)

"This [book] gives a beginning reader the opportunity to understand a set of life processes very different from that of the land vertebrates he is more familiar with. The pastel water-color pictures do give a sense of the diversity of life forms in the marine ecosystem, but the author's use of a story form has made it impossible to identify most of the invertebrates illustrated here. (The matter of what constitutes mating with a male octopus also remains mysterious.)" Barry Ivker
Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 11 '71 90w

"Scientific objectivity and stylistic appeal are combined. . . . The tone is never condescending; the text—simple and rhythmic—demonstrates that restricted vocabulary is not necessarily synonymous with hackneyed presentation." M. M. B.
Horn Bk 48:140 Ap '72 140w

"[Octopus] is easily readable and useful both because of format and vocabulary. It's a clear, sequential account." E. C. Trimble
Library J 96:4196 D 15 '71 70w

SHAW, GEORGE BERNARD. The road to equality; ten unpublished lectures and essays, 1884-1918; with an introd. by Louis Crompton; ed. by Louis Crompton; with the assistance of Hillyarne Cavanaugh. 348p $9.95 Beacon press

335 Socialism
ISBN 0-8070-4386-9 LC 71-156454

"Ten previously unpublished lectures and essays in which Shaw plots society's course on 'the road to equality.' . . . The pivotal concept seems to be one that Shaw expounds in 'The Simple Truth About Socialism': socialism 'is a state of society in which the entire income of the country is divided between all the people in exactly equal shares, without regard to their industry, their character, or any other consideration.' . . . Index." (Library J)

"Shaw never intended this work for publication. In general, Shaw was right. Most of the pieces were aimed at a particular audience with a particular pedagogical job in mind and, once the occasion passed, the essay or lecture lost its immediacy. . . . In fact, except for passages here and there—sometimes extended ones fortunately—the essays are rather tedious. . . . Yet, having sided with Shaw on the suitability of publication, let me—as a now-and-then Shaw scholar—say that I am glad that Crompton published the material. It gives us still another chance to see Shaw dealing directly with ideas that, transformed by art, were to appear in the plays." Gerald Weales

Commonweal 95:526 Mr 3 '72 480w

"Crompton revealed in his prize-winning Shaw the Dramatist [BRD 1969], that he is more interested in Shaw's ideas than in his art. [This volume] abundantly demonstrates the same interest. Shaw wrote the ten pieces in his capacity of polemicist for the Fabians and evolutionary socialism. . . . [They] will obviously be of more interest to advanced readers in English social theory than to students of the English stage. . . . Shavian eloquence greatly outweighs Shavian wit in this volume, which large research libraries will want in order to complete their Shaw collections." Keith Cushman

Library J 96:4025 D 1 '71 200w

"To the student of English socialism [these essays] add some lively contemporary material. To the student of Shaw they demonstrate that in his economics — in his plays he was — man of his time, a recognizable late Victorian. Shaw once more appears as one of the master stylists of English prose and pieces like 'The New Politics' here suggest that when he turned to the drama a gifted historian was lost. What does not emerge from these essays is a theory of economics. Shaw was too eclectic, too clever, too fond of his own verbal brilliance to settle for a single, systematic exposition. Like the plays, his essays stimulate in flashes rather than by a steady movement of thought."
TLS p1047 S 3 '71 350w

SHAW, STANFORD J. Between old and new; the Ottoman Empire under Sultan Selim III, 1789-1807. 535p il $15 Cambridge

956.1 Turkey—History
ISBN 0-674-06830-0 LC 74-131465

"The central theme of this history is the failure of Selim III to prevent the disintegration of the Empire. . . . Beginning with a description of Selim's education, Shaw then introduces the reader to the dangerous international situation the sultan inherited when he assumed the leadership of the Empire in 1789. The details of Selim's reform program subsequently show how the sultan reacted to the challenges of his time. . . . Shaw concludes [that] the failures of Selim III taught the ruling class how necessary it was for them to replace old institutions with new structures." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by A. C. Hess
Am Hist R 77:555 Ap '72 430w

"While the reign of Sultan Selim III [has] been treated in earlier studies, no truly comprehensive and balanced account of his controversial rule has come down to us. Drawing on a variety of European and Ottoman archival sources untapped by his predecessors, Shaw has ably succeeded in putting together a scholarly work that is bound to remain the definitive treatment of this crucial period. Shaw discusses logically and lucidly the Sultan's modernizing policies affecting a variety of institutions with particular stress on the military. . . . Helpful aspects of the book include a number of interesting plates illustrating some of the concrete innovations, a useful chart detailing the Sultan's important official appointments . . . and a workable index."
Choice 8:1377 D '71 170w

SHAWN, WILLIAM, ed. London war notes 1939-1945. See Panter-Downes, M.

SHEARS, SARAH. A village girl; memoirs of a Kentish childhood; introd. by R. F. Delderfield. 118g title: Tapioca for teal. 256p $6.95 Simon & Schuster

R or 92

SBN 671-21058-0 LC 73-179580

This description of her life in an English village begins when the author is 9 years old and ends when she is 14. Her world revolves about her family, her widowed mother; "a sister and brothers with whom Sarah shares the simple pleasures of being a country child. Her memories are of hop-picking in the Kentish fields with the Gypsies and the . . . Cockneys, Saturday 'washing day' in the big zinc washtub drawn up in front of the roaring fire, . . . Sunday School picnics, [and] the village school with its terrors and delights." (Publisher's note)

"This beautifully written, evocative story . . . should add up to a colorful and stimulating book but somehow it doesn't. . . . Perhaps the difficulty stems from the fact that the mature Miss Shears no longer feels, sees, and responds in the same way she did as a child and so tends to idealize her memories. The air of wide-eyed innocence doesn't quite come off. . . . 'A Village Girl' will likely appeal to the few rather than the many. If your reading time is budgeted, you'd better pass." Sister Gregory Duffy

Best Sell 31:561 Mr 15 '72 240w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh

Christian Science Monitor p13 Mr 9 '72 100w

Economist 239:64 Je 19 '71 130w

"An account of village life in southern England during World War I similar to Laurie Lee's Edge of Day [BRD 1960]. The family was poor; Father was an army man who vanished early in their lives; Mother was a stalwart and loving tyrant who raised her brood of four with a kind of Mary Poppins briskness. Shears describes the bleakness of poverty . . . and the highly individual members of the family during her childhood years from five to 14. The book has charm and an easy flowing style." Jeanne Lopez

Library J 97:492 F 1 '72 110w

"This is a touching picture of English working-class rural life in the twenties. . . . Sarah is bright, jumps a grade, is jumped on by a sadistic teacher and gets a stutter. . . . [After her father's death she] has to leave school for service as apprentice maid for the vicar. She becomes ill, goes unattended for years for fear of the expense. End of book. Still this memoir is reminiscent of Akenfield [by Ronald Blythe, BRD 1969], partly because of the great distance that separates village life of not so long ago from English village life today and partly for the social cruelties practiced by 'the Gentry' on Sarah Shears's class."

N Y Times Bk R p16 Mr 19 '72 160w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:36 Ap 22 '72 100w [YA]

SHECTER, BEN. Someplace else. 167p il $4.50 Harper

SBN 06-025576-5 LC 77-146003

"Arnie Schiffman, aged eleven, recently moved to a new neighborhood where he finds life often difficult and frustrating. He becomes friends with a pimply boy who makes stink bombs, but avoids a girl who's 'buddy-buddy' with his mother and a real pain for him. He loathes his cranky teacher, Miss Noonan, and has no love for Rabbi Bliesch who is giving him bar mitzvah lessons, although he feels oddly guilty when the rabbi disappears." (Book World) "Ages nine to eleven." (Sat R)

"Ben Shecter introduces a wonderful new character [in Arnie Schiffman]. . . . The story contains many funny situations, as well as sorrowful ones like Arnie's loss of Houdini, the stray puppy he adopted, his mother's operation, and finally his father's death. The author writes with rare humor and affection, etching incidents and characters so clearly one feels that the story must stem from his own experience. And one feels fortunate in being able to share them." Polly Goodwin

Book World p14 (children's issue) N 7 '71 140w

Reviewed by Nancy Garden

Christian Science Monitor pB5 N 11 '71 80w

"This account of the sixth- and seventh-grade years of a Jewish boy living in the city is described in the third person by Arnie himself and captures the verisimilitude of an autobiography in its picture of the joys, pains, and longings recalled from childhood. . . . The author writes with telling economy, using the right details; and if his story is nostalgic in a manner that pleases the adult, it is nevertheless lively and direct in its revelation of childish behavior and feelings." V. H.

Horn Bk 48:53 F '72 130w

"The gloomy chapters in this book are more likely to strike a responsive chord in the Jewish over-40 set than among under-12's. Readers learn about 12-year-old Arnie's cliché-spouting mother, pet dog, bar mitzvah lessons, new school, Grandmother, two weeks on a farm, and close relationship with his adored father, who dies suddenly at the end of the book. The writing is pedestrian and characterizations tend to be stock, especially of religious and authoritarian personae who are unflatteringly described and dismissed. . . . The boy's hates and resentments become the bases for guilt feelings when illness befalls his mother and the rabbi. But the ambivalences in his feelings, instead of being developed, disappear without probing, explanations or conclusions." Ruth Sicherman

Library J 97:779 F 15 '72 200w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:80 F 19 '72 110w

SHEED, F. J. What difference does Jesus make? 242p $6 Sheed

232 Jesus Christ

ISBN 0-8362-1329-7 LC 76-162382

Drawing on "scripture, theology and Church history, as well as on his Catholic faith, Sheed probes for what is unique about Jesus among . . . the prophets of the ancient and modern world. . . . [There are] chapters on the identity of Jesus, on the psychological implications of his dual nature, and on his revelations about the inner nature of God, the Holy Spirit, and the Trinity." (Library J)

"Here we have Lenten meditations of the mind, whereas [L.] Santucci's [in Meeting Jesus, BRD 1972] are of the heart and senses. The Scriptural quotations are from the Revised Standard Version, which further demonstrates Sheed's good sense—since the pop translations used in the Church today are foppishly inadequate." T. P. McDonell

America 126:152 F 12 '72 80w

"[This] disappointing book [combines] . . . reflections on the life of Jesus and on the contemporary religious scene. [The author] refers frequently to the Scripture scholars; for Sheed they are 'the critics,' to be combated with the weapons of an apologetic that flourished two or three generations ago. . . . For a reader brought up to admire Frank Sheed as a valiant warrior confronting the enemies of the faith, the present book is embarrassing to read. Nothing has changed. The struggle is still that of 'the plain man' against 'the critics'; scholarship is still inherently suspect. . . . No doubt there are readers for whom all this is helpful, whose faith (I hope not whose resentments) will be strengthened by such a book. But it is not for everyone." George MacRae

Commonweal 96:18 Mr 10 '72 350w

"Sheed describes his book as the detailing of what Jesus has to give a world trying to be reborn. One solid point is his reminder that defects in renewal and in the church's structure are not defects in Jesus. . . . Sheed, as always, is lucid and persuasive. His book will do well." John Deedy

Critic 30:80 N '71 120w

"Fundamentalist in the best, not the pejorative, sense is this portrait of Jesus as he is reflected in the New Testament, undimmed by the speculations of too many overimaginative exegetes. . . . In probing the meaning of the Resurrection and Jesus' promise of immortality, [the author] shows an awareness of the current dimension to man's ancient questions. [He] is meticulous in separating the conclusions he reaches through solid scriptural study from those which are the result of his own speculation, and, as a result, his book is a fine example of honesty and common sense." Genevieve Casey

Library J 97:77 Ja 1 '72 190w

"In this book Mr Sheed makes [an] . . . attempt to present Jesus himself as he was. . . . The treatment is forthright and refreshingly lay, and the language strong and trenchant. . . . We are shown a real Man, with a character, as depicted, the author claims, by the evangelists. But Mr Sheed gives one the impression that he reads the Gospels as though they were flat surfaces, in what some will find a strangely old-fashioned way, with little idea of their gradual formation. . . . This is a pity. What is here said so well would have a less restricted appeal if [the author] gave a bit more of its due to New Testament scholarship."

TLS p527 My 5 '72 400w

SHEEHAN, NEIL. The Arnheiter affair. 304p il $7.95 Random house

359.3 Arnheiter, Marcus Aurelius. Vance (Ship)
ISBN 0-394-47363-9 LC 77-159373

This is an account of a naval officer's "removal, on March 31, 1966, from a command that he had assumed only ninety-nine days before. . . . The Navy said it had relieved Lt. Comdr. Arnheiter because of 'certain irregular practices' that led to a severe erosion of morale aboard his ship. The deposed captain . . . charged that he was the victim of a conspiracy . . . by a mutinous cabal aboard the Vance. . . . Now, more than five years after the original events took place, Sheehan [presents the] story, based on documentation and interviews with the so-called mutineers and others involved." (Sat R)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:110 F '72 50w

Reviewed by J. B. Cullen
Best Sell 31:543 Mr 1 '72 750w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Book World p3 F 27 '72 900w

"[This] is a fascinatingly real account of a Caine Mutiny type affair replete with stupidity, tyranny, and terror. . . . Should have wide appeal." R. N. Sheridan
Library J 97:196 Ja 15 '72 170w

Reviewed by Philip Blake
Nation 214:570 My 1 '72 800w

Reviewed by K. Lynch
Nat R 24:909 Ag 18 '72 250w

Reviewed by John Seelve
New Repub 166:29 F 5 '72 1050w

"This is an entertaining account of a hilarious and yet deeply disturbing episode of the Vietnam war. . . . That Arnheiter ever received a command is a sorry commentary on the Navy's Bureau of Personnel; that he was relieved within 99 days is evidence that the Navy was capable of correcting its mistakes. . . . Sheehan draws a convincing portrait of a pathetic man. . . . But the implications of the story are too serious to permit only laughter. Are there other Arnheiteres in positions of even greater responsibility?" Gaddis Smith
N Y Times Bk R p3 F 6 '72 1000w

New Yorker 47:103 F 12 '72 150w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 79:70 F 7 '72 850w

"What emerges from Sheehan's book is the portrait of a man whose self-image had been shaped by his poring over the legendary exploits of Lord Nelson, John Paul Jones, and the fictional hero, Horatio Hornblower. . . . Arnheiter pictured himself as a man cast in a heroic mold, one destined to command men in time of war and to lead them to victory. As captain of the Vance he could at last begin to act out his fantasies. The regime established by Arnheiter . . . set the pattern for the ultimate loss of respect in his leadership and the progressive breakdown of morale that led to his removal. . . . [Sheehan cites a number of 'irregular practices'] some so bizarre that they strain credulity. The Arnheiter Affair is, in many respects, a frightening story." Hal Dareff

Sat R 55:66 F 5 '72 1150w

The SHELL natural history of Britain: general ed: Maurice Burton. 481p il col il maps $15 British bk. centre

574.942 Natural history—Great Britain
SBN 7181-4033-8 LC [77-499346]

"The topics covered are plants, invertebrates, the seashore, fishes, amphibians and reptiles, birds, and mammals." (Library J) Index.

"Oriented to high school and junior college interests [the book] is crammed with thousands of facts about the plants and animals of the British Isles, although there is no comprehensive or broad view perspective of British natural history. . . . Precision has been sacrificed to some degree for readability. . . . Hopefully, later editions will exhibit a tighter editorial rein."

Choice 7:1686 F '71 240w [YA]

"The amateur naturalist surely will be willing to devote several evenings to this book, for it is a natural history in the finest tradition. The contributors include well-known scholars, yet excessive demands on the reader's background knowledge have in general been avoided. . . . The illustrations on the whole are of good quality, but some are mediocre. . . . [The work lacks] a geological timetable. This, however is a minor criticism of a good book." J. D. Buffington

Library J 96:648 F 15 '71 100w

"There is an increasing number of people who care for the country-side and wish to preserve it. The book is written for them and also for others whose interest may be stimulated to enjoy the wild life around them.

[The account] is presented in a readable, interesting and beautifully illustrated form. . . . The evolutionary development of the groups [is described] with reference to the distributional effects of the retreat of the ice between glaciations and the effects of the separation of Britain from the adjacent continental land mass. . . . The transition to land of the amphibians and the establishment of the reptiles makes interesting reading and a delightful account is given of Britain's bird life, its adaptation to changed conditions, and migration. The numerous illustrations are of outstanding quality both in colour and black-and-white."

TLS p861 Jl 31 '70 310w

SHEPARD, FRANCIS P. Our changing coastlines, [by] Francis P. Shepard [and] Harold R. Wanless. 579p il maps $39.50 McGraw

551.4 Coasts. Geomorphology
ISBN 0-07-056558-9 LC 72-139563

This work "covers all the United States coasts (including Alaska and Hawaii), giving . . . descriptions of the coastal character and history of changes since the time of the earliest maps and photographs. The . . . effects on the shores caused by hurricanes, tidal waves, earthquakes, landslides, and volcanic eruptions are included. . . . Rapid coastline changes due to delta building in the Gulf Coast and melting back of the huge glaciers in Alaska are described. Effects on the coastal environment of the works of man are presented with warning of the dangers of losing our . . . seashores." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Glossary. Index.

"An outstanding compilation of information. . . . Excellent descriptions of various coastal landforms are included. The book is profusely illustrated, primarily with aerial photographs which graphically portray the nature of the dynamic coastal landforms. All illustrations are of excellent quality. . . . The book is well written, well organized, and easy to read. Should appeal to students, faculty, and professionals in a variety of fields with interests in the coastal regime, including coastal engineers, oceanographers, geographers, and geologists. Highly recommended for all university libraries."

Choice 8:1476 Ja '72 130w

"[The authors] have attempted a comprehensive survey, suitable for the general reader. . . . Each reader will undoubtedly find that his particular segment of the coast is not treated as fully as he would like. Completeness, of course, is impossible in a study of 84,000 miles of coastline in a single volume. . . . The random, friendly style of writing may bother those who are used to reading of coastlines from more conventional texts; to others it will be refreshing. . . . Because of the beauty of production, it may find its way to the gift tables of bookstores. In one sense the book is a bargain: it presents more than 2000 miles of coastline for each dollar invested." J. V. Byrne

Science 175:158 Ja 14 '72 600w

SHEPHERD, GEORGE W., ed. Race among nations. See Race among nations

SHEPHERD, WALTER. Jungles; il. by John Plumb. 48p lib bdg $3.69 Day 574.5 Natural history—Tropics—Juvenile literature
LC 76-140468

The book "describes typical climate and vegetation and explains the five vegetative layers of growth. Jungle water life, grass jungles and mangrove swamps are also mentioned. [Glossary.] Grades three to five." (Library J)

"The flora and fauna (including man) of the major jungle areas of the world are briefly surveyed in this straightforward account. . . . Unfortunately, while a simple table of contents is provided, the lack of an index and many unnumbered pages restrict the book's reference value, and the abrupt transitions between subject areas are jarring. However, the attractive illustrations—half of which are in color—expand the text." E. R. Hardee

Library J 97:3455 O 15 '72 150w

"A good example of the conscientious information book for juniors with enough illustrations to keep interest going and enough facts to make reading worthwhile. . . . The assumption that the home base here is the United States is unfortunate; we need some guidance to help us tell whether the comparisons made throughout the book are with America, Britain, or both."

TLS p1343 O 22 '71 90w

SHEPHERD, WALTER. Textiles; il. by David Farris. 48p lib bdg $3.69 Day

677 Textile industry and fabrics—Juvenile literature
LC 70-140469

The author describes the origins of textile fibers, the manufacture of synthetic fibers, and how wool, cotton, and linen are prepared for use as finished textiles. Other areas covered are dyeing and weaving. Glossary. "Grades four to seven." (Library J)

"This account of textiles (here defined as woven cloth) introduces readers to the raw materials, early and modern processing techniques, and finished products. Clear illustrations—some in color—accompany each page of the accurate, interesting text; unfortunately, the book lacks sufficient information on the distinctive qualities of each type of cloth." P. M. Mitchell

Library J 97:3455 O 15 '72 100w

"A well-organized survey of the materials from which fabrics are made and methods of processing them in the past and today. The 'Finding out about Science' series has come to be known as adequate rather than outstanding in either text, design or illustration, and that judgment is also applicable to this title. In general the explanations are satisfactory, but it is a pity that children, after learning that warp threads go down and weft across, will see five pages later a diagram showing the opposite."

TLS p490 Ap 28 '72 90w

SHEPPARD, FRANCIS. London, 1808-1870; the infernal wen. (History of London) 427p pl maps $11.75 Univ. of Calif. press

942 London—History
ISBN 0-520-01847-8 LC 71-142067

The author describes "London's changing rôle in the economic life of the nation, and traces the . . . pressures which enforced a measure of centralization on the frequently reluctant units of parochial administration. . . . [He presents an account of the] problems of sanitation and public health imposed by the town's explosive spread. Sheppard covers . . . the major preoccupations of the age: local government, the Poor Law and trade unionism, the transport revolution, public health, the life of London's . . . working classes, [and] the rôle of the church and state in education." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The chapters on London's money market and the city's growth are particularly good, but in those on churches and schools and politics, Sheppard has difficulty focusing on London's special problems and achievements as distinct from the national picture. . . . An important component of a series with no rivals about one of the premier cities of the world. Should be in all libraries."

Choice 9:1193 N '72 120w

"Dr Sheppard reveals a remarkable grasp of the literature relating to the period, including the very considerable output since the Second World War. . . . Not that his approach is in any way a narrow one, for he goes out of his way from the outset to see the capital in its national setting and in doing so he . . . brings out very well its considerable importance as a centre of industry. . . . Here is the London of Simon and Balzaigette, of the Goldsmids and the Rothschilds, of Bishop Blomfield's Sisyphean years . . . of the Radicals and of Mayhew [and others]. . . . Dr Sheppard introduces them all in a book which is well written, admirably illustrated and beautifully produced."

TLS p86 Ja 28 '72 110w

"This work is the seventh . . . of a projected eight-volume history of London. . . . Sheppard, who is also the general editor of the series, has undertaken the . . . task of describing in detail the massive urban transformation consequent upon a huge growth of population, accelerated industrial and commercial developments, and the coming of the railways. London became during this period not only the capital of the world's first industrialized nation but the financial capital of the world. . . . [How problems of municipal administration] were approached and resolved, often after great opposition and obstruction, and how London despite great pressures avoided the revolutions that wracked European capitals are the themes of this scholarly, detailed, and vividly interesting study."

Va Q R 48:cxlvi autumn '72 200w

SHEPPARD, THOMAS F. Lourmarin in the eighteenth century; a study of a French village. (The Johns Hopkins univ. stud. in hist. and pol. science, 88th ser, 2) 248p $11
Johns Hopkins press

309.144 Lourmarin, France
ISBN 0-8018-1132-5 LC 79-126803

This work is intended to show that life in a small Provençal community "illustrates in a microcosm the dynamic political, economic, and social changes occurring in France during the ancien régime and the Revolution. Using as source materials council minutes, parish registers, administrative correspondence, and tax rolls, as well as local histories and his own personal knowledge of Lourmarin, Sheppard . . . describes the eighteenth-century village and draws some . . . conclusions about French life in the countryside. [He] examines the taxes paid to . . . district, province, and crown . . . [and] discusses the distribution of land among the villagers, the relations of the villagers with their Catholic seigneur, the way the village cared for its poor, and its reactions to the crisis of the 1720 plague." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The concluding chapter discusses the effects of the Revolution on the village. Twenty-six tables and five appendixes supplement the text. Among the particularly important chapters is the one on 'The People.' Using techniques of historical demography and family reconstruction, the author analyzes population trends and mortality rates. This chapter is stronger on statistics than it is on such subjects as the villagers' diet, dress, attitudes, and social life. The chapters on government and finance offer a clear picture of the socio-economic background of the village officials. . . . However, the limited attention that the author gives to the importance of intendants and subdelegates in village government weakens his argument about increased centralization during the century. Sheppard is more convincing about the limited effects of the Revolution on Lourmarin." T. E. Hall

Am Hist R 77:1132 O '72 420w

"[This is] an historical study of a French village. . . . We would have only a partial view of a French Protestant village in the eighteenth century if we read only this book and not [P. Higgonet's Pont de Montvert: social structure and politics in a French village, 1700-1914. BRD 1971]. . . . The value of reading both books is not just quantitative in that they provide us with complementary data. Because they furnish a basis for comparison, they also enrich our capacity for historical explanation. Each of these books aids us to understand situations described in the other. [They are] scholarly studies." Roy Pierce

Ann Am Acad 400:186 Mr '72 300w

"A very able, finely researched analysis . . . rich in statistical information. . . . Wary of generalizing too much from the history of a single and relatively unimportant village, Sheppard rightly insists that such studies are essential if the history of France is to be properly understood. A model monograph in virtually every respect. . . . Recommended for collections in modern French history, rural studies, and sociology."

Choice 8:1060 O '71 180w

SHEPPERD, G. A. A history of war and weapons, 1660 to 1918; arms and armour from the age of Louis XIV to World War I [Eng title: Arms and armour, 1660 to 1918]. 224p il $7.95 Crowell

355 Arms and armor—History. Military art and sciences—History
ISBN 0-690-39367-9 LC 78-158711

"The evolution of arms and armor, from the founding of the first modern armies by soldier kings of the seventeenth century to the formation of great armies of citizen soldiers in the twentieth, is . . . portrayed in this work, a sequel to A History of War and Weapons, 499 to 1660 [by A. V. B. Norman, BRD 1967]. . . . The author shows how new inventions in weaponry have influenced the tactics of their day and helped to determine the course of world history. Alongside descriptions of weapons of all kinds, from bayonet, saber, and musket to machine gun, tank, and Zeppelin, are accounts of great commanders, how they trained their troops, the key battles they fought . . . [and] the place of the ordinary soldier in the history of his times." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Index.

"This book was first published in Great Britain in 1971 with the title Arms and Armour. . . . The illustrations of weapons are helpful, although the human figures are rather awkwardly done. Several key battles are briefly described to illustrate the evolution of new tactics. The book should be useful as an introductory survey." R. W. Ryan

Library J 97:1715 My 1 '72 150w

"[The author] deals with the influences of the development of weapons and of the art of war on each other, and on the soldier, during the period 1660-1918, but in so superficial a manner as to provide little worthwhile information about either. The many line illustrations are, for the most part, unilluminating and, in some cases, downright inaccurate."

TLS p1005 Ag 25 '72 80w

SHERBURNE, JAMES. The way to Fort Pillow; a novel. 260p $6.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-395-13525-7 LC 70-173779

A sequel to the author's earlier book, Hacey Miller, this novel covers "the forced evacuation of Berea College in 1859, up to the end of the Civil War. Hacey Miller is an Emancipationist Kentuckian. On the way to Fort Pillow, he marries, has a son, joins the Union Cavalry, fights, is wounded, recuperates, joins one of Thomas Wentworth Higginson's all-black units . . . and survives the massacre at Fort Pillow." (Library J)

Reviewed by V. J. Colimore

Best Sell 32:42 Ap 15 '72 200w

"Sherburne thrusts Hacey through significant historical moments and alongside the giants of Northern politics and the Union Army in order to examine the conflicts in loyalties (Hacey joined the Union Army, his brother joined the Confederacy), to pursue the political conspiracy that led to the court martial of Major General Fitz John Porter. . . . Characterization is slight but the narrative moves swiftly. Devotees of Civil War novels will find this work a significant addition to their reading list. Their great regret will be that Sherburne has not given more than token recognition to some of the greats of the military and politics and expansion to some of the truly historical moments of the Civil War."

Choice 9:972 O '72 180w

Reviewed by Dem Polacheck

Library J 97:1348 Ap 1 '72 120w

"Cruel battle scenes are vividly and accurately described, including the nightmare action of black troops bravely fighting for their own freedom in the battle of Fort Pillow which is little known today, but called forth a Congressional investigation at the time. An historical novel of the first order, this combines the politics, plots and counter-plots of Civil War Washington and a tender love story between Hacey and a hillbilly girl from the Cumberland Mountains of Kentucky." A. B. Master

Library J 97:1627 Ap 15 '72 120w [YA]

SHERESKY, NORMAN. Uncoupling; the art of coming apart [by] Norman Sheresky and Marya Mannes. 208p $6.95 Viking

301.42 Divorce
SBN 670-73905-7 LC 75-186739

Sheresky, a matrimonial lawyer, and Marya Mannes, the writer who has been three times married, "discuss the hiring of lawyers, separation agreements, alimony, and child custody, and include excerpts from actual court decisions. Their thesis is that the divorce process should be stripped of as much emotionalism as possible. Husband and wife should try to view it objectively—only as a means to end a dead union and provide for fair distribution of assets." (Library J) Index.

"A rational examination of modern divorce proceedings. . . . Unlike many other champions of divorce reform, the authors are not axgrinders. Their balanced and detached analysis will provide calm reassurance for couples contemplating the fateful step." Barbara Zenlenko

Library J 97:2198 Je 15 '72 200w

"[The book] is most interesting when it explores the social and legal principles operative in marriage and divorce. . . . [However,] although there is an entire chapter on 'Sex, Sex Discrimination, and the Law,' which tells us that 'contrary to widespread belief, the system is weighted heavily against women,' the legal chapters don't deal adequately with the specific disadvantages women face. . . . [The] subtitle, 'The Art of Coming Apart,' to the contrary, the book is more a plea than a prescription. Embattled spouses are asked to abandon their desire for revenge or punishment and to avoid 'toughguy' lawyers. . . . The book's legal chapters consist primarily of long case histories and transcriptions of courtroom dialogue (or diatribe) rather than practical guidelines for the person undergoing or contemplating divorce." Susan Edmiston

N Y Times Bk R p42 O 22 '72 1100w

"Perhaps because of the book's frequent anecdotes, little practical information of any sort is communicated. Disorganized, scattered, repetitious . . . the book is at war with itself, a joint effort by two authors who seem constantly to be flying off the handle with each other, forever on the verge of stylistic divorce. One voice . . . advises the reader in several places to be sure to know, 'Who has the dough? How is it come by? Where is it? Does the other spouse know about it.' . . . The other voice had in mind an indictment of the legal system and society. It is very well meaning and deplores the very things that the first voice is giving lessons in. . . . I do not mean to judge which voice is the more decent, just to say that in their present disorder and cacophony they are clearly incompatible." Linda Wolfe

Sat R 55:72 S 9 '72 1050w

SHERFEY, MARY JANE. The nature and evolution of female sexuality. 188p $5.95 Random house

612.6 Sex (Biology). Sex (Psychology). Woman—Sexual behavior
ISBN 0-394-46539-3 LC 69-16458

This is the first of a projected two volume work. It is "a biological study of female sexual evolution and functioning with emphasis on those aspects most relevant to human sexuality [and] psychoanalytic theory. . . . [Volume I] deals, first, with the nature of bisexuality in the light of the modern inductor theory of primary sexual differentiation; and, secondly, with the demonstration of the nature of the orgasm in women by a presentation of the . . . research of William H. Masters and his collaborators at the Washington University School of Medicine. . . . Volume II, to be published, presents the phylogenesis of the female external genitalia, secondary sexual characteristics, and sexual behavior through the primate line of descent." (Pref) Contents: Chapter 1: Psychoanalytic theory and the nature of the orgasm; Chapter 2: Embryology and the nature of bisexuality; Chapter 3: Clitoral erotism and the sexual response cycle in human females; Chapter

SHERFEY, M. J.—Continued

4: Supplemental data on vaginal insensitivity. Glossary. Bibliography.

"The book is an attack on the Freudian view of female sexuality which equates maturity with the 'vaginal orgasm.' This most radical and yet most scholarly study is written for professionals, and many lay readers will find certain sections very rough going indeed, though worth the effort. Many of Sherfey's points are summarized in [B.] Seaman's Free and female [BRD 1972] which is written for a popular audience."

Choice 9:886 S '72 160w

"[This monograph was] first published in the January 1966 issue of Journal of the American Psychoanalytic Association. . . . The popular demand for reprints of the work has led to the current liberally annotated publication. . . . Writing with clarity, scholarship and sensitivity psychiatrist Sherfey explores the historical reasons for the introduction of circumcision . . . the evolution of social organizations from matriarchal to patriarchal forms . . . and many other fascinating subjects. . . . [She] raises serious questions, and infers that a takeover by the truly sexually liberated woman would destroy our domesticated civilized world. . . . This is an excellent, erudite, thought-provoking book. It should become a staple reference not only for the women's liberation movement, but also for every student of biopsychosocial change."

Jacqueline Hott

Library J 97:2631 Ag '72 300w

"In these days of sexual politics it becomes necessary to separate the scientific study of female sexuality from its misuse by theorists who wish to establish strategic positions in the struggle between the sexes. For this reason, and because her ideas have already assumed importance within the women's liberation movement, one cannot ignore Sherfey's [book]. . . . One often feels that her leaps from an alleged sexual biology inherent in all women to unverified generalizations about earlier stages of society are motivated by a desire to buttress the egos of women who are not satisfied—sexually or socially—in the world they now inhabit. . . . Sherfey's kind of mythologizing does many women a considerable disservice. It encourages them to feel that 'science tells us' all sorts of things that, in fact, science does not tell us." Irving Singer

N Y Rev of Books 19:29 N 30 '72 1200w

"Dr. Sherfey, a practicing psychiatrist, has written an impressive scholarly dissertation that draws together a wealth of biological and anthropological data on the sexuality of female primates and prehistoric women. . . . Certain species of female primates whose reproductive structures closely resemble human ones, Sherfey explains, exhibit an astonishingly intense and aggressive sexual behavior, backed up by an 'inordinate orgasmic capacity.' This condition of enormous sexual capacity and physiological insatiability, Sherfey believes, also exists in human females, but has been systematically suppressed for thousands of years so that societies and families could develop. Sexually, says Sherfey, women were not designed for monogamy." J. A. Seligmann

Newsweek 79:71 J1 3 '72 650w

"[This book] is the first installment of a comprehensive theory that will account for new and neglected old data on the physiology, psychology, evolution, and anthropology of the female sexual response. . . . Dr. Sherfey got started on her quest by reading up on premenstrual tension. This led to her questioning why menstrual periods at all, and from there into the contradictory and uncharted literature on human female sexuality in general. She found the record littered with evidence that male researchers had cast aside." Caroline Bird

Sat R 55:55 Ag 26 '72 420w

SHERMAN, HOWARD. Radical political economy: capitalism and socialism from a Marxist-humanist perspective. 431p $12.50 Basic bks.

335 Capitalism. Socialism. Communism. Marx, Karl
SBN 465-06823-5 LC 72-174829

The author attempts "to present a unified radical political economy of capitalism and socialism. . . . [He] analyzes and compares, from a nondogmatic Marxist and humanist perspective, the prehistory, evolution, main characteristics and probable future of capitalism (mainly in the United States) and the various forms of contemporary socialism. . . . Sherman critically examines and evaluates the performance of the two systems with respect to the economics of income distribution, growth, and monopoly as well as the politics of government policies and the handling of such pervasive social problems as pollution, racism, sexism, and alienation." (Publisher's note) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[Sherman] deals with important problems and ably expresses marxist, though also democratic and egalitarian, attitudes to them. But neither those who share nor those who have chosen to reject his attitudes to poverty, pollution, imperialism, racialism and so on will find that they learn much. This is really a textbook addressed to the young. For them, and particularly if they are Americans, it provides an admirable mixture of left-wing description, analysis and invitation to argument."

Economist 243:83 My 27 '72 250w

"Here is the long awaited volume, with an academic orientation, designed to explain and elaborate the radical viewpoint in a form palatable to students and scholars. . . . While expressing the value stance of a nondogmatic Marxist, the writing reflects scholarship and technical competence, and can be understood by the nonmathematician and the nonexpert. Certain of the technical elaborations are provided in appendixes. This book will serve as the basic for considerable debate and discussion both from partisans of the Left and of the Right and is very likely to be widely sought in many types of libraries." Paul Wasserman

Library J 97:1708 My 1 '72 150w

"[The author] proudly states in the first chapter that his book is to be 'taken as a manifesto of the radicals in economics, the Union of Radical Political Economics'. . . . In deference to Sherman's fellow URPE members, however, it is only fair to note that no evidence appears that he was duly and formally selected for the task of presenting the collective new radical program. That he was not is a point that some of his colleagues may wish to emphasize for Sherman's book is a classic in literary schizophrenia, in which an evident compulsion to say something new and startling wars constantly, and most often triumphantly, with good sense and sound economic training. . . . Sherman's new radical creed turns out to be little different from the cruder Marxist analyses of the past, with of course new data added." M. J. Ulmer

New Repub 166:27 Ap 15 '72 800w

SHEROVER, CHARLES M. Heidegger, Kant & time; with an introd. by William Barrett. 322p $13.95 Ind. univ. press

115 Heidegger, Martin. Kant, Immanuel. Time
ISBN 253-32720-2 LC 74-135011

"Sherover juxtaposes Kant and Heidegger in . . . [an] examination with philosophic implications that point beyond them. He does this by an examination of the concept of time, which forms a guiding thread through the Critique of Pure Reason and emerges as the fundamental concept of Being and Time [M. Heidegger, BRD 1963]. His book . . . argues that Kant had . . . set the stage for Heidegger's existential phenomenology, which, in turn, serves to ground much of Kant's work." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Sherover's work eruditely focuses on Heidegger's formidable language to help students grasp his intention. . . . Sherover is not much concerned with the later Heidegger, unfortunately, but such a concern would have shed little additional light on his relation to Kant. . . . Highly recommended even for small collections."

Choice 9:224 Ap '72 140w

"This is a radical attempt to 'demythologize' Heidegger. . . . The defense of the power of imagination as the hidden root from which spring the two more conscious branches, sensibility and thought, is to be applauded; but I am not convinced that the Kantian 'transcendental' is all there is to the Heideggerian 'ontological.' The buttressing of the argument by appeal to Plotinus, Dewey, and a host of others only seems to make Heidegger pedestrian, whereas an insertion into the philosophia perennis was probably intended still, because of its successful effort to make Heidegger intelligible and its massive erudition, the book will surely become a standard; it is thus recommended. . . . to any but the smallest library, especially as a first or second purchase on Heidegger." J. M. Perreault

Library J 96:1716 My 15 '71 170w

SHERRY, NORMAN. Conrad's western world. 455p pl maps $14.50 Cambridge 823 Conrad, Joseph
ISBN 0-521-07972-1 LC [70-130910]
For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 8:1454 Ja '72 130w

Reviewed by E. K. Hay
Encounter 33:72 Ap '72 2700w

Reviewed by Lawrence Graver
Va Q R 48:318 spring '72 950w

SHERWOOD, CLARENCE C., jt. auth. Social research and social policy. See Freeman, H. E.

SHETELIG, HAAKON, jt. auth. The Viking ships. See Brøgger, A. W.

SHIBLES, WARREN A. Models of ancient Greek philosophy. 155p il $7.50 Humanities press 180 Philosophy, Ancient
LC [79-582038]

The author's purposes are "to give paraphrases of selected thoughts of the whole standard list of Greek philosophers, to and including Aristotle; to make judgments about the soundness of their 'metaphors'; and, finally, to argue that all philosophy is necessarily metaphorical." (Choice)

"Plato is presented sympathetically and without substantial errors. But the scolding [Shibles] gives Aristotle and 'modern logic' (unlike Platonic Division, these cannot deal with 'complex human meanings') is both gratuitous and wrong. Is it true that in Aristotle 'words are to be taken literally, and in logic language is denied its normal mobility'? Analogy and metaphor in Poetics is ignored . . . and Topics and Sophistici Elenchi are handled so sketchily that the abnormal mobility of language discussed there is ignored also. Not recommended."

Choice 9:826 S '72 250w

"This book is best described as a romp through the history of ancient philosophy up to Aristotle. . . . The book is devoid of scholarship. The author shows no knowledge of Greek, quoting published translations throughout (chosen on no apparent principle) and sometimes . . . without indication of source. His references to ancient texts are haphazard. . . . The author has tried to unify his discussion to some extent by emphasizing that what he calls 'models' or 'metaphors' for interpreting reality lie at the center of the philosophies he discusses. This leads to serious distortions. . . . Errors, even howlers, abound. . . . No responsible teacher could recommend this book to a student; and laymen will find the exposition often obscure philosophically and compressed to the point of unintelligibility." J. M. Cooper
Class World 66:168 N '72 500w

"This book contributes almost nothing to the understanding of Greek philosophy. For the most part, it is a sophomoric, not always accurate summary of some but not all major Greek thinkers (Empedocles and Anaxagoras are briefly but incorrectly treated as atomists; and Lucretius is included without any mention that he was not Greek). It is based largely on secondary sources. . . . A doxographical report is wrongly identified as a 'major fragment' of Anaximander; the remarks on retranslating 'several words' of Parmenides seem pretentious; the discussions of Plato and Aristotle are schematic at best. And the author's notion of models (metaphors?) is not particularly illuminating. No bibliography is included." J. P. Hershbell
Library J 96:4097 D 15 '71 200w

SHIFFERT, EDITH MARCOMBE, comp. Anthology of modern Japanese poetry; tr. & comp. by Edith Marcombe Shiffert & Yūki Sawa. 195p $6.05 Tuttle
895.6 Japanese poetry—Collections
ISBN 0-8048-0672-1 LC 73-167936

"Forty-nine poets are represented. . . . From one to eight poems by each poet are included. The time period covered is from the 1880's to the present, and about two-thirds of the poets are still living, e.g., Kihachi Ozaki and Mitsuharu Kaneko." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"An interesting, brief anthology. . . . In an excellent, short introduction, the editors trace the development of Japanese poetry through the traditional tanka, waka, renga, and haiku to the awakening of Japanese interest in Western poetic forms after 1870. It is the editors' thesis that the Western influence on Japanese poets today ought not to be overemphasized, as the new non-traditional poetic forms in Japan are now largely Japanese and reflect the Japanese environment and tradition. . . . [The volume is] divided by poetic format: free verse, tanka, and haiku. Helpful are the brief biographical notes . . . A worthwhile addition to 20th-century Japanese poetry for any library."

Choice 9:823 S '72 190w

"Japanese poetry is usually thought of in terms of the haiku. Here is a collection that will help to set the record straight. . . . The styles are quite varied, and the translators have tried to convey the spirit of the originals by sticking to the precise vocabulary, phrasing, and order of ideas in the Japanese. Also included [is] . . . a useful index that coordinates references to the introduction, the poems, and the biographies." D. J. Pearce
Library J 97:1329 Ap 1 '72 180w

SHIMER, R. H. Squaw point, 225p $5.95 Harper
ISBN 0-06-013848-3 LC 73-175155

Squaw Point is an island of the Alaskan peninsula. "Nels Borgesen, a Coast Guard ensign, searches the area for the hijacker of a load of seal pelts. Miro Tokin is looking for anything that makes money. Gusti Lundt the schoolteacher, isn't looking for a man but she finds one. Mrs. Kalugin sees into the future, and Preacher White sees too much, perhaps, since somebody sticks a fishing knife into his chest." (Sat R)

Best Sell 32:96 My 15 '72 60w

Reviewed by Henry Veit

Library J 97:2120 Je 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by Janet Strothman

Library J 97:2495 Jl '72 130w [YA]

"A fine first novel. . . . Mrs. Shimer used to teach school in Alaska, and she writes from obvious experience. Her plotting is excellent (murder, hijacked sealskins), but that is not the main interest. Mrs. Shimer introduces the reader to the Aleuts and others who live by fishing and hunting the area. . . . She has created a neat puzzle, has filled her book with action, has worked in believable characters, and has a fine ear for dialogue." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p29 Ap 16 '72 90w

"As a thriller [this] is mild (a smuggler drowned, a preacher stabbed), but as an adventure in raw country it is a model of strength. It should be added that Mrs. Shimer has chosen as her heroine and leading character a young spinster schoolteacher whose mind and manners are all her own."

New Yorker 48:144 Ap 22 '72 80w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel

Sat R 55:86 My 13 '72 90w

"One of the least interesting islands in Western Alaska, a scientist called Squaw Point, but what goes on there is far from dull. . . . While there is mystery in this rip-roaring adventure, it is almost submerged in the robust episodes, the salty characters, and the untamed frontier atmosphere of one of a chain of islands off the Alaskan Peninsula." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:83 My 20 '72 100w [YA]

SHINN, ROGER LINCOLN. Wars and rumors of wars. 298p maps $5.95 Abingdon

940.54 War. War and religion. World War, 1939-1945—Personal narratives
ISBN 0-687-44017-3 LC 70-185550

"The book is divided into two parts. The first is a diary of the author's experiences as a combat soldier and prisoner of war. It tells of his capture by the Germans, his interrogation, his imprisonment, the forced marches as a POW . . . from Poland to Bavaria, the hunger and cold of bare survival in those desperate days, and his final liberation by U.S. forces. In the second part, Dr. Shinn analyzes the ethics of war. He discusses the forms and uses of power, conscientious objection, the possibility of nuclear war, the 'glories of war,' and the possibilities of a 'moral equivalent for war.'" (Publisher's note) Glossary.

SHINN, R. L.—Continued

"Like Niebuhr, [the author] is no pacifist nor is he convinced of the efficacy of Christian ethics as applied to the realities of violence and international conflicts. He writes: 'The sayings of Jesus are parabolic, situational, metaphorical, dramatic. . . . They disturb men [and] . . . lure men with unrealized possibilities of justice and peace.' In this book it does not become at all evident how Shinn's ethics differs much from that of a humanist or a liberal agnostic. . . . Though [his] final chapter, 'The Quest of a Kingdom,' is moving and the best thing in his book, it deals with topics like 'contingency,' 'community,' 'hope,' rather than with any certainties of God's Providence. . . . His is, however a transparently honest book and continuously interesting."

J. G. Gray

America 126:381 Ap 8 '72 500w

Reviewed by Brother Berchmans Downey

Best Sell 32:124 Je 1 '72 450w

Choice 9:1170 N '72 160w

"This book is one of the important publications of the year—not because its author, Reinhold Niebuhr professor of social ethics at Union Theological Seminary, propounds any new theory on the problem of war. In fact, he does not. . . . The peculiar distinction of Shinn's text is that he has combined a moving memoir of his own war experience with a comprehensive study of the ethics of fighting. . . . It would be hard to overpraise the memoir section of this book. The precapture episode is appallingly accurate. . . . The longer prisoner-of-war account is often moving. The memoir was written shortly after Shinn returned to America in 1945. So it is fresh. The dialogue is first-rate; the descriptions are lean and hard. . . . What gives this book additional value are Shinn's more recent musings about war and the accounts of his involvement in the anti-Vietnam war protests of young men."

Peter Rowley

Christian Century 89:520 My 3 '72 750w

"[Shinn's] active opposition to the Vietnam war is based on his affirmation of the 'classic doctrine of the just (or justifiable) war.' As a determined advocate of the continuing relevance of the just war theory, one would imagine Shinn would be even more militant than the pacifists. . . . in opposing America's particular role in that war. But apparently not. The main issue (judging from his chapter, 'Five Patriots') is not whether anyone should fight but whether the fighters are sincere. . . . Being bombed by men who are sincere hardly dilutes the agony at all." J. H. Forest

Commonweal 97:140 N 10 '72 2000w

Reviewed by Martin Marty

Critic 30:85 My '72 110w

SHINNIE, P. L. The African iron age. 281p 11 maps $9.75 Oxford

916.03 Iron age. Africa—Antiquities

ISBN 0-19-813158-5 LC 76-28479

This is a "collection of nine . . . essays on sub-Shabaran Iron Age archaeology. . . . Each article is written by a specialist who is still active in field work in the area he treats." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Shinnie has brought together an excellent collection of essays by outstanding specialists. . . . Interdisciplinary knowledge from history, linguistics, anthropology, and art history run throughout this valuable and readable work. Pioneer evaluations are made by competent authorities but written for non-specialists and students interested in the field. . . . Highly recommended for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 8:1072 O '71 130w

"Work in this area of African archaeology is relatively recent, with the result that most of the information is scattered through a great many journals. This book is one of a very few which collect the work to provide a unified picture of what is known. . . . Scholars in almost any area of African studies will find something of interest in Shinnie's book. A valuable contribution, recommended for all African studies collections." G. E. Evans

Library J 96:2771 S 15 '71 160w

SHIRLEY, ROBERT W. The end of a tradition; culture change and development in the município of Cunha, São Paulo, Brazil. (Columbia univ. Inst. of Latin Am. stud. Pub) 304p 11 maps $10 Columbia univ. press
309.181 Cunha, Brazil (São Paulo)—Social conditions. Cunha, Brazil (São Paulo)—Economic conditions
ISBN 0-231-03193-9 LC 76-129535

This study is "an examination of 'disorganization of an old agrarian society . . . and the multifold effect which an industrial center has on its dependent zones.' . . . The analytical framework is not the community as such, but the transformation of a semirural município by an expanding metropolis—São Paulo city—for which Cunha's main economic function in recent decades has been to supply foodstuffs and unskilled workers." (Am Hist R) Bibliography. Glossary. Index.

"Cunha is perhaps the most thoroughly researched community of small-town Brazil. Shirley, an anthropologist, is the seventh scholar to work there, and his study uses Emilio Willem's Cunha (1947) as a point of departure. The new book, however, is not a restudy stricto sensu. . . . The author's demonstration of the federal government's weakness relative to the state in Cunha—both fiscally and politically—is an intriguing finding, in view of the centralization of power after the 1964 'revolution.' . . . Students of modern Brazil should read this book for the issues it raises, directly and implicitly." J. L. Love

Am Hist R 77:1189 O '72 490w

"This [is a] revision of [Shirley's] Columbia University dissertation (1967). . . . This study will interest . . . students of modernization. It is lamentable that the author and his publisher failed to take greater care with the manuscript's preparation, for it is burdened by a turgid style and is flawed by inconsistencies in citations and spelling and by generalizations of dubious historical validity."

Dauril Alden

Ann Am Acad 401:182 My '72 550w

SHMUËLI, ADI. Kierkegaard & consciousness; tr. by Naomi Handelman. 202p $8.50 Princeton univ. press

198.9 Kierkegaard, Søren Aabye. Consciousness

ISBN 0-691-07143-8 LC 70-132241

"Shmuëli reads Kierkegaard's works as a testimony on consciousness and thus places the Danish Christian's reflections in the mainstream of contemporary European thought. . . . [The author's] purpose is to demonstrate the internal coherence of the pseudonymous authorship. The key, he proposes, is Kierkegaard's delineation of the structure and behavior of human consciousness—this to be seen within his major themes: the esthetic/ethical/religious stages of life, alienation, the problem of truth, even Christianity. . . . [He] shows how Kierkegaard's method of indirect communication works through his pseudonymous authorship—how his writing was designed, in fact, to awaken his reader to a new consciousness, the essential condition of the Christian in society." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[This is a] fresh interpretation of the philosophy of Kierkegaard which gets to the heart of his description of the modes of consciousness (and being) open to man. . . . Although one may quarrel with the author's view that an authentic existence is not possible in an 'immanent ethics,' the emphasis upon the need for man to accept his facticity in order to exist authentically is sound. This study is informed by a knowledge of original sources and the important secondary materials. . . . A valuable addition to the existing literature."

Choice 9:380 My '72 180w

"[Shmuëli] is quite adept at setting forth Kierkegaard's descriptive analysis of various levels of consciousness or life styles, but he does not present an argument to show that Kierkegaard's descriptions are either correct or adequate. . . . Perhaps the weakest aspect of the book is the fact that the two major works of Kierkegaard on the concept of consciousness, The Concept of Dread and The Sickness unto Death, are referred to only in passing. To be sure both receive a few pages, but the problems which Kierkegaard discusses in these works supplement and give philosophic depth to the phenomenological descriptions Kierkegaard offers in the doctrine of the stages. The omission of the more philosophic references leaves this volume without a philosophic point." R. L. Perkins

Library J 96:4016 D 1 '71 160w

SHNEIDMAN, J. LEE The rise of the Aragonese-Catalan empire, 1200-1350. 2v maps $20 N.Y. univ. press

946 Aragon—History. Catalonia—History
ISBN 0-8147-0384-4 LC 70-92525

"Chapters on the crown and nobility in the various remos of the crowns of Aragon are followed by sections on administrative history, the church, foreign policy in the various states, economic development, the Jews, fiscal policy, and the emergence of monarchical hegemony supported by the Catalan merchant class. Included are maps [and] genealogical tables. . . . Index. Bibliography." (Choice)

"Intended primarily as a study in political and constitutional development, these two volumes accomplish something more. . . . Each section generously provides the sort of background that is welcome to one not intimately acquainted with the field. The work concludes with a seventy-page bibliography divided topically: the Church, constitutional history, cultural and social history, economic history, foreign policy, the Jews, and political history. This compilation provides an excellent preliminary guide to the history of late medieval Aragon and Catalonia. . . . It is a competent and forceful study, but completely within the traditional mode. The Crown is the paramount hero of the piece. . . . This lack of balance is the most serious shortcoming of a substantial and long overdue addition to the bibliography of the field." L. H. Nelson

Am Hist R 77:126 F '72 800w

"Shneidman addresses a subject which has received no general study in English since the first volume of R. B. Merriman's Rise of the Spanish Empire in the Old World and in the New [BRD 1918]. He has undertaken the considerable project of updating the research on the topic and concentrating a vast amount of material on the growth of the Aragonese-Catalan empire which goes well beyond anything Merriman envisioned. By any standard it is an impressive piece of work. . . . The interpretations are trenchant and occasionally controversial, and evidence a strong Catalan bias. The chapter on the Jews is especially interesting. Indispensable for libraries concerned with medieval Mediterranean history." Choice 8:601 Je '71 180w

SHOGAN, ROBERT. A question of judgment: the Fortas case and the struggle for the Supreme court. 314p $10 Bobbs

320.973 U.S.—Politics and government—1961—U.S. Supreme Court. Fortas, Abe
LC 74-173224

This is an examination of Associate Justice Fortas' "failure to win confirmation as chief justice [and] . . . his resignation under fire. . . . [It] traces the justice's career all the way back to his days as an Agricultural Adjustment Administration lawyer in the New Deal. . . . [Shogan is] critical of Justice Fortas in what he calls 'a case of non-criminal, non-judicial behavior.' [He is also] critical of the tactics by which Attorney General John Mitchell gained Fortas's resignation in May, 1969, under fire from a Life exposé." (Book World)

"The Abe Fortas affairs of 1968-69, in both its phases, was a less than admirable performance all around—for a brilliant Supreme Court justice who as both advocate and judge had broken new ground in constitutional law, for his congressional inquisitors, and for his White House sponsor in one administration and White House pursuer in the next. . . . It was an epochal affair; it merits sober re-examination. Shogan, who covered the story for Newsweek, has written a sober but compelling account of Fortas's fall. . . . [The book is] disturbing, for [it] suggests that most of the discussion of the Fortas case at the time fell short of getting to its constitutional implications. . . . The fact is that an administration ambitious to reshape the highest court in the land found ways . . . to depose a justice and sought to depose another. Thus was a questionable precedent in extra-constitutional procedure set." E. M. Yoder
Book World p1 My 7 '72 600w

Choice 9:1206 N '72 170w

Reviewed by Walter Goodman
Commentary 54:70 Ag '72 1900w

"During the 1968 Presidential campaign and into 1969, the Supreme Court was the subject of much controversy. At the center of the controversy was Associate Justice Abe Fortas. Shogan . . . has written an excellent study of this case. It is obvious that the author is disturbed by the prevailing attitude among our leaders that allows them to manipulate the political process for their own aggrandizement. He does not sermonize, but he makes it clear that when this attitude touches the Court it can only result in a 'struggle' which will end in 'a pyrrhic victory and the Republic will suffer a terrible defeat.' Although Shogan was stymied by the refusal of Fortas and Earl Warren to be interviewed, he has produced a work that is the epitome of journalistic integrity. . . . It will be considered one of the outstanding works of 1972." J. J. Fox
Library J 97:1022 Mr 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by Barry Schweid

Nation 214:601 My 8 '72 550w

Reviewed by Nicholas von Hoffman

N Y Rev of Books 18:14 Je 29 '72 1500w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Cowan

N Y Times Bk R pl My 28 '72 1000w

New Yorker 48:104 Je 17 '72 320w

"Framing the story in historical context and exploring its ramifications, the author underscores the Court's political orientation. . . . In this book one sees in microcosm the Supreme Court for what it is and has been throughout our history. From the beginning, its membership has consisted largely of politicians. . . . If there remains any vestige of the myth that the Supreme Court justices are or can be 'above politics,' Mr. Shogan's book should serve to shatter it. . . . [Although] richly rewarding, [his study] leaves the greatest mystery largely unresolved—Abe Fortas himself." A. T. Mason
Va Q R 48:584 autumn '72 2250w

SHOHAM, SHLOMO. The mark of Cain; the stigma theory of crime and social deviation; foreword by Marvin E. Wolfgang. 282p $7.50 Oceana

301 Deviant behavior

SBN 379-00434-8 LC 77-97906

"This first two chapters deal with the role of stigma within the various mechanisms of normative control. . . . Chapter three deals with the predisposing factors raising the probability of individuals and groups being branded by stigma. Chapter four deals with the paradigm resulting from the relationship between value deviation, deviant behavior and social stigma. The fifth chapter describes the dynamic process of stigmatization. The sixth chapter is an empirical study of Israeli prostitutes from North African authoritarian families. . . . Chapters 7 and 8 analyse the effects of stigma, both formal and informal, on the future behaviour of the stigmatized. Chapter nine relates stigma to criminal and deviant subculture formation. The last chapter is a case study of Jean Genet." (Intro) Bibliography. Name index.

"The foreword to this work . . . praises the book as embellished theory, but discerning readers may find that the embellishments obscure rather than enhance the text. . . . The style creates the impression that the author, in his need to display wit, character, and erudition, may not have given quite enough care and attention to data and logical precision in his presentation of his ideas. . . . Sociologists working in the area of deviance can find some interesting and provocative ideas in this book. Moreover, the author properly tries to set the process of stigmatization into a larger theoretical context. To say that he succeeds in any clear-cut way, however, would err on this side of candor." E. M. Lemert
Am J Soc 77:357 S '71 600w

"Shoham shows in-depth familiarity with the sources in this area—novelists, philosophers, sociologists. He singles out R. A. Cloward and L. E. Ohlin, A. K. Cohen, E. Erickson, R. K. Merton, etc. . . . [The foreword offers] a clear, well documented writing style. . . . [There are] notes on each chapter. . . . Especially useful for college juniors and seniors." Choice 8:482 My '71 180w

"[This] book is recommended, with qualifications, to a rather limited audience. . . . I would not recommend [it] for use in any undergraduate course in deviance, nor would I recommend it as a major text or source for most graduate courses. While it is felt that Shoham has not written the definitive work in the area of theories of stigmatization and social deviation (in fact, what is presented in the present work does not appear to meet even the most liberal definition of a social theory), his ideas should stimulate others who share his interest in social stigma and its relationship to deviant social behavior." P. T. McFarlane

SHOHAM, SHLOMO—Continued

Contemp Social 1:171 Mr '72 1050w

SHOR, ELIZABETH NOBLE. Fossils and flies: the life of a compleat scientist Samuel Wendell Williston (1851-1918). 285p il $8.95 Univ. of Okla. press

B or 92 Williston, Samuel Wendell
ISBN 0-8061-0949-1 LC 77-145503

The author "traces Williston's life from early boyhood in Manhattan, Kansas, his contacts with Benjamin Mudge and later with O. C. Marsh at Yale, his return to Kansas as professor of geology, and finally his appointment as professor of paleontology at the University of Chicago. Shor has drawn . . . on family records and correspondence, newspaper accounts, and documents in the archives of the several institutions at which Williston worked or studied and on recollections and tributes written by his co-workers. [She] has included large portions of Williston's 'Recollections'—his own account of his first 40 years." (Science) Bibliography. Index.

"This, the only full length biography of Williston, touches upon the many aspects of his life and shows the difficulties the scientist faced in 19th-century America. What the book lacks is the detailed analysis the historian of science is concerned with: the evolution and structure of a scientist's ideas in the historical and intellectual context of his field. Professional historians will be grateful, however, for what Shor has contributed."

Choice 8:1468 Ja '72 180w

"Obviously a labor of love, this little book is of importance to historians of North American geology and paleontology, and it is of more than passing interest for social and other historians of the opening of the American West. [Williston was] famed as a paleontologist and entomologist. . . . This is a warm, human biography of a warm, human man. Recommended for all history of science (and especially geology and paleontology) collections, and for larger browsing collections." W. C. Allen
Library J 96:2527 Ag '71 160w

"Shortly after [Williston's] death in 1918, a group of his close friends and colleagues formed the Williston Memorial Committee, one objective of which was the publication of Williston's 'Recollections.' For a variety of reasons this was never realized by the committee, despite the efforts of many individuals over many years. Now, a half century later, those of us for whom the name Samuel Wendell Williston holds very special significance are grateful to Elizabeth Shor for accomplishing this." J. H. Ostrom

Science 174:937 N 26 '71 750w

SHORT, JAMES F., ed. Modern criminals. 192p il $5.95; pa $2.45 Aldine-Atherton 364 Crime and criminals—U.S.

LC 70-96130

The essays in this book originally appeared in Trans-action magazine. "Bibliographies." (Choice)

"Regular readers of Trans-action will know what to expect. . . . The articles are predominantly descriptive, analytical, or critical, and sometimes anecdotal or journalistic. . . . Those who see sociology either as a heavily mathematical or as an ethically neutral science will find this series an exasperating disappointment. Those who wish their students to cut their intellectual incisors on formidable research articles must search elsewhere; for the inclinations of the editors of Trans-action are toward writing that is lively, challenging, easily readable, and more oriented toward 'activist' than 'establishment' sociology. . . . These characteristics are virtues, since excellence need not be equated with obscurantism." P. B. Horton

Am Soc R 36:765 Ag '71 40w

"Short has put together an interesting publication dealing with criminology, violence, and disorders. The reading is easy and informative as well as interesting. Both professionals and laymen should find the book of value. It contains a number of sections listing further reading suggested by the editor. A unique book in that it raises a number of questions not normally discussed in areas such as civil disturbances."

Choice 8:1254 N '71 50w

SHRAKE, EDWIN. Strange peaches; a novel. 375p $7.95 Harpers mag. press

SBN 06-127773-8 LC 79-181662

"Still shy of 30, the hero of this . . . novel has been a reporter, an on-camera TV newsman and an actor whose best-known performances were as Tarzan and a cowpoke on a foolish series called Six Guns Across Texas. John Lee Wallace, fed up with Hollywood, returns home to Dallas, leaving a vapor trail of dope and alcohol. He and his best buddy Buster plan to make 'one good, true, fair thing'—a documentary film about the real Texas. The time is the late summer of 1963. . . . John Lee shoots his footage (during the period just prior to the Kennedy assassination. . . . After Nov. 22, the story shifts to Acapulco, where John Lee and his girl get mixed up in a gun-running, dope-smuggling scheme." (Time)

"Language and action on almost every page can be considered as grossly revolting and extremely vulgar. The range of disgust is far-reaching. The simplest bodily functions are put on display as well as the most involved descriptions of the sexual acts. Perhaps the author is making a sordid attempt at satire. He is using his creative powers to shock his readers into the realization that all is not so beautiful and pure in our modern society. . . . John Lee and his coterie are really dope fiends. . . . One critic says of this novel, 'Shrake's Texas is a land where confusion must pass for goodness, intoxication for clarity, and violence for potency. It's no place to go, except through the pages of this book.' Unless you are desperate for something to read, this reviewer wouldn't even recommend that." Sister J. M. Anderson

Best Sell 32:108 Je 1 '72 430w

Reviewed by E. H. Jones

Library J 97:1741 My 1 '72 100w

"John Lee doesn't know Texas . . . and in finding it he finds himself. People help him along the way: Dorothy, a girl who wants to marry him but is pregnant . . . Buster, John Lee's best friend and film-making partner, who is busted for possession; John's parents, sweet but fanatically religious and racist . . . a boyish antagonist who runs guns into Mexico and hauls dope out; and his ex-wife and child. John Lee has the aid of booze, grass and various diet pills to help him along in his enlightenment. . . . I'm not absolutely sure about the transformation of John Lee into an outlaw at the end. The symmetry is more fearful than credible. . . . I am sure that this big novel, two parts anger to one part humor, is fast and surefire. And Shrake's narrative technique has been amply dosed with Dexedrine. There's not an ounce of fat on it." John Deck
N Y Times Bk R p7 Je 18 '72 400w

"Author Shrake captures superbly the feeling of combustible chaos that climaxed in the Kennedy assassination. . . . Cheap crooks, displaced cowboys, and kids who stay well stoned and let it all float right on by, even Jack Ruby—Shrake molds them all into his amphetamine apocalypse. He also manages shrewdly to show how fitting it was that the dream of the last decade should have ended in Dallas. . . . [The last part of the story] is crazily uncoordinated with the Texas part of the book. The nightmare dwindles down to a good-old boy's yarn that got out of hand, and a novel that first threatens to explode fizzles out like a fire-cracker tossed into a puddle." Jay Cocks
Time 100:67 Ag 14 '72 200w

SHULEVITZ, URI. Oh what a noise! unp il $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

811 Nonsense verses
LC 72-146629

The illustrations in this book portray creatures a small boy imagines prior to his bedtime. "Preschool to grade one." (Library J)

"Shulevitz depicts the trying hour in this adaptation of an 1868 poem. The verse is rhythmic but nothing extraordinary; the drawings, somewhat akin to those of Maurice Sendak, range from cute to grotesque. And why does the author offer advertisements for himself on the billboards in his sketches?" M. J. Bandler

Book World p3 (children's issue) N 7 '71 80w

"The descriptions of the rather commonplace noises and noise-making agents are not particularly original or arresting, while the visual accompaniment is more one of mindlessness than mirth: full-color tempera double-page spreads grate on readers' nerves with a cacophony of myriad neon colors and loutish figures bumping loudly together." Melinda Schroeder
Library J 97:277 Ja 15 '72 150w

"Garish greens and hot pinks fairly shriek from the pages. Downright ugly beasts and giants bray or snore. . . It is far from Shulevitz's happiest effort." S. G. Lanes
N Y Times Bk R p8 S 8 '71 70w

SHULMAN, ALIX KATES. Memoirs of an ex-prom queen; a novel. 274p $6.95 Knopf
ISBN 0-394-47156-3 LC 74-171159

The novel follows Sasha Davis "through the rites of her tribe (middle-class, white) as she gets the message: Be beautiful. Marry young. Produce sparkling, photogenic children. . . [It covers her from little girl through her school years, early marriage, divorce, remarriage and finally] housebound, childbound woman of thirty, hooked on face creams." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by H. T. Anderson
Best Sell 32:59 My 1 '72 300w

Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
Book World p13 My 14 '72 400w
Christian Science Monitor pB7 My 4 '72 270w

"What is unique about Memoirs is its flexible, fast prose and its wry honesty. Probably men are not going to be interested in the adventures of beautiful, bright Sasha, but a good many women, beautiful or not, bright or not, and feminist or not, will find themselves immersed in her small flights and unfancy days. Shulman has written a very readable first novel, urbane, intelligent, revealing. Highly recommended." Dorothy Nyren

Library J 97:700 F 15 '72 100w
New Repub 166:29 My 13 '72 120w

"These 'Memoirs' scale no lyrical or imaginative peaks, but they rate a bravo as ■ consciousness-raising attempt. Yet as a fictional sequel to Kate Millet's attack on literary male chauvinism, it doesn't quite succeed. The female victim is too much of a pushover. For this is a painful record of one woman's search for self, a search that somehow can be defined only by male recognition of her physical charms. . . . Therein, of course, lies the flaw in this frequently amusing, occasionally touching and generally exasperating novel. . . . When she boasts, at 24 of having surpassed her own record of a lover for every year of life, poignancy evaporates. Yes, sisters, the struggle has been hard and unequal. But must you give up so easily?" Marilyn Bender
N Y Times Bk R p34 Ap 23 '72 750w
New Yorker 48:130 Je 10 '72 100w

"This is a sad and witty story, expertly conceived and executed, into which is read the entire roster of feminist complaint. . . . More than just another novel about woman's desperate lot, 'Memoirs' suggests a pattern imposed by the way we live and learn, by the values pubescent girls learn to cherish: 'Boys are taught it is weak to need a woman, as girls are taught it is their strength to win a man.' A light determinism here: enough to make the story different, but not enough to make it shrill. I think it is very good and, when you consider how many bad books are written on the subject, probably important." P. S. P.

Newsweek 79:115 My 1 '72 550w

Reviewed by Lucy Rosenthal
Sat R 55:76 My 20 '72 750w

SHULMAN, ALIX KATES, ed. Red Emma speaks. See Goldman, E.

SHUMAKER, WAYNE. The occult sciences in the renaissance; a study in intellectual patterns. 284p il $15 Univ. of Calif. press

133 Occult sciences
ISBN 0-520-02021-9 LC 70-153552

"This study offers a summary and analysis of five esoteric 'scientific' systems: astrology, natural or white magic witchcraft, alchemy, and the meditative philosophy associated with Hermes Trismegistus. . . . Mr. Shumaker's primary aim . . . is to enlarge the modern comprehension of these systems and to aid readers in the interpretation of the many allusions to them in the literature of the Renaissance. . . . The author is also concerned to reveal mental patterns in Renaissance occult thought, which is found to include a rich use of analogy and the reading of human sensitivity, even of human consciousness, into the external world." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Professor Shumaker's book is a very valuable essay in intellectual history. It is certainly not meant for those who like to dip into books on astrology or read their stars in the afternoon papers. It makes pretty heavy reading since it depends so heavily on paraphrases of obscure renaissance treatises. It is unfortunate that Professor Shumaker did not choose to devote more space to the actual practice of these theories. He attacks the collective obsession with witchcraft, for example, without examining the activities of the witches who really did set up shop. But he sums up admirably some of the myths—or, to be more tolerant, prescientific hypotheses—that are still at the root of the occult arts."

Economist 244:54 Ag 26 '72 670w

"This profusely illustrated and ample volume traces the onset and pathogenesis (Shumaker is an 'unbeliever') of the occult vogue during the Renaissance in Europe and England. . . . Each [of the occult sciences] is placed into its historical and intellectual context, and the causes and breadth of its influence are evaluated. Of particular value are the lengthy quotes from primary sources (mostly Latin) which are otherwise virtually inaccessible to many scholars. Although the wealth of information assembled is impressive, it is chiefly in its original approach to the subject that this study makes a unique contribution to the humanities and intellectual history fields." Jo-Ann Suleiman

Library J 97:1449 Ap 15 '72 200w

SHUTTLESWORTH, DOROTHY E. The story of rodents; il. by Lydia Rosier. 95p $4.50; lib bdg $5.25 Doubleday

599 Rodents—Juvenile literature
LC 71-103922

In this introduction to the world of rodents, the author writes of mice, rats, squirrels, woodchucks, prairie dogs, pocket gophers, muskrats, lemmings, beavers, porcupines, and chinchillas, as well as of those rodents commonly adopted as pets—hamsters, gerbils, guinea pigs, and pocket mice. Index. "Grades three to six." (Library J)

"The text . . . is ample and covers a wide range of genera and species. While the author deals with evolutionary factors and gives an objective analysis of some of the fables associated with rodents, she devotes considerably more space to their relationship with man." Barry Inker

Christian Science Monitor pB4 N 11 '71 70w

"[This] clear, well-written survey . . . includes rodents not found in the United States." A. C. Haman

Library J 97:2486 Jl '72 50w

SHVIDKOVSKY, O. A., ed. Building in the USSR, 1917-1932. 144p il $15 Praeger

720.947 Architecture, Russian—History. Architects
LC 70-161221

"This collection of . . . essays by Russian writers concentrates on 12 individual architects' contributions and the history of group efforts to achieve a proletarian architecture. It is a revised version of the material which was originally published in the Feb. 1970 issue of Architectural design with two essays translated from Arkhitektura SSSR." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Many illustrations make clear the application of identical architectural principles and forms to those seen in contemporary Europe, particularly the Bauhaus group. Parallels also exist in emphasis on integration of the arts, housing and city planning, and the role of technology. The lesser known Russian achievement is well presented in straightforward manner. . . . No similar account exists in one book."

Choice 8:1446 Ja '72 120w

SHVIDKOVSKY, O. A.—Continued

"This book, produced by the Russian architectural establishment, is in many ways a frustrating but at the same time stimulating work. To begin with, its title is deceptive, for it concentrates on the more experimental avant garde architecture. . . . All of the essays are packed with information which until recently has been very little known outside the U.S.S.R. Regrettably (perhaps because of the translation) the text does not read well, nor do the individual authors succeed in conveying any genuine feeling for the ideas and individuals they discuss. There are 285 illustrations none of them well printed. It is as if they had all been copied . . . from poorly printed magazines and books of the 1920's and early 30's. . . . Notwithstanding these defects, a highly important and useful book." David Gebhard
Library J 96:3315 O 15 '71 190w

SIBLEY, CELESTINE. The Sweet Apple gardening book; il. by John Kollock. 214p $5.95 Doubleday
635 Gardening
LC 78-144296

The author writes about the pleasures and frustrations of gardening and of the rewards "that lie, not so much in a glorious harvest of flowers, fruits and vegetables, but merely in the doing of the thing itself." (Publisher's note)

"Sweet Apple is a funny log cabin in a rural settlement 30 miles north of Atlanta, Georgia. And Celestine Sibley is a funny woman who likes to garden there. Planting with the theory that the success of gardening is not always in the harvest, Mrs. Sibley describes her 'grasshoppery' efforts to get a garden growing." D. R. C.
Christian Science Monitor p4 My 30 '72 190w

"It is always refreshing to come upon a writer in this field who can write—and that Sibley certainly can do. Here is a warm readable account of one woman's experiences and observations about matters horticultural, supplemented by delightful pen-and-ink sketches. It's definitely not a how-to-book, but just something to sit down with to read and enjoy. But in doing that the experienced gardener, as well as the tyro, is bound to gain from seeing his hobby and interests through the eyes of another—and such perspicacious eyes at that." E. C. Hall
Library J 97:1335 Ap 1 '72 80w

SICAT, GERARDO P., Jr. auth. The Philippines: industrialization and trade policies. See Power, J. H.

SIDORSKY, DAVID, ed. The liberal tradition in European thought; ed. with introd. essays by David Sidorsky. 362p $6.95 Putnam 320.5 Liberalism. Political science—History
LC 69-18195

"This anthology focuses on the development of the liberal tradition in terms of four basic issues: the principles of toleration and intellectual freedom developed by Spinoza, Kant, Humboldt, and Hobhouse; the principle of constitutionalism developed as the core of the democratic tradition by Locke, Montesquieu, Rousseau, the French Declaration of the Rights of Man, and Mill and brought into twentieth-century thought with Schumpeter; liberal economic doctrine and its connection with the idea of progress traced from the laissez-faire capitalism of Adam Smith to Keynes and the twentieth-century idea of a social welfare state. The liberal attitude toward war, peace, colonialism and world order is also traced from Kant and Mazzini to the United Nations." (Publisher's note) Annotated bibliography.

"[This] book has a useful introduction and notes by its editor. . . . All the defining characteristics of liberalism catalogued by David Sidorsky are ostensibly aimed at enlarging human freedom. The trouble is that nowadays it doesn't work out that way, and on the very first page of his introduction Mr. Sidorsky shows why. 'The idea of freedom,' he says, 'is inevitably ambiguous.' There lies the key to the paradox. Freedom, according to left-wingers of every complexion, is a 'difficult' concept. . . . Rather than modify their policies in the direction of freedom, they re-interpret the concept of freedom to suit their policies. The process of self-deceiving re-interpretation emerges all too clearly from the more recent extracts in [this] volume." Anthony Lejeune

Nat R 23:88 Ja 26 '71 400w

"Historians are likely to quarrel with the plan of organization, which is for the most part not chronological but topical. Those who like this plan might quarrel with some of the topics; for example, one of Professor Sidorsky's four units, called 'Progress, Economic Liberalism, and Social Democracy,' is a catch-all for everything from Adam Smith to Eduard Bernstein (yet surprisingly neglectful of the Manchester School which many would assume to be the heart of classical liberalism.) . . . Until something better comes along [this book] will prove most interesting to, I would think, college or advanced high school level courses in political thought. Though the page margins are skimpy the type is very readable." R. N. Stromberg

Social Studies 63:84 F '72 200w

SIFNEOS, PETER E. Short-term psychotherapy and emotional crisis. 299p $10 Harvard Univ. press

616.8 Psychotherapy. Fear. Worry
ISBN 0-674-80720-0 LC 78-172323

"In this book Sifneos describes a form of anxiety-provoking brief psychotherapy with limited problem-solving goals. Utilizing . . . recorded psychiatric clinic case histories, the author explains his criteria for the selection of patients and his methodology, and discusses the results using follow-up material. The therapist concentrates on his patient's major emotional problem, confronting and clarifying it with anxiety-seeking questions, while aiding the patient to deal successfully with current and, hopefully, with future conflicts." (Library J)

"[This is] a useful amplification of certain techniques of psychotherapy (brief or otherwise). Generous use of case material helps Sifneos demonstrate how defining to the patient the conflict underlying his problem (or, in the case of anxiety-suppression, supporting the client) works. . . . Sifneos takes the reader through a number of well written and explained cases. . . . Should be included in college collections on psychotherapy, and would be useful to beginning psychotherapy, counseling, or social work students as well as those who may have used, but not labeled, the same techniques."

Choice 9:1046 O '72 180w

"Notwithstanding its palimpsest quality, this book is highly recommended to all representatives of the psychotherapeutic constituency." S. L. Pomer

Library J 97:2619 Ag '72 120w

SILBER, IRWIN, ed. Songs America voted by; with the words and music that won and lost elections and influenced the democratic process; comp. and ed. with historical notes by Irwin Silber. 320p $12.95 Stackpole bks.

784.6 Songs. American. Presidents—U.S.—Election
ISBN 0-8117-1572-8 LC 79-162451

This is an "anthology of presidential campaign songs from 1788 to 1968. Silber traces the origin of campaign music, discusses its flourishing from 1840 to 1916, and then gives reasons for its subsequent decline." (Library J) Bibliography of election campaign songsters, pamphlets, and songbooks. Index of composers, lyricists and songwriters. Index of song titles. Historical index. Finding list of melodies.

"This is a delightfully nostalgic [anthology. Silber] . . . notes that the music, designed to influence the course of events, was neither great nor lasting. If viewed and interpreted within its contemporary social and political context, such as his brief running narrative provides, campaign music points up prejudices, interests, and social values of certain groups and movements that seek to win popular support. Silber concludes that campaign music is a new dimension for seeing ourselves as we were." Shirley Heppell

Library J 96:3762 N 15 '71 150w

"The compiler of this collection of campaign songs . . . thinks that the 'cool' media have killed the songs off. Now if they exist at all, there is little spirit to them; they are largely adaptations of current tin pan alley material. The collection tends to enforce Silber's opinions. . . . To go back from Harding is to find, aside from pages of impressively labored rhymes, a greater extravagance of insult and praise than the later campaigns produced (musically). . . . This collection suggests that we have been going downhill lyrically for nearly 200 years."

New Repub 165:32 D 4 '71 600w

SILÉN, JUAN ANGEL. We the Puerto Rican people; a story of oppression and resistance; tr. by Cedric Belfrage. 134p il $5 Monthly review

917.295 Puerto Rico. National characteristics, Puerto Rican
LC 70-158926

The author "argues that Puerto Ricans have been misrepresented as docile by the island's literature and histories. A colonialism begun by Spain was extended by the U.S. in the form of total economic penetration. Whereas Silén denounces Muñoz Rivera as a pseudo-revolutionary and Muñoz Marín as a capitalist reformer, he idolizes the independence leader Pedro Albizu Campos. Prepared to substitute violence for the lack of popular support for his cause, Silén contends that a wave of bombings at U.S. stores and hotels 'threatens the whole colonial power structure.'" (Library J)

"[This] is a long interpretative essay written in impatience with little regard for those nuances and reservations which may help stimulate the reader of popular history to search for a mature understanding of historical processes. . . . What has made Silén's work a best-seller in Puerto Rico and among young Spanish-speaking Puerto Ricans in New York is his nervous, incisive prose jabbing again and again at accepted presuppositions, and his emphatic concern for the unemployed and the exploited. The translation is bound to succeed among that ever-increasing clan of searchers for a cause, who will find here, in simple and moving terms, another instance of American imperialism at work. Of course, it will be the wrong cause picked up for the wrong reasons." Fernando Picó

America 126:125 F 5 '72 460w

"The book's main title . . . is a misnomer in its pretension to speak in behalf of an entire people, and it begins with a patently untrue statement of purpose: 'Since its chief purpose is to educate, it is not a propaganda pamphlet.' Why not admit at the start the true purpose, that it is a propaganda pamphlet, then proceed to do the job well? . . . The author attempts a revolutionary Marxist revisionist history of Puerto Rico. . . . [The view] advanced is the . . . violent confrontation between people and oppressor.' References to historical incidents of violent resistance are given, and toward the end of the book, the society is portrayed as on the verge of revolutionary upheavals." L. H. Rogler

Commonweal 96:485 S 8 '72 370w

"[Silén] who was for some years active in the Puerto Rican independence movement, has written a brief, emotional political document to further that movement. . . . The book is of value only for its portrayal of a particular ideological stance within Puerto Rican politics." C. T. Goodsell

Library J 96:4018 D 1 '71 140w

SILK, LEONARD. Nixonomics; how the dismal science of free enterprise became the black art of controls. 212p $6.95 Praeger

338.973 U.S.—Economic policy
LC 72-185654

The author "explores Nixon's oscillating conservatism. He finds that the urgency of dealing with inflation, unemployment, the dollar crisis, and, not least important, re-election caused Nixon to assume an interventionist role and appropriate the policies of his Democratic opponents. . . . The author relates Nixon's changing doctrines to deeper currents within American society, as well as to the field of economics itself." (Publisher's note) Index.

"A series of short, pungent essays, based upon previous work and not always well integrated, on 'Nixonomics,' the art of economics, and American economic and social priorities. Nevertheless, the magical transfiguration of Mr. Nixon from Friedmanite to Keynesian to Galbraithian forms the central motif. The essays are witty and easy to read, but . . . they sometimes lapse into an overly terse, staccato form which avoids qualification and elaboration just when the reader requires it.

However, these are minor, and probably ungenerous, reservations about a book which should be read by all those who wish to understand the economic forces which converge upon American policymakers and the ways in which they were dealt with or dodged." Van Doorn Ooms

Book World p13 My 21 '72 850w

"A lively written account of the Nixon Administration's economic policies. Silk describes the flirtation with monetarism, the disillusionment that set in with the failure of inflation (but not output) to respond to the sharp reduction in monetary growth in 1969, and the desperate lurch toward incomes policy with the New Economics of August 1971. [He] argues that Nixon's willingness to abandon principles represents the essence of politics, the willingness to respond to the moods of the electorate. Wage-price restraints of some form are likely to be with us for years to come, and the story how they arose in the U.S., by an administration ideologically committed to free market and responsive to the business community, makes fascinating reading."

Choice 9:692 J1/Ag '72 180w

"Silk is a business economist who was formerly with Business Week and is now . . . [with] the New York Times. His book is critical of the Nixon Administration's economic policies, but not in such a satirical or amusing manner as might be suggested by the title. Like everyone else, Silk is not at all certain of what the eventual fate of the economy will be under Nixon. What the author does object to is the Administration's lack of credibility and use of economic propaganda. . . . Recommended, but not essential for small libraries." J. B. Woy

Library J 97:1806 My 15 '72 110w

Reviewed by H. G. Johnson

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ag 27 '72 650w

SILKE, JOHN J. Kinsale; the Spanish intervention in Ireland at the end of the Elizabethan wars. 208p pl maps $10 Fordham univ. press.

941.55 Ireland—History. Kinsale, Ireland—Siege. Great Britain—Foreign relations—Spain. Spain—Foreign relations—Great Britain
ISBN 0-8232-0865-6 LC 77-96148

This is an account of the "attempt to aid Irish rebels against their English, Protestant overlords through armed intervention in 1601-2 at Kinsale in southern Ireland. . . . [The author examines] the background, participants, and events of the 'invasion' itself . . . [as well as] the structure of government and the nature of policy-making at the Spanish court of Philip III. In addition, there is a . . . summary of Spanish foreign policy in the 16th century, of England's attempts to pacify her rebellious Catholic colony, and of the . . . diplomatic negotiations to bring about peace among the major European powers at the end of this century." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"Since Professor Silke writes from an avowed Spanish vantage point, his fresh perspective is commendable and most welcome. . . . Through extensive use of Spanish archival sources [he] has produced an exceedingly accurate account of the Spanish debacle at Kinsale. The extensive annotation and the bibliography testify to the thoroughness of the research. The maps, the appendixes, and the definitive index enhance the value of the book. Very likely Kinsale will, as Professor D. B. Quinn predicts in the foreword, 'take its place as a standard treatment of the subject.'" V. F. Snow

Am Hist R 76:1554 D '71 490w

"The author, an expert on Irish history, has written a skillful and readable narrative of this adventure. . . . This work should prove useful to scholars."

Choice 8:726 J1 '71 170w

SILKIN, JON. Amana grass. 78p $4.95; pa $2.45 Wesleyan univ. press

821
ISBN 0-8195-2059-4; 0-8195-1059-9 (pa)
LC 71-153105

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Michael Schmidt

Poetry 120:170 Je '72 850w

Va Q R 48:xxiii winter '72 120w

Reviewed by L. L. Martz

Yale R 61:418 Mr '72 1000w

SILLEN, SAMUEL, jr. auth. Racism and psychiatry. See Thomas, A.

SILLITOE, ALAN. Travels in Nihilon. 254p $6.95 Scribner

SBN 684-13004-1 LC 72-1187

This novel "chronicles the adventures of five visitors to the land of Nihilon, a land named after its official philosophy: nihilism. The five—a poet, a specialist in politics, a geologist, a diplomat, and a woman—are visiting Nihilon to write a guide-book and investigate a land where self-expression has been carried to its logical extreme. . . . The only law that counts in the country is the law of survival. Extortion is the way of life; so is instant sex. Drunken driving is encouraged, as are war and revolution. . . . The five visitors adjust well. Jacqueline, the woman, and Adam, the poet, join the Nihilonian space effort. . . . The others get involved in the Nihilonian revolution." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 230:134 O '72 300w

"Alan Sillitoe (is) best known as the author of 'The Loneliness of the Long Distance Runner' [BRD 1960]. . . . Besides the basic attack on government structures, he also takes well-aimed potshots at our voting system, scholars, poets, and military personnel, among others. The work is full of satiric irony, and the liberators are almost metamorphosed into oppressors at the end of the novel. . . . The situations and details are reminiscent of Kurt Vonnegut, Jr. at his best. Unfortunately, as in Vonnegut, characters are rather two-dimensional. Only the ending seems too contrived in what is, after all, a highly stylized work. . . . [which] powerfully displays the folly of twentieth-century humanity." R. D. Evans
Best Sell 32:281 S 15 '72 600w

Reviewed by M. K. Smith
Library J 97:3618 N 1 '72 130w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wagner
Nat R 24:1254 N 10 '72 280w

"The trouble is that tyrannical nihilism seems to offer its author more licence for the unexpected than he can profitably handle. In Nihilon absolutely anything goes. Therefore, though there is a good deal of slaughter, there is never any danger. . . . A good deal of it is frankly funny, and Sillitoe has a fine swagger about wedding fantasy to the matter-of-fact. But Nihilon and its characters are invented rather than imagined; human character and the human condition weigh too little against a clever shock, and so the novel is both less funny and less a political/philosophical comment than it aspires to be." Janet Burroway

New Statesman 82:370 S 17 '71 350w
Reviewed by Sara Blackburn
N Y Times Bk R p2 O 15 '72 300w

"[The book] draws fairly freely on several sources of amiable political fantasy: the gentler moments of Swift, the ironies of Shaw . . . and surrealist satires of the 1930s like Rex Warner's The Wild Goose Chase [BRD 1938]. But Mr Sillitoe's variety and pace, his skilful plotting towards a surprising climax, and the general comprehensiveness of his satirical imagination make him an honourable competitor with these forebears. . . . The message is basically one of light and breezy pessimism about most human political systems, about the corruption of technology by power politics, about individual human greed and insensitivity. [The book] is a very pleasing reminder of Mr Sillitoe's range, from poignant social realism in his early work through earnest social documentation to this kind of light satirical exuberance."

TLS p105 S 17 '71 550w

SILVER, JOAN. Limbo [by] Joan Silver and Linda Gottlieb. 181p $6.95 Viking
SBN 670-42914-7 LC 74-178176

This novel concerns three women. They "are the wives of American P.O.W.'s and men missing in action, suspended in a fog of uncertainty, insensitive officialese and political absurdity. . . . Sandy, a wife of only two weeks before her husband was shot down, enjoys playing Galatea to the Pygmalion of an instructor in ed psych, with whom her life becomes 'inextricably intertwined.' Mary Kaye tries to be a regular guy, while sustaining a family of four. Sharon shuts her eyes to the presumed death of her husband and heads for a collision with reality." (N Y Times Bk R)

"The characterization and development of these three figures is minimal. The writing is worthy of McCall's, the magazine in which this novel appeared. The best part of the book is the material drawn from directives to relatives of prisoners of war. The secrecy involved in correspondence with the prisoners, the showing of war films in which missing prisoners possibly can be identified, the attempts to appeal to the Hanoi delegation in Paris is for help, the methods and activities of peace groups—all are revealing sections. . . . [But] the book seems primed for the less discriminating book clubs who cater to women wanting something to read while under the hair-dryer." Eileen Kennedy

Best Sell 32:5 Ap 1 '72 230w

"[This novel] is too commercial to take very seriously. . . . Linda Gottlieb and Joan Silver have thoroughly researched the problem and packed their book with documents to prove it. The cast of pretty and/or brave wives are racked with appropriate emotions. . . . The authors achieve their effects knowingly enough . . . but there is no real reason why Limbo should have been written as a novel. It is poised uneasily between the informative documentary survey which it might so easily have been, and the heartrending film which it is even now being turned into." Bernard Bergonzi

Commonweal 97:84 O 27 '72 360w

"The reader will be moved by the problems of loneliness, raising children in a fatherless family, and, above all, the difficulty of maintaining the expected façade of the dutiful, grieving wife while months and years pass and the expectations of recovering past relationships grow dimmer. . . . There is poignant irony in the receipt by 'next-of-kin' of a New Year message from the President of the United States at a time when the belligerent nations bargain with the fates of POW husbands, fathers, and sons. Unfortunately, the writers lack the skill in characterization and dialogue to realize the theme's potential." Janet Freedman

Library J 97:1348 Ap 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by Martin Levin
N Y Times Bk R p42 Mr 12 '72 100w

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. Before the sphinx; early Egypt. 176p il $4.95 Nelson

913.32 Egypt—Civilization. Egypt—Antiquities
ISBN 0-8407-6140-6 LC 75-145918

Silverberg surveys "the archeological sleuthing involved in the reconstruction of the history of Ancient Egypt, particularly the period dating to the Third Dynasty which preceded the great pyramid-building era. Included are . . . glimpses into the ancient civilization—medicine, language, social customs such as cosmetology, religion, and engineering . . . [and] an analysis of the myths perpetrated by early historians such as Herodotus and Manetho. . . . Attention is also given to the twentieth-century work of Petrie, Emery, and Saad." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"Much detail is present. The reader with a mature interest in Egyptology will be rewarded by the sophisticated blend of fact with archeological methodology involved in researching the vast treasure house of antiquity. . . . Grade eight and up." Barbara Rodas Best Sell 31:523 F 15 '72 130w [YA]

"[This] account deals thoroughly with the questions of why a complex civilization arose in Egypt and not in other places; how Egyptian civilization grew out of the primitive culture that preceded it; and, at what stage did government evolve. An excellent bibliography includes both old and recent materials; those items of special interest to younger readers are starred." M. A. Kelly
Library J 97:787 F 15 '72 230w [YA]

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. The longest voyage; circumnavigators in the age of discovery. 536p il $10 Bobbs

910.4 Voyages around the world. Explorers
LC 69-13089

This book "is about the early (1519-1617) circumnavigations of the world. The voyages of Magellan and Drake are described . . . as are the lesser known around-the-world cruises of Thomas Cavendish, Oliver van Noort, Joris van Spilbergen, and Willem Schouten and Jacob Le Maire. . . . [Silverberg also includes] information about pre-Magellan voyages, the European colonization of the Far East, the search for Terra Australis, and the mysterious Patagonian 'giants.' (Library J) Bibliography.

"Few travel accounts better reflect the pathos and hardships suffered by the early explorers than those of the circumnavigators. The longest voyage captures this spirit. Silverberg draws his information from the standard primary and secondary published sources; there are, however, some strange omissions. This work is intended for those who have little or no background in the history of exploration."

Choice 9:862 S '72 100w

"[The author] provides the reader with a readable, accurate, and unbiased account of these epic journeys. . . . Recommended." J. F. Husband

Library J 97:1436 Ap 15 '72 160w

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. The realm of Prester John. 344p il $8.95 Doubleday

915 John, Prester. East. Ethiopia
LC 78-171271

"Who was Prester John? Did he, in fact, exist? What was his influence on Western history? This story begins in 1165 with the circulation of a letter from a monarch called Prester John, king and high priest of India, to Manuel Comnenus, the Emperor of Byzantium, and it ends with the revelation of a hoax. In between is the tale of a . . . quest for a kingdom that stretched from Asia to Africa, where Christianity had been practiced for centuries, where crime and sickness were unknown, and where a wise, beneficent ruler had brought limitless wealth to his subjects. The search for this . . . place seized the imagination of Western man . . . [included are] accounts of the explorations of Marco Polo, Piano de Carpine, Prince Henry the Navigator, Vasco da Gama, and finally . . . James Bruce." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This book is . . . well-researched. Perhaps the author could have added to his sources the detailed instructions St. Ignatius Loyola gave to the first Jesuits setting out for Ethiopia. Learned in Prester John lore, Ignatius thought he could help his men forestall difficulties. It would be something like the President briefing Mars astronauts out of his knowledge of H. G. Wells." Fernando Picó

America 126:269 Mr 11 '72 800w

"Silverberg's investigation of the legend of Prester John, compiled mostly from secondary sources, analyzes several stories and myths which possibly could have contributed to the formation of this fantastic tale about a mysterious Christian emperor ruling somewhere in Asia. . . . The book is packed full of . . . interesting historical events [but] . . . professional historians would probably judge [it] rather harshly due to the noticeable absence of footnoting and the less than adequate bibliography."

Choice 9:568 Je '72 150w

"[The author] examines the sources and development of [the Prester John] legend. The book is authoritative but not documented, and medievalists will find little that is new. It is well written, however, and is recommended for general readers and students from high school through college." R. E. Stevens

Library J 96:3609 N 1 '71 150w

Reviewed by Dale Thompson

Library J 97:1631 Ap 15 '72 130w [YA]

SILVERBERG, ROBERT. The world within the ocean wave; il. by Bob Hines. 114p $6.95 Weybright & Talley

574.92 Plankton. Marine ecology
LC 71-186561

This book describes the "interrelationships found among the living pastures of plankton. How these nutrient seas live, reproduce, and die; how man is dependent upon these minute creatures' daily and seasonal rhythms; why and how pollution, particularly . . . oil spills, poses such a devastating threat." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The book would make an attractive gift for a great variety of readers, even young ones. If it is only information that you want, however, the contents of these volumes can be found in other places, and in cheaper paperbacks." Francis MacEntee

Best Sell 32:395 N 15 '72 60w

"Well illustrated with pencil drawings supporting clear, readable texts, this title will be useful supplementary material for high school libraries."

Library J 97:3476 O 15 '72 20w [YA]

SILVERMAN, AL. The best of sport 1946-1971. 615p $12.50 Viking

796 Sports

ISBN 0-670-15907-7 LC 74-162659

The editor maintains that "sportswriting has matured since 1946. . . . [He presents here selections by such] sportwriters from the past quarter century [as] . . . Grantland Rice, Jack Sher, John Lardner, Roger Kahn, [and] Al Hirshberg." (Library J)

"[This book is] dominated by . . . sentimentality and hero worship with occasional counterbalancing cynicism. The first article is an uninteresting comparison of one baseball hero with another. The last one is an essay on a presumably superb physical giant born so exclusively to the role of heavyweight champion that even in defeat he still deserves the title. . . . Ogden Nash contributes a series of alphabetical verses in praise of baseball players which is less scintillating than his 'candy is dandy but liquor is quicker.' Jimmy Breslin talks with tongue in cheek of the basketball scandals. . . . Lardner does a more artistic piece on the humorous and larcenous aspects of the Olympic Games. . . . The paramount appeal is to human interest. The style is generally breezy. The book will appeal to sports buffs and English classes looking for unusual approaches to writing."

Choice 9:536 Je '72 200w

"With a few exceptions the quality of writing is good. . . . Nostalgia has always been a large part of sports, so this work should have strong appeal. Where else could you relive the days of L.G. (Long Gone) Dupre or Angelo Bertelli, the Springfield Rifle?" Jerry Cao

Library J 97:514 F 1 '72 90w

"Silverman, editor of Sport magazine, displays his usual acuity in his selections for [this volume]. The writing is not consistently good, actually it is sometimes overly dramatic and almost parodic, but fully two-thirds of the space is devoted to the last 10 years and clearly shows the evolution of sportswriting that bodes well for the future."

N Y Times Bk R p46 D 5 '71 40w

SILVERMAN, ANNA. The case against having children, by Anna and Arnold Silverman. 212p $5.95 McKay

301.42 Mothers. Parent and child. Family
LC 74-159821

The authors question the maternal instinct, argue against large families and question the motivations of many who want to have children. Index.

"As the title suggests, the Silvermans set out to present one side of a case. Unfortunately, the evidence and logic are also one-sided, with no serious attempt to suggest other possible viewpoints or interpretations of the material. In fact, empirical data are consistently omitted, while quotations are carefully selected without regard to the purpose or quality of the source. This book has no real utility to students of the family, although it might be employed in psychology to illustrate how a predetermined position precludes objectivity in writing."

Choice 9:291 Ap '72 130w

"This short book . . . may put the reader who has children on the defensive, arousing feelings of anger or guilt at having his or her motives so relentlessly attacked. The book is a strident polemic. While the ecological argument against overpopulation has much logic the other arguments marshalled here are highly debatable. The allegation that most people have children for the wrong reasons . . . is certainly open to question. On the other hand, the Silvermans are performing a service by pointing up the fact that motherhood need not be the be-all and end-all of woman's existence. . . . [They] do not concede as readily that women who honestly prefer to be full-time mothers, for whatever reasons should be allowed this option as well. . . . Unfortunately [the book is] without a shred of humor." S. M. Batzdorff

Library J 96:2756 S 15 '71 190w

SILVERMAN, ARNOLD, jt. auth. The case against having children. See Silverman, Anna

SILVERMAN, BERTRAM, ed. Man and socialism in Cuba; the great debate; ed. and with an introd. by Bertram Silverman. 382p $12.50 Athenum pubs.

335 Communism—Cuba. Cuba—Economic policy. Socialism—Cuba
LC 71-139327

This volume contains "articles in the early 1960's discussion among the Cuban political and economic leadership as well as . . . foreign Marxists (Bettelheim and Mandel). Here we see them debating the various aspects of the question whether a high level of economic development spurred by personal material incentives should be fostered as a precondition of the achievement of a socialist society of equality and brotherhood (e.g., Mora, Bettelheim), or whether such 'unsocialist' means must inevitably pervert the end (e.g., Che Guevara, Mandel)." (Library J)

Reviewed by V. S. Kearney
America 126:544 My 20 '72 80w

"Fidel Castro's speech of July 26, 1968 is included as an epilogue to 'show his adoption of Che's position on moral incentives.' Highly recommended for those who are interested in the Cuban revolution and the problems of economic development."

Choice 9:133 Mr '72 150w

"[Silverman's introduction] leaves us sadly short of information on [the great debate's] outcome and on the lessons to be learnt from it. Dr Castro's speech on July 26, 1968 (not one of his best), which serves as an epilogue, gives us some indication that it was Guevara's side that won. But this piece of verbiage and airy optimism is a poor substitute for an honest assessment."

Economist 242:58 F 26 '72 240w

"Much of the surface of the argument is couched in technical Marxian terminology which is somewhat unfortunate for readers not familiar with that language. Nevertheless, the central ideas come through with striking clarity, and the intellectual stimulation is at a very high level. To introduce the debate, Silverman has contributed an introductory essay in which the excruciating theoretical and practical tensions of the problem of joining a Communist society with Communist morality are summed up with enlightened sympathetic understanding." L. S. Kaplan
Library J 97:81 Ja 1 '72 290w

"[The editor] has done a useful job drawing together these 16 articles from the pages of Cuban journals not easy of access. . . . [The debate is] centered on whether the 'law of value' continues to operate in a socialist economy. The writers may have wanted, at least subconsciously, to make less personal what was such a fundamental conflict about not merely ideas but also power. Another reason may have been the wish to make the debate intellectually respectable in Communist circles." Dudley Seers

N Y Times Bk ■ p6 F 20 '72 650w

SILVERMAN, DAN P. Reluctant union; Alsace Lorraine and Imperial Germany 1871-1918. 262p $11.50 Pa. state univ. press 320.944 Alsace-Lorraine—Politics and government. Germany—Politics and government. Bismark, Otto, Fürst von
ISBN 0-271-01111-4 LC 73-180693

This is an "analysis of Alsace-Lorraine under German rule. While emphasizing political and economic history, Silverman also sketches the . . . relations between German administrators and the Catholic Church. He also provides insight into the conflicts between civilian officials and the . . . military authorities, the . . . Zabern affair of 1913 being . . . [an] example. Silverman [shows] that 'the background and interests of Alsations and Lorrainers were not identical and that some elements of the population prospered under German rule.'" (Library J)

"Far from the usual picture of consistent oppression, Silverman portrays German policies in the Reichsland as vacillating and contradictory, hampered, in particular, by an inherent contradiction in aims between military security and the reconciliation of the population to German rule and by a running conflict between military and civilian authorities over jurisdiction in the conquered territories. . . . The work is written in a pedestrian style and presupposes considerable previous knowledge of European diplomacy and German politics. Rough going for the average undergraduate; however, because of its subject matter, the book should be acquired by all university and college libraries."

Choice 9:1345 D '72 170w

"[Silverman] has done a creditable job in general, and his book will be very useful in larger academic libraries." F. J. Hirsch
Library J 97:2839 S 15 '72 100w

"This is a useful and well-balanced history . . . [and] contains much factual information on the development of local political parties and their relationship with national German parties. . . . The general conclusion is that the German government was singularly inept in managing these provinces. The retention of a Governor appointed from Berlin after Alsace-Lorraine had for all ordinary purposes taken its place, with its own parliament and a seat in the Federal Council, in the federal structure of the Empire, seems to sum up all the mistakes that had gone before. Berlin was at one and the same time governing Alsace-Lorraine like a military conquest and recognizing its political maturity."

TLS pl171 S 29 '72 350w

SILVERMAN, DAVID. The theory of organizations; a sociological framework. 246p $6.95
Basic bks.

301.18 Organization. Sociology—Methodology
SBN 465-08438-9 LC 72-150812

"This book examines the development of organization theory and reveals its links with two main types of sociological analysis and with the prescriptive concerns of earlier studies of business enterprise. It shows how the systems model . . . has come to dominate contemporary work. It examines the use and limitations of systems analysis and goes on to offer as an alternative an action frame of reference which draws on the work of Weber, Schutz, and Peter Berger." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Author index. Subject index.

"This is the first book I know of that has as its primary task the redirecting of organizational theory into what the author calls 'Action theory'—a blend of the traditions of phenomenology, ethnomethodology, labeling symbolic theory, and social construction. . . . I am enthusiastic about many of the research products of 'Action theory.' I am sympathetic to much of the critique of mainstream sociology generated by the movement. But I remain unsatisfied with its theoretical rationale, its paradigm, and its exhortations. . . . The Action theory shows promise, but in Silverman's hands it is mainly strong on critique and weak on output, though much of the fault may be the theory's, rather than Silverman's. As I have indicated, there are at least six solid, informative, and challenging chapters in this book; I label that good." Charles Perrow

Am J Soc 77:1247 My '72 2100w

"An extraordinary book; it is a landmark in more than the ordinary sense. . . . An earlier generation of sociologists would be unable to cope with the paradox existing between the positivistic, deterministic qualities of organizations, on the one hand, and the phenomenological way in which actors make decisions in their capacities of officers in these organizations, on the other. To a later generation of sociologists this book will become a vade mecum."

Choice 8:1099 O '71 200w

Reviewed by Thomas Burns
Contemp Sociol 1:308 Jl '72 1300w

SILVERMAN, KENNETH, comp. Selected letters of Cotton Mather. See Mather, C.

SILVERMAN, MARTIN G. Disconcerting issue; meaning and struggle in a resettled Pacific community; with a foreword by David M. Schneider. 362p il $13 Univ. of Chicago press
301.32 Banabans (Oceanian people)
ISBN 0-226-75750-1 LC 70-133490

"The resettled Pacific community that provides the substance of the book is that of the Banabans, the people of Ocean Island. Since 1900 Ocean Island has been destructively mined for phosphate. The mining and World War II resulted in the Banabans being moved in 1945 to Rambi, 1,600 miles to the southeast where the climate, resources, and outside contacts are different. . . . [The Banabans] have retained their status as owners of Ocean Island, receiving annuities based on rights to land transmitted through their kinship system. They have also continued to make Ocean Island the center of a developing symbolic system by which they are trying to make sense out of their present lives. This development is the theme of the book." (Choice) Bibliography.

"Much of [this volume] deals with the complexities of history and kinship, not easy reading but well worth it for upper division and graduate students interested in symbolic anthropology. Silverman spent 18 months in the field, worked extensively in archives, and relies heavily on the theoretical approach of D. Schneider—e.g. American kinship [BRD 1969]." Choice 9:291 Ap '72 160w

"[Since] this book by a Princeton anthropologist . . . is as much concerned with historical and sociological dimensions as with cultural (symbolic) systems, it is still manifestly a general ethnography. There is, nevertheless, rather more theoretical content than is usual in such works. . . . The major failing of the book is that it spreads its material and theoretical content too far. In consequence it loses in depth, though the points of departure for that depth are there—in the symbolic complexes of land and blood, the ever-present (but usually implicit) use of dialectic, 'testing out', and the 'maximization of options'. The author has amply demonstrated his analytical and descriptive skills. . . . With a narrower focus, a less ambitious mandate, he could have produced a more readable work of lucidity and elegance." TLS p715 Je 23 '72 550w

SILVERSTEIN, ALVIN. The code of life [by] Alvin and Virginia Silverstein; il. by Kenneth Gosner. 89p lib bdg $4.50 Atheneum pubs. 575.1 Genetics—Juvenile literature LC 77-175558

The authors discuss such topics as "the genetic code, chromosomes, genes, DNA [deoxyribonucleic acid] and RNA [ribonucleic acid]. . . . Grade six and up." (Library J)

"[This book] confers macroscopic significance on a microscopic subject. . . . In tackling a tough subject, the Silversteins occasionally get over-technical, but the rewards are worth the effort." Richard Curtis Book World p12 (children's issue) My 7 '72 100w

"Beginning on an intermediate level, this discussion of genetics quickly becomes too complicated for all but the most sophisticated readers in the intended age group. A tremendous amount of information is packed into the 89 pages; perhaps too much, too rapidly as the main points are hard to discern. The latter part of the book discusses the latest discoveries in genetics which have been numerous and awesome. . . . The illustrations are not always clear, well-labeled or placed close enough to the text they illustrate. (There is also an errata slip for picture captions which can easily be lost.) However, this does make students aware of an important and exciting field of research and its possible impact on all our lives." Winona McLennan Library J 97:2967 S 15 '72 180w

SILVERSTEIN, VIRGINIA, jt. auth. The code of life. See Silverstein, A.

SIMAK, CLIFFORD D., ed. The march of science. 366p il $7.95 Harper 508 Science SBN 06-025661-3 LC 73-159045

This book contains a collection of articles originally published in the Minneapolis Tribune's Reading series. Contents: Ecology, by W. H. Marshall; The weather, by I. J. Batten; The viruses, by A. E. Nourse; Fossils, by J. H. Ostrom; Ice age, by D. B. Ericson and G. Wollin; Archaeology, by R. Silverberg; Relativity, by I. Asimov; Lasers, by J. Chapman; The stars, by W. Lev. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Sister M. L. Maher

Best Sell 31:434 D 15 '71 60w [YA]

"The four or five articles on each subject . . . answer basic 'how' and 'why' questions simply, entertainingly and with a goodly amount of accurate technical detail. Each subject is discussed by a recognized expert in that field. . . . The section on the Ice Age will be, perhaps, the least satisfying for most readers, dealing as it does with interpreting ocean sediment fossils. However, the more accessible and interest-sparking sections—e.g., those on weather and ecology—compensate. . . . The description of the Einstein relativity theories is excellent. . . . This is a valuable, fascinating collection of introductions to important scientific fields." P. M. Mitchell Library J 97:787 F 15 '72 190w [YA]

SIMENON, GEORGES. Maigret and the killer; tr. from the French by Lyn Moir. 165p $5.50 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-155127-8 LC 73-153691

"A young man is stabbed to death late on a rainy night by an assailant no one can identify. The victim had been pursuing his hobby of recording voices in various (often low-class) places. He had not been robbed, the murderer had not taken the tape recorder." (Best Sell) Maigret and his assistants investigate.

"The final outcome may not be to the satisfaction of many mystery buffs but, as usual, Georges Simenon's psychological insight is excellent. What makes his Maigret novels so attractive is perhaps related to the way in which he shows us Maigret at home, in domestic situations."

Best Sell 31:308 O 1 '71 150w

"The story in this latest Maigret? It is completely unimportant: Maigret persuades a mentally deranged killer to give himself up, mostly by listening to him on the telephone. You read one Maigret, you've read them all. But that doesn't mean that we won't eagerly await the appearance of the next one." John Deedy

Critic 30:90 Ja '72 270w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:3163 O 1 '71 30w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel

Sat F 54:56 O 30 '71 50w

SIMENON, GEORGES. Maigret and the mad-woman; tr. from the French by Eileen Ellenbogen. 176p $5.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-155138-3 LC 72-75421

"The Chief Superintendent of the Paris Police Department is approached by a fragile little widow of eighty-six who professes to fear for her life. The reason she gives, which encourages Maigret and his colleagues to consider her a trifle dotty, is that the last three or four times she has returned to her apartment after an afternoon in the park certain ornaments and articles of furnishing have not been quite in their accustomed places. Nevertheless, she is murdered, and a sheepish Maigret is confronted with a seemingly motiveless crime." (New Yorker)

"Maigret fans will need no urging to follow this latest of Maigret's cases. And it is a good introduction for those (if any) who do not yet know him."

Best Sell 32:242 Ag 15 '72 130w

New Yorker 48:135 S 23 '72 150w

"Simenon's latest . . . like many of the Maigret cases, is as much a character study as a criminal investigation. . . . Regrettably, however, this case is just passing fair, with only the famous ambience of Maigret's microcosm to recommend it." O. L. Bailey Sat R 55:84 O 28 '72 380w

"Only for really devoted fans, this simple tale of an old lady's death, with minimum atmosphere, and, owing to use of more than one paragraph for single speeches, major comprehension difficulties."

TLS p612 My 26 '72 40w

SIMENON, GEORGES. Maigret sets a trap; tr. from the French by Daphne Woodward. 182p $5.50 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-155137-5 LC 70-182331

This novel "takes place in Paris in August and involves five Jack the Ripper-type murders in Montmartre. Maigret sets an elaborate trap baited with policewomen. Although the trap appears to fail, the murderer is caught by the nature of his own character." (Library J)

SIMENON, GEORGES—Continued

"The translation . . . seems to be most idiomatic. . . . [This novel] was worth waiting for. Maigret is still most believable in his characterization and the plotting is as usual suspenseful." R. F. G.

Best Sell 31:565 Mr 15 '72 250w

"[This book] which appeared in France in 1955 . . . is the usual reliable entertainment, but Simenon writes so much that the formula is foolproof." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:1743 My 1 '72 80w

Reviewed by J. R. Coyne

Nat R 24:701 Je 23 '72 160w

"[This novel] is one of Simenon's milder affairs. . . . and as familiar and unprepossessing as a raincoat of equivalent age. . . . [Maigret] realizes (as always) that he will not have his man until he understands the psychology of the criminal. Simenon's alert readers know immediately that the murderer has a grudge against women; they may protest, though, that Maigret finds his man too easily, takes too long to set his second trap, and that the identity of the second murderer doesn't matter. Still, any Maigret story, written in paragraphs of one and two sentences, shows the joy of working without warrants and in an unrelentingly malechauvinist society." P. S. Prescott

Newsweek 80:92 Jl 10 '72 180w

SIMMONDS, J. D. China's world; the foreign policy of a developing state. 260p $10 Columbia univ. press

327.51 China (People's Republic of China)

—Foreign relations

ISBN 0-231-03511-X LC 75-126932

The author contends that "so long as China remains overwhelmingly agrarian its chief concerns will be food, education, and population control; and foreign relations will, to a great extent, be dictated by these problems. Danger from external enemies, especially the United States and the Soviet Union, has been exaggerated to motivate the Chinese people to work harder. While there may be some movement towards normalization of relations, Simmonds says, 'there cannot be meaningful detente between China and the Soviet Union or the United States. What room there is for manoeuvre is in the apportioning of enmity to the one or the other, and in trying to set the two super powers against each other.'" (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by S. M. Chiu

Am Hist R 77:190 F '72 200w

"Simmonds spends considerable time recording the Chinese Ministry of Foreign Affairs' vice-ministerial appointments and its changing allocation of responsibility for its various departments. All of this he tries to relate, with varying degrees of success, to the Chinese domestic scene. This book might have been simpler and more useful if Simmonds had merely stated at the outset that he was interested in doing a chronology of China's foreign relations with some speculation on possibly significant causes for and results of change over the years. . . . This criticism is not meant to imply that [his book] is without merit. Simmonds has given a reasonably concise review of China's foreign policy and some useful insight and grounds for speculation on the factors involved in that policy." L. W. Fessler

Am Pol Sci R 66:282 Mr '72 450w

Reviewed by W. I. Cohen

Ann Am Acad 401:173 My '72 400w

"Choosing to rely solely on Chinese Communist source materials, the author offers a summary of foreign policy by standard chronological framework, and then by theme (e.g. the anti-imperialist struggle and the people's wars, Sino-Soviet tensions, and regional approaches). He then promises an assessment of strengths and weaknesses and a projection of future policy shifts. Unfortunately, Simmonds delivers only in sketchy form and the volume might be better titled 'Foreign Policy according to the thought of Mao.' Intended for both general reader and specialist, the former may find the book confusing, with its absence of real examples, and the latter will find the treatment more of an outline. . . . [There is a] useful appendix which includes a summary of vice ministries of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs by date and area of concentration."

Choice 8:1382 D '71 180w

"In this book, first published in Australia . . . Simmonds, a China specialist in the Australian Defence Department who was born and educated in China, tests his hypothesis that although the foreign policy of China is not determined necessarily by its domestic politico-economic structure, 'the basic impetus to foreign policy comes from domestic developments; it is its specific and detailed application which is shaped largely by external causes.' . . . For college collections." H. S. Camenson

Library J 96:2326 Jl '71 160w

"This book reflects the present malaise in the study of Chinese foreign policy. . . . In large measure [the author] continues the tradition of analysing Chinese foreign policy rhetoric and Mao's theories, rather than the actual deeds of Chinese external affairs. Thus, we find long sections on the 'Guerrilla Strategy,' the 'United Front,' the 'East Wind and Paper Tigers' theses, the 'Agrarian Base Strategy,' etc. . . . Mr. Simmonds' treatment is neither essentially better nor worse than the rest. . . . Like many Sinologists, [he] has an underlying appreciation for China and Mao, without being either Chinese or Maoist. . . . Virtually all the vagaries of Chinese foreign policy are seen by Simmonds as outgrowths of internal needs based on weakness. . . . There is, perhaps, something too comfortable about such a conclusion for Western analysts." Roger Dial

Pacific Affairs 45:104 spring '72 500w

SIMON, GEORGE T. Simon says; the sights and sounds of the swing era, 1935-1955. 491p il $19.95 Arlington house

785.4 Music, Popular (Songs, etc.). Jazz music. Musicians, American

ISBN 0-87000-135-3 LC 73-154420

"A collection of Simon's writings for Metro-nome, a defunct newsmagazine of the music world, from 1935 to 1955. [He] reviews early performances by Duke Ellington, Frank Sinatra, Count Basie, Benny Goodman, and . . . others." (Library J) Index.

"The majority of libraries whose collections touch upon American music and society, jazz, black studies, and related subjects can at least get a partial glimpse into this important era. The book has serious limitations, but these should not deter libraries from acquiring it as a means of obtaining material they do not have in any form. Simon was one of the first Americans to devote a considerable amount of time reviewing and writing about jazz and related subjects. His work is reprinted in its original form with side comments updating his views and amending the record. The book is well illustrated with photos from the magazine, and there is an excellent index."

Choice 9:69 Mr '72 170w

"The book . . . is a real nostalgia trip for anyone who lived through the Swing Era or who wishes he had. Although it has some real limitations, it does contain useful research material." C. M. Weisenberg

Library J 97:200 Ja 15 '72 120w

SIMON, MARON J. The Panama affair. 317p il $7.95 Scribner

986.3 Panama Canal—History

ISBN 684-10546-2 LC 79-123828

The author tells "the story of the organization of the French Panama Canal Company and the scandal that shook France with that company's financial collapse. He also . . . [includes] sketches of the major characters." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Simon compiles the best account yet available but it is not definitive, as he writes on the basis of previously published materials while ignoring the ministerial archives, private papers, and contemporary newspapers available in France. He includes a useful, although spottily, bibliography, and full footnoting. His writing and organization are confused at first, but improve as he warms to his story. . . . The book is intended for the general reader rather than the scholar, and is recommended for undergraduate and larger public libraries."

Choice 8:1232 N '71 150w

"The one great weakness of the book is its lack of any real analysis of the facts. However, because this work is so well written, it will appeal to the general reader and well-informed layman. It will not have the same appeal for scholars and specialists in the field." Judah Adelson

Library J 96:78 Ja 1 '71 130w

"A plodding, conscientious history of the building of the Panama Canal. The narrative bogs down, perhaps necessarily, in the myriad elaborate schemes for financing the project. On the whole, the book reads like a series of strung-together paragraphs, probably the result of the author's mistaken attempt to leave nothing out."

N Y Times Bk R p16 Mr 7 '71 50w

SIMON, RICK. Iron man. See Williams, B.

SIMPICH, FREDERICK. Anatomy of Hawaii, by Frederick Simpich, Jr. 234p $7.95 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan
919.69 Hawaii
LC 78-146101

The author discusses the relationship of the University, the military, the tourists and the immigrants to the state's business and political communities. Simpich "has been vice-president and director of Castle & Cooke, . . . director of Dole Pineapple and Matson Navigation, president of Oceanic Properties, and . . . a principal planner for and participant in the Normandy invasion during World War II." (Publisher's note) Glossary of Hawaiian words. Index.

"The 'insider[s] view[s] of the Hawaiian Establishment,' as this claims to be, . . . [is] not recommended for purchase except by those libraries with special interest in Hawaiiana."

Choice 9:563 Je '72 70w

"[This] is a brief economic history of the Hawaiian Islands that includes an assessment of current business, education, politics, and society and a forecast of the future. A 30-year resident, Simpich presents candid insights into the economics and politics of this rapidly growing state. Statistical tables illustrate business trends, but a bibliography is lacking. This unique book is essential for all newcomers to the islands and for mainland businessmen, economists and politicians interested in the future of Hawaii." J. C. Parker

Library J 96:4005 D 1 '71 80w

SIMPSON, LOUIS. Adventures of the letter I. 69p $2.65 Harper

811

ISBN 0-06-013884-X LC 74-138762

A book of poems.

"What has happened to Louis Simpson's energy? . . . His poetry of the fifties possessed verve and a dynamic center as well as certain striking observations that help to marshal a respectably large audience for his work. Then, in 1964, he won the Pulitzer Prize. It almost appears that success has mellowed the tough poetic instinct that once propelled him, for this present collection barely flexes a muscle. Even the fairly lengthy poems give off the impression of a gesture made half-heartedly, and the love poems—there are several—come to a sorry neutrality. . . . Yet I suppose there exists a discernible thread in these poems a valid statement of suffering. Simpson's angst creaks along amid reflections on his childhood and brief meditations on the sterility of modern satisfactions. He employs irony in a predictable, though revealing, manner." T. O'Hara

Best Sell 32:141 Je 15 '72 400w

"As the title of the new collection suggests, [Simpson's] dominant theme is identity—personal, spiritual and national. However, these are the 'adventures' of a rather careful 'I': his idiom is ponderous, everything yields to melancholy, his literal and surrealist narratives carefully measured out like sugar in a time of famine. It has to be admitted, however, that he is a master of that kind of statement, limited as it is." Douglas Dunn

Encounter 38:67 Ja '72 350w

"Part of Louis Simpson's value as a poet is his indefinable quality. He is invariably formal and fastidious; but he has rarely been just the facile academic versifier. His range of subject-matter is large, but he handles it with a containment and a reticence. . . . Refined, then; and to the point of unobtrusiveness? No. . . . So it's characteristic—and also helpful for new readers of this most attractive and elusive of middle-generation American poets—that this first individual volume to be published in England (his Selected Poems was done in 1966 [BRD 1965, 1966]), should show us Simpson varying and concealing his identity in different guises, many of them accomplished and a few of them both alarming and moving." Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 81:854 Je 18 '71 250w

"[This volume] records an American Odyssey of the mind that harks back explicitly to Whitman—though when the bardic robes are donned, it is for parodic purposes. . . . [But] it is a contemplative enterprise with which Simpson is essentially concerned, and the true mentor of his book is not Whitman but Stevens. . . . There are many things in this volume to which one returns, and more than once. A short lyric, 'Port Jefferson,' shows the speaker taking his place with quiet self-assurance as inheritor of the poetic voice, alluding to the Whitman who also wrote of the Long Island shores; memory, mother of the Muses, is summoned to gather all places and times into one. . . . When the remaining decades of the twentieth century have passed ignominiously into history along with the 1960's, these stanzas and other gifts will remain to us."

Marie Borroff

Yale R 62:81 O '72 550w

SIMPSON, WILLIAM KELLY, ed. The literature of ancient Egypt; an anthology of stories, instructions and poetry; ed. with an introd. by William Kelly Simpson; with trs. by R. O. Faulkner, Edward F. Wente, Jr. [and] William Kelly Simpson. 328p $10 Yale univ. press

893 Egyptian literature

ISBN 0-300-01482-1

LC 75-151589

In this anthology of ancient Egyptian literary writings "bibliographical notes and pertinent information comprise the introductions which precede each of the translated selections. . . . footnotes guide the reader, mainly clarifying interpretation for the general reader but not infrequently being directed to the specialist. Archaic diction (e.g., thou, thee, ye, shouldst, saith) is not used. . . . [Appended is a] listing of selected readings on a diversity of Egyptological subjects—art, architecture, religion, history—as well as six photographs in one way or another connected with ancient Egyptian scribal activity." (Choice)

"[This is] the first authoritative anthology of ancient Egyptian literary writings to appear in English since Erman's The literature of the ancient Egyptians [BRD 1927]. Considerable progress has been made in Egyptology during the 45-year interim, admirably reflected in this volume. . . . Where literal translation of the original would have been particularly clumsy in English, a compromise somewhere between smooth, interpretive paraphrase and the more literal Egyptian phraseology is struck. . . . In view of the advances in understanding which have made this book possible, the volume should be added to every library."

Choice 9:976 O '72 200w

"The wisely selected compositions in this anthology are presented in English which is artificial only when necessary to preserve the Egyptian characteristics. . . . This reviewer was particularly impressed by the strikingly contemporary flavor in both prose and poetry passages." F. D. Lazenby

Library J 97:2099 Je 1 '72 200w

SIMS, EDWARD H. Fighter tactics and strategy. 1914-1970; with a foreword by John C. Meyer; foreword to the British edition by J. E. Johnson. 266p il $6.95 Harper

358.4 Aeronautics. Military. World War, 1939-1945—Aerial operations

SBN 06-013897-1 LC 76-95984

"Sims traces the development of the tactics and strategy of aerial combat through the two world wars, the Korean conflict and the war in Vietnam; in Sopwith Camels, Spades, Fokkers, Mustangs, Spitfires, MIG's, F. 84's and the supersonic Phantom fighter-bombers; flown by pilots like Rickenbacker, Richthofen, Eric Hartman, John 'Cat Eyes' Cunningham and the American ace veteran of three wars, Robin Olds." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This [is a] poorly organized, frequently redundant work. . . . [It] is excellent when treating fighter tactics and far less successful when discussing general airpower. On airpower Sims is biased, sometimes erroneous, and fails to document some of his most interesting assertions. Yet these weaknesses do not form the bulk of the book, which is reported interviews with the living fighter masters of four wars. Here Sims well plumbs fighter tactics. Military historians will be annoyed by Sims' citing A. J. P. Taylor's English history [1914-1945], [IBRD 1965, 1966], on the degree of air/ground cooperation in the French military of 1940. Neither will they be pleased by his denigration of the role played by heavy bombers in World War II. . . . But, if the statements on strategy and airpower in general are ignored, the remainder . . . is both fascinating and useful."

SIMS, E. H.—Continued

Choice 9:1182 N '72 170w

"Strangely enough the reader learns that, basically, fighter-pilot qualifications and tactics have changed little through the years. Recommended." W. N. Hess

Library J 97:498 F 1 '72 110w

SINCLAIR, ANDREW. Magog. 328p $6.95 Harper

ISBN 06-013901-3 LC 72-181663

This sequel to the author's earlier novel Gog, BKD 1967, concentrates on the career of Gog's brother "from 1945 to the Isle of Wight rock festival. . . . We catch only glimpses of . . . Gog, an ignored recluse become a Blakean prophet, while protean Magog occupies the important, corruptible seats of power. In the civil service, he dumps nerve gas off the Irish coast and abets Israel's rabid militancy. Later he's a movie mogul, a ruthless urban developer, a scholar (his great opus is ghost-written), a university chancellor. Gog's feral mate has twin daughters (which man is the father?) who pass the idealism/corruption struggle to another generation." (Library J)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:92 Ag '72 80w

Reviewed by J. J. Murray

Best Sell 32:206 Ag 1 '72 300w

"Modern English history as an inexhaustible struggle between Gog and Magog (good and evil, or the individual and his rights versus pure power, greed, the factories, technology) was the subject of Sinclair's comic nightmare Gog. This sequel is less surreal, much more sardonic. . . . The struggle is over: in our time Magog (and Moloch and Mammon) has won. . . . [This is] an angry political novel, full of outraged comedy, which becomes increasingly disturbing as Magog becomes familiar and understandable, instead of remaining a caricature. It helps to know British politics; it helps even more to have read Gog." J. W. Charles

Library J 97:2201 Je 15 '72 170w

"[This] is a rich and complex book, mirroring the complexities of the world it is set in, its strands intricately and carefully interwoven." Kenn Stitt

New Statesman 83:611 My 5 '72 300w

Reviewed by Anthony Thwaite

N Y Times Bk R p7 J1 2 '72 1150w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard

Time 99:92 Je 5 '72 450w

"Sinclair is always interesting and convincing about . . . details of high life, which he treats with disdain. . . . His work has distinct snob appeal. . . . The book is full of ideas for novels, scenarios and potted plots, which [he] scatters about in anecdotal form. . . . There are altogether too many events in these pages. . . . The whole thing reads like a first-draft synopsis of a twelve-volume novel series, full of bright ideas, sharp comments and ambitions not yet realized."

TLS p509 My 5 '70 500w

SINCLAIR, MICHAEL. Folio forty-one. 192p $5.95 Putnam

LC 72-175274

This novel concerns a group of Scotch "nationalists called . . . Norsemen [who] conspire to found a country consisting of Scandinavia and Scotland. MacCraig, a Secret Service agent and a Scottish sympathizer, is sent to investigate the matter." (Library J)

"[This] entertaining novel of intrigue and suspense . . . derives its name from a file kept in the offices of British Intelligence on a political organization. . . . The story is interesting and well told."

Best Sell 31:546 Mr 1 '72 140w

"[This] novel of politics and espionage [is] concerned with Scottish separatists. . . . In his infiltration of a cell of the Norsemen [MacCraig] manages to uncover their financial backing, and to expose the scandal that, most entertainingly, threatens the very upmost reaches of the State. The deus ex machina is a rather scruffy but endearing gossip columnist called Tesco: Fiona, MacCraig's girl friend, a maddeningly plucky Scottish lass, is quite incapable of staying out of trouble." H. C. Veit

Library J 97:520 F 1 '72 110w

Reviewed by Carol Coon

Library J 97:1627 Ap 15 '72 80w [YA]

"Sinclair has organized this book in a rather unusual manner. It is told in short takes that jump all over the place, and one wonders how the author can ever tie everything up. But Sinclair does, most competently, and there even is a jolting surprise at the end." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p42 Mr 19 '72 100w

SINCLAIR-STEVENSON, CHRISTOPHER. In-glorious rebellion; the Jacobite risings of 1708, 1715 and 1719. 212p pl maps $10 St Martins

942.07 Jacobites. Great Britain—History—18th century. Scotland—History
LC 79-184420

This narrative covers the eighteen-year period which began with the death of James II in exile at Saint-Germain, and ended with the battle of Glenshiel. "During this period there were three outbreaks—all of them in Scotland, but all of them also inspired by Continental powers for the time being hostile to Britain." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"The author explains that the term, 'In-glorious,' merely refers to the fact that the risings were a failure chiefly because of poor planning, incompetent leadership, and internal bickering among the leaders. The account is rather difficult reading for it is dry, factual narrative with little evidence of attempt at selection, emphasis, or dramatic impact. The battle scenes especially read like impersonal official military reports. . . . The price is excessive for such a slim volume of limited appeal." F. J. Gallagher

Best Sell 32:142 Je 15 '72 130w

"The book will have strong popular appeal, especially to readers who share the author's fondness for detailed military history. While lacking documentation the text displays evidence of careful research. The bibliography concentrates on memoirs and regional and family histories. . . . A pleasant book, particularly useful for undergraduate and public libraries."

Choice 9:1345 D '72 150w

"Mr Sinclair-Stevenson covers this complicated ground very adequately, though there is a certain amount of descriptive matter in his book which will be familiar to those with any knowledge of the period, and he has little to say that is new. . . . The value of his book is to provide a reasonably balanced account of Jacobitism in its heyday, and in its context, free of romanticism and partiality, but deploring, as well it might, the inefficiency of the Jacobite leadership at almost every turn. . . . [However, the author] is less than generous to Argyll, and his account of his career after the temporary eclipse which followed the Fifteen lamentably underestimates the immense power he exercised for many years in Scotland."

TLS p1092 S 10 '71 550w

SINGER, ISAAC BASHEVIS. Enemies, a love story. 280p $6.95 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-148309 LC 78-189337

Herman Broder "is entangled with three women—his second wife Yadviga (a Polish peasant who saved his life [during the holocaust]), his beautiful mistress Masha, and his first wife, Tamara, whom Herman thought had been killed. Because Broder lives a life of lies and contradictions, these women at first do not know of each other's existence, and in fact no one can trace the intricate web of Broder's life. Although he passes as a book salesman, he is employed as a ghost-writer for a rabbi. . . . Broder creates for himself a perpetual fear of discovery and exposure. His paranoid fantasies are superimposed upon his daily life." (N Y Times Bk R) First published in Yiddish in the Jewish Daily Forward in 1966.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 230:96 J1 '72 150w

Reviewed by L. P. McGuigan
Best Sell 32:158 J1 1 '72 450w

Reviewed by Victor Howes
Christian Science Monitor p11 J1 19 '72
420w

"A bitter irony permeates this novel. . . . The involved plot becomes entangled in a web of lies and complex strategies. This skilled storyteller brings Herman and his three wives, locked in a love-hate relationship, vividly to life. God, free will, human goodness, truth, and suffering all come under scrutiny; and the evidence seems to show that Nazi ingenuity could not achieve such destruction as these human beings, by their frailty, and without malice, can and do inflict on themselves and each other. Highly recommended." S. M. Batzdorff

Library J 97:2118 Je 1 '72 140w

Reviewed by Robin MacNaughton
Nation 216:90 Ja 15 '73 650w

Reviewed by T. R. Edwards
N Y Rev of Books 19:21 J1 20 '72 900w

"'Enemies' confronts mutilated psyches but little else. The paucity of felt life, surprising in a Singer work, makes the novel seem curiously clinical and removed, despite its relentlessness. Singer's marvelously pointed humor has turned black and bitter, the sex is flat, and there is little irony or self-consciousness. . . . However Dostoevskian the situation and atmosphere of the book may appear, the characters have little of the fullness of life of a Golyadkin or a Raskolnikov. . . . [This] is a bleak, obsessive novel that offers neither release nor hope; it is an odd book to come from so accomplished and brilliant a writer." Lore Dickstein

N Y Times Bk R p4 Je 25 '72 1350w

Reviewed by L. E. Sissman
New Yorker 48:70 D 30 '72 650w

"In his first novel set in America, Isaac Bashevis Singer works out this bizarre plot with perfect naturalness and aplomb. The book has the surface gaiety, ribaldry and surprise of a medieval fabliau. Yet the New York subways, telephone calls, Bronx Zoo, bus trip to the Adirondacks are solidly, meticulously real. Herman's three women expand into mythic dimensions. . . . It's hard not to feel that 'Enemies, A Love Story' goes haywire in its last ten pages, when fate sweeps down and shatters the comic mode. But we were warned. Whether or not you accept its ending, [this] is a brilliant, unsettling novel." W. C. Newsweek 79:86 Je 26 '72 450w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Wolff
Sat R 55:54 J1 22 '72 550w

Reviewed by R. Z. Sheppard
Time 99:90 Je 26 '72 350w

TLS p1387 N 17 '72 750w

SINGER, S. FRED, ed. Is there an optimum level of population? See Is there an optimum level of population?

SINGER-KÉREL, JEANNE, jt. auth. Modern economic crises and recessions. See Flamant, M.

SINGH, BALJIT. Theory and practice of modern guerrilla warfare [by] Baljit Singh and Ko-wang Mei. 133p $5.75 Asia pub.

355.02 Guerrilla warfare
ISBN 0-210-98169-5 LC 72-175104

This "discourse provides the reader with a short history of modern guerrilla warfare, a . . . discussion of its various theories, . . . [an] explanation of conditions and activities requisite for success, and a guide to what incumbent governments can do to render it ineffectual. Myths are exposed and truths affirmed through the . . . use of charts, diagrams, and examples drawn from the experiences of Ho, Giap, Mao, Ben Bella, Castro, and several other revolutionaries." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[This is] an intelligent, succinct account. . . . The writers show that 'the administrative and political incapability of the ruling elites is the main contributor to the growth of guerrilla warfare.' . . . The section on guerrilla warfare in history underestimates the element of continuity in ancient and modern guerrilla warfare pointed out by L. H. Gann, Guerrillas in history [BRD 1971]. The argument that colonial governments have always failed under the test of guerrilla warfare does not, for instance, accord with British experience in Kenya or Rhodesia. . . . There is a good bibliography, but only works in English are covered. Suitable for military and for political science libraries."

Choice 9:862 S '72 180w

"[The authors] are well acquainted with the subject and advance observations and conclusions in a readable and easily digestible fashion. The index is poor and sketchy, but the extensive bibliography is valuable. Recommended."

E. A. Engeldinger

Library J 97:1724 My 1 '72 160w

SINOR, DENIS, ed. Orientalism & history. 2d ed 123p $4.95 Ind. univ. press

915 Civilization, Oriental
ISBN 253-34261-9 LC 79-126219

The areas of Asian history discussed in this book are: "the ancient Near East, Islam, India, China, and Central Eurasia. Each author presents a personal assessment and interpretation of the civilization [and] a summary of studies related to it." (Publisher's note) Annotated chapter bibliographies.

"[These] broadly interpretive historical essays . . . were first published in 1954 to stimulate a discussion of the relationship between historical and Orientalist scholarship at the International Congress of Orientalists in Cambridge. . . . The question arises why these essays were reissued without revision (though the useful bibliographical notes of each were updated). One answer may be that [they] have not had an observable effect upon recent scholarship: they are writings which have the appearance of being seminal and are yet without offspring. Another answer, however, is that each of the essays provides a readable introduction for the nonspecialist to one of the great historical civilizations with the added richness of the Orientalist's humanistic and literary insights into the historical forces which molded each."

Choice 8:1074 O '71 180w

"It is very useful to have the work of such distinguished authors brought together to illustrate, as much as anything, the very diversity of their themes and interests, and to show that Orientalism is more easily defined in the negative term 'non-European' than by any positive shared characteristics." C. P. Fitzgerald

Pacific Affairs 44:597 winter '71-'72
390w

SIPE, A. W. R., ed. Hope: psychiatry's commitment. See Hope: psychiatry's commitment

SISSMAN, L. E. Pursuit of honor; poems. 96p $4.50; pa $2.25 Little 811

LC 73-143709

This is the poet's third collection of poetry.

"Most of the poems in . . . [this book] are New Yorker poems twice over: almost all of them first appeared in that magazine (or in the Atlantic). . . . The poem which opens the book, a long elegy on the poet's brother entitled 'The Big Rock-Candy Mountain,' is as durable as it is genuine. Human, compelling, highly charged yet perfectly controlled, it wrests from me my grudging recommendation: Sissman merits a place in every poetry collection." Robert Regan

Library J 96:1988 Je 1 '71 150w

"Sissman's talent is tremendous and his erudition unquestioned, but rather too often I find his wit and rhythm in [this volume] less than fine. . . . And Sissman is private. The reader knows he is listening to inside jokes concealed in tropes. . . . [However] Sissman is often very, very good." James Whitehead

Sat R 54:37 D 18 '71 550w

SISSON, CHARLES JASPER. The Boar's Head theatre; an inn-yard theatre of the Elizabethan age; ed. by Stanley Wells. 100p $7.50 Routledge

792 Boar's Head Theatre, London
ISBN 0-7100-7252-X LC 72-188340

This study "recreates the theater world of the English inn-yards. . . . [The Boar's Head

SISSON, C. J.—Continued

Theatre is discussed and] attention given to its emergence from lawsuits, involving the proprietors. Two diagrams of the inn [are included]. (Choice) Bibliography.

"Sisson, long established as a foremost Shakespearean and scholar of Elizabethan literature, is well served in this posthumous publication prepared from typescript and notes. [It is] certain to be well received by students and scholars of theater history and anyone interested in Elizabethan life . . . [and] is essential to students and scholars of Elizabethan theater."

Choice 9:1146 N '72 110w

"Sisson's account is no mere dry-as-dust, reasoned examination of long-lost legal records. It is a lively picture which associates an important tavern stage with the man who guided its fortunes, that 'stalwart of the Elizabethan theatre-world', Robert Browne, who perhaps more than any other was responsible for carrying into Europe knowledge of what the English actors were doing."

TLS p1003 Ag 25 '72 450w

SITHOLE, NDABANINGI. The polygamist; a novel. 178p $6.95 Third press

SBN 89388-036-1 LC 79-169156

This "is the story of Menzi Dube, an elder of the Ndebele tribe who is 'the sole and exclusive owner of a big village' and 'the proud and contented husband of seven attractive wives.' As the tale unfolds, one discovers that neither Dube's wives nor those of Matutu, his neighbor, are entirely satisfied with their lot. . . . [Their] problem is further underlined when Matutu's youngest wife has an affair with his son [and when Menzi Dube's son returns as a teacher after a seven year absence.]" (N Y Times Bk R)

"[The author,] a native of Rhodesia, was educated in missionary schools and attended the Andover-Newton Theological Seminary in the U.S. This novel, his first, reflects his background. Characterization is light, the plot, simple. . . . The pros and cons of polygamy are a dominant motif throughout. Tribal life is revealed in terms of everyday activities. This novel holds moments of tenderness, humor, and suspense, and makes for excellent light reading." A. D. Masters

Library J 97:2862 S 15 '72 170w

"Sithole is president of the banned Zimbabwe African National Union, and his novel The Polygamist was apparently written in Rhodesian prison, where he is serving a six-year sentence on charges of conspiracy. It is a gentle book. . . . Mr. Sithole seems to regard progress as a pretty good thing, if tempered with a modicum of respect for Ndebele customs. That makes him distinctly old-fashioned too." Peter Dreyer

Nation 215:120 Ag 21 '72 200w

"[This] essentially autobiographical first novel reveals through austere prose some of the inner tensions, the ritual and the magic that still survived in African tribal life as [its] central characters set out on journeys into the mid-20th century. . . . While Sithole uses dialogue brilliantly, the descriptions, at the beginnings of the novel, border on the banal. . . . After the uneasy opening chapter, the novel gathers strength and the author uses dialogue with skill and precision. In the end, for all its naiveté, it is an interesting work—easy to read, entertaining and at the same time providing insights into the contemporary scene." Jan Carew

N Y Times Bk R p47 S 10 '72 400w
New Yorker 48:82 Ag 5 '72 150w

SIVARAMAMURTI, CALEMBUS, Jr. auth. 5000 years of the art of India. See Bussagli, M.

SJÖLANDER, TURE. Garbo. 135p il $12 Harper
791.43 Garbo, Greta
SBN 06-013926-9 LC 73-160651

Nearly two hundred photographs featuring the Swedish film actress of the twenties and thirties "have been gathered from newspaper and publicity files, from amateur and professional photographers, from private snapshots and movie stills, from school and family archives." (Horn Bk)

"The photographs speak for themselves (Cecil Beaton's two photographs of her are creations of artistic beauty), giving glimpses of her personality and highlights of her life and career without really violating the privacy she values." M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 48:294 Je '72 160w

"[This] volume of Garbo photographs is more than anyone could reasonably ask for, but such a sumptuous Garbo book (and this is the most sumptuous of Garbo books) makes Garbo addicts only want more. There is almost no text; the pictures are all, and they are plenty. Most of them will be unfamiliar to even the most devoted collectors of Garbo memorabilia; school pictures are included, and there are haunting shots of Garbo's grandmother in Sweden and her parents and scenes from her early life. Garbo seems to have aged rapidly in the last few years, and many of the pictures show her running from crowds and desperately trying to escape photographers." J. A. Avant

Library J 96:3343 O 15 '71 130w

SJÖWALL, MAJ. Murder at the Savoy [by] Maj Sjöwall and Per Wahlöö; tr. from the Swedish by Amy and Ken Knoespel. 216p $4.95 Pantheon bks.

ISBN 0-394-47081-8 LC 77-162551

"In the dining room of the posh Savoy hotel in Malmö, Viktor Palmgren's address is interrupted when a killer guns him down, then escapes through a window. Was the wealthy industrialist murdered for personal reasons—or for political motives related to his arms shipments to Africa? Once again Chief Inspector Martin Beck of Swedish National Police goes into action." (Sat R)

"The personality of Beck, with his gourmet interest in food, is played up. An interesting but leisurely story, ordinary by American standards for the detective novel and not living up to the blurbs on the jacket."

Best Sell 31:431 D 15 '71 100w

"One Swede says to another: 'Quit making a spectacle of yourself, Kid Sister. You're as curious as a cat and have been ever since you started walking. I know you know a helluva a lot about Broberg. . . . If this is a faithful translation, then the Swedes may be closer in temperament to us than they'd care to admit. . . . The crime is simple, and so—though my lips are sealed—is its solution. . . . [However,] this book is especially recommended to people who plan to visit Denmark or Sweden in the next few months. The authors are generous with street names, assessments of hotels, favorite dishes, and recreation facilities.' Paul Theroux

Book World p2 N 21 '71 330w

Reviewed by M. K. Grant

Library J 96:3644 N 1 '71 30w

"The crime is uninteresting, the detection insignificant, and the lives of the men of the Swedish National Police seem especially mundane, with Chief Inspector Martin Beck finally complaining once too often about his digestion. Worst of all, the incidental picture of life in Sweden is flat, lacking in detail. The novel might as well be set in Minneapolis." J. R. Coyne

Nat R 24:170 F 18 '72 90w

Reviewed by Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p33 Ja 9 '72 190w

"Once again the Swedish husband-and-wife writing team come up with another example of today's best detective fiction."

Sat R 54:31 D 25 '71 80w

SKEHAN, JAMES W., Jr. ed. Science and the future of man. See Carovillano, R. L.

SKELTON, GEOFFREY. Wieland Wagner: the positive sceptic. 222p il $6.95 St Martins
B or 92 Wagner, Wieland. Opera
LC 75-162371

This book surveys the "life and achievement, theory and practice [of Wieland Wagner, grandson of Richard Wagner]. . . . The main emphasis . . . is on Wieland's . . . efforts, in his Wagner productions, to abstract the essence of the works. . . . [It includes] commentaries on the operas and mind of Richard Wagner, drawn largely from conversations with Wieland, and . . . glimpses of world-famous music celebrities." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Wieland Wagner deserves such a penetrating study as Skelton has given us, for his influence has been felt in every opera house in the world. For a student concerned with what has been going on in the performance of musical drama, the book is essential. There are over 30 well chosen illustrations (black and white only, alas)."

Choice 9:378 My '72 150w

"Skelton, whose earlier book Wagner at Bayreuth [BRD 1966] was a gem, focuses attention on Wagner's aims and style and provides real insights into his methods. A thorough, detailed study which brings together more about the man and his work than is available anywhere else in English. Well organized and well written." G. L. Mayer
Library J 97:1017 Mr 15 '72 90w

"Skelton has consulted Wieland's widow Gertrud, his hetaera Anja Silja, his mother and many others; but his list of acknowledged sources is more notable for such omissions as Friedelind and Wolfgang. . . . [The author] has done a level-headed and eminently sensible job on the limited material so far available. He has probably been far more successful in sorting out fact from fiction than his own modest claims allow. He admits that 'consideration for persons still living' has meant that he has not been able to tell all he knows; as it is, one can imagine his book being coldly received in some quarters in Germany. The open-minded reader will find Mr Skelton's account fair and continually interesting. If it is short on insight into Wieland's personality and into his intellectual and artistic development, then the reluctant sources are to blame as much as the author."

TLS p1447 N 19 '71 450w

SKELTON, ROBIN. J. M. Synge and his world. (A Studio bk) 144p il $7.95 Viking
B or 92 Synge, John Millington
SBN 670-40729-1 LC 75-142147

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by W. B. Hill

Best Sell 31:439 Ja 1 '72 140w

Choice 9:62 Mr '72 180w

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 48:394 Ag '72 170w

SKELTON, ROBIN. The practice of poetry. 184p $7.50; pa $3.50 Barnes & Noble

808 Poetics

ISBN 0-389-04054-1; 0-389-04155-6 (pa)

LC 70-27511

In this book on the art and craft of verse, the chapters range "over the 'word hoard', the basic techniques of verse, diction, rhythms, form, themes, stimuli for writing, and the final commitment of the poet to his craft. A series of appendices on the 'technology' of verse provide a . . . reference guide to stanza forms, rhyme, and metrics." (Publisher's note)

"[This book] should be a help to the young would-be poet and to the teacher of 'creative' writing. It would be of greater value to one attempting to teach an understanding and appreciation of poetry. Like most how-to-do-it writing manuals, however, it is implausible to the degree that it parts from purely technical considerations and attempts to teach inspiration or ways of stimulating imagination. Not surprisingly, the best part of the book is analysis of the work of well known modern poets. Recommended for those who wish to know more about poetry, not for those serious about writing it."

Choice 9:62 Mr '72 90w

"[Skelton] concerns himself . . . with the frame of mind and the strategies he considers necessary for composing poetry regularly throughout life. Almost inevitably such a book shares the farce and misinformation attendant on a manual of sexual instruction, though in both genres a few useful hints can scarcely fail to be imparted." Roy Fuller

Encounter 38:43 D '71 270w

SKELTON, ROBIN, comp. and tr. Two hundred poems from the Greek anthology. 78p $4.95 Univ. of Wash. press

884 Greek poetry—Collections

LC 72-150374

"The content of these brief lyrics is amatory, frequently bawdy, convivial, satiric, declamatory, dedicatory, and sepulchral. Their principal themes are the many forms of love, sometimes sacred but more often profane, and the brevity of mortal existence." (Publisher's note) Index of poets.

"Skelton's selection touches on most of the major preoccupations, if such they may be called, in the Anthology: the lifelikeness of a painted aphrodite or of sculpted oxen; the fickleness or slyness or venality of girls; the reciprocity of land and sea (or life and death, and a host of others); the scramble of Time; and, now and then, the foulness of our origins and the nothingness of existence. His versions are pungent, seemingly effortless, and remarkably faithful. . . . [This] little volume, with its useful introduction . . . should win new friends for a body of verse that does not, at present, have many admirers." T. G. Rosenmeyer

Class World 66:169 N '72 500w

"The poems Skelton has chosen to translate are more representative selections than they are the best of the Greek Anthology; for instance, he includes 12 poems of the clever Paulus Silentiarius (6th Century A.D.), but only six of the far more interesting Philodemus (1st Century B.C.). Verses that have no merit in Greek appear, in Skelton's translations, to be no worse than his English versions of what is truly excellent in Greek. The translations are witty enough, but it is not the same kind of wit as that found in the originals. Skelton often begins with a fairly close rendering and ends up with a variation that is strictly his own." Seth Benardete

Library J 97:1442 Ap 15 '72 130w

"[In Skelton's anthology] are some fair lines and some almost successful complete poems, but he is defeated by his own virtuous wishes as a poet. . . . But there are extremely good lines dotted about in these versions; what Professor Skelton should have done was to loot and despoil them to write new poems of his own. As it is, the least touch of verbosity, which is usually necessary to fill out the rhyme scheme and the metre, is fatal to the existence of these light tissues, and an extra word or a faint indirectness of speech will destroy a poem in the bud. Professor Skelton speaks in an interesting preface of a Cavalier strain in English lyrics which he would like to recapture: with different originals it might have been a possible enterprise, but the gap between good Hellenistic poetry and a revived Caroline age in literature is really too great."

TLS p1110 S 17 '71 370w

SKILTON, DAVID. Anthony Trollope and his contemporaries; a study in the theory and conventions of mid-Victorian fiction. 170p $8.95 St Martins

823 Trollope, Anthony. English fiction—History and criticism
LC 72-183546

This book is a study of Anthony Trollope "and an examination of the background against which he and his . . . contemporaries wrote. . . . It provides an introduction to the literary and critical scene of the day . . . [and] offers an analysis of some . . . neglected aspects of the mid-Victorian theory of the novel. . . . [Skilton] examines Trollope's own brand of realism in the context of the theories of literary imagination current in the 1860's. . . . tackles the mid-Victorian dilemma of how, granted the need to portray vice in fiction, it was possible to write moral novels at all . . . [and] examines Trollope's own writing on the novel." (Publisher's note). Bibliography of contemporary British articles on Trollope. Index.

"[This is] a serviceable but specialized account of Trollope's reception in Victorian periodical literature that manages to be more paraphrase than analysis. The purpose is to establish the critical context within which Trollope wrote and to reveal the extent to which Trollope fulfills or disappoints the aesthetic assumptions of his contemporaries. Short as the book is, it is too long for the importance of its materials as they are treated. The organization and the emphasis suffer from the diffuseness of the thesis, and a book which could reveal much reveals little. . . . For those interested in the direct reaction of Trollope's journeymen contemporaries, Skilton's book will be informative and unique."

Choice 9:973 O '72 190w

"[Skilton's study] takes its useful place among a number of recent critical commentaries on the novelist. It pays particular attention to the conventions of Victorian fiction, imposed by the quite explicit demands of serious-minded middle-class readers. The problems posed by these expectations involved other authors besides Trollope, but Mr. Skilton concentrates on him because, though he had his detractors among the critics, he achieved such outstanding popularity."

SKILTON, DAVID—Continued

Economist 243:71 My 6 '72 150w

SKINNER, B. F. Beyond freedom and dignity. 225p $6.95 Knopf

150 Behavior. Civilization, Modern
ISBN 0-394-42555-3 LC 75-98652

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Morris Wolfe
Canadian Forum 51:12 Mr '72 3150w

Reviewed by W. I. Thompson
Canadian Forum 51:14 Mr '72 1550w
Choice 9:285 Ap '72 200w

Reviewed by Harold Kaplan
Commentary 53:82 F '72 3900w

Reviewed by Gerald Marwell
Contemp Sociol 1:19 Ja '72 2800w (Review symposium)

Reviewed by Robert Boguslaw
Contemp Sociol 1:19 Ja '72 3500w (Review symposium)

Reviewed by Leslie Dewart
Critic 30:69 Ja '72 1650w
Economist 242:70 Mr 18 '72 420w

Reviewed by Spencer Klaw
Natur Hist 81:81 Ja '72 1800w

Reviewed by Charles Rycroft
New Statesman 83:351 Mr 17 '72 800w

Reviewed by John Sullivan
Teach Col Rec 73:439 F '72 2550w
TLS p533 My 12 '72 2700w

SKINNER, JUNE (O'GRADY). See O'Grady, R.

SKINNER, TOM. How black is the gospel? 128p $4.95 Lippincott

201 Christianity—Philosophy. Church and race problems
LC 75-124544

"The Christian gospel, according to Skinner, is 'genuinely black, even as it is genuinely white'. The essential message of this . . . book is this. 'The answer to bigotry, hate and prejudice rests in a transformation of the individual through Jesus Christ.'" (Choice)

"In the tone of a Baptist sermon, the line of Skinner's argument runs parallel to the ancient Spiritual Exercises of St. Ignatius Loyola that call for total commitment to Christ against the prince of darkness whose principalities and powers are brooding heavy over the world. Instead of staving off the revolution with a conservative notion of reformation and reconciliation, Skinner desperately pleads with black Americans not to reject the gospel, as they are about to, but to identify their cause with the gospel message and pursue the true freedom of God's children in Christ Jesus. . . . [The book] can be recommended as contemporary spiritual reading." A. J. Prosen

America 124:242 Mr 6 '71 240w

"Tom Skinner is a black conservative evangelical Protestant Christian revivalist, ■ sort of black Billy Graham, who likes to appropriate the rhetoric of blackness and radicalism. . . . [His is a] sermonic book." Choice 8:244 Ap '71 60w

SKLARE, MARSHALL. America's Jews. (Ethnic groups in comparative perspective) 234p $6.95 Random house

301.45 Jews in the U.S.
ISBN 0-394-47349-3 LC 75-152858

This book focuses on the desire of American Jewry "to participate fully in American society and at the same time to retain Jewish identity. . . . The author's examination of the Jewish family structure and the problem of intermarriage . . . [is followed by his analysis of the] institutions, organizations, and agencies . . . American Jews have created, . . . the needs they serve and the functions which they fulfill." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 9:891 S '72 160w

"The focus of the work is on Jewish identity—its private and public faces, its normal and pathological aspects, the formal and informal means through which it is transmitted and reinforced. From this central investigation Sklare proceeds to an exploration of American Jews in relation to . . . the influences of world Jewry . . . and the countervailing influences of America, Christian, secular, and pluralist. . . . Written with an insider's commitment and ■ scholar's expertise, [this book] succeeds admirably in maintaining objectivity and distance. Without a doubt it is now the best single work we have about American Jews. Still, it is ■ popular work—to be consumed, so to speak, by college students and a mass Jewish audience." L. S. Dawidowicz

Commentary 54:93 Jl '72 1050w

Reviewed by R. J. Wechman
J Am Hist 59:481 S '72 300w

"Sklare, professor of American Jewish studies at Brandeis, has written a very sensible study of American Jewry, with an emphasis on such contemporary realities as relations among Jews of different national origins, intermarriage, connections with Israel. Not exactly new but ■ sound sociological study."

N Y Times Bk R p25 F 20 '72 90w

SKUTCH, MARGARET. To start a school [by] Margaret Skutch and Wilfrid G. Hamlin; with phot. by George S. Zimbel. 147p $5.95 Little 372.21 Early Learning Center, Stamford, Connecticut. Nursery schools

LC 76-170165

"This book describes the founding of the Early Learning Center in Stamford, Connecticut. Visited by thousands as a model educational facility, it was started by a mother (Skutch) with a great interest in children and learning and a need for a good school for her son. The authors . . . discuss how the children are taught, the materials used, and the building, all in terms of Montessori-related principles." (Library J)

"[The book] recounts the development of the early learning center for children, ages two through six, and the evolution of its director from housewife to professional via training as a Montessori teacher and study in the Goddard College Adult Degree program. Along the way, Skutch offers insights into how children learn and how adults learn from children. Particularly interesting is her discussion of the building which was designed specifically to meet the educational needs of the center. This book is human and readable with a reassuring honesty about the achievements and limitations of the school. There are many photographs." Choice 9:555 Je '72 160w

"The authors tell less about the mechanics of organizing such a school than about its educational philosophy. . . . An excellent book, it is a little on the self-congratulatory side, but interesting and well written. Recommended for education and general libraries." Judith Hoffman

Library J 96:3753 N 15 '71 100w

SLACK, PAUL, jt. ed. Crisis and order in English towns, 1500-1700. See Clark, P.

SLATTERY, SISTER MARY FRANCIS. Hazard, form, & value. 127p $7.50 Wayne state univ. press

701 Esthetics. Worth
ISBN 0-8143-1455-4 LC 77-161073

"Slattery introduces to writing on esthetics the term affective hazard, which she uses to denote that aspect of the beautiful, the sublime, the tragic and the comic, which excites people and which separates good art from dull. She traces the dependence of value on form and of form on hazard in works of art. Using illustrations from life, literature, and the other arts, the author discusses the place of order (form) and disorder (hazard) in esthetic experience. . . . She proposes a middle ground—the law of effective hazard—under which 'Everything in the universe is related to every other thing with excitement that is directly proportional to the square of the distance (obstacle to occurrence, hazard) between them.' [She applies] this principle to form and value." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This exciting book] is recommended for both graduate and undergraduate students in the humanities. . . . [It] makes ■ distinctive contribution to the theory of art." Choice 9:632 Jl/Ag '72 180w

"[In this] book of aesthetics . . . every page gives away the author's affection for art and ability to write about it in a fresh personal style that sometimes rises to eloquence. [The study] abounds in felicitous and illuminating local insights. . . . Much of the book's value comes from the observations on specific poetic practices, which give both clarification and support to the central thesis. . . . Basically, my impression is that [the author] tries to subsume too much, too great a variety of aesthetic phenomena, under the three key headings."

J Aesthetics 31:123 fall '72 1150w

SLAUGHTER, JEAN. And it came to pass; Bible verses and carols sel. by Jean Slaughter; il. by Leonard Weisgard. unp $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

783.6 Carols—Juvenile literature. Jesus Christ—Nativity—Juvenile literature
LC 70-127471

"From 'O Little Town of Bethlehem,' which sets the scene, to 'Joy to the world,' in which the news of Christ's birth is spread, the carols, with bridging material from the Gospel of St. Luke, tell the Nativity story." (Publisher's note) "Grades one to three." (Library J)

"[This is a] dignified presentation of the Nativity. . . . Children may need explanation of some of the Biblical terms. . . . Slaughter's well-synthesized Biblical quotations and carols, with piano and guitar arrangements given, smoothly and logically succeed each other. . . . The scores and the lovely, delicate, pen-and-ink drawings are printed across double-page spreads. These spreads alternate with the Bible verses, which are printed in large, dark, clear type on the right side of the right-hand pages; the full-color paintings face them, extending across 1 1/2 pages. Though these paintings often have a heavy, immobile, frozen look, the book as a whole is a satisfying way to learn about and to view the Nativity."

D. G. Stavn

Library J 96:3486 O 15 '71 280w

"The 'reverent' illustrations by Leonard Weisgard have the same pious quality I remember from parochial school holy cards."

Jane O'Reilly

N Y Times Bk R p90 D 5 '71 60w

Reviewed by Zena Sutherland
Sat R 54:45 D 11 '71 20w

SLAVITT, DAVID R. The Eclogues and the Georgics of Virgil [hy] David R. Slavitt; drawings by Raymond Davidson. 220p $7.95 Doubleday

811

LC 71-186659

Slavitt has rewritten Virgil's "poems in English, bringing out what he conceives to have been the essence of Virgil's literary achievement." (Va Q R)

"This is not just another translation of Virgil, but a free and imaginative interpretation in a moving prose poetry, through which one artist meditates upon the work of another. Slavitt's stream of consciousness wrests from the text its purpose and meaning, not only for Virgil and Roman times but for Slavitt and our own times as well. The touching adaptation of the story of Orpheus and Eurydice, tinged with tragedy and irony, is typical of the universality of Slavitt's insights. In particular, a boon for the drudgery of the Latin class; in general, a fascinating re-creation for all those interested in great poetry." R. J. Lenardon

Library J 97:2189 Je 15 '72 160w

"It is much easier to say what this book is not than to define what it is. It is not a translation into English of Virgil's 'Eclogues' and 'Georgics,' and it is not a series of poems about these same works of Virgil. Yet it has something of both of these characters. Mr. Slavitt describes in his Preface what he is trying to do, but he has trouble himself in making it quite clear. The impetus came, he states, from Robert Graves's hostile Oxford lecture on Virgil 'the Anti-Poet.' . . . Slavitt employs many of the Virgilian conventions, and uses much of Virgil's subject-matter, but along with so doing he reinterprets Virgil by casting what he wrote in more modern thought-patterns. This he does with notable sensitivity to the fundamental nature of Virgil's art."

Va Q R 48:cxv autumn '72 240w

SLEIGHT, JACK. Home book of smoke-cooking meat, fish & game [by] Jack Sleight & Raymond Hull. 160p il $7.95 Stackpole bks.

641.4 Food—Preservation. Cookery
ISBN 0-8117-0803-9 LC 76-162445

In addition to reviewing "the history of smoke cookery and curing . . . an explanation of the composition of smoke and its effect on protein foods . . . and tips on record keeping to ensure . . . success . . . [the book provides] step-by-step directions for constructing a smoke oven. . . . [There are] recipes—on brines for fish and meat . . . methods for dry curing . . . cold smoking . . . flavorings . . . temperatures [etc.]." (Publisher's note)

"Some of us have never heard of smoked chicken, kidneys, chicken wings, cheese and garlic bread. But it's all in this new book. . . . For the inveterate barbecuer, the next step after the complete barbecue pit is the smoke oven. And, according to this book of plans, directions and recipes, where there's smoke, there can be great flavor." P. H.

Christian Science Monitor pB7 N 18 '71 190w

"[Sleight and Hull's book] teaches you with diagrams and cogent explanation, how to smoke food in family rather than commercial quantities. It is an invaluable reference work, the first of the kind I know that evaluates the equipment and methods of smoking (down to canning smoked food) and gives tested recipes as well. . . . [It] would make [an] excellent present for men interested in the kitchen." Nika Hazelton

N Y Times Bk R p35 D 12 '71 70w

ŠLJIVIĆ-ŠIMŠIĆ, BILJANA. Serbocroatian-English dictionary. See Benson, M.

SLOAN, DOUGLAS. The Scottish enlightenment and the American college ideal. 288p $10 Teachers college press

378.73 Colleges and universities—U.S.—History. Enlightenment. Scotland—Intellectual life
LC 75-132933

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by James Axtell

Am Hist R 77:1500 D '72 330w

Reviewed by John Calam

Ann Am Acad 400:176 Mr '72 450w

Reviewed by K. V. Lottich

Social Studies 63:182 Ap '72 450w

SLOAN, JAMES PARK. The case history of Comrade V; a novel. 148p $4.95 Houghton
ISBN 0-395-13526-5 LC 71-184114

"Comrade V., a gifted mathematician, confined in an institution, is compelled each day to read a computer print-out of his own case history, which, however, varies in accuracy from day to day for reasons he can only guess. His imprisonment, we see, is patently political: he has made himself a nuisance and an embarrassment to his state by commenting on political subjects while off receiving Nobel-type prizes. This we learn from the print-out. From his diary, which follows, we learn of the various inaccuracies in the print-out . . . His reasons for divorcing his wife were not so calculating, his passion for the actress R. more compelling, and so on. It appears, also, that someone on the outside is mounting a plot to help him escape." (Book World)

"Sloan's novel is set in a nameless totalitarian state only because a rigid frame sets off the game of shifting identities which is the purpose of the tale. In fact, the game is the tale, for nothing really happens except the presentation of the circular proposition that artist equals masquerader equals lunatic equals artist. It is possible to admire the author's ingenuity without caring a hoot about what it achieves." Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:112 My '72 70w

Reviewed by F. L. Rvan

Best Sell 32:94 My 15 '72 600w

"This novel is a description—but not, I think, a satire—of the treatment of mental illness in some future, faintly Russian, faintly Western state where the name of Freud is still remembered, as an amiably Kafkaesque world, not at all frightening. We join Comrade V., his analyst, and the system in an agile puzzle which questions the foundations of sanity, the premises of sanity, and even perhaps the advantages of sanity, since it demonstrates, to my mind at least, that there are many advantages to madness. . . . [This book] is intriguing. . . . from the start to finish." Diane Johnson

SLOAN, J. P.—Continued

Book World p3 Ap 23 '72 450w

"The excursions into mathematical and psychological jargon are enjoyable, but the book is not compellingly exciting; nor is it of any outstanding political or moral importance." S. R. Rounds

Library J 97:1741 My 1 '72 160w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Nat R 24:802 J1 21 '72 400w

Reviewed by John Deck
N Y Times Bk R p6 Je 18 '72 500w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 80:95 J1 10 '72 250w

Reviewed by George Malko
Sat R 55:57 J1 15 '72 440w

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Time 99:82 My 1 '72 500w

SLOANE, EUGENE A. The complete book of bicycling. 342p il $9.95 Trident press 796.6 Bicycles and bicycling
ISBN 0-671-27058-2 LC 71-101246

The author provides "guidance in selecting, buying, adjusting, maintaining, making long trips, camping, riding, touring, racing." (N Y Times Bk R) "Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"A helpful appendix includes a dictionary of cycling terms and listings of organizations, supply sources, and magazines for the enthusiast. Recommended generally." D. M. Hoffman
Library J 95:4191 D 1 '70 100w

Library J 96:294 Ja 15 '71 20w [YA]

"The best-known modern bike book—the most read, most quoted, most referred to by cyclists about to lay wrench on headset or about to lay out money on bikes, accessories or parts. . . . There will be bike books coming, one hears, with many things covered in greater detail, such as assembly instructions for every make of gear; at present there is no bike book covering the whole subject like this one. . . . Some of Mr. Sloane's advice is only his opinion; but if you have none of your own, you must get it somewhere. For beginners this book is especially useful as a guide to usefulness and value." H. C. Gardner
N Y Times Bk R p3 Je 4 '72 160w

SLONIMSKY, NICOLAS. Music since 1900. 4th ed 1595p $49.50 Scribner

780 Music—History and criticism
ISBN 0-654-10550-0 LC 70-114929

This is "more than twice as large as the 1949 . . . edition [BRD 1949]. . . . The descriptive chronology has been updated to mid-1969, and in many cases earlier entries have been augmented. The expanded 'Letters and Documents' section now includes letters from Charles Ives and Edgar Varèse, the 'Resolution of the Fire and Police Research of Los Angeles on Subversive Perils of American Folk Music,' a letter from Ralph Nader on noise pollution produced by rock bands, etc." (Library J) For the first and third editions see BRD 1937 and 1949.

"This is necessarily a selective, personal compilation. . . . An unnamed critic once quip-pishly called Music Since 1900 'that impeccably kept graveyard of our century.' However, the career of Mr. Slonimsky suggests that he is as well prepared as any man to judge the value of modern music. . . . The 90-page Index . . . is of vital importance to such a chronologically arranged reference work as this. About 79 percent of the entries are personal names, mostly of composers or performers of music. Thus one cannot locate librettists, authors whose writings provided plot ideas, or noted figures who have been commemorated musically. The remaining 21 percent of the Index includes places, organizations, terms, and titles other than those of the compositions premiered, which appear only under their composers' names. Useful information is lost for lack of more subject or term entries. . . . The writing is personal in tone, often amusing, but with passages comprehensible only by a specialist with a dictionary. The Index is not wholly adequate for a massive chronology. Recommended."

Booklist 68:914 J1 1 '72 1850w

"A splendid chronicle of recent music, indispensable on the music reference shelf. It supersedes the 1949 edition. . . . The early material is often rewritten; there are a few omissions, presumably judicious. . . . The emphasis is strictly highbrow; don't expect to find Scott Joplin or King Oliver . . . Frank Sinatra or Bob Dylan. . . . The serious composer is handsomely covered, thanks to the compiler's fastidious accuracy, his skill in handling hyperacuminous sesquipedalianisms (p. 1489), and occasional well chosen contemporary quotations."

Choice 9:48 Mr '72 130w

Library J 97:62 Ja 1 '72 90w

SMART, ALASTAIR. The Assisi problem and the art of Giotto: a study of the Legend of St Francis in the Upper Church of San Francesco, Assisi. 311p il pl $25.75 Oxford

759.5 Giotto di Bondone—Legend of Saint Francis (Painting)
ISBN 0-19-817166-8 LC 78-26697

This study deals "with Giotto and the frescoes in the Upper Church at Assisi. Smart builds on the . . . work of Richard Offner by focusing attention on the St. Cecilia Master and others of the 'non-Giottoesque' tradition. . . . authors of the Assisi Legend of St. Francis. [The author also] provides a . . . discussion of the paintings of Assisi—their style and iconography, examines the documentary evidence, and, for comparison, briefly discusses the authentic work of Giotto." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is an] excellent and important study. . . . An appendix contains a helpful translation of the texts used with the paintings from Bonaventure's Legenda major. . . . Excellent black-and-white plates."

Choice 8:1006 O '71 260w

"[Smart] undertakes a detailed study . . . to prove that Giotto was not the author [of the frescoes]. . . . A major contribution to the Giotto literature. For the scholarly library." J. L. Dewton

Library J 96:2625 S 1 '71 210w

SMART, ALASTAIR. The Renaissance and mannerism in Italy. 252p il col il $6.95 Harcourt

709.45 Art, Italian. Art, Renaissance. Mannerism (Art)
ISBN 0-15-176825-0 LC 76-113711

The author seeks to "show how the unique fusion between Christian and pagan culture which took place in Florence in the early fifteenth century was received and transformed by the later Quattrocento throughout Italy, leading to the climax of Papal Rome under Julius II, to the still controversial change of mood called Mannerism, and to the final flowering in sixteenth-century Venice. Each artist is . . . characterized and related to the forces, spiritual and social, that moulded his imagination." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"[This very readable book] spans Italian art from [Ghiberti's] baptistry doors to Tintoretto."

Professor Smart, head of the department of fine art at the University of Nottingham, has contributed [this] . . . title to a new history of art in seven volumes; a variant, in unchanged format, of [the] publisher's 'World of Art' library. As with that series there are numerous illustrations, but the colour ones are not up to scratch."

Economist 243:56 Ap 1 '72 40w

"The purpose of [a] book of this type is to provide a quick overview of an enormous chunk of art history. . . . By discussing key figures and their works in depth and excluding many minor ones, the author [has] . . . presented the essence of a period. [The] layout seems cramped and illustrations mediocre, but no more so than usual for small inexpensive volumes of this kind." A. D. Ross

Library J 97:[2079] Je 1 '72 40w

"The text of this book is most acceptable as a general survey of the renaissance and mannerist manifestations in Italy. But [its] real contribution . . . lies in its 178 illustrations. Printed on a mat paper, both the black and white and the color plates have exceptionally fine register and definition. The color plates . . . give some idea of differences in the palettes of various painters, an effect that is seldom seen even in far more costly volumes. For this we must thank the publisher."

Va Q R 48:xxxvi spring '72 90w

SMELSER, MARSHALL. The winning of independence. 427p $10 Quadrangle bks.

973.3 U.S.—History—Revolution
SBN 8129-0189-4 LC 79-156334

"The first of a projected six-volume history of the American Revolutionary era [covering the period from 1763 to 1787]. . . . This volume [offers] a survey of political, diplomatic, military and financial developments from Boston in 1774 to Paris in 1783." (N Y Times Bk R) Index.

Reviewed by R. A. Brown
Ann Am Acad 403:204 S '72 400w
Choice 9:276 Ap '72 220w

"[This] is a competent political and military narrative of the Revolutionary War written for general readers. . . . Smelser's American partisanship limits his ability to appreciate recent work on British politics and policies. . . . Nevertheless, this is an informed and (except for his treatment of the British) reliable account. Smelser's judgments possess a tough-minded realism, while his down-to-earth prose style, if never inspired or elegant, is always clear. [The book] should satisfy the audience for which it is intended." R. D. Brown
J Am Hist 59:411 S '72 300w

Reviewed by Jerry Cao
Library J 96:2770 S 15 '71 230w

"[This work] is a digest of all the latest research and writing on the subject. Professor Smelser, a well-thought-of professor at Notre Dame, presents no new interpretations or theses of his own, occasionally provides a sensible insight, but his book is so fact-packed as to interfere with reading. It can, however, be consulted and studied with profit."

N Y Times Bk R p37 Mr 26 '72 100w

"Literary and scholarly contributions to the United States' bicentennial celebration are occupying ever larger portions of publisher's advertisements. . . . Relying largely on published manuscript material and on secondary works, Mr. Smelser has synthesized much of recent Revolutionary War historiography. The author's fascination with the personal eccentricities of some Revolutionary Americans as well as his witty style give the book a humorous dimension so often lacking in historical narratives. The style does not, however, detract from the competent generalizations concerning American military 'progress,' her diplomatic efforts, and the work of the Continental Congress. In short, this is an effective and readable scholarly summation that is indeed a positive contribution to the literature of the bicentennial."

Va Q R 48:lxiv spring '72 150w

SMIRNOFF, VICTOR. The scope of child analysis; foreword by M. Masud R. Khan; tr. from the French by Stephen Corrin and revised by the author. 233p $8.50 Int. univs. press

618.9 Psychoanalysis. Child study. Child psychiatry
ISBN 0-8236-6010-9 LC 70-160286

"Smirnov delineates the scope of child analysis and its relation to the allied fields of child psychiatry and psychology. He gives [an] account of the various schools in child analysis, discussing the contributions of Anna Freud, Melanie Klein, and D. W. Winnicott, and also describes research work carried out in France and America." (Publisher's note) Index. Bibliography.

Choice 9:581 Je '73 100w

"This is intended as a clarification of the various clinical and theoretical viewpoints of child analysis with the context of child psychiatry. . . . The author is writing not for analysts, but for those interested in the 'human sciences.'" A. J. Sprow
Library J 97:2106 Je 1 '72 150w

"Dr Smirnov gives a picture of the balance of factors thought to be at work in making us either cranky or effective: endocrine, dietetic, genetic, etc., and what we are unconsciously taught. He makes it plausible to believe that permanent qualities are established through mothering from the earliest weeks of life onwards, and shows how this influencing in the first hours and weeks after birth takes place. His balanced, accurate book is an excellent guide to the subject."

TLS p425 Ap 14 '72 330w

SMITH, A. G. CAIRNS. See Cairns-Smith. A. G.

SMITH, ADAM. Supermoney [by] 'Adam Smith.' 301p $7.95 Random house

322.6 Stock exchange. Investments
ISBN 0-394-47993-9 LC 72-2732

Taking off from his theory of 'supermoney,' or, as he calls it throughout the book, Super-currency, the corporate capital accredited usually to big conglomerates. . . . [The author has written a series of essays dealing] with such subjects as the bear market of 1970, the brokers and the backroom boys, Swiss banks, mutual funds, and the big auditing firms." (Publishers' Weekly)

"'Supermoney' is the somewhat disappointing sequel to 'The Money Game' [BRD 1968]. . . . The last four years have seen some of the zest go out of 'the game,' and maybe the book only reflects that change. . . . [Nevertheless, it] makes entertaining reading on a subject of concern to America's 35 million shareholders. For that reason alone it should do well at the bookstores. . . . If 'The Money Game' was a paean of joy to the game, this book is more of a lament on the changes coming over Wall Street. As such, it serves as instruction and warning. All its pages are entertaining, but its message is simple and sobering." Richard Nenneman
Christian Science Monitor p13 O 18 '72 650w

"While other writers impale Wall Street on their pens, few have this author's grace. A worthy . . . complement for investors, from the professional portfolio manager to odd lot Robert." E. B. Christianson
Library J 97:3308 O 15 '72 130w

Reviewed by T. J. Wheeler
Nat R 24:1313 N 24 '72 250w

Reviewed by Peter Passell and Leonard Ross
N Y Times Bk R p6 O 15 '72 1200w

"Supermoney . . . is written in the same zesty style and includes some of the earlier book's unforgettable characters—the Great Winfield, who invested in cocoa and waited for the inevitable cocoa shortage that never came, 'Poor Grenville,' called 'poor' because he's always in cash when he should be in stocks. But the new book is jumpier, less sure of itself, and the tone is more somber; nervousness licks at the edges of its charm. The message of Supermoney is not simply that nobody really knows how to play the game, but that the game may be ending. . . . Goodman describes his own 'sure thing' mistake, his partnership (out of earnings from The Money Game) in a Swiss bank [that went broke trying to corner the cocoa market]." Eliot Fremont-Smith
Sat R 55:69 O 21 '72 1500w

SMITH, ANTHONY. Mato Grosso; last virgin land; an account of the Mato Grosso, based on the Royal Society and Royal Geographical Society expedition to central Brazil, 1967-9. 288p il maps $17.50 Dutton

918.1 Mato Grosso. Brazil—Description and travel. Natural history—Brazil
SBN 514256 LC 71-171020

The Mato Grosso of Brazil "had until recently been explored only along its rivers. Its interior—a rich forest plateau—is the land of the Xavante and other tribes of the Xingú. Soon after Brazil moved its capital to Brasilia in 1960, plans began to drive a road through the . . . interior of Mato Grosso. This book is [an] account of . . . the Royal Society/Royal Geographical Society scientific expedition to investigate in depth the flora, fauna, climate, soils, rocks and human inhabitants of Mato Grosso." (Publisher's note) Index.

Choice 9:1194 N '72 270w

"Mr Smith has written the best kind of travel book. . . . [It] combines a necessary appetite for the exotic with the gritty, evocative prose of a man who has tramped over the ground and never lets his readers forget about ticks, ants, tropical diseases and how easy it is to go mad in the jungle. [He] draws intelligently on the varied talents of the men and women who made up the expedition to provide fascinating potted accounts of the Indians' herbal contraceptives, the social life of the termite community or the natural cycle of an ox-bow lake. Beyond a few intriguing anecdotes, Mr Smith has little to contribute to the nascent literature on the tribes of the Mato Grosso. What he has produced instead is a very personal essay on the pullulating life of the forest."

Economist 241:65 D 4 '71 280w

SMITH, ANTHONY—Continued

"This record of the . . . Brazilian project to construct a 500-mile road through primitive, unexplored jungle will magnetize beginning scientists, sociologists, and photographers. . . . Would-be biologists will be fascinated by the array of insects, mammals, birds, fish, and plants which assault the health and security of the Indians and the photographs alone will provoke curiosity, interest and pleasure. A book for browsing or in-depth study. YA's with a thirst for adventure and a curiosity for the living conditions of past have a treat in store." M. C. Blalock

Library J 97:1939 My 15 '72 110w [YA]

"This book is both a delight and a frustration. It is a visual delight because its incomparable color photographs convey directly to the reader's senses the essence of natural beauty and wonder to be found in the heartland of Brazil. It is frustrating because it documents, through a somewhat ethnocentric point of view, the rich natural setting of a Garden of Eden in the process of being dismantled and reshaped by 'progress.' . . . It is ironic that the highly trained researchers who came from across the Atlantic to delve into the mysteries of the Mato Grosso forests were, by and large, ignorant of Brazil and Brazilians. The account conveys an attitude of fascination with something that is exotic and not quite part of the real world. . . . There are minor errors." K. E. Webb

Natur Hist 81:88 My '72 1200w

"[This volume by] the journalist attached to the expedition whose reports of it appeared regularly in the pages of The Times, is of the glossy genre. However, it must be added that in comparison with many documentary television films on South America [it] . . . is outstandingly sober and well-informed. Indeed the author must be congratulated on avoiding the clichés to which the Amazonian region invariably gives rise (although . . . there are rather too many Edens). [Smith] is at his best when describing life in central Brazil . . . and of the development of the region which is taking place. The text, however, accounts for only a little over half the books, the rest consists of photographs and they certainly make the book. They are mainly in colour and with few exceptions are of excellent quality."

TLS p1546 D 10 '71 500w

SMITH, BRADLEY F. Heinrich Himmler: a Nazi in the making, 1900-1926. 211p il $6.95 Hoover inst. press

B or 92 Himmler, Heinrich
SBN 8179-1931-7 LC 79-137403

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Review by Robert Koehl
Am Hist R 77:1144 O '72 450w

Reviewed by Raul Hilberg
Am Pol Sci R 65:1230 D '71 1000w

Reviewed by J. S. Wozniak
Ann Am Acad 401:180 My '72 350w

SMITH, BRUCE L. R., ed. The dilemma of accountability in modern government; independence versus control; ed. by Bruce L. R. Smith and D. C. Hague. 391p $15 St Martins 350 Contracts. Democracy. Public administration
LC 75-142427

This is a "comparative study of the growing phenomenon in modern government, the contracting for services with private organizations, and of how to square this usage with the need for accountability to the people in democratic systems. The several authors . . . wrote papers for a joint meeting on the problem, held in England [at Ditchley Park, Oxford] in 1969. . . . The original papers are supplemented . . . by two . . . introductory pieces commenting on the problem from the American and British points of view." (Choice) Index.

"Oddly enough, though the practice [this book] analyzes has been carried on for a good many years, this is the first work devoted to the dimensions of the problem, the range of the private institutions involved, and its implications for government. As the president of the Carnegie Corporation says in his foreword, this initial treatment is 'incomplete. . . a tentative venture, into a new field' Even so, it is a remarkably incisive discussion of an increasingly serious problem in democratic government."

Choice 8:1248 N '71 220w

"[This is an] exceptionally able collection of papers. . . . The contrast between the opening and the closing papers is illuminating. At first sight it looked doubtful whether the two sides were really concerned with the same subject. This was partly because the papers were in each case naturally directed to particularly interesting problems which had arisen in national experience. . . . On closer inspection, however, the gap between the two sides was narrower than it first appeared."

On the whole, both American and British authorities have found the problems of political accountability more intractable than those of financial accountability. . . . The Ditchley conference opened up more problems than it solved. The boundaries of discussion grew wider with each attempt to define them. But what could have been a diffuse and 'dilettante exploration', to use the phrase of a British academic, took on an almost awe-inspiring character under the impact of first-class minds."

TLS p527 My 7 '71 1550w

SMITH, CECIL WOODHAM-. See Woodham-Smith, C.

SMITH, CHARLES MERRILL. Instant status; or, How to become a pillar of the upper middle class. 202p $5.95 Doubleday

817 Middle classes. Satire. Wit and humor
LC 77-157624

A "study of the ways to master 'the genteel UMC [Upper Middle Class] manners and gracious life style portrayed on television soap operas and cigarette ads.' The approved UMC occupations are analyzed. . . . Also the preferred occupation—a corporation job. . . . Here are specific directions to the ambitious young man for choosing the right wife . . . [home, church, diet, drink,] and attitudes about sex." (N Y Times Bk R)

"In his earlier book . . . The Pearly Gates Syndicate [BRD 1971], Smith good-naturedly spoofs the pieties of traditional religious practice. Here the former Methodist minister uses his iconoclastic wit to discredit the cozy and fond emblems of the upper middle class. The author's knock-down commentaries on the life styles and values of the ubiquitous middle class and his tongue-in-cheek suggestions on how to become a solid member of that class, which he presents in a disarming matter-of-fact style, are painfully accurate; but a little goes a long way. Smith is so relentless in his pursuit of the foibles of the middle class that the book suffers from over-kill." A. J. Anderson

Library J 97:875 Mr 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Paul Showers
N Y Times Bk R p14 Mr 12 '72 650w

SMITH, DAVID E., ed. "It's so good, don't even try it once"; heroin in perspective; ed. by David E. Smith and George R. Gay. (A Spectrum bk) 208p $5.95; pa $2.45 Prentice-Hall

362.2 Heroin. Narcotic habit
ISBN 0-13-506592-5; 0-13-506584 (pa)
LC 72-3966

This "collection of articles on heroin edited by two doctors who have worked for five years at the Haight-Ashbury Free [Medical] Clinic, treating over 3,000 addicts [includes] pieces on the history of heroin legislation, the pharmacology of heroin, drug use in Vietnam, [and] various forms of treatment from methadone to therapeutic communities like Synanon." (N Y Times Bk R) Some of the material appeared in The International Journal of Addictions, 4, no. 1 (March 1969) and in the Journal of Psychedelic Drugs, Glossary.

"[This volume] covers medical, social, psychological, and legal aspects of the problem. Of particular interest are the discussions of drug addiction among American troops in Vietnam, the experiences of the Haight-Ashbury free clinic, and the relationship between the current political/social climate of the U.S. and the increasing number of addicts from middle-class white families. The articles represent a wide range of experience." R. H. Lipsett

Library J 97:2631 Ag '72 100w

"No easy answers emerge, of course, and the contributors occasionally tend to politicize the problem, but this is a good collection—it reflects advanced thinking about heroin and provides some historical perspective."
N Y Times Bk R p38 O 8 '72 80w

SMITH, DENIS MACK. See Mack Smith, D.

SMITH, DENNIS. Report from Engine Co. 82. 215p $5.95 McCall bks.

B or 92 New York (City)—Firemen. New York (City)—Fires and fire prevention ISBN 0-8415-0138-6 LC 71-154259

"A fireman stationed in the black ghetto section of the Bronx in New York . . . describes dangerous fires and emergency treatment of accident and drug-overdose victims. He shows how pride in their profession, friendship, and bawdy humor sustain the firemen in spite of the risk of injury or death, frequent false alarms, arson in abandoned buildings, and bureaucratic frustrations." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. J. Sheeran
America 126:541 My 20 '72 150w

Reviewed by Anthony Siallys
Best Sell 31:491 F 1 '72 410w

"Smith's book works on many levels: as an ode to fire fighting, as a manual on his profession, and as an assault on the clichés that demean men who work with their hands. . . . If [it] has a fault, it is that it is a mite too long. But . . . for anyone who is seeking a rare insight into the working class of America Smith's book is a must." Joe Flaherty
Book World p8 Mr 12 '72 850w

Reviewed by M. S. Cosgrave
Horn Bk 48:495 O '72 230w

"An excellent triple portrait: of the firefighters and their work, of Smith and his family, and of the people who live in the slums surrounding the firehouse." David Cooley
Library J 97:492 F 1 '72 120w

Reviewed by Carol Coon
Library J 97:2496 J1 '72 110w [YA]
N Y Times Bk R p20 Ap 16 '72 240w
New Yorker 47:116 F 19 '72 160w

"This book is a personal account about what it's like to be a fireman in New York's South Bronx, one of the biggest and most explosive ghettos in the nation. . . . Many embittered residents of those crumbling, rat-infested tenements regard firemen, along with cops, as the enemy. Smith, an eight-year veteran of the department, has been cursed, stoned, spat upon. . . . His firehouse is perhaps the busiest in the world; Engine Co. 82 responds to some 8,000 calls a year, more than 2,000 of which last year were false alarms. . . . But Smith has seen more action in the South Bronx than even he bargained for. . . . [His] book is illuminating as journalism, provocative as sociology." Arthur Cooper
Newsweek 79:72A Ja 24 '72 550w

Reviewed by D. W. McCullough
Sat R 55:68 Ap 8 '72 600w

SMITH, EDWARD LUCIE-. See Lucie-Smith E.

SMITH, EDWIN. II. England. See England

SMITH, ELWYN A. Religious liberty in the United States; the development of church-state thought since the revolutionary era. 386p $10.95 Fortress press 261.7 Religious liberty. Church and state in the U.S.

ISBN 0-8006-0071-1 LC 70-178093

"The volume is a historical treatment of ideas about religious liberty. [It] is divided into three parts: (1) 'The Separatist Tradition,' (2) 'The Catholic Tradition' and (3) 'The Constitutional Tradition.' In the first section the author explains the 'church-state thought' of Roger Williams, Jonathan Edwards, Lyman Beecher and more recent figures. He concludes the section with a survey of modern denominational pronouncements on church-state issues. . . . The second section reviews the thought of Catholic writers, including John Carroll, Orestes Brownson, John Ireland, John A. Ryan and John Courtney Murray. . . . The third section explains the chief church-state decisions of the U.S. Supreme Court." (Christian Century) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Smith has written what might be called a 'definitive work' on the history of ideas about religious liberty in this country. Some of his exposition is convoluted and turgid, and at least 23 typographical errors have crept in—all but six of them serious 'sense errors' which only an author can catch. But on the whole it is a useful reference work for any American's library, and a book to start one thinking about prospects for the development of religious liberty during America's approaching third century." D. M. Kelley

Christian Century 89:1134 N 8 '72 500w

"Smith, editor of The Religion of the Republic [BRD 1971] . . . surveys a wealth of resources—legal, historical, and religious—which documents the interaction between church and state on issues such as religious toleration, church taxation, and aid to parochial schools. . . . His analysis of major tendencies and additional bibliographical essay should provide helpful directions for college students and scholars. Citizens concerned about current problems will find this a useful reference tool for reviewing the issues, particularly the significant court cases." M. M. Wilson
Library J 97:2622 Ag '72 130w

SMITH, F. V. Purpose in animal behaviour. 192p il maps $7.50 Hillary house

591.5 Animals—Habits and behavior
ISBN 0-09-109130-6 LC [72-176056]

The author "focuses upon the 'purposiveness' (and adaptive consequences) of behavior. Topics include attachment, orientation and navigation, sexual rituals, territory and social organization in primates." (Choice)

"[This book] will provide some interesting reading for the serious student of animal behavior. It is neither an introductory nor an advanced text. . . . Smith gives a good synopsis of selected studies related to the . . . topics [he discusses]. He provides the reader with 'a vista of different species contending with similar basic problems, but with different behavioral resources.' Independence, variability, and retention of behavior are his criteria of purposiveness which he ably demonstrates. The approach of this author to the question of purposive behaviorism is sound but conservative (if not shallow) and the reader may well be neither stimulated nor provoked."

Choice 9:673 J1/Ag '72 150w

"The examples chosen to illustrate this study are all fairly well known and are drawn almost wholly from the vertebrates, including man. The author . . . describes some features in the social organization in primates and gives a short and rather unsatisfactory account of man's early ancestors. It is unfortunate that these chapters do not generate the kind of discussion that the first part of the book seems to promise."

TLS p1637 D 31 '71 700w

SMITH, GEORGE E. P.O.W.: two years with the Vietcong; with an introd. and epilogue by Donald Duncan. 304p il $5.95 Ramparts press

959.7 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —Personal narratives. Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- — Prisoners and prisons
ISBN 0-87867-011-4 LC 74-172286

"Duncan, a journalist, has organized this account from tape recordings made by Smith, covering the time Smith spent fighting with the Special Forces in Vietnam and as a prisoner of war of the Vietcong." (Library J)

"Smith's reporting is believable and he uses the 'you are there' theme to usher the reader behind the barbed wire fence with the usual cordon of guards and other gracious hosts. Surprisingly, the Vietcong is not the monster we are led to believe and a total comprehension of their attitude toward our POW's is most vividly brought out in this chronology of confinement. . . . Make no mistake about it, there is no kid-glove treatment and the senseless marches, confinement cages, and other discomforts are ever present. [But] for some reason or other, we find that the Vietcong are really members of the human race." Al Phillips

Best Sell 31:464 Ja 15 '72 270w

"Smith contrasts the torture and death which he saw inflicted on Vietcong captured by Saigon forces with the treatment he and his fellow prisoners received. He sees his physical lot as no worse than that of the Vietcong soldier, and the reader may infer that the hardships described by some are as much the result of culture shock as of intentional mistreatment. Contrasting as it does with the official U.S. picture of the Vietcong, and being largely free of political cant, this informative firsthand account should be of considerable interest to any American concerned about U.S. policy in Vietnam, and particularly to any young person faced with service in the U.S. Army." J. M. Elrod

SMITH, G. E.—Continued

Library J 97:677 F 15 '72 150w

SMITH, H. SHELTON. In his image, but racism in Southern religion, 1780-1910. 318p $8.50 Duke Univ. press

261.8 Church and race problems
ISBN 0-8223-0273-X LC 72-81338

This book "examines the various aspects of [the] anti-black movement between 1780 and 1910, and . . . [the] impact of white racism upon human relations in the South. . . . Although the South is the area of major attention, its racial ideology and patterns of white supremacy are explored in relation to the racial sentiments and practices prevailing elsewhere in the United States. From this inter-regional perspective, the author argues that while racism has usually been more virulent in the South, it has never been a peculiar malady of southerners." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This] will certainly come to be regarded as the best book on the religious base of southern whites' views of blacks. Not self-consciously revisionist, the author simply sets out to tell a story, which turns out to be a sad story of the betrayal of religious beliefs in the face of social prejudices. Though he never lets the non-south in America 'off the hook,' he concentrates on the particular forms racism took in Dixie. Based on a fresh reading of often-overlooked sources."

Christian Century 89:830 Ag 16 '72 90w

"This is the first major account examining the role of Southern churches in the development of racism in America. . . . This scholarly study, highly recommended for academic libraries is an important contribution to understanding the complications of racism."

J. L. Forsythe

Library J 97:2840 S 15 '72 100w

SMITH, IAIN CRICHTON. See Crichton Smith, I.

SMITH, JANET B., ed. Collected poems. See Stevenson, R. L.

SMITH, JOHN M., jt. auth. Aspen: dream & dilemmas. See Clifford, P.

SMITH, JUDITH G., ed. Political brokers; money, organizations, power, and people, by the editors and reporters of National Journal. 363p $7.95 Liveright

329 Lobbying

ISBN 0-87140-552-0 LC 79-183387

"A study by National Journal editors and reporters, of such lobbying organizations as Americans for Democratic Action, Common Cause, Americans for Constitutional Action, the American Medical Association. . . . Each piece gives [some] . . . history, describes the purpose of the group, its techniques, effectiveness, etc." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Recommended for undergraduate libraries."
Choice 9:884 S '72 170w

"Here is a useful and depressing volume giving . . . membership data and brief biographical sketches of key figures. There is also an appendix listing nearly 200 other pressure organizations including 18 Democratic party committees, which cast $4 million on the waters in 1970, and 17 Republican party committees dispensing $13 million."

New Repub 166:32 Mr 18 '72 190w

"A useful book—long on facts, short on theory."

N Y Times Bk R p22 Ap 16 '72 60w

SMITH, LACEY BALDWIN. Henry VIII: the mask of royalty. 335p il $8.95 Houghton

B or 92 Henry VIII, King of England

ISBN 0-395-12723-8 LC 70-162004

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Helen Miller

Am Hist R 77:1443 D '72 600w

Choice 9:123 Mr '72 190w

Reviewed by Harold Hobson

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ja 6 '72 550w

Reviewed by R. R. Rea

Library J 97:492 F 1 '72 90w

Reviewed by Lawrence Stone

N Y Times Bk R p4 D 19 '71 850w

SMITH, MARGARET CHASE. Declaration of conscience; ed. by William C. Lewis, Jr. 512p $8.95 Doubleday

B or 92 U.S.—Politics and government—20th century
LC 77-186044

"Senator Smith, whose June 1950 'Declaration of Conscience' against Joseph McCarthy's methods made her one of the few brave enough to stand up to him, gave a second 'Declaration' in June 1970, deploring extremism on both left and right and urging all to 'cool it.' This book traces the backgrounds and consequences of both speeches and also of many others made during her more than 30 years of public service. Many of the others deal with defense matters." (Library J) "Index." (Choice)

"Besides the chronicle of events in her political life, Smith effectively intertwines her speeches and remarks on the issues of the day. Few speeches in public life are worth listening to and even fewer worth reading. Most of Senator Smith's speeches, however, are both. . . . [There] are speeches on the military, on the status of women, on politics, as well as accounts and speeches from most of her campaigns for the House of Representatives, the Senate, and in 1964 for the Presidency. The writing is crisp, the thinking is clear, and one need not agree with the Senator to admire her public decisions. A sound purchase for college libraries."

Choice 9:1042 O '72 210w

"While one is not likely to agree with all [of Senator Smith's] positions, or concur with her and Lewis' evaluation of their influence on later events, she has a refreshing independence that leads her to unexpected decisions. It is unlikely that many people will want to read more than a few of the 'case histories' of speeches presented here, but probably libraries should acquire the volume for the information on the 'Declaration of Conscience' speeches." C. E. Wadsworth

Library J 97:1332 Ap 1 '72 160w

"[This] book should be ready by the new political woman to remind her that she is not the first, nor will she be the last, reformer on the scene. It should also be studied by those young men and women who each year invade Capitol Hill on grants, fellowships, and internships, for it tells of the intrigue of the cloakroom, the well-timed, well-placed White House call, the pressure from back home, and spells them out for what they are: vital ingredients to the roll call vote. . . . There are weaknesses in the book. It is doubtful that President Eisenhower ever seriously considered dumping Nixon as his running mate for Margaret Smith. . . . And one questions whether all the slights and hurts that her editor, closest friend, and selfless aide Bill Lewis reads into her story are really as significant as he makes them out to be." Liz Carpenter

Sat R 55:66 Ap 15 '72 1050w

SMITH, MERRIMAN. Merriman Smith's book of presidents: a White House memoir; ed. by Timothy G. Smith; with a foreword by Robert J. Donovan. 250p il $7.95 Norton 973.9 Presidents—U.S.

ISBN 0-393-07469-2 LC 73-39298

Smith's book has been "edited from earlier writings, speeches, and notes; and it is focused . . . closely upon the Presidents. The arrangement is topical with chapters on Presidential style, White House employees and cronies, first ladies, campaigns, etc., allowing . . . contrasts between Truman and Nixon,

Johnson and Eisenhower. [Included are] eyewitness accounts of the deaths of Roosevelt and Kennedy." (Library J)

"For nearly thirty years Merriman Smith was the UPI correspondent at the White House. . . . It was to be hoped that [his] book would be an extremely important analytical report on the modern presidency in action. Unfortunately it isn't. . . . [It] fills in the background of the presidential life style which historians and political analysts often dismiss as irrelevant or unimportant. . . . [and] Smith's description of his problems and experiences in covering presidents gives us an excellent look at the life of a White House reporter, one perhaps unequalled in previous works. . . . Smith's collected memoirs are humorous, informative and often enlightening. Entertaining reading for anyone interested in the inner workings of the White House." E. D. Schmiel
Best Sell 32:124 Je 1 '72 300w

"There is not a dull word in [this] book."
Collin Clark
Library J 97:1330 Ap 1 '72 80w

"This book is not very interesting. . . . [and] does not touch upon any fundamental problems of government. Even. . . . [Smith's] few speculative thoughts on the presidency are numbingly dull. . . . Judging by this book, Smith had an odd view of important news. News is anything—absolutely anything—concerning Presidents. This is, of course, the Hedda Hopper-Louella Parsons school of journalism." G. F. Will
Nat R 24:699 Je 23 '72 850w

"Timothy Smith's remarkable skill in selection and arrangement has made [this book] a smooth-running, consistent and eminently readable study. . . . It is a solid, informative study but, unlike most solidly informative studies, sparked with a grace and wit that make reading it a pleasure, rather than an ordeal." G. W. Johnson
N Y Times Bk R p36 O 1 '72 340w

SMITH, MORTON. Palestinian parties and politics that shaped the Old Testament. (Lectures on the hist. of religions, new ser) 348p $9 Columbia univ. press

221.95 Bible. O.T.—Criticism, interpretations, etc. Judaism—History
ISBN 0-231-02986-1 LC 70-161299

"This book considers the Old Testament as a party manifesto . . . an organized collection of works deliberately selected and preserved. . . . Professor Smith tries to determine by which parties and for what purposes these works were produced and copied. The answer is found in the history of party conflicts, at first between the syncretistic and the exclusive worshippers of Yahweh, the god of Israel, and later between those Judeans who favored and those who opposed close relations with neighboring peoples. The history of these party conflicts is related . . . on the one hand to the political, military, and cultural history of Palestine, and on the other to those elements of the Old Testament which can be explained by particular episodes or motives." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Citation index. Subject index.

"Seldom is the Old Testament treated thus: not as normative 'sacred history,' not as data for social scientific analysis, but as the product of an ancient religion, to be examined in its broad historical context as any other ancient religion would be. The emphasis on 'parties' will surely be questioned: does this religion really fall so neatly into a left and right wing? Did the variations in Persian or Egyptian political influence have such strong effect upon it? If syncretistic Judaism was so common, would it really have been possible to obliterate it almost completely? But Smith presents a well-reasoned, well-documented position . . . the burden of proof is now with those who would debate him." A. T. Kraabel
Am Hist R 77:1418 D '72 700w

"Working with the most obscure periods of Israel's history and the historically most confused texts, Smith cannot claim to be authoritative . . . but the working out of [his] thesis does present a perspective on the later history of the Old Testament and Israel's religion refreshingly different from that provided by the standard introductions and histories. Quite suitable for undergraduate work, though lacking in stylistic qualities."

Choice 9:72 Mr '72 160w

"We'd never thought of the Old Testament as a 'party manifesto' (a phrase used on this book's dust-jacket) but Smith makes a convincing case in his analysis of a theocracy in the hands of gifted but fallible leaders."

Christian Century 88:1213 O 13 '71 40w

"[Smith] presents the history of Israel in a highly individual, not to say iconoclastic manner, not pausing to argue many of the novel positions he adopts. Obviously such a view of Biblical history and literature presupposes a low estimate of the credibility of the Biblical tradition, much of which he regards as tendentious fabrications and retroversions into the early past from much later periods. . . . In the course of his work . . . [he] has occasion to discuss many moot questions and make many significant observations. . . . This presentation of a distinguished historian, written with verve, conviction and even humor, is certain to stimulate discussion and the re-examination of accepted views. A scholar can ask for little more." Robert Gordis
N Y Times Bk R p5 Ja 9 '72 1000w

SMITH, NORMAN F. Wings of feathers, wings of flame; the science and technology of aviation; il. with phot. and with drawings and diagrams by Bill Bradley. 261p $6.95 Little

629.13 Aeronautics
LC 77-169012

The author deals with "the basic concepts of power plants, aerodynamics, and lift, as well as instrumentation, flight planning, and what to expect during flight training." (Library J)

"[The author] has succeeded admirably in treating the complex details of technology in an informative and interesting way. The many pictures throughout the book, the numerous drawings, and the samples of enroute charts add together to make fascinating reading on modern aviation." F. R. Carmody
Best Sell 32:200 J1 15 '72 100w

"This is a very worthwhile introduction to the subject for those with a general interest in aeronautics, as well as for young adults interested in flying. . . . [It] is a nicely balanced and well-written survey." R. E. Bilstein
Library J 97:2414 J1 '72 80w [YA]

SMITH, PAUL, ed. Lord Salisbury on politics. See Salisbury, Lord

SMITH, R. HARRIS. OSS; the secret history of America's first central intelligence agency. 458p il $10.95 Univ. of Calif. press

940.54 U.S. Office of Strategic Services. Espionage, American. Secret service. World War, 1939-1945—Secret service
ISBN 0-520-02023-5 LC 73-153553

"The Office of Strategic Services (OSS) was America's chief agency for intelligence collection and special operations during World War II. . . . [The author describes] the cooperation of OSS men with various underground resistance groups. . . . Smith also describes the wide ideological spectrum which existed in OSS and looks upon it as a healthy thing. He makes clear his belief that the liberal end of that spectrum was of greater importance to the success of many OSS operations than was the conservative end. In his closing chapter he compares the OSS and the CIA; again, the presence of a liberal element is held to be of key importance." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Much data or verification was apparently based on correspondence and telephone and personal interview contacts with informants. . . . The volume tells much of the story of the creation of the O.S.S. during World War II and of the transition to the C.I.A. afterwards. But it is not formal, organized history. The narrative . . . is divided into chapters according to topics. . . . Its emphasis upon freedoms allotted to individuals in various theatres and the constant references to the 'fertile imagination of General Donovan' are no compensation for an utterly chaotic representation. . . . The book has none of the impressiveness of true scholarship. . . . Too often speedy narration or sharp exposition is interrupted with extraneous material. . . . Yet, in spite of this . . . [the book] contains more than most people know or can find out unless they go into the Stanford [University] collections. For those who want to know it is recommended." Elbridge Colby

SMITH, R. H.—Continued

Best Sell 32:222 Ag 1 '72 500w
Choice 9:1038 O '72 200w
Economist 244:58 S 30 '72 650w

"Of the books that have been written about the OSS, none has treated the subject in such broad and detailed a manner as does Smith's. He has reviewed the existing literature and added information gathered from over 200 interviews and written responses from former OSS and State Department members. His discussion of the cooperation of OSS men with various underground resistance groups is free from the melodrama so often present in other accounts, and he presents a very useful political and military perspective. . . . A benchmark in the literature on American intelligence for years to come." G. H. Siehl
Library J 97:2093 Je 1 '72 250w

"Was Donovan quite so disorganized, impatient of paper work and budgetary matters as Mr. Smith portrays him? The individual who emerges from his own papers is the antithesis of the O.S.S. director depicted in this book. On the contrary . . . [Donovan] appears to have been a quiet man, studious, obsessively meticulous and orderly. Smith never quite comes to grips with Donovan's character, which remains indivisible from the agency he created. As for his operatives—well, probably the readers who will most enjoy this book are the former O.S.S. men themselves. Mr. Smith has not exposed them. Their old cloaks and daggers are in mothballs in the still unobtainable official records." Cornelius Ryan
N Y Times Bk R p31 S 17 '72 1400w

"The OSS, as depicted in this book, was a mixture of idealism, naivety, incompetence and intrigue seldom matched in the annals of government in America or anywhere else. Mr. Smith's wide reading and extensive research have not saved the book from ingenuousness and error. . . . The story is told in blacks and whites, whereas the dirty, dangerous game played by the OSS is best described in varying shades of grey. . . . Perhaps the best chapter . . . is that devoted to the OSS operations in Yugoslavia. . . . Surprisingly, the book is weakest when it deals with the OSS in China . . . and with American intelligence operations in Algeria in 1942-43. . . . There are some bright spots. . . . But these are not sufficient to save the book. The OSS must wait for a more objective and sophisticated chronicler."
TLS p1228 O 13 '72 900w

SMITH, RALPH A., ed. Aesthetics and problems of education (Readings in the philosophy of educ) 581p $12.95; pa $4.95 Univ. of Ill. press

111.8 Aesthetics—Study and teaching. Education—Philosophy
ISBN 252-00165-6; 252-00166-4 (pa)
LC 77-146011

These readings "trace the ideas of aesthetic education advanced by Plato, Schiller, Read, and Dewey. They are concerned with the content of the philosophy of art education and examine the sources of philosophical materials focusing upon analytic and synoptic aesthetics. The contributors explore the problems relating to art education in the areas of curriculum development and methods of teaching music literature, art, and film." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] another of the collections of educational writings that developed out of the results of a three-year U.S. Office of Education—University of Illinois project to select and organize materials that 'deal philosophically with problems in education.' The articles are drawn from works that have been published over the past 20 years. . . . The articles are scholarly and well written but difficult to understand unless the reader has an extensive background in aesthetics and philosophy of art education. With so few titles appearing in this field, this . . . should prove an excellent reference book for both undergraduate and graduate students. Recommended."
Choice 9:858 S '72 180w

J Aesthetics 30:571 summer '72 40w

SMITH, WILLIAM EDGETT. We must run while they walk; a portrait of Africa's Julius Nyerere. 296p $7.95 Random house

B or 92 Nyerere, Julius Kambarage, President Tanzania. Tanzania
ISBN 0-394-46752-3 LC 78-159376

This biography of President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania "follows his development from a tribal childhood near the . . . shores of Lake Victoria to his position today as . . . spokesman for African unity, development and non-alignment. It traces the growth of political consciousness and the coming of independence to his country, and it explains . . . [some of the] problems that have troubled him. Among these have been the revolution on Zanzibar, the 1965 army mutiny of the mainland, and the union [of Tanganyika and Zanzibar]." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:108 Mr '72 90w

"This definitive portrait is not merely a psychohistory of a charismatic man but also an in-depth, politically sophisticated analysis of his dynamic leadership. . . . Highly recommended for libraries interested in African and international studies."
Choice 9:264 Ap '72 250w

"At a time when American interest in Africa is, perhaps understandably, at a 15-year low, William Smith's 'portrait' of Nyerere . . . previously serialized in the New Yorker, is indeed timely. . . . Smith is enthusiastic about Tanzania's progress and Nyerere's leadership, which is understandable—though it blinds him to some of the problems which that country's high [moral] posture causes. . . . This book is a fascinating and insightful series of well-constructed vignettes and anecdotes, and well worth reading. One only wishes that so skillful a writer had organized his material more analytically. Tanzania's experience raises some important questions for the future of the developing world. . . . [Nyerere's] is a record deserving attention." W. S. Thompson
Christian Science Monitor p6 Ja 20 '72 800w

"Followers of African political developments will be very pleased to discover this new exposition of [Nyerere's] thought. [His] role in the confusing events of the late 1960's has been ambiguous to outside observers. Until his own memoirs are available, this book will help to shed light on his actions during the Oscar Kambona defection and treason trials, the tenuous union with Zanzibar, and other crises. But while Smith clearly is in sympathy with Nyerere's administration, he is careful not to pass premature judgments. . . . This very insightful and stimulating book . . . would make a welcome addition to any relevant collection." R. K. Rasmussen
Library J 96:3768 N 15 '71 230w

N Y Times Bk R p25 F 20 '72 60w

SMITH, WILLIAM JAY, comp. Poems from Italy; drawings by Elaine Raphael; calligraphy by Don Bolognese. 213p $4.50 Crowell

851 Italian poetry—Collections
ISBN 0-690-63915-5 LC 77-158700

This "collection of 73 poems [is] presented in the original Italian as well as in . . . English translations. Almost two-thirds of the poems were written before 1700, though some 20th-Century verse is also featured. Poets include Dante, Petrarch, Michelangelo, Leopardi, Ungaretti, Montale and Quasimodo; translators range from Rossetti and Byron to Richard Wilbur and William Jay Smith, who also provides a brief introduction to aspects of Italy and Italian poetry. Brief biographies of the poets are given at the end." (Library J) Index of titles. Index of first lines. Index of poets. Index of translators.

"Smith's anthology shows a welcome recognition of the linguistic curiosity and intelligence of 'the common reader' of high-school age and beyond. . . . The author includes among his translators . . . Shelley and D. G. Rossetti, whose 'poetic' language would, at first sight, turn off almost everyone. At second sight, though, what occasions they are for good shop-talk, in classrooms, between friends, or even in one's own mind." Jean Valentine
Book World p10 My 28 '72 290w

"This is a compact, attractive—and difficult [collection of poems]. . . . Although its appeal is strictly for confirmed and knowledgeable poetry lovers, libraries using other titles in the series will definitely want to acquire this one." M. A. Dorsey
Library J 97:3464 O 15 '72 140w [YA]

SMOLAR, BORIS. Soviet Jewry today and tomorrow. 228p pl $5.95 Macmillan (N Y) 301.451 Jews in Russia
LC 70-151164

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by William Korey
Ann Am Acad 404:270 N '72 380w

Reviewed by Sanford Arnovitz
Best Sell 31:562 Mr 15 '72 480w

Reviewed by R. N. Levy
N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 9 '72 650w

SNITZER, HERB. Today is for children; numbers can wait [by] Herb Snitzer in collaboration with Doris Ransohoff; foreword by A. S. Neill. 238p il $6.95 Macmillan (N Y) 371 Lewis-Wadham's School, Lewis, New York. Education—Experimental methods
LC 75-175595

"Allowing a child the 'freedom to be a child in childhood' is the raison d'être of the author's Lewis-Wadham's School. . . . [Snitzer] presents his diary of the 1968-1969 academic year at Lewis-Wadham's. . . . [and] brings forth the essence of a 'free' school learning experience where the daily interactions of individuals become the bases for learning. 'Life, a respect for it and an awareness of the pleasures and bewilderment of simply being human, really forms the (learning) bond between child and teacher, teacher and child.' The development of this bond through problem solving, interpersonal hassles, and general coping with existence is described in the daily entries." (Library J)

"After reading [this book] a reader may feel as though he has been involved in a highly stimulating though occasionally dismaying conversation on what life in a 'free' school should be. . . . Filled with candid photographs of the joy of Lewis-Wadham's, this book communicates an aura of excitement and exhilaration." J. J. Buckley

America 127:370 N 4 '72 250w

"Snitzer's lucid style makes this book a worthy addition to all education collections." D. T. Richards

Library J 97:2086 Je 1 '72 140w

SNOW, C. P. The malcontents. 277p $6.95 Scribner

SBN 684-12812-8 LC 70-37197

This "is the story of a group of young radical idealists and their crisis. The group, calling itself 'the core,' has planned with great secrecy the exposé of an important English political figure. The resulting scandal will be a blow against racism. But before the members of the core can act, they are betrayed to the Establishment." (Publisher's note)

Reviewed by R. A. Parker
America 126:618 Je 10 '72 600w

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:[110] Je '72 450w

"Lord Snow has a diagnostic eye and a meticulous care about exposing every nerve of his characters. . . . What may surprise a reader new to [his] novels is the remarkably leisurely pace of a novel about what is, after all, a social conspiracy. . . . The very quest for the traitor observes strictly the social amenities. There is the possibility that for some readers an air of unreality may emerge. . . . Yet this is an intriguing book. Lord Snow's plots always move slowly because he never wants to leave a character until it is fully articulated. And for all its slowness, the story is fascinating; a reader is not apt to leave it unfinished, will always be glad to get back to it. There is merit in style, and C. P. Snow has an especially distinguished one." W. B. Hill

Best Sell 32:95 My 15 '72 450w

Reviewed by J. R. Frakes
Book World p13 My 7 '72 400w

Choice 9:648 JI/Ag '72 200w

Reviewed by Paul Schlueter
Christian Century 89:1105 N 1 '72 430w

"For its first half [this book] is a delightful mystery story. And in its second it delves interestingly into the impulses and ambitions of youth today, and probes into the question of loyalty. The scene is a cathedral city . . . one of the newer, industrial sort. . . . [Snow] examines the motives of social revolt amongst the young . . . sympathetically, but perhaps with a certain complacency. He concludes that with time all troubles will pass away, leaving no more impression than a summer cloud. Perhaps he is right. Perhaps not. But whether right or wrong, [his novel] gives a lively picture of English life today with its uncomfortable aspirations and its disturbing satisfactions." Harold Hobson

Christian Science Monitor p13 My 17 '72 320w

Reviewed by R. K. Morris
Nation 214:696 My 29 '72 1200w

Reviewed by Myrna Blumberg
New Statesman 84:26 J1 7 '72 650w

"There is perhaps something a bit too willed about the whole novel. The atmosphere of the student meetings, with their smell of earnest cadres and cells, reads like an undating by someone who first came to political awareness in the early 1930's. Their conversation doesn't quite ring true, their earnestness is too perfunctorily suggested. As a political thriller, the going is much too slow for the first third of the book. As a fictional study . . . it leaves too many psychological questions unexplored, or even unasked. . . . What is missing, here as elsewhere in [Snow's] novels, is an essential grip on so much that makes people various, complex and mysterious, and any real imaginative apprehension of anything beyond the decencies and the conventions." Anthony Thwaite

N Y Times Bk R p5 My 7 '72 650w

New Yorker 48:145 My 13 '72 120w

Reviewed by Brom Weber
Sat R 55:76 Je 17 '72 850w

Reviewed by Christopher Porterfield
Time 99:[89] Je 12 '72 230w
TLS p737 Je 30 '72 1150w

SNOW, C. P. Public affairs. 224p $6.95 Scribner 301.2 Science and the humanities. Science and civilization
SBN 684-12570-6 LC 77-162752

This volume reprints eight of Lord Snow's public statements which include lectures he gave in England and the U.S. on the benefits and dangers brought about by technology. Contents: Prologue; The two cultures and the scientific revolution (BRD 1960); The two cultures; and a second look (BRD 1964); The case of Leavis and the serious case (1970); Science and government (BRD 1961); Appendix to 'Science and government' (1962); The moral unneutrality of science (1960); The state of siege (BRD 1969); Epilogue.

Reviewed by J. J. McAleer
Best Sell 31:465 Ja 15 '72 800w

Reviewed by R. H. March
Bul Atomic Sci 28:45 Mr '72 3400w

"Lord Snow is an excellent writer, and experience in both science and government have given him opportunities to observe some of the relationships between science and public policy which he discusses in these highly readable essays. . . . Interesting prologue and short epilogue are new. . . . Good for undergraduates and graduates, science and nonscience majors."

Choice 9:133 Mr '72 160w

"Snow's strategy as a secular moralist . . . shows him to be a moralist of profound dignity who recognizes that the problems which tug at him and terrorize him are perhaps insoluble. Snow broaches the subjects of Oxbridge elitism in British education, 'strategic' bombing, the cold war, overpopulation, the coming famines in Asia and Latin America [and other topics]. . . . He writes that Rutherford had the gift of scientific judgment tout court—'the gift which tells him the problems worth doing and the problems which will "go"'. Snow, I believe, shows the same gift in public affairs. . . . A note: libraries with all the public addresses along with back files of Science and TLS will already have this book." P. W. Boytnick

Library J 96:4018 D 1 '71 190w

Reviewed by Stanley Weintraub
New Repub 165:23 N 27 '71 2300w

Reviewed by Bernard Crick
New Statesman 82:591 O 29 '71 1550w

Reviewed by Stuart Hampshire
N Y Rev of Books 19:12 S 21 '72 1150w

"[This volume] though stimulating, is ultimately unsatisfying. As always, Snow combines fair-mindedness, rationality and lucidity

SNOW, C. P.—Continued

—qualities not often found together in writing on either science or public affairs—yet the elegant surface of his prose conceals what seems to me a superficial analysis of the problems he seeks to elucidate. . . . Don't misunderstand me: I believe that Snow's concept of Two Cultures reflects a very real rift in our society, and one that is worth bridging for many reasons. . . . But I do not think it will solve the problem of science in government. The need for policy decisions that are both rational and moral will not be met by altering the mix of scientists and non-scientists . . . but by letting in the light of public scrutiny." Robert Claiborne

N Y Times Bk R p2 D 26 '71 1500w

"In 1959 C. P. Snow threw a large-sized pebble into the intellectual waters in the shape of his Rede Lecture at Cambridge 'The Two Cultures and the Scientific Revolution', and the ripples are still reaching the shores. In it he sought to do two things. . . . One was to point out the dangerous lack of communication between those . . . who are trained in the humanities and those who are trained in the sciences; the other was to raise an alarm about the increasing gap between the rich and poor nations of the world. . . . The lecture and the second thoughts have already become . . . classics in the history of science and not without some practical effect in the educational and political fields. They deserve perpetuation. . . . The danger of the cultural gap could not be better demonstrated than by two other papers in this volume . . . 'Science and Government', and . . . an 'Appendix' thereto."

TLS p1448 N 19 '71 800w

SNOW, EDGAR. The long revolution. 269p il $6.95 Random house

915.1 China (People's Republic of China)—Description and travel
ISBN 0-394-46859-7 LC 72-4838

The author of The Other Side of the River: Red China Today (BRD 1963) describes a six-months' visit to China in 1970-1971. This book reports Snow's "talks, both before and after the Cultural Revolution, with Mao, Chou and [others]. . . . It surveys the changes . . . in the lives of plain people. It [describes] the 'bare-foot doctors' . . . the May Seventh schools . . . what food and rent cost; how acupuncture is tested and used as cure and anesthetic . . . sex, marriage, birth control, abortion . . . communes . . . the People's Liberation Army [and] the Cultural Revolution." (Publisher's note) Portions of this book were published in a different form in Life and The New Republic. Index.

"[The author of] Red Star Over China [BRD 1938] has written a series of present-day equivalents of the great medieval travel books—especially Marco Polo's account—which combined travel information, keen observation, and intimate portraits of China's rulers. . . . As in his other books, Snow seeks to explain Chinese events in clear, rational terms with the aim of dispelling the concept that the mainland is ruled by madmen. As always, his book contains information obtained in interviews with Mao Tse-tung and Chou En-lai. Because of his long association with these men and his considerable experience in China, [his] final book makes especially fascinating reading." D. D. Buck

Library J 97:3174 O 1 '72 120w

"This last of Snow's works, like his pot-boiler The Other Side of the River, illustrates the extent of his sympathy with the Chinese Communist movement and his willingness to accept an 'operation rewrite' to maintain what has always been the leitmotiv of his work: that Chairman Mao has always planned everything accurately in advance . . . and that under his guidance China is the best of all possible places. . . . Naturally, Snow through his numerous trips to Communist China and exclusive interviews with Mao, Chou Enlai and other top leaders had materials that the others could not get. But this does not necessarily mean that his interpretations or information were always accurate." R. L. Walker

Nat R 25:39 Ja 5 '73 330w

"This book makes it possible, for the first time, to reconstruct authoritatively the sequence of events that culminated in the historic handshake between Mao Tse-tung and President Nixon in the Chairman's study. . . . Unfortunately Snow did not live to see his memoir published and the . . . account [contains] jumps and redundancies which result from the mixture of previously unpublished material with verbatim reprints. . . . [Despite] slips which should have been caught by more careful editing . . . the book is indispensable for any serious student of Chinese affairs. However, the general reader as well can profit from Snow's ability to compare critically his 1970 interviews and experiences with earlier visits, in contrast with most recent travelers' accounts. [The] appendix contains his celebrated interview with Mao of January 1965." A. S. Whiting

New Repub 167:26 O 21 '72 900w

Reviewed by J. K. Fairbank

N Y Rev of Books 19:9 O 19 '72 1200w

Reviewed by H. E. Salisbury

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 14 '73 270w

New Yorker 48:159 O 28 '72 230w

SNOW, PETER. Hussein; a biography. 256p $7.95 Luce, R.B.

B or 92 Hussein, King of Jordan. Jordan—Politics and government
LC 72-85018

A biography of the King of Jordan which describes his "struggle to preserve his . . . kingdom . . . against the opposition of most of his Arab neighbours and much of his own people. . . . [It presents an] account of his place in Arab politics and in the Arab-Israeli confrontation." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"A popular, undocumented mainly political biography of Jordan's young king. Essentially, the author fleshes out his synthesis of readily available facts of Jordan's political history with anecdotes and details of the king's life gleaned from interviews with key individuals and Hussein's autobiographical works—Uneasy Lies the Head [BRD 1962] . . . [and] My 'War' with Israel [BRD 1969]. . . . The result is a mildly interesting book for the general reader which provides the background and details of Jordan's late wars with the Palestinian guerrillas. For large and general collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:2833 S 15 '72 90w

"As a boy Hussein was struck by a bullet when his grandfather Abdullah was assassinated. Nasser planned more than one attempt; and I must disagree with Snow's judgment on this in his book. . . . Curiously, as Hussein is well known and liked here, this appears to be the first English biography of him. . . . Peter Snow has made a good job of it, conscientiously consulting sources from the King himself to Golda Meir and beyond. I have a feeling, however, that there is room for a more probing study of the significance of this extraordinarily skilful politician both as regards the perennially perilous Middle East situation and the Great Power involvements that go with it." Geoffrey McDermott

New Statesman 84:436 S 29 '72 1000w

TLS p1390 N 17 '72 800w

SNYDER, LOUIS L. The Dreyfus affair; a fight to prove the innocence of a French army officer accused of treason, 1894-1906. 84p il lib bdg $3.95 Watts. F.

944.081 Dreyfus, Alfred—Juvenile literature. France—Politics and government—1799-1914—Juvenile literature. Jews in France—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-02151-3 LC 70-152851

In this "treatment of the principles involved in the Dreyfus affair, Snyder . . . depicts the events that led to accusing an innocent man of treason, the case for and against Dreyfus, and the eventual clearing of his name. [Index.] Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"The horrendous court battles, the behind-the-scenes persecution, imprisonment on Devil's Island, and the stirring J'Accuse of Emile Zola are graphically presented." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 31:471 Ja 15 '72 90w

"The numerous illustrations and short chapters make this suitable for a younger audience than would read Irving Werstein's much fuller account, I Accuse: the Story of the Dreyfus Case [BRD 1968]." S. M. Thrash

Library J 97:2486 J1 '72 100w

SNYDER, SOLOMON H. Uses of marijuana. 127p il $5.95 Oxford

615 Marihuana
ISBN 0-19-501484-7 LC 70-161891

"Dr. Snyder describes the use of marijuana as a medicine in Europe and America in the nineteenth century. . . . After reviewing marijuana's history . . . in India and the Near East, he describes [some] behavioral experiments with the drug [both past and present]. He considers marijuana's effects upon the mind and body . . . comparing them to those of alcohol, tobacco, and LSD. . . . Finally, Dr. Snyder looks at the . . . laws prohibiting marijuana use in America, and describes some of the solutions to this problem that have recently been proposed." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The work is far more comprehensive than the title indicates. The author's style is straightforward and mild-mannered. . . . He shows little toleration for the 'myths' surrounding the drug, whether perpetuated by its advocates or by its critics. Especially enlightening is Snyder's discussion of the remarkable degree to which people's opinions of marijuana have changed according to time or place. . . . [This work is] an excellent introductory reader." R. S. Kennedy Christian Century 89:49 Ja 12 '72 250w

"It is worth noting that Dr. Snyder, who is professor of psychiatry and of pharmacology at the Johns Hopkins school of medicine, calls his book 'Uses of Marijuana' and does not prejudge the issue by adding 'and Abuses.' . . . The book is very well written, with flashes of humour. Most of Professor Snyder's account is restricted to the variety of cannabis that is used—and widely used—in the United States. But the uninformed will find in this book a useful summary of all the varieties. . . . Much of the information has, of course, been published before, in official reports and scientific papers—though not so readably and without the excellent photographs."

Economist 243[i.e.234]:64 Je 17 '72 300w
"[The conclusions of] this well-organized, concise, and readable book seem to be that the use of this drug is venerable, the supply plentiful, and the effects pleasurable and relatively safe. Even though the author does not take an explicit stand, the reader must come to the conclusion that the legal prohibition of marijuana is based on irrational arguments, or claims not supported by scientific evidence. . . . The book is intended for the layman and is written in a rather breezy style, but it gives an adequate description of the basic chemical and physiological properties of cannabis preparations and the tetrahydrocannabinols. Each chapter is selectively documented. . . . [It is likely that this study] together with . . . [J.] Kaplan's [Marijuana—the new prohibition, BRD 1970] . . . will provide the basis for the ultimate legalization of marijuana." Murray Jarvik
Science 174:935 N 26 '71 3000w

SOBIN, DENNIS P. The future of the American suburbs; survival or extinction? (Kennikat press natl. univ. pubs. Ser. in Am. stud) 152p $8.95 Kennikat 301.3 Suburban life. Cities and towns—U.S.

ISBN 0-8046-9014-6 LC 72-154034

"Asking the question 'can suburbs survive,' the author presents ten essays on such topics as 'Suburbs Past and Present' and 'The Suburban Mystique.' He arrives at the conclusion they will change politically, sociologically, and in design. Aspects of racism are mentioned." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"In the beginning, this book shows some promise as a primer on suburban phenomena for the junior high school student. By drawing on the works of Spector, Wood, Berger, Gans, Schnore, and others, the author demonstrates that there are many kinds of suburbs: residential suburbs housing the rich, the middle-income earners, and the poor; industrial suburbs; and suburbs built about educational and other specialized institutions. The point is well worth making, for it is a common error to assume that suburbia is virtually synonymous with affluence. Having accomplished this modest feat, the author drifts from facts to fancy. . . . My own prediction is that long before any noticeable change in the suburbs occurs, this inconsequential volume will have been lost in obscurity. The sooner the better." A. H. Hawley
Ann Am Acad 398:207 N '71 440w

"While the introduction is encouraging, the book generally does not deliver. . . . The style is lively and readable and the conclusions provocative. The chapter on the suburban share of responsibility for city problems is a good one. However, the book itself shows little appreciation of the major implication of suburban differentiation: It is unreasonable to talk in terms of a mythical 'suburbia.' This is particularly true when no effort is made to justify or to give substance to conclusions." R. J. McAllister

Contemp Sociol 1:332 Jl '72 850w

"The essays are brief and generalized. Magazine and periodical articles (from the Saturday Evening Post, Reader's Digest, PTA magazine, U.S. News and World Report, Wilson Library Bulletin, Business Week, etc.) are cited heavily as sources. This popularized treatment of a serious national and international problem probably will be useful as debate material and in browsing collections." J. M. Carroll

Library J 96:2531 Ag '71 110w

SOCHEN, JUNE. The new woman; feminism in Greenwich village, 1910-1920. 175p $7.95 Quadrangle bks.

301.41 Women's Liberation Movement. Woman—Civil rights. Greenwich Village, New York (City)
ISBN 0-8129-0257-2 LC 70-190125

This is an account of "women who searched and struggled for and wrote about equal rights, socialism, welfare reforms, progressive education, and a bohemian life style. . . . [The book centers] around life in Greenwich Village in one of its literary heydays. . . . Sochen singles out five feminists as representative of their . . . sisterhood: Crystal Eastman, Henrietta Rodman, Ida Ruh, Neith Boyce, and Susan Glasspell—all writers and activists . . . [and] describes both their lives and their writings." (Library J)

"Sochen's brief, but carefully worked out, book presents a little known facet of American feminism and intellectual history. . . . The study is fair but brief; primary source material is scarce. . . . Highly recommended." E. G. Dettlefsen

Library J 97:2187 Je 15 '72 110w

"[This is] a nostalgic, rather starchy account. . . . [The author] argues, unconvincingly, that the cozy, laissez-faire, bohemian atmosphere of the prewar Village fostered the development of radical feminist ideas, and that in the years from 1910 to 1920 the Village was a kind of feminists' Brook Farm. But most of those she refers to as 'the Villagers' were essentially radicalized before they ever set foot in Washington Square. . . . The book is far more interesting when it straightforwardly, if somewhat flatly, traces the links between the feminist and the pacifist movements in the prewar years, and when it shows how the passage of the Nineteenth Amendment in 1920 was, in a sense, a Pyrrhic victory for women, since it removed most feminists from the field of battle for the next forty-five years and reassured women, falsely, that a rapid change in basic American values was imminent."

New Yorker 48:159 O 28 '72 230w

SOCIAL anthropology and language; ed. by Edwin Ardener. (A.S.A. monographs, 10) 318p $12.75 Barnes & Noble

572 Anthropology. Language and languages
ISBN 422-73700-3 LC 75-30578

"Tenth volume in a series published by the Association of Social Anthropologists, containing . . . papers which were first presented at a conference on linguistics and social anthropology at the University of Sussex, April 1969. . . . [Some of the articles include an examination of] Malinowski's context of situation theory of semantics . . . a survey of the field of sociolinguistics [a discussion of] the ethnography of speaking . . . three articles on multilingualism . . . [an] examination of the role of suprasegmental phonological features in social identity . . . [an] analysis of parables and a Saussurian analysis of Buryat magical drawings." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Author and subject indexes.

"British social anthropology to a large degree ignored language and the work of linguists; this volume demonstrates the changes now taking place. . . . The editor and authors are to be commended for the high quality of the papers; all are very readable. They convey a sense of excitement about ongoing research interests. . . . A must for all students of anthropology, sociology, and linguistics with an interest in the relationship of language, culture, and society."

SOCIAL anthropology and language—Continued

Choice 9:133 Mr '72 230w

"The organizers had the good sense to invite at least one student of pidgin languages, Elizabeth Tonkin, whose paper on 'Some Coastal Pidgins of West Africa' illustrates perhaps better than any other an integrated linguistic and anthropological approach to the study of social behaviour. . . . [The book] contains some excellent and stimulating papers but is on the whole somewhat undernourishing."

TLS p1529 D 3 '71 400w

The SOCIAL anthropology of Latin America; essays in honor of Ralph Leon Beals; ed. by Walter Goldschmidt & Harry Hoijer. 369p $8.50 Univ. of Calif. Latin American Center 301.29 Indians—Social life and customs. Latin America—Social conditions. Beals, Ralph Leon
LC 70-627663

This festschrift contains "14 articles by 16 former colleagues and students of Beals . . . It reflects Beals' major topical and geographic research interests. Geographic areas represented include Mexico . . . Guatemala . . . Venezuela . . . Bolivia . . . Peru . . . and South America in general. . . . The groups represented are tribal, peasant, and urban. All but two papers . . . deal with the subject of culture change (including cultural evolution, acculturation, and assimilation). Topics range from religion to economics, market systems, political structure, social stratification, ethnic identity, urbanism, kinship, and joking relationships." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies.

"[The editors] have done a decent editing job, given the constraints of the format demanded by the occasion. . . . For specialists in the ethnology of Latin America there are some papers and some data of use. But what of the volume as a whole? I must conclude that the reason these essays are bound under one cover stems only from the folkways of anthropologists." Manning Nash

Am Anthropol 73:1315 D '71 1000w

"The coverage is wide if not always very deep. The papers are uneven in quality but considerably less than is usual in festschriften. The term social anthropology in the title is unfortunate, in that the materials treated here are the kind traditionally labelled cultural anthropology. Be that as it may, this volume contains a wealth of material which will be of interest to anthropologists, sociologists, economists, and community development planners, particularly those with interests in Latin America. [There is a] list of Beals' publications."

Choice 8:1254 N '71 180w

The SOCIAL sciences and the comparative study of educational systems; ed. by Joseph Fischer. 533p $10 INTEXT

370.19 Education
SBN 7002-2260-X LC 70-105076

"The book includes twelve papers commissioned for a meeting of the West Coast branch of the Comparative Education Society. These papers sought 'to explore comparative methodologies and theories in the four social sciences (anthropology, sociology, political science, economics) that appear to be useful for the study of educational systems' and 'to illustrate the variety of assumptions, beliefs, and hypotheses about the efficacy of education with respect to national and individual development that have never been adequately tested by empirical research.'" (Am Pol Sci R) Bibliography.

"The papers are organized around [the] four social sciences but only few of them meet the stated goals. . . . The focus only on gross quantitative measures of education to the neglect of the qualitative is a major problem of previous work in this field; and with one or two exceptions the papers do very little to correct this oversight and provide a balanced and accurate view of education. The chapter by Fred Frey is one of the refreshing exceptions. . . . [He] perceives the schools as a subsystem in constant interaction with other political subsystems such as labor and business organizations, voluntary associations, and political parties. . . . Read selectively, the book can provide some direction for the systematic study of comparative education. But unless the qualitative aspects of education are clearly defined and systematically studied, work in this field will continue to be incomplete."

B. G. Massialas

Am Pol Sci R 65:1206 D '71 900w

"Standard works in the field of comparative education . . . do not emphasize fully the potentialities and complexities of interdisciplinary cooperation with other social sciences, and therefore Fischer's volume fills a very real need. Although the result tends to be a rather diffuse, loosely connected series of essays, the book does make its point effectively, especially in the papers by Yedhudi Cohen and Talcott Parsons. This collection, which includes an impressive bibliography, should be considered for all strong education collections."

Choice 8:268 Ap '71 180w

SOKOLOV, NICHOLAS A. The Sokolov investigation of the alleged murder of the Russian Imperial family. See O'Connor, J. F.

SOLBERT, RONNI, il. Poems make pictures. See Rimanelli, G.

SOLDIER, soldier, won't you marry me? comp. by John Langstaff; il. by Anita Lobel. unip. $4.95 Doubleday

784.4 Folk songs—U.S.—Juvenile literature
LC 72-158896

A picture book rendition of the folk song in which "a shabby young soldier on his way home from the wars is importuned by a very small maid. 'Oh soldier, soldier, won't you marry me?' . . . He answers that he cannot marry her for he has 'no shirt to put on.' But when she brings him a very fine shirt from the shirt-maker's shop, he demurs again for he has 'no tie to put on.' In this fashion, he is supplied with a dashing wardrobe—to no avail, for he has 'a wife at home.'" (Horn Bk) Music is provided for piano and guitar. "Kindergarten to grade two." (Library J)

"An eloquent argument for women's liberation. . . . [The] illustrations are charming and funny." Sidney Long

Book World p6 (children's issue)
My 7 '72 80w

"This engaging version of a traditional folk song is illustrated with wit and gaiety: The square pictures, one to a page, with their glimpses of the shops, the town, and the bystanders are filled with the kind of detail that delights small children. For those who would sing, the catchy tune is provided with guitar chords and a simple piano arrangement." B. R.

Horn Bk 48:261 Je '72 110w

Reviewed by Tally Gilkerson
Library J 97:2937 S 15 '72 90w

SOLOMON, BARBARA PROBST. Arriving where we started. 261p $6.95 Harper

B or 92
SBN 06-013944-7 LC 72-156552

"Inspired by her experiences as a university teacher at Buffalo during the student unrest of the late 1960's, [the author] has written a memoir of her own restless youth. Growing up in the excitement of World War II, she was a dissatisfied child of America's educated upper class. At 18 she became involved in revolutionary activity in Franco's Spain. . . . [The book also contains] her account of life in postwar Europe." (Library J) Part of this book appeared in Harper's Magazine in August 1969 entitled Back to Madrid.

"Solomon's very interesting memoir . . . is fascinating. . . . It is perhaps Mrs. Solomon's realization that her two adolescent daughters will be reading her that accounts for [the] occasional didactic tone on the one hand and on the other a certain reticence (no bedroom scenes) and protectiveness about the main character (herself) whose personal story, she must sense, is by no means ready to be summed up yet. By the same token, her acute historical sense, and the freshness of these things in her memory, enliven and give importance to her sense of the world she lived in, and lives in." Diane Johnson

Book World p10 Ap 9 '72 700w

Reviewed by Joseph Epstein
Commentary 54:92 O '72 1800w

"Solomon is a frequent contributor of articles and reviews to such periodicals as Nation, the Village Voice, and Harper's and is the author of the novel, The Beat of Life [BRD 1961]. . . . As a whole this autobiography . . . emphasizes her life as she tries to sort out her values in postwar America. She has written a very readable book, examining the 'identity crisis' of herself and her world in times not really so different from the troubled 1970's." Jean Spang
Library J 97:868 Mr 1 '72 170w

Reviewed by Carey McWilliams
Nation 214:828 Je 26 '72 100w

"It is a measure of the honesty of Mrs. Solomon's approach that she does not attempt to speak for other members of her generation. [Her book] is unashamedly about herself. . . . It is as lacking in focus as the mind of its central character. It rambles, meanders, digresses, sputters, almost fizzles out, picks up again, and so on. Still, out of this, a picture of a credible and strong-willed young woman emerges . . . shrewd, resilient, generous, game for adventure, and absolutely committed to life. . . . The author admits often enough that she was a spoiled brat. That is largely what the book is about. . . . The question which the reader must pose is whether faced with the vast consequences of that war, he can take the personal problems of this American specimen seriously." Robert Kiely

N Y Times Bk R p5 Ap 23 '72 1500w

"This memoir of a fortyish New York City woman amounts to a multiplicity of books for all sorts of readers. It is a book about progressive education and what it does not teach a girl, and about having money and how that can keep one ignorant. It tells what it is like to be the daughter of an unhappy marriage [and] . . . it touches on politics. . . . It is, above all, a book about love and its concomitant suffering, and about learning to recognize that however cruelly one suffers, one still has to do one's best."

New Yorker 48:148 My 13 '72 140w

SOLOMON, LOUIS. The Mississippi; America's mainstream. 128p il $5.50; lib bdg $5.33 McGraw

917.7 Mississippi River—Juvenile literature
SBN 07-059627-1 LC 71-169024

The author traces the geography and history of the Mississippi River from the time of the Spanish explorer Hernando de Soto to the present day. Bibliography. Index. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"This is a quite delightful extra book on either the Mississippi or on U.S. History. . . . Most of the titles included in the bibliography would be of interest to the reader of this book. An index serves well, but many of the splendid illustrations are poorly placed in relation to the text." S. M. C.

Best Sell 32:151 Je 15 '72 80w

"A wide-ranging history of the Mississippi River. Included are [discussions of] . . . the development of steamboats, pollution, and the various groups—Indians, blacks, foreign explorers—associated with the history of the river. In the chapter treating the role of black labor in taming the river, Solomon misleadingly states that 'In Mississippi, police officers were accomplices to the murder of three civil rights workers'; however, only one police officer was arrested and convicted. Still, the title overall is broad in scope." E. T. McDonald
Library J 97:779 F 15 '72 130w

SOLOMON, RICHARD H. Mao's revolution and Chinese political culture. (Mich. stud. on China) 604p il $16.75 Univ. of Calif. press
320.951 China. (People's Republic of China)—Politics and government. Mao, Tse-tung
ISBN 520-01806-0 LC 76-129606

"This study stresses as the 'dialectic' in China's national development not the conflict of classes but the tension between established patterns of culture and personality and the new values and behavioral norms which Mao Tse-tung sees as the basis for the reconstruction of the world's largest political and economic community." (Intro) Glossary of Chinese terms and phrases. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Jay Mathews
Am Scholar 41:304 spring '72 450w

Reviewed by Ronald Steel
Book World p1 Ap 9 '72 160w
Choice 9:133 Mr '72 210w

"The author views Mao as using several strands of traditional political culture, especially the attitudes toward leaders, in order to destroy the deep-seated Chinese desire to avoid conflict which in the past inhibited the dialectic of class warfare and in recent times has weakened Mao's efforts to destroy the Chinese 'dependency social orientation.' The first two sections, in which these ideas are set forth, are the most important and provocative part of this lengthy work. . . . [Solomon] draws some unsupportable conclusions from his analysis. . . . Nevertheless, this is clearly the most important book about China published in 1971." D. D. Buck

Library J 97:204 Ja 15 '72 340w

Reviewed by Lee Feigon
Nation 214:218 F 14 '72 900w

Reviewed by J. M. Van Der Kroef
Nat R 24:167 F 18 '72 1300w

"This is an impressive and startling book. It will have the same kind of impact as did, in its different way, Franz Schurmann's Ideology and Organization in Communist China [BRD 1966, 1967]. . . . Solomon applies his analysis to the course of China's post-liberation politics itself, challenging in the process many accepted China-watching truths. [This] is a considerable work of scholarship and argument. In one step it raises our naive conceptions of Chinese political culture and the old sterile debate of 'totalitarianism' vs. 'participatory democracy' to an entirely new and more complex plane. What it tells us about the persistence of traditional attitudes among certain sections of society is important; its speculations about the effect of these attitudes on political life are controversial and challenging." John Gittings

N Y Rev of Books 17:13 D 16 '71 3850w

"[This book] offers absorbing detail that demonstrates the distinctive social configurations of both old and new China. Synthesizing a multitude of published sources and extensive interviews with émigrés of various backgrounds, [the author] explores the psychological dimensions of China's millennial emphasis upon social interdependence and personal dependence. . . . Mao, often viewed as the complete totalitarian, thus appears as an innovator who 'has tried to pass on to the Chinese people a system of political participation in which subordinate opinion becomes a powerful element in checking abuses of authority.' . . . The analysis is generally sound and often illuminating—and, because the book is both comprehensive and readable, the newcomer as well as the specialist will find it a rewarding experience." J. A. Cohen

N Y Times Bk R p1 D 12 '71 1000w

Reviewed by Jonathan Mirsky
Sat R 55:86 Mr 4 '72 1700w
TLS p324 Mr 24 '72 1600w

SOLOUKHIN, VLADIMIR. Searching for icons in Russia; tr. from the Russian by P. S. Falla. 191p il $6.95 Harcourt

759.47 Icons. Art, Russian
ISBN 0-15-179917-2 LC 76-174515

The author describes the growth of his interest in collecting icons, and how "he set out to track them down in the countryside and rescue them from the threat of destruction. He learned how to date them, to restore them, and to identify them iconographically." (Publisher's note) Originally published in Russia in 1969 under the title Black Boards.

Christian Century 89:259 Mr 1 '72 10w

"Why the increasing interest in collecting anything and everything? Mr. Soloukhin . . . puts it all down to the exhilaration of the chase. He is a poet as well as a prose writer. . . . His account is a rambling one, an insight into life in Russian villages. Even there attacks are ransacked for treasures of the past and part of the fun is to remove the varnish from the blackened icons that you might be lucky enough to find in one."

Economist 242:51 Ja 22 '72 120w

"Soloukhin treats his subject from an artistic, not a religious, viewpoint and illustrates his book with black-and-white and color plates of restored icons. Recommended for popular art and travel collections." Deborah Halprin

Library J 97:1800 My 15 '72 150w

"As a connoisseur, Soloukhin barely passes muster. His 'restoration technique,' for example, seems to consist mainly of scraping off overpaintings until he gets to the oldest one, with no mention of sequential photographic records or other niceties. As a writer he is pale and plodding beside Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, whose poignant essay on the destruction of old churches is printed on the dust jacket of this book. But he cares, which sets him apart from most of his countrymen and gives his book its perverse interest." Charles Elliot

SOLOUKHIN, VLADIMIR—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p26 Ap 16 '72 550w

"Anyone interested in the the Soviet Union should read [this work]. It is a captivating book—not because of the information it contains, which is elementary, nor because it is well written, as is to be expected from Vladimir Soloukhin, nor even because of its zest or its amusing comments on all types of collectors, from magpie to connoisseur. It captivates because of the gleam of light it brings to present-day Russia. Through this tiny chink we get a clear glimpse of the wanton and systematic destruction of Russia's magnificent religious arts, of official blindness to their beauty and ignorance of their value."

TLS p368 Mr 31 '72 220w

Va Q R 48:cvi summer '72 70w

SOLZHENITSYN, ALEXANDER. August 1914; tr. by Michael Glenny. 622p $10 Farrar, Straus

ISBN 0-374-10684-3 LC 73-178883

Set at the outbreak of the First World War, this novel, the first in a projected series, explores the responsibility for Russia's defeat in the Battle of Tannenberg.

Reviewed by Jacob Korg
Am Scholar 42:164 winter '72-'73 1000w

Reviewed by W. J. Parente
Best Sell 32:336 O 15 '72 750w

Reviewed by A. P. Klausler
Christian Century 89:1192 N 22 '72 600w

Reviewed by R. W. Haney
Christian Science Monitor p11 Ja 3 '73 600w

Reviewed by Robert Conquest
Commentary 55:92 Ja '73 850w

Reviewed by Philip Toynbee
Critic 31:67 N/D '72 1500w

"The view of history this book expresses runs completely counter to the official marxist view that the revolution was the culmination of a long and inevitable historical process. It could not be construed as anti-Soviet, nor, even, anti-Russian. Solzhenitsyn's love for his country is deep and sincere. But it could be called un-Soviet in its utter disregard for the official version of life and history, its passionate search for the truth and, indeed, in its pity for Russia. This book's leitmotif is the sentence: 'I am sorry for Russia.' These, in the eyes of his critics and detractors in Russia, are sins. They are, of course, Solzhenitsyn's greatest strengths as a writer."

Economist 244:57 S 23 '72 800w

Encounter 39:28 N '72 3500w

Horn Bk 48:614 D '72 600w

Reviewed by S. A. Haffner
Library J 97:3334 O 15 '72 350w

Reviewed by Francis Russell
Nat R 24:1067 S 29 '72 1150w

Reviewed by Jeri Laber
New Repub 167:27 O 7 '72 1900w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
New Statesman 84:391 S 22 '72 1700w

Reviewed by Philip Rahv
N Y Rev of Books 19:13 O 5 '72 4550w

"Thematically and stylistically the book constitutes an entirely new departure for Solzhenitsyn; and it is, if anything, even more remarkable than his other work. . . . [His] encyclopedic erudition . . . now turns out to include an awesome command of military science. The precision of his battle scenes should delight the military history buff. But readers usually given to skipping military passages will also be gripped by the vivid portrayals of the participants and observers of these battles. At least two of these warriors, the historical General Samsonov and the fictional Colonel Vorotyntsev have been drawn . . . with such mastery and in such depth that they are likely to enter the gallery of the finest Russian literary characterizations of all time. . . . [In addition, this novel] is sure to be the most accessible of Solzhenitsyn's works for non-Russian readers. . . . [However] the English version of the novel should have been labeled by the publisher's 'adapted' or 'paraphrased' by Michael Glenny, rather than translated by him." Simon Karlinsky

N Y Times Bk R p1 S 10 '72 3600w

Reviewed by Naomi Bliven
New Yorker 48:178 O 14 '72 2200w

Reviewed by P. S. Prescott
Newsweek 80:105 S 18 '72 1100w

"For Western readers this is a difficult book. The geography is unfamiliar; the logistics are bewildering to anybody but a military specialist; and the chronology is not easy to follow since the scene keeps shifting and many events overlap. Here the author has, in fact, been helpful, taking pains to scatter unobtrusive dates in each of the episodes (there are sixty-four chapters, which comprise fifty-five episodes told in direct narration, two flashbacks, four summaries, three montages of newspaper clippings) as they unroll, sometimes simultaneously, sometimes in sequence, during the fatal month of August 1914. . . . [The novel] is going to be disorienting to current Western sensibility. It is likely to be . . . dismissed as dated in its techniques . . . corny . . . and, anyway, impossible to finish. To be fair to the book will not be easy for many readers, particularly those who like an author to conform to their own notions of political good manners. . . . Throughout the novel Solzhenitsyn is engaged in a polemic with Tolstoy. . . . [He] holds that leadership is determining in war and uses examples from the tragic Eastern campaign to prove it." Mary McCarthy

Sat R 55:79 S 16 '72 7700w

Reviewed by Timothy Foote

Time 100:91 S 25 '72 900w

TLS p1086 S 22 '72 850w

SOLZHENITSYN, ALEXANDER I. Soviet prison camp speech. See Galler, M., comp.

SOMETHING about the author; v 1. Facts and pictures about contemporary authors and illustrations of books for young people [by] Anne Commire. 233p il $15 Gale res.

920 Authors, American. Illustrators, American

This "is the first volume of a projected series of annual volumes of biographical sketches of contemporary authors and illustrators of books for young people. It includes approximately 175 creators of juvenile books, . . . alphabetically arranged, and [gives] such personal information as age, place of birth, parents, marital status, children, education, politics, religion, home address, address of agent, career, awards, honors, and a complete bibliography of the writings or illustrating done by the subject, with references to work in progress. . . . 'Sidelights' is a statement written by the biographee especially for this volume explaining his creative philosophy and sources of inspiration. . . . Almost every biography is accompanied by a . . . photograph of the biographee and illustrations from one of his books. . . . The only index in [this volume] is for the artists whose illustrations and jacket designs are used throughout the book. Biographical sketches are provided only for those illustrators who have authored a book. . . . In the first volume 88 percent of the biographees are authors or illustrators who live in the United States." (Booklist)

"A novel feature of [this compilation] is the composite listing of authors of such series as Hardy Boys, Bobbsey Twins, Nancy Drew, and even the older Rover Boys and Tom Swift. . . . The historic information, practically nonexistent in other books on children's literature, makes this edition . . . unique. . . . [This work] will be useful not only to boys and girls needing information on authors and their lives, but also to students of children's literature, authors and would-be authors, librarians, and teachers. Although the work duplicates some of the biographies in other reference sources containing biographies of authors of books for young people and in its parent, Contemporary Authors, the up-to-date-ness and unique features in volume 1 make it useful. Recommended."

Booklist 68:438 F 1 '72 2200w

"The selection [of authors] is based on 'suggestions from librarians and teachers' and on reading lists used by schools and public libraries. . . . The omissions are curious. Many Newbery-Caldecott winners are missing [as] are such notables as Lloyd Alexander, Beverly Cleary, Esther Forbes, Virginia Hamilton, Robert Lawson, Robert McCloskey, and Scott O'Dell for the Americans. For the British, such well-known writers as Garner, Southall, Sutcliffe, and Tolkien are omitted, though Arduzone, Cresswell, and Garfield are among those included. . . . The listings of works by those who write for both young people and adults do not always specify which are for whom." M. N. Coughlan

Library J 97:1151 Mr 15 '72 330w

SOMMER, ELYSE. The bread dough craft book; il. by Giulio Maestro. 128p $4.50; lib bdg $4.14 Lothrop

745.5 Handicraft—Juvenile literature. Modeling—Juvenile literature
LC 79-177330

"Bread dough craft, a folk art from Ecuador, uses simple ingredients imaginatively combined to create [decorative objects]. . . . The dough is a mixture of soft bread and glue which is formed into shape and dries in the open air. . . . Step-by-step instructions begin with a list of needed materials, and techniques of coloring, shaping, drying and varnishing are . . . described. Sommer outlines over 50 projects including beads and jewelry, mobiles, a complete chess set, and holiday ideas. [Index.] Grades three to six." (Library J)

"In a brief Introduction. [Sommer] defines the craft, believed to have been begun by Ecuadorian folk artists unable to secure potter's clay or proper drying ovens for the ornaments used in their religious festivals. . . . Under each project, the needed materials are listed, as well as step-by-step instructions on How to Make It; the envisioned finished creation is shown in accompanying pencil sketches. Imagination does not play a large part in either the writing or the projects chosen for inclusion; however, the book will most certainly be a godsend for harried mothers on rainy days and for desperate Girl Scout and Brownie leaders in need of ideas for inexpensive amusements and gifts. A list of Sources of Supplies is given at the end." S. B. A.

Horn Bk 48:480 O '72 170w

"[The author consistently challenges] children to improvise. Although some magazines have featured bread dough for making Christmas decorations, this useful craft form will be new to most juvenile collections." Julie Cummins

Library J 97:1917 My 15 '72 90w

SONTAG, FREDERICK. The American religious experience; the roots, trends, and future of American theology. by Frederick Sontag and John K. Roth. 401p $10.95 Harper 230 Theology. Philosophy, American
LC 73-163164

According to the authors "America is suffering from identity shock; . . . [and requires] a distinctively American theology to weather the crisis; socioreligious pluralism is our hope for a national future even as it has dominated our historical unity. Juxtaposed, these themes buttress the authors' plea for the American spirit to cull from the national past and present a 'free theology' characterized by pluralistic opinion and dedicated to the concept of a 'democratic God.' To that end, Sontag and Roth survey the American theological and philosophical periods, underscoring in each the emphasis which reflected the American mystique of the moment." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Unfortunately, in the name of creativity, the authors sacrifice conciseness of expression, satisfactory historical coverage, and systematic theological formulation of their findings. Coverage of colonial thought, Lincoln's democratic philosophy, and the distinctly American themes implicit in Mormonism and Christian Science is inadequate. Nevertheless, the resultant interpretive gains recommend this book to American seminary students and talented undergraduate religion and philosophy majors." Choice 9:518 Je '72 160w

"At some points the authors' construction of the 'American God' seems at odds with their own observations. . . . Despite some passing mention of 'traditional Christian claims,' American cultural and intellectual history is in fact assumed to be normative revelation of God's character. For readers who accept such a norm, this book will be important. For others, there are better books for finding God's revelation, and more helpful accounts of American cultural, philosophical and theological history." G. M. Marsden

Christian Century 89:522 My 3 '72 600w

"[The authors'] American theology totals up to an amicable variety of compatible and incompatible theological impression." Robert Dvorak

Library J 97:690 F 15 '72 1000w

SONTAG, FREDERICK H., jt. auth. Parties. See Saloma, J. S.

SONZSKI, WILLIAM. Punch goes the Judy; a novel. 209p $5.95 Delacorte press
LC 70-142593

"Nineteen old Judy, once sparkling and full of life, has become a totally depressed dropout who sees the world as being divided between lovers and killers (the latter include her parents and all who support war, racism, and other social injustices). After Judy's attempted suicide, her politically apathetic brother, Keyes is assigned the job of driving her home to the environment she hates. Keyes attempts to change his sister's mind about escaping to California, but as Judy recapitulates for him her transformation into a politically and socially disenfranchised radical, he comes to acknowledge the truth of her complaints." (Library J)

"[This] is an excellent first novel. The author writes a smooth prose; he perceptively tells us of his characters. All in all it should be good summertime reading." Fred Rotondaro

Best Sell 31:125 Je 1 '71 240w

"Moments of earthly humor, compassion, and an awareness of the despair of the young almost mask the shallowness of the characterizations. Obvious clues, not sensitive insights, place everyone in his proper slot, which makes for pleasant reading rather than a moving experience. The author is a journalist (Newsweek, Boston Herald Traveler) who writes with style, but this first novel promises more than it delivers. For larger college and public library fiction collections." Doris Bass

Library J 96:978 Mr 15 '71 150w

"This book is not so much a novel as it is a political diatribe speaking for the severely discontented. The earthy language and a couple of brief scenes at the beginning would preclude it from being read by younger kids; however, the characters are real and older YA's might like it." Terri Hirt

Library J 96:4206 D 15 '71 160w [YA]

"This is an effete sort of radical's book. . . . [It] tells you something about the free speech movement, about sexual promiscuity and, yes, about the bombs. But for their profanity and their activism our hippie generation has no more intellectual wattage than the housewives who read Ladies' Home Journal, while watching Search for Tomorrow. In fact these are the same people: excruciatingly sentimental, excruciatingly silly. . . . [Youth's] leaders have the same task that soap opera writers have: to turn out, day by day, enough tear-jerking pap about the race problem, Vietnam, dead lakes and rivers, etc." D. K. Mano

Nat R 23:708 Je 29 '71 350w

SORELL, WALTER. The dancer's image; points & counterpoints. 469p il $15 Columbia univ. press

782.9 Ballet. Dancing
ISBN 0-231-03249-8 LC 75-170923

This collection of "writings about ballet is organized into four sections: 'Dance and Dancers,' containing various jottings and comments plus profiles of Isadora Duncan, Mary Wigman, Pavlova, Ruth St. Denis, Margaret Lloyd, and Louis Horst; 'Dance and Painters,' a . . . survey of various artists who have used ballet as subject matter; 'Dance and Actors,' discussing interactions between ballet and drama, with emphasis on such contemporary trends as nudism and audience participation; and 'Dance and Poets,' a view of literary reactions to ballet, especially in England, Germany, and France." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"This internationally known critic of the dance has written what he encapsulates as 'My last will for the dance, my testament for the dance.' Sorrell's territory is large, as are his heartfelt judgments and appreciations. He takes practically all of dance history as the domain through which his roving and discerning eye delineates the changing image of the dancer today. . . . [He] is at his best when he articulates the esthetics of the pre-World War II world of dance. In fact, one concludes from the author's apparent distaste for much of the post-war experimentation that once again in history an entire generation took the wrong turn in the road. He has a great deal to say about the poetry and soul of dance and his sensitive tributes to many famous writers, choreographers, and dancers add a dimension seldom found in dance literature. [This book] offers food for thought and balm for the spirit. Recommended."

SORELL, WALTER—Continued

Choice 9:76 Mr '72 180w

"Sorrell's prose, especially when dealing with abstractions, tends to be cottony and redundant; but occasionally, as in his comments on specific dancers and specific ballets, his enthusiasm for the subject conquers his verbal incapacities. Marginal reading for the ballet enthusiast; for larger college and public library collections." Dorothy Nyren

Library J 96:2667 S 1 '71 130w

"[This] is a humanely written book with touching individual portraits. . . . Esthetically Sorrell cannot accede to the experimentation that came after the Diaghilev ballet and Paris of the twenties (about which he writes warmly and knowledgeably). It is ultimately as a close and interested observer of his time that Sorrell interests us, and if he sees yesterday more enthusiastically than today, so be it." Don McDonagh

N Y Times Bk R p89 D 5 '71 170w

SORELL, WALTER. Facets of comedy. 340p $6.95 Grosset

809.2 Comedy—History and criticism
ISBN 0-448-00878-2 LC 79-145726

In this study of comedy the "chapters in the first part are . . . built around an historical analysis. . . . [Sorrell begins] with a general discussion of farce and then examines significant works of the Middle Ages, Shakespeare, commedia dell'arte, and early American movies; then he does the same thing with burlesque. The second part of the book is more personal in that it is largely an examination of the modern era and the death of tragedy. This section includes a discussion of drawing-room comedy and chapters on the decay of communication and on absurd, dark, and sick Comedy." (Library J)

"'Comedy' is one of the most complex generic terms to which a literary critic can turn his attention. Sorrell has approached the term with a practical rather than a theoretic strategy . . . [which] calls for a very loosely knit book, which is a wise choice for such a large topic. He is clear, witty, full of precision, and most knowledgeable. I highly recommend this book." T. E. Luddy

Library J 97:3315 O 15 '72 190w

"[The author] soon has comedy not only defused but lying in pieces all over the floor. Animals do not laugh, but the persistence of scholarly, humorless books about humor is (as Friedrich Dürrenmatt did not say) enough to make a dog weep."

New Yorker 48:126 S 16 '72 280w

SORKIN, ALAN L. American Indians and federal aid. (Stud. in social economics). 231p $7.50 Brookings

970.5 Indians of North America—Government relations. Indians of North America—Economic conditions
ISBN 0-8157-8044-3 LC 78-150957

"This is a study of the U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs assistance programs to reservation and reservation-adjacent Indians. . . . Sorkin has made [an] assessment of the Indians' socioeconomic situation. He evaluates individually the areas of the [Bureau's] responsibility (i.e., education; health; agricultural, industrial, and manpower development; property and income management; and welfare services) and makes specific recommendations and proposals in each area." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by W. E. Washburn

Am Pol Sci R 66:614 Je '72 480w

"In its extensive scope, its thorough research, its objectivity, and its discerning analysis of statistics, the book deserves to be classed as definitive. Its chapter on the present drive to lure industry to reservations, for example, is a classic. . . . The book's only limitation is the author's preoccupation with columns of figures. He visited several Indian reservations (or in Oklahoma, settlements) and talked with the administrators, but he failed to see the land or the people. Thus he could generalize, characterizing a reservation as a slum, not only because of its poverty, but because of its wide spaces—along with its clear air, dramatic scenery, and brilliant sky. . . . [This work] belongs on the desk of everyone who works with Indians, legislates for Indians, or writes about Indians." Angie Debo

Ann Am Acad 399:222 Ja '72 400w

"A disturbing and discouraging analysis of the first American minority group. Sorkin is very sympathetic to the Indians' plight and this results in some inconsistencies in his treatment of their problems and possible solutions. His combining of extensive data, interviews, field work, and statistical analysis is excellent. . . . The book is an interesting and useful effort to integrate social science research and analysis of a serious problem, and it is a scholarly and detailed treatment. . . . Numerous tables, references, and appendices provide the data Sorkin has used. Excellent introduction and reference for a specialized but significant problem in social and economic development."

Choice 8:1487 Ja '72 160w

"The report makes evident the lack of data essential to the formulation of viable programs and policy, and a poverty level among Indians which, although much progress has been made, is still below that of any non-white minority in the U.S. . . . For specialists." J. W. Stevenson

Library J 96:3151 O 1 '71 160w

"Sorkin's study . . . helps clarify the need for further, specific studies and, by indirect, the way to go about making them. The essence of all this is, again, the aim of helping Indians to help themselves." Philip Reno

Nation 214:248 F 21 '72 1250w

SORRENTINO, GILBERT. Corrosive sublimate. 67p $15; pa $4 Black sparrow press

811
SBN 87685-117-0; 87685-116-2 (pa)

These poems reflect a "political and moral stance about America, and most particularly urban America." (Library J) Some of these poems have appeared in various periodicals.

"[The author's] earlier collections of poetry displayed a dry wit and a shrewdly plaintive understatement. In Corrosive sublimate, the wit is often parched and the statement anticlimactic. The spirit of Robert Creeley broods over too many of the poems: Sorrentino is fond of short lines, vague attractions, and deliberately inarticulate statements. . . . The long sequence, 'Coast of Texas,' describes a love affair in a curious mixture of sentimental and scatological diction, and the reader may feel unsure whether the incongruous mixture is artful or a lapse in taste. Sorrentino does offer thematic variety and occasional brilliance of image and phrase, but his book is not an important acquisition for undergraduate libraries."

Choice 9:371 My '72 180w

"Sorrentino is an able, mature poet . . . [and this] latest collection is an example of [his] low-keyed style. . . . [It] is as effective as a geography lesson." Bill Katz

Library J 97:2846 S 15 '72 100w

SORRENTINO, GILBERT. Imaginative qualities of actual things. 243p $6.95 Pantheon bks.

ISBN 0-394-47108-3 LC 72-155772

The narrator of this novel portrays eight "marginal figures in the New York literary world 15 years ago. Most of the characters are frauds and failures—trashy, self-deluded poets and painters and their dismal, mindless wives and lovers. . . . Sorrentino finds these counterfeits . . . [contemptible and] offers himself as the satiric observer driven to expose falsity because of his passion for genuine art." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Sorrentino writes a hard, clean prose that was evident in Steelwork [BRD 1971]. What is also in evidence here is his humor: savage, caustic, whimsical, and bitchy. I like it. This novel is seemingly Sorrentino's personal notebook of thoughts . . . his theories on writing, his observations of well-known contemporary writers . . . and of the sham of American values. . . . His attack on poets, for example, is devastating and painfully true—the elite followers, the cult of capital letters and typography, the varnish-coating-of-life school of writing about feelings. Then there are the sexual patterns of the husbands and wives; the sleeping around surpasses eroticism and slips, rightly so, into sadness. It just goes on, like the punctual on/off of the hum of a refrigerator. . . . It happens; it offers some assurance; but there's no humanity to it." J. M. Warner

Library J 96:2672 S 1 '71 200w

Reviewed by Gregory Rabassa

Nation 215:123 Ag 21 '72 1450w

"Sorrentino's new book is full of carefully planted instructions about how it must be read. Don't expect a story: 'There's no plot here to worry you.' Forget verisimilitude: 'These people aren't real. . . . At times the exposure of pretense is apt, irreverent and harshly funny. But a true 'Dunciad' is among the hardest of all books to write. The fakery of incompetent artists is a quickly depleted subject, and only fierce moral passion, comic inventiveness and wide verbal resources can sustain interest in their antics. Sorrentino relies mostly on rancor and strong opinions. At best, his novel reads like a mordant letter from an intelligent friend; but even then—as Gertrude Stein once reminded us—remarks are not literature." Lawrence Graver

N Y Times Bk R p6 J12 '72 330w

"[Here] is a bitter, funny, and moving work of fiction about the way we live now—especially those of us in the world of art and letters. And it deals with the possibilities (and impossibilities) of art and life in general. . . . Mainly, the novel's episodes center on defeated characters. . . . The lives of these characters are realized with remorseless energy that I find admirable. Sorrentino establishes situations, scenes, a moment or a milieu with a deftness that an O'Hara or a Cozzens might envy. . . . He also sets himself the problem of art as posed by William Carlos Williams: to capture 'the imaginary qualities of the actual things being perceived.'" Robert Scholes

Sat R 54:88 O 23 '71 950w

SORRENTINO, JOSEPH N. Up from never. 256p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

B or 92

ISBN 0-13-938977-6 LC 79-153951

The setting of this autobiography is Brooklyn, beginning about 20 years ago. Joe is second-generation Italian-American. "Four times a school dropout, continually fired from pointless jobs, Joe also can't make it in either the Marine Corps or the boxing ring. He drifts along in a life of rumbles, petty crime, dissoluteness, and denigration. . . . The book is written a relatively few years later, as the author looks back. At 20 years of age, he changed his life style; he pushed himself through high school, college, and, finally, Harvard Law School." (Library J)

"There are few sentences in [the speech of Sorrentino's gang] which do not contain what the author's mother called 'gutter language.' The most interesting sections of Sorrentino's book are his account of prizefighting in New York City, his brief but inglorious career as a Marine on Parris Island (he later re-enlisted to vindicate his good name) and the various jobs, usually of a menial nature, that were available to one with only a limited education." (Rev.) Stephen McKenna

Best Sell 31:448 Ja 1 '72 300w

"Though the heavy repetitive detailing of the sordid and the obscene makes this autobiography dull at times, it is, nevertheless, a powerful account of an Italian-American man-child in an unpromising land who made it on his own, at long last." J. M. Carroll

Library J 96:2630 S 1 '71 160w

The SOUTHERN barbarians; the first Europeans in Japan [by] Michael Cooper [and others] ed. by Michael Cooper. 216p il col il pl maps $17.50 Kodansha

915.2 Europeans in Japan. Japan—Church history. Art. Japanese
SBN 87011-138-8 LC 74-128689

The author of They Came to Japan (BRD 1966) has edited this work dealing with the period 1542-1639, during which Portuguese traders and missionaries were active in Japan. "The book brings together a consideration of Western views of Japan, Japanese views of the West and its ideas, particularly the religious message of the Christian church. The evidence of this meeting of cultures is . . . presented in the chapter on 'Nanban' art (Japanese art influenced by the European intrusion; literally, the art of the southern barbarians)." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This book] builds on the work of Japanese and Western historians and adds to it significantly. The illustrations are pertinent and beautifully reproduced. . . . The chapter, 'The meeting of cultures,' is fascinating and instructive. . . . Reasonably well documented with an excellent bibliography indicating that the basic primary and secondary works have been consulted. Useful to college teachers and students alike for courses in Japanese history, world history, or the history of religion. Highly recommended."

Choice 8:1235 N '71 150w

"There are over 100 illustrations, many in color. . . . The authors write in an interesting manner, and the result of their efforts is a fascinating and delightful volume. . . . Highly recommended for most libraries." C. W. Stucki

Library J 96:2770 S 15 '71 170w

SOVIET preschool education [prepared by] Educ. testing service, Henry Chauncey, chief editor; v2. Teacher's commentary. 218p $7.95; pa $4.95 Holt

372.21 Education—Russia. Nursery schools. Kindergarten
LC 71-9488

This is a "companion volume to the Educational Testing Service's Soviet preschool education: program of instruction [BRD 1970]. It provides . . . [an] account of the day-to-day instruction of children from birth to age seven." (Choice)

"The Soviets believe that precocity augurs future achievement and that an early start and carefully ordered environment are essential to optimum development. This book should be of great interest to nursery school and kindergarten teachers and students of comparative education, not only for its clear expository of the program and its underlying philosophy, but also as a compendium of nursery school techniques useful in any culture. The preface by David Rosenham and introduction by Urie Bronfenbrenner are valuable additions to the text and point up some of the contrasts between theories of upbringing in the U.S. and the U.S.S.R."

Choice 7:1710 F '71 120w

Reviewed by Selma Fraiberg

N Y Times Bk R p40 S 14 '69 1500w

SOWELL, THOMAS. Black education; myths and tragedies. 338p $6.95 McKay

378.73 Negroes—Education. Education. Higher
LC 70-188267

Part one "records the personal experiences of its author in black and white schools as student and as teacher. . . . [Part Two deals] with black students in white colleges. . . . Black colleges, public schools, race as it relates to intelligence make up the subject matter of Part Three. . . . Some final proposals for the improvement of black education come in Part Four." (Best Sell) Bibliography. Index.

"Some myths [are] deflated with controlled, yet incisive rhetoric, as 1. There exists a shortage of capable black students; 2. Capable black students tend to be members of the 'middle class'; 3. Recruiting needs to be aimed primarily at educationally deficient blacks. . . . As several black social scientists have done before him, the author exposes the tenuous and elusive criteria for class distinction among blacks. . . . [He] is unsparing, though not unfeeling, toward black colleges. Still, this section may be the most provocative. . . . Whether one endorses the author's ideas—and surely many will not—must be of secondary importance. Most significant is that 'Black Education' has been written and should be read by anyone having the merest interest in black people and their advancement." E. A. Cash

Best Sell 32:383 N 15 '72 650w

SOWELL, THOMAS—Continued

"This work will find a place on the shelves of all academic and most public libraries as a timely, inclusive, and forthright volume on a most significant topic. Sowell, a distinguished black economist who has taught at UCLA, Brandeis, and Cornell (where he was during the 1969 black-students-with-guns crisis), spends 40 per cent of his book on the not necessarily typical but certainly thought-provoking details of his own education. He also offers practical new ideas for improving black education, including precollege training centers for deprived blacks and an advanced institute for those qualified."

Library J 97:2584 Ag '72 140w

"[An] intensely personal [book] describing in the early chapters the difficulties faced by sensitive, intelligent young blacks seeking to cope with racism in all its forms, from subtle to overt. Sowell's is a slashing attack on the kind of thinking that led many prestigious universities to rush headlong into ill-conceived 'black studies' programs and offer scholarships to unprepared ghetto youths while ignoring the more serious, stable black student—the so-called middle-class product. . . . [He] is one of those old-fashioned educators who believe that quality is more important than 'relevance.'" Smiley Anders

Nat R 24:1312 N 24 '72 300w

SOYINKA, WOLE. Madmen and specialists; a play by Wole Soyinka. 118p $6.95; pa $2.45 Farrar, Straus

896

ISBN 0-8090-6708-0; 0-8090-1226-X (pa)
LC 72-185429

This "play deals with the mental and physical dislocation caused by the Nigerian Civil War. The mendicants, who form a . . . focus in the play, are a group of disabled ex-soldiers. God's and Nigeria's layabouts, their past cancelled out, their present disfigured and with no future to come, they are . . . the . . . inheritors of a diseased national legacy." (Library J)

"[The ex-soldiers] see easily through the politicians' lies, delightfully mangling the latter's pet phrases into a yam Latin inedible even with okra soup. They are, I believe, the best realized characters in the play. Dr. Bero, the 'specialist,' and his father, the 'old man,' are also well delineated. Both, like the mendicants, are also returnees from the war. In the end, Bero, his mind slipping, guns down his own father, himself already mad. Such prices are paid in war; even the last bastion of the mind is not immune. The play is fast paced and shows, amply, Soyinka's unusual gift for language." I. A. Menkiti

Library J 97:2748 S 1 '72 220w

"The old man's intelligence in Madmen and Specialists seems to lead him to nothing but cynicism and a lust for doom. But the play still extols intelligence indirectly; it demands that its audience must think, and it makes them laugh at the foul absurdity of state-organised viciousness. It is full of a broad, chuckling, Mephistophelean satire which is very personally Soyinka's." Angus Calder

New Statesman 83:564 Ap 28 '72 110w

"[This play] is not likely to win [Soyinka] praise from his fellow countrymen. . . . [It is] the most brutal piece of social criticism he has published. . . . Soyinka has written a deeply troubling drama, an allegory of life in postwar Nigeria. By using allegory and irony, [he] has been able to write a scathing commentary on failures of his country's leaders (as symbolized by Dr. Bero and his four henchmen) to return the nation even to the prewar semblance of stability. Although much of the dialogue is confusing, the obscurity has clearly been intentional or the work itself would have been censored." C. R. Larson

N Y Times Bk R p6 D 24 '72 2300w

"Perhaps as a consequence of the Biafra war, and his own imprisonment in Nigeria, Wole Soyinka has written an ugly, unhappy play sadenly different from his previous work. . . . The dominating philosophy is called 'As': it is a philosophy of seeing things as they are, of 'abominating humanity', of accepting desperation and self-disgust. . . . The action of the play is grotesque, horrible, probably dramatically effective in a way. The rhetoric is quite powerful, especially the deliberate gibberish. . . . It is clearly not expected that many in the audience will be able to follow the verbal argument. Meaninglessness is the theme of this play: it demonstrates failure in communication, dramatizing the solitude and despair of a playwright who was once a source of optimism."

TLS p1632 D 31 '71 450w

SOYINKA, WOLE. A shuttle in the crypt. 89p $6.95; pa $2.65 Hill & Wang

821 Negro poetry

ISBN 0-8090-8667-0; 0-8090-1364-9 (pa)

LC 77-185430

The author of Idanre, and other poems, BR19 1969, is a poet and playwright from Nigeria, who was imprisoned for two years "for writings sympathetic to secessionist Biafra. . . . [His book] is, Soyinka writes, a record of poems written in gaol in spite of the deprivation of reading and writing material in nearly two years of solitary confinement. . . . The shuttle is a unique species of the caged animal, a restless bolt of energy, a trapped weaver-bird. . . . Many of these poems . . . describe what Soyinka calls the 'landscape of the loss of human contact' . . . and, most of all, sounds, which to the solitary prisoner are the only sign of an outside world." (Publisher's note)

"[These poems] reflect, formally and materially, a rage, an immediacy. They contain evocations and inflammations. The cells [the author] lived in were forms, in a real way, which conditioned his language and that language very often, to the destruction of poems, behaves hysterically. . . . Some poems seem intended for self-mesmerizing and maybe should be read as purely therapeutic exercises. . . . The contortion, the arhythmic strutting, the obfuscations are symptoms of a consciousness desiring to transcend speech; I feel that understanding this enables a reader to perceive beneath the poetry a poet whose emotions are still too close to the event he is trying to evoke. Mr. Wole [Soyinka] will surface again and produce poems that embody desperation rather than wrestle with it on the page." T. O'Hara

Best Sell 32:327 O 15 '72 350w

"[This] is a tragic book in the following way: rather than getting across how it felt to be in a lightless cell for two years—and I do not presume it felt any specific way—Soyinka encases his situation in a fuzzy warped Shakespearean pseudo-language. . . . His writing is nearly incoherent." Clayton Eshleman

Library J 97:2737 S 1 '72 100w

"[The poems] seem even denser than those in [Soyinka's] first collection. There is less fizz, less peacock-preening. . . . Yet what looks like a riot of mixed metaphors has, in the past, proved valid re-invention of language. . . . The man, Soyinka, didn't die, physically or morally, for one good reason: he knew, and others knew, and he knew that others knew, that he was, at least potentially, a great writer. . . . And I think he is, now, a great writer; one of the very few half-adequate spokesmen we have." Angus Calder

New Statesman 84:866 D 8 '72 330w

SPAACK, PAUL HENRI. The continuing battle; memoirs of a European, 1936-1966; tr. from the French by Henry Fox. 512p $12.50 Little 327.493 Belgium—Politics and government.

Europe—Politics—1945-
LC 78-175471

"After a few pages devoted to the outbreak of war in 1939, the quarrel between the Cabinet and King Leopold, the flight of the Cabinet to France then to England, Mr. Spaak jumps to the end of the war and from then on deals exclusively with his activities to promote European unity. He describes his role in the organization and activities of U. N., NATO, the Council of Europe, Common Market, [and] European Coal and Steel Community. Index." (Best Sell)

"This is not just another of the usual type of 'Memoirs' being turned out during the past decade by so many of the prominent political and military leaders of the World War and post war period. The author says nothing about his own background. . . . There is not even any account of events in Belgium during these years, 1936 to 1966, though he was several times Premier or Foreign Minister of that country during the period. . . . Clearly, Mr. Spaak considers his achievements in [the struggle for a united Europe] . . . to be the most important element of his public career. . . . [But] he gives little background information, presupposing a wide knowledge of the period which most readers will not have. . . . [The volume] should prove a helpful reference work for the college library but the casual reader will not find it worth the excessive price." F. J. Gallagher

Best Sell 31:510 F 15 '72 350w

Choice 9:569 Je '72 150w

"In every constructive plan for Europe's future since the war [Spaak's] . . . name is to be found. . . . [He] was one of that great generation of European statesmen which also included Adenauer, de Gasperi, Schuman and Bevin who set themselves to repair the ravages of war and, by the construction of an effective security system, to ensure a peaceful future. As such, his memoirs, though written in a somewhat jerky and disconnected manner, are nonetheless alive and full of interest. . . . For the historian [they] reveal something of the diversity of European politics in the 20 years after the war." Anthony Hartley

Christian Science Monitor p17 Mr 16 '72 600w

"This important addition to the diplomatic history of Europe since 1936 is indispensable for an understanding of the postwar attempts at European political and economic unity. . . . [Spaak's] appraisals of world leaders—Churchill, Roosevelt, Truman, de Gaulle, Khrushchev, and others—are candid and perceptive. Highly recommended." B. D. Loynd

Library J 97:1425 Ap 15 '72 130w

"A reader must be grateful for these memoirs, because very few men as eminent as Mr. Spaak . . . are willing to be as frank about all the political hot potatoes that have come their way. . . . Mr. Spaak, a Socialist, is strongly anti-Communist, but he feels the keenest regret that he could not persuade the West to meet Khrushchev at least halfway. He believed, and still believes, that the Russian leader was earnestly attempting a new and pacific policy, and that had it not been for Western foot-dragging the Cold War might have ended by the early nineteen-sixties, if not sooner."

New Yorker 47:116 F 19 '72 190w

Reviewed by G. C. McGhee

Va Q R 48:455 summer '72 2500w

SPACKS, BARRY. Something human. 72p $6
Harpers mag. press

811

ISBN 0-06-127785-1 LC 76-181648

A collection of poems, most of which were first published in Poetry, New York Times, Sewanee Review, and other periodicals.

Choice 9:973 O '72 80w

"Spacks' second book of poems is disappointing. He is given to light themes and complicated rhyme schemes which force him to pad lines with unnecessary words. . . . Lane puns, strangled rhymes, and clumsy constructions abound. . . . There are some passages that are genuinely humorous, childlike, or profound. 'Shaving' and 'Songs from a Cookbook' are delightful. But finally, Spacks must be considered a slight poet lacking control and depth." P. T. Fanning

Library J 96:4098 D 15 '71 90w

"Barry Spacks does not come on as important or profound (his manner is deceptive); several of the poems in Something Human are professedly light verse; others are occasional pieces, addressed to students, friends, his wife. . . . The basic mood is hopeful, light-hearted; poems end in easings of tension, outward motions of release. . . . Perhaps the best of the more serious poems in the collection is 'The Vireo,' a narrative told in a relaxed style that is not above offering the reader a bit of useful information along the way." Marie Borroff

Yale R 62:81 O '72 550w

SPACKS, PATRICIA MEYER. An argument of images; the poetry of Alexander Pope. 273p $10 Harvard univ. press

821 Pope, Alexander

ISBN 0-674-04485-1 LC 77-154499

This "book attempts to study some aspects of Pope's imagery. The first section urges that, respectively, the 'Essay on criticism' is dominated by imagery of wit, the 'Essay on man' by imagery of perception, the 'The dunciad' by imagery of judgment. . . . The book's latter portion examines Pope's use of select images: imagery portraying characters and persona

(Chapter 5), imagery of limitation (Chapter 6), and imagery of insanity (Chapter 7)." (Choice)

"A book for advanced students, if for anyone. The hypothesis discovering a predominant wit or perception or judgment emergent in a given poem is unconvincing. And, although later chapters do isolate recurrent themes and images, the choice seems haphazard: why these images, and not others? Thus the book appears randomly contrived. No really new insights are provided, commonplaces are lengthily restated, and the narrow quest for images actually lessens our sense of Pope's achievement. Then, too, the author's style is stately, humorless, incessant—without pause, variety, or force. The book is something of a disappointment."

Choice 9:510 Je '72 160w

"This ambitious, rewarding book explores images as keys to Pope's development through all the important poems except the translations of Homer. . . . [The author] is acutely perceptive about perception itself, in Locke's time and ours. Her consideration of the Essay on Man together with Donne's Anniversaries, and of The Dunciad with The Waste Land [T. S. Eliot, BRD 1923], not to mention her quite contemporary concern with the meaning of sanity, represent criticism of impressive breadth as well as subtlety." F. M. Keener

Library J 96:3614 N 1 '71 120w

"The most useful sections of the book are the last three chapters which deal in general with Pope's personification, with his achievement of freedom in the imagery of restriction, and with Pope's view of madness that results from overstepping bounds. One of the consequences of the study is the realization that Pope's visual imagery is often more psychic than physical. Although relatively little new is added to our understanding of the poems, the study does make clear Pope's subtle and individual use of images."

Va Q R 48:cxxviii autumn '72 200w

SPADE, RUPERT. Eero Saarinen. See Saarinen, E.

SPADE, RUPERT. Paul Rudolph. See Rudolph, P.

SPALDING, HENRY D. ed. Encyclopedia of Black folklore and humor. 589p il $12.95 David, J.

398.08 Folklore, Negro. Negro wit and humor

ISBN 0-8246-0129-7 LC 73-167601

"The contents consist of anecdotes, stories, songs, poems, proverbs, and superstitions, plus a few soul food recipes. . . . [Included also] are some tables on black history and a paragraph each about 13 black inventors and scientists." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Loosely organized but tightly packed."

Christian Century 89:466 Ap 19 '72 20w

"[This work] fails to distinguish between the 'in' humor of the black man and the humor experienced from the white man's point of view. The book functions as an anthology, not an encyclopedia, since it does not present in-depth discussion and detailed information. The index consists of names of individuals and titles of songs, stories, and books. However, it cannot be used to trace folkloristic elements and figures. In addition, the entries are not annotated as to source. . . . The section called 'The New Breed' makes an attempt to show the new self-awareness of the contemporary black as expressed in his humor; but an insufficient amount of attention is given to the black urban experience, and . . . the language of today's black youth, despite its wide currency in the general population, is ignored." Jerome Cushman

Library J 97:2172 Je 15 '72 250w

"[This book] is clearly meant for a lay audience and not for the folklore specialist. But exactly who its audience will be I'm not sure, for its aim is a little blurred. One of its objects seems to be to entertain with diverting stories and jokes. But it also has a serious purpose, to record the connecting links of the Negro people between Africa and America, between the past and the present. . . . Spalding provides introductions to his several 'books,' attempting to demonstrate the relationship between folk tales and history. In these he makes some feint toward a scholarly apparatus. On the other hand, he doesn't answer questions we—at least I—want most to have answered: where do the stories come from? Who recorded them originally? . . . I cannot help liking this book and recommending it to those who want occasionally to glance through black eyes at the lighter side of a very heavy part of our history." J. H. Bryant

SPALDING, H. D.—Continued

Nation 214:598 My 8 '72 1050w

SPALDING, HENRY D. The Nixon nobody knows. 456p il $8.95 David, J.

B or 92 Nixon, Richard Milhous, President U.S.
ISBN 0-8246-0139-4 LC 70-188240

This study of the president seeks to show "him as a warm and humane man misunderstood by most of his critics." (Library J)

"Mr. Nixon's career is discussed at length in this book and particular attention is paid to the Alger Hiss affair which made the then-young Congressman Nixon an extremely controversial figure. . . . Mr. Nixon's childhood and his early career are more thoroughly documented in this book than are the later years of his life, which are given a rather cursory treatment. Mr. Spalding does, however, treat them enough to make it seem that he is presenting the President as a superman of sorts—and in some respects he may be. The book is a marvelous piece of campaign literature and should be regarded as such." L. M. Pritchard

Best Sell 32:360 N 1 '72 500w

"[This biography is] chatty political propaganda. In this context, it is interesting and informative, and contains several photographs and documents not hitherto published. Although it might well be purchased by public libraries for their current affairs shelves, it is not what can be called a serious work on Nixon." J. H. Thompson

Library J 97:3580 N 1 '72 110w

SPANIER, JOHN. Games nations play; analyzing international politics. 457p $12.50 Praeger 327 International relations
LC 78-153837

A professor of political science at the University of Florida "sets forth a tripartite analytical framework that aims at guiding the reader to a . . . comprehension of the whole range of problems states confront and of why they often act as they do—whether they are capitalist or Communist, industrialized or developing. The three analytical levels employed—the state system, with its balance-of-power emphasis; the national system, with its domestic priorities; and the decision-making system . . . offer a . . . view of the nature and complexities of the international system." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a worthwhile text within a fairly traditional framework; but inadequate if one is interested in more recent systems thinking, and in the values and challenges to authority that are disturbing world society today." J. W. Burton

Ann Am Acad 404:257 N '72 460w

"[The book] is rather well written but somewhat unimaginative. Spanier relies too heavily on official policy justifications for the basis of his analysis. This results in much 'cold warrior' reasoning that is not found in the better recent texts. . . . [His] emphasis might be explained in part by his sources—they are, by and large, heavily weighted to the early 1960's."

Choice 9:719 JI/Ag '72 70w

"[The author] concentrates mostly upon the operation of the state system, in which several nations compete for survival beneath the shadows of two musclebound nuclear giants. Here he discusses theories of deterrence, crisis management, alliance, and limited war. In the last third of the book, he surveys the analytical levels of the nation-state and its decision-making structure. His approach emphasizes the transformations that have overtaken recent Russian and American foreign policies. . . . Like most 'power realists,' Spanier prefers to ignore the ideological and moral substance inherent in his 'pragmatic' defense of recent American diplomacy. . . . Although it is neither provocative nor original, [his] study is a workmanlike job that should interest students of international relations." Charles DeBenedetti

Library J 96:3767 N 15 '71 200w

"It would be presumptuous from this side of the Atlantic to recommend [this] book to the American students for whom it is primarily intended. But it deserves to be said that it is by no means exclusively adjusted to their angle of vision. Professor Spanier's viewpoint is genuinely global, not to say Olympian. His case-studies are selected by the criterion of relevance to his themes; and include as much material from British, European, Soviet and Afro-Asian history as from North and South America. Above all, his style is lucid, readable and free from jargon. Politicians as well as students could profit from reading him."

TLS p535 My 12 '72 900w

SPARK, MURIEL. Not to disturb. 121p $5 Viking

ISBN 0-670-51667-8 LC 73-178820

"A group of servants in the Klopstock mansion near Geneva wait for the Baron to commit suicide after killing his wife and their mutual lover, so they can sell [their] memoirs to the press. . . . Despite the threat of interlopers and the howls of a lunatic [relative] in the attic, the servants work to defend their predictive scenario. The director of the performance is Lister [the butler]. . . . When the Baron, his wife, and the libertine secretary finally begin their murderous quarrel in the library, the order is given: Not to Disturb. Waiting for the end, members of the household staff polish their memoirs and attend a . . . marriage between the lunatic and a pregnant kitchenmaid which the madman tries to consummate on the spot." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by E. D. Cuffe
America 126:467 Ap 29 '72 600w

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 229:128 Ap '72 170w

Reviewed by Frank Kermode
Atlantic 230:85 JI '72 850w

Reviewed by W. B. Hill
Best Sell 32:42 Ap 15 '72 800w

"There is no way of suggesting the rare tone and flavor of Not to Disturb even to Muriel Spark buffs, except to hint at an amalgam of Ivy Compton-Burnett, Harold Pinter, and Henry Green—all of whom Mrs. Spark transcends in the process of parodying. The only label that comes close to sticking is Mock-Mod-Gothic, but even that is feebly inadequate, since, along with the thunder and lightning, . . . and the enormous cast of determined eccentrics, the novella has leisure for intricate and lethal disquisitions on life and death, caste privileges, kindred and affinity, group-therapy, temporal vs. eternal philosophy, and the vulgarity of chronology—all wrapped up and offered in a prose like nothing else on land or sea." J. R. Frakes

Book World p4 Ap 16 '72 390w

Reviewed by R. W. Haney
Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 20 '72 450w

Reviewed by Gabriel Fielding
Critic 30:67 JI/Ag '72 1200w

"In its way, this is a revolutionary novel. It is Spark's best in years, one of her most shapely and demanding puzzles. [It] is beautifully written and perfectly coherent, despite the dominance of unexplained eccentricities of plot and character. It is a glacially elegant metaphoric comedy, both a meditation on social upheaval and a quiet lament for the failure of all defenses against the 'better' future that will be accomplished by righters of old wrongs. . . . Not for every reader, but for those who'll try to solve it, this novel is an enigma of the highest order." Bruce Allen

Library J 97:1034 Mr 15 '72 240w

Reviewed by D. K. Mano
Nat R 24:646 Je 9 '72 260w

Reviewed by Jonathan Raban
New Statesman 82:657 N 12 '71 1200w

Reviewed by Karl Miller
N Y Rev of Books 18:19 Ap 20 '72 500w

"Reading along, one is never convinced that the ideas that dart so tantalizingly in and out of Mrs. Spark's story are actually implicit in the action of the narrative itself, or that all the hugger-mugger in the servants' hall can support serious reflections about predestination, creativity and the manifold corruptions of modern life. If human beings are depraved, without free will, yet somehow forlorn creatures of grace, we need more resonant dramatic illustrations and a more commanding set of characters to frighten us into belief. . . . Like several of Mrs. Spark's recent stories, 'Not to Disturb' has the cleverness to entertain and the intelligence to provoke thought; but, finally, its philosophical mysteries look suspiciously like pretenses, and the book leaves the annoying as well as the stimulating after-effects of legerdemain." Lawrence Graver

N Y Times Bk R p6 Mr 26 '72 800w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 55:74 Ap 8 '72 300w
Time 99:92 Ap 17 '72 250w
TLS p1409 N 12 '71 280w

SPATT, BEVERLY MOSS. A proposal to change the structure of city planning; case study of New York City. (Praeger spec. stud. in U.S. econ. & social development) 115p $10 Praeger

309.2 City planning—New York (City). New York (City). City Planning Commission
LC 72-151958

A "former member of the New York City Planning Commission outlines the structure of planning in that city, evaluates the planning product in respect to the comprehensive plan, housing, capital budget, and zoning, and offers her recommendations for change." (Choice)

"[Spatt's] critics will certainly be infuriated by her book, for its strength lies less in the one chapter devoted to a warmed-over proposal for 'restructuring' city planning than in the seven chapters outlining what is wrong with the City Planning Commission now. . . . Unfortunately, the book falls short of scholarship or journalism or even analysis; it remains a list of grievances. And some of those raise profound questions—about the role of government vis-a-vis private enterprise, about the sufficiency of the planners' tools, about the nature of zoning and the relationship between politics and professionalism in planning—that one can only wish Mrs. Spatt had been inclined to explore." D. K. Shipley
Arch Forum 136:[15] Mr '72 650w

"While Spatt may not always achieve the objectivity and detachment for which she says she has striven, it is her personal view from the commission, informed by a primary concern for citizen inputs, that makes the book a more valuable contribution to the planning literature than the usual balanced but often sterile academic appraisals. . . . Highly readable, the book will be necessary reading for the student of the planning process and, therefore, a necessary acquisition for libraries maintaining a planning collection. It is, however, recommended as a case study of New York City viewed from a perspective which is a product of involvement in the planning process. As such, both its criticism and recommendations need to be generalized only with great care." Choice 8:1487 Ja '72 190w

"This [is a] cross between a master's thesis and a Village Voice exposé. . . . There are a few things wrong with it. . . . even though one may agree with the basic content. First, the reader cannot be sure whether Spatt is limiting her comments to New York. . . . Second, much of the book deals with the alleged incompetence and lack of specific training of key staff persons. Maybe the answer is merely to replace these people rather than reorganize. But [the author] doesn't deal with this possible solution. . . . Third, many of Spatt's sweeping generalizations. . . . belle her pre-factory remarks that 'This volume is in no way meant to be accusative.' . . . Despite these reservations, one would be foolhardy to dismiss Spatt's inside critique, which is likely to prove accurate in sum." S. G. Sawyer
Library J 96:3151 O 1 '71 380w

SPEARING, A. C. The Gawain-poet; a critical study. 241p $7.50 Cambridge

821 Gawain and the Green Knight. Pearl (Middle English poem). Patience (Middle English poem). Cleanness (Middle English poem)
ISBN 0-521-07851-2 LC 72-112476

This study of four "Middle English alliterative poems—Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, Pearl, Patience and Purity. . . . begins with a general discussion of the milieu, content, style and authorship. . . . and proceeds to a critical analysis of each poem separately. The poems are treated as independent works of art, but the author also shows that all four focus on the same central image; that of man as would-be hero, confronted by a supernatural power that baffles him and reduces his efforts to comedy." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Accepting one poet for all poems, Spearing hypothesizes not on who the poet might have been, as H. L. Savage did in The Gawain-poet [BRD 1957], but more on his literary background. Well footnoted and well indexed, the study, however, lacks a separate bibliography."

Choice 8:553 Je '71 80w

"The strengths of. . . [the author's] book are in his often sensitive discussions of the poems as artful language. He is especially good on the comic dimensions of all four poems with his suggestive idea that for this poet comedy lies 'above all in the seeming impossibility for human beings of achieving a full consciousness of their status in the face of the divine,' an insight that produced interesting essays on 'Patience' and 'Sir Gawain and the Green Knight.' An inadequate grasp of how Christian poets used traditional iconographic and exegetical traditions, however, leads him to miscomprehend both art and meaning of 'Purity' and, to a lesser extent, the 'Pearl.' The introductory chapter on the poet and his background is valuable."

Va Q R 48:xxx winter '72 140w

SPECK, ROSS V. The new families; youth, communes, and the politics of drugs [by] Ross V. Speck [and others]. 190p $6.95 Basic bks.

301.44 Drugs and youth. Hippies. Collective settlements
ISBN 0-465-05018-2 LC 78-174825

Between 1966 and 1969, the authors "studied young drug users in Philadelphia. This book, based on their findings, contains a discussion of the drug users' communal living arrangements, their values, the way they spend their time, and their relationships with wives and girl friends and with friends and kin. The major thesis is that drug use is part of an emerging new life style from which a more humane way of life will develop." (Library J)

"The data suffer from the problems generally associated with psychiatric research: vague methodology, questionable sampling procedures, a reliance on a limited number of case studies, etc. There are many references to fashionable names in psychiatry and sociology, but little attempt is made to relate their ideas, in a systematic way, to the study's findings. All in all, much more grandiose rhetoric than hard-nosed scholarship. Nonetheless, given the paucity of material available on current urban communes, by default, this book is of some value, at least until more rigorous studies are available."

Choice 9:1052 O '72 160w

"Though some of the descriptions are interesting, the book has many problems. Some of the users came to the attention of the researchers through hospital and psychiatric referrals. Since drug users who seek medical or psychiatric help are likely to be different from other drug users and since the book lacks any systematic information about how the users were located, the reader is unable to know for sure whether the findings can be generalized. Such casualness with evidence is typical of the book. . . . [Some of the findings reported] seem inconsistent with the thesis that the drug users' life patterns form a prototype of a future humanistic life style. . . . Such oddities render the book worthless as a serious study." William Silverman
Library J 97:1822 My 15 '72 230w

SPENCE, VERNON GLADDEN. Colonel Morgan Jones; grand old man of Texas railroading. 240p il $7.95 Univ. of Okla. press

385 Jones, Morgan
ISBN 0-8061-0977-7 LC 73-160505

Spence "traces the railroad building career of a Welsh immigrant [who came] to the U.S. in 1866. . . . worked on construction of the Union Pacific. . . . spent a half century helping to build and operate railroads in Texas [and] died at Abilene, Texas, which he finally called home, in 1926." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"This is a business biography hampered by a scarcity of papers and also just as much ■ social and economic history of northwest and west central Texas focusing on the impact of the railroad. [It] will be more popular with the general reader and railroad buff than with railroad historians. . . . Few maps and pictures. . . . Public and university libraries in Texas and the Southwest will want to purchase it, as will most special transportation collections."

SPENCE, V. G.—Continued

Choice 9:107 Mr '72 170w

"No state had a greater railroad mileage than Texas, and no man built more of that mileage than Jones (1839-1926). Yet he is almost unknown, and this is the first biography of him. After apprenticeship on the Cambrian Railway in his native Wales and on the Union Pacific under Grenville Dodge, Jones was involved in building and operating major segments of what are now the Texas and Pacific, Santa Fe, and Fort Worth and Denver railroads. In a profession noted for colorful scoundrels, he was totally honest and, unfortunately for his biographer, colorless. A work of sound scholarship on a minor historical figure." P. B. Cors

Library J 97:67 Ja 1 '72 100w

SPENCER, ROBERT C., jr. auth. The politics of defeat. See Huckshorn, R. J.

SPENDER, STEPHEN. The generous days. 44p $5 Random house

821

ISBN 0-394-45606-8 LC 71-159377

A book of poems.

Choice 9:818 S '72 160w

"In the 1930's, when his name was knit to Auden's as tightly as Shelley's is to Keats', Stephen Spender wrote poetry with a program. His aim was to absorb technology into verse. . . . Forty years mellowed, Spender's only discernible program is to write good poems. Forty-seven poems, crystal clear in their imagery, resonant in their song, as fine as any lyric being written in the present, they emerge from day-to-day living, from memories, from the eternal recurrences of childbirth, coming of age, and bereavement." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p29 D 2 '71 650w

Reviewed by W. A. McBrien

Library J 97:1722 My 1 '72 120w

"There is something new after this long hesitation which makes one wish Spender had broken his silence earlier. The new element is an enhanced sense of time and change. . . . [The volume] in its slimmess, as well as the lateness of its arrival, suggests the long-meditated, much pared-down offering of a writer suspecting that he may have written too much, or too repetitively, in the past. But the wry, experienced, even angrily rancorous Spender we find in it (see 'Art Student') should now feel he can push things further." Alan Brownjohn

New Statesman 82:791 D 3 '71 480w

"[This collection] draws, potentially, on the products of more than twenty years. But it is a slim offering for such a time span. Some of the poems look like reworkings of old ones, perhaps products of a wartime notebook; others are marginal notes, either variations on someone else's themes (such as the 'Four Sketches (or Herbert Read)' or—like 'Bagatelles'—half-hearted epigrams or memorabilia; and there is the persistent feeling of poems being grubbed up from 'occasions' such as 'Central Heating Systems', which, with an uneasy mixture of imagism and expressionism, attempts to memorialize what was evidently a long night of the soul spent in Storrs, Connecticut. . . . For the rest, there are some wan and rather abstract love poems and a title-poem which speaks with a formal rhetoric unfamiliar in Spender and very difficult to follow."

TLS p1629 D 31 '71 3350w

SPENGLER, JOSEPH J. Indian economic thought; a preface to its history. 192p $8.75 Duke Univ. press

330.15 Economics—History

ISBN 0-8223-0245-4 LC 75-142293

This is a "survey of Indian economic thought from ancient times. [It] provides essentials of Indian economic thought during ancient and medieval times as conditioned by foreign cultures [and] . . . material which can enable a . . . student of Indian history to compare Indian economic and intellectual thought with Chinese, Greek, and Roman thought." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[This is] a brief but well written and well documented [work]. . . . This scholarly study would be extremely useful as a reference book for students of Indian economics and philosophy."

Choice 9:255 Ap '72 80w

"This study, despite its very impressive bibliography and many authoritative footnotes, is . . . a subjective interpretation which appears to assume the inherent superiority of Western cultural values for other parts of the world. . . . Professor Spengler concentrates primarily on the Arthasāstra of Kautilya and the Dharmaśāstra literature, particularly Manu. Most of this is well done, but a better balance might have been obtained by utilizing the information found in some of the Buddhist texts and sections of Mahābhārata." J. W. Spellman

Pacific Affairs 45:130 spring '72 420w

SPERRY, MARGARET. Scandinavian stories; tr. and adapted by Margaret Sperry; pictures by Jenny Williams. 287p $5.95 Watts, F.

398.2 Folklore—Scandinavia—Juvenile literature. Fairy tales

ISBN 531-01982-9 LC 70-117746

A collection of twenty-nine folktales "from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland, Lapland and Iceland, revealing something of the character and people of each land. The Norwegian selections are . . . beast fables; the Swedish are stories of the greater efficacy of virtue than of vice; the Danish deal with cleverness and wit; the Finnish are concerned with nature and man's relation to it; the Lapp, as well as the Icelandic, contain a transition from paganism to Christianity." (Best Sell) "Ages nine to twelve." (N Y Times Bk R)

"Some of the presentations are poor, but the volume is worthwhile if only for five tales: the piece de resistance of the book, 'Little Lapp,' an excellent tale of life and belief in the farthest north; 'Lisallil,' a representation of the strange, mystically tragic effect of nature in Finnish literature; 'The Christmas Bear,' notable for its very good color illustration of a Norwegian troll feast; 'The Twin Sisters,' a moral Swedish story; and 'A Sensible Suitor?' which is humorously Danish." J. T. Gilboy

Best Sell 31:434 D 15 '71 150w

Reviewed by Ruth Robinson

Library J 97:2486 J1 '72 170w

Reviewed by John Coleman

New Statesman 82:668 N 12 '71 140w

"Long ago man's answer to the question 'How shall I live?' seemed simpler than it now does. The world was peopled with demons, trolls and witches, ready to devour the witless at the least misstep. For a human being to transform mere existence into real life required humility and steadfastness, courage and love. . . . It was cause for celebration when the forces of evil were defeated or merely delayed. Such victories took the shape of stories told over kitchen fires. . . . There is subtlety, sophistication and wry humor in these stories, simple as they may appear. . . . There is no age limit to their enjoyment. Sperry's telling is clean and straightforward and infused with a fine sense of drama; and [the] illustrations make the volume 'as wise and good as it is beautiful.'" Feenie Ziner

N Y Times Bk R p8 D 12 '71 360w

"[The book] contains, besides a great many delightful and wholly unfamiliar tales . . . a particularly charming Puss in Boots story called 'The Bewitched Cat' from Norway and a Cinderella tale from Iceland, called 'The Golden Shoe,' in which the heroine eventually spurns the Prince Charming and marries her faithful [bewitched, of course] Icelandic horse instead. This is a fat and satisfying book. The writing is occasionally stilted, although this is not out of place in a book of this kind and the American spelling may perplex young readers. The pictures are pretty but inclined to be derivative."

TLS p1511 D 3 '71 100w

SPIER, PETER. Gobble, growl, grunt. unp col il $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday

591 Animals—Pictures, illustrations, etc.—Juvenile literature. Animal communication—Juvenile literature

LC 79-144300

"Night animals, barnyard animals, polar animals, jungle animals, pond animals, birds, fish, insects—here are over six hundred animals portrayed . . . in a . . . succession of . . . double-page spreads, along with the sound that each animal makes." (Publisher's note) "Preschool children and slightly older." (Sci Am)

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler

Book World p2 (children's issue) N 7 '71 60w

"Mr. Spier's animals, ranging from dogs through snakes and birds to hippos and (what else?) elephants, do interesting things, often down in the corners of pages where a child can suddenly find them himself. The book has no story, just animals being animals and making noises." D. K. Willis

Christian Science Monitor pB2 N 11 '71 90w

Reviewed by Nancy Schildt

Library J 97:2480 J1 '72 90w

"Each creature's often amusing, and . . . surprisingly accurate contribution to the symphony of the zoological garden is only a part of it. For this is also a beginner's guide to the fauna of water, earth and air. But not any old guide: While the animals are meticulously drawn, identified and grouped on each page according to family or habit or habitat, they are also exuberantly alive. It is not just about sound, but a book about life. If you're going to get a child one book about animals, this might be it." Lisa Hammel

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ja 23 '72 200w

"This bestiary is enough to make a first-class book in itself, but it does not account for the essence of the most original and satisfying young children's science book of the year. The animals are noisy; next to each one is some apt phonetic rendering of the sound it makes. . . . There is a hushed page too: the snail, the mute swan, the moth and the condor. These are not idle inventions; they sum up many a zoo visit and many an interview with zoological travelers. The distant future and the little apprentice reader of today have here a wonderful guide to English sounds as they are spelled. No other book this year combines as much observation, helpful pedagogy and sheer fun." Philip and Phyllis Morrison

Sci Am 225:107 D '71 330w

TLS p815 J1 14 '72 50w

SPIES, WERNER. Josef Albers; tr. from the German by Herma Plummer. 80p il $5.95 Abrams

759.1 Albers, Josef
ISBN 0-500-22011-5

LC [76-580279]

This is an "introduction to the work of the geometric abstractionist [who was] once a member of Germany's Bauhaus (until 1933), [and] chairman of the department of art at Yale in the 1950's." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Spies ignores the biographical aspect and concentrates on Albers' works with their easily recognizable geometric compositions and areas of flat colors—works, however, which usually fool the eye and require an interpretation of what is actually seen. The illustrations, including seven in color of the 'Homage to the Square' series in which Albers demonstrates color phenomena based on color juxtaposition and varied lighting, are ample in size and well reproduced." R. L. Enequist

Library J 96:2484 Ag '71 130w

"A useful and lucid essay."

TLS p911 J1 30 '71 300w

SPIVAK, TALBOT. The bride wore the traditional gold. 196p $5.95 Knopf

ISBN 0-394-47285-3 LC 70-171155

"Jason is a 31-year-old middle-class American with back trouble, married to beautiful Devi, the daughter of an aristocratic East Indian family. His narrative here, based on diaries of the late 1960s and on his observations about the not-much-later present, is the story of their life together [in Cambridge, England, in India for their wedding, and finally in a Lutheran college in Iowa]." (Book World)

"The sections about Jason's teaching, and that talent's attribution to his delightfully evoked grandfather are refreshing oases in a novel which is otherwise rather maddeningly focused on Jason's own almost incredible self-involvement; he emerges here as the personification of passivity, and always seems more 18 than the late-blooming 31 he's supposed to be. It is Jason's general lack of substance that makes this novel so slight, which is too bad: Talbot Spivak's talent, which includes considerable skill for both character and setting would be better served by a protagonist whose self-absorption offered a more active, or at least a more various, self than poor Jason does." Sara Blackburn

Book World p8 Ap 9 '72 320w

Reviewed by Robert Buckeye

Library J 97:518 F 1 '72 130w

"Again we have the problem of some very good writing to no particular purpose—with a few exceptions. . . . There are large winning sections of Chamber's notebooks and a hysterical visit to the draft board. Spivak is an excellent craftsman, but the genre of the semi-psychotic student/graduate student/teacher's tale is exhaustingly coy. I liked best the characterization of Devi, which struck me as exquisite. . . . Spivak is obviously a bear of very large brain and one wishes he would uncork in his next book and allow more of his intelligence to wander around whatever active world it chooses." Jim Harrison

N Y Times Bk R p4 My 1 '72 350w

"Being divided between a few references to traumatic contemporary events (the draft, the war, the 1968 turmoil) and a great many more references to pointless everyday trivia (cooking, eating, reading, and a large number of gruesome physical acts), this first novel honestly expresses the fragmented condition of many young people today. The question, though, is whether this condition can interest people other than the characters themselves. Jason and Devi, the hero and heroine, do not appear as full human beings. . . . One doesn't want to persecute Mr. Spivak, but his book seems to be part of an unfortunate current tendency toward sweet mindlessness."

New Yorker 48:138 My 20 '72 120w

Reviewed by Peter Wood

Sat R 55:68 Je 10 '72 500w

SPRAGUE, ARTHUR COLBY. Shakespeare's plays today: some customs and conventions of the stage, by Arthur Colby Sprague and J. C. Trewin. 147p il $4.95 Univ. of S.C. press

822.3 Shakespeare, William—Stage history
ISBN 0-87249-205-2 LC 73-133842

In this account of "productions of Shakespeare in the 20th century, the material is grouped under the headings of stage business, cutting the text, additions to the text, speaking the lines, sights and sounds, the people of the plays, and stages and staging." (Choice)

"The sections of the text for which each author is chiefly responsible are indicated. Each has written authoritatively in this field. . . . Although they refer to these earlier works, the present book contains chiefly fresh and supplemental material. Their book does not pretend to be exhaustive. Selections and examples of customs and conventions are well chosen. The notes and two indices are good."

Choice 8:1340 D '71 150w

"This brief treasure is written by men of extraordinary experience and total sophistication in viewing and listening. . . . The platform austerity thought to prevail in our times is shown here in a perspective which also recalls the marvelous excesses of more scenic representations. Scholarly memorabilia can be sheer delight." J. H. Crouch

Library J 96:2006 Je 1 '71 90w

SPRIGG, CHRISTOPHER ST JOHN. See Caudwell, C.

SPRING, JOEL H. Education and the rise of the corporate state. 206p $7.95 Beacon press

370.973 Education—U.S.—History. Education—Aims and objectives. Corporations
ISBN 0-8070-3174-7 LC 72-75546

The author "contends that American public schools during the past 80 years have done little to meet the real human needs of people, but rather have reflected the Progressive's vision of the good society—a highly organized and smoothly working corporate structure. He demonstrates how the schools were used by economic elites to support economic efficiency via the emphasis on social control." (Library J)

"[This is] an important book which will undoubtedly engender a great deal of debate.

SPRING, J. H.—Continued

Using American educational history as his vehicle, Spring documents many of the arguments of contemporary radical educational critics. . . . Going beyond Lawrence A. Cremin's landmark, The Transformation of the School [BRD 1961], Spring effectively marshals his materials on vocational guidance, industrial education, the junior high school, and the rise of the comprehensive high school to make his case. Recommended." E. R. Beauchamp

Library J 97:2584 Ag '72 130w

"[This is] an attempt to theorize about the anti-democratic character of public education in this country. . . . There are portraits of such leading educational theorists as George W. Perkins, Herbert Croly, G. R. Taylor, John Dewey and Wilson Gill. Another shot fired in the battle to deschool society, with a predictably appreciative foreword by Ivan Illich."

N Y Times Bk R p38 O 1 '72 140w

"[This is a] turgid but nevertheless provocative book. . . . Spring's thesis should sit uneasily on our conscience and consciousness, even if only parts, rather than the whole, are true. Despite the research, it is difficult, perhaps impossible, to make an airtight case that the schools and corporate structure worked hand in hand. It would also be the height of naiveté to deny the considerable influence that such an enterprise must have exerted and surely continues to exert on public education."

Jack Fields

Teach Col Rec 73:454 F '72 2550w

SPRINGER, JOHN L. If they're so smart, how come you're not rich? 235p $5.95 Regnery 332.6 Investments
LC 72-143836

In this "survey on the investment advisory service, Springer covers foundations, college endowments, mutual funds, personal advisory service and commercial advisory service, and bulletins. The author's evidence comes from cases and surveys from the Security and Exchange Commission, from special studies made by the New York Stock Exchange, [and from] reports from our business schools in the large universities. . . . [Sources are] detailed in the appendix." (Choice)

"[There is] a going contest sponsored by the Chase-Manhattan Bank of New York in which the ability of the financial advisors to produce is tested for results and the conclusion is 'if you can't manage to increase your client's funds more than he could by leaving it in the savings bank, you do not belong in the business.' Springer uses the facts he has compiled to prove that the financial advisors are not producing. A fascinating book and very rewarding in the material presented."

Choice 9:255 Ap '72 150w

"An intriguing title for a book which examines the quality of investment advice and finds it inferior. Although all investment advisers must register with the SEC, Springer finds that most of them are totally unqualified. He discusses the kind of work produced by the fly-by-night, one-man shop. . . . as well as that of one of the giants of the investment advisory business, Value Line; and his findings make for interesting and chilling reading. . . . However, the final chapter ends on a note of some hope." M. R. Brown

Library J 96:2308 Jl '71 170w

SPULBER, NICOLAS. Socialist management & planning: topics in comparative socialist economics. (Int. development Res. Center. Stud. in development) 235p $10 Ind. univ. press

330.9171 Communist countries—Economic policy
ISBN 253-39601-8 LC 73-126220

"The work opens with a chapter on the 'Scope and Logic of Economic Reforms,' approached from the standpoint of control systems, the functions these perform and their relation to centralized planning, countries of the socialist camp being distinguished according as their mechanisms of planning and control conform to three main types. There follows a study of investment policies and of . . . 'Catching-up Strategies.' Part 2 deals with level of, and compares the progress of, collectivization in the various countries of Eastern Europe other than the USSR. There then follow a series of . . . chapters about foreign trade and the CEMA (or Comecon). Concluding chapters deal with 'intercountry conflicts' (e.g., the Soviet-Yugoslav rift of the fifties and socio-economic aspects of the Sino-Soviet conflict in the sixties) and the issue of 'convergence.'" (Pol Sci Q) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Spulber's book is a welcome contribution that should be appreciated by most students and experts concerned with socialist economies. . . . Although the essays do not form an integrated whole, nonetheless they contain a certain degree of unity of approach and analytical method. Perhaps the two most salient characteristics of Professor Spulber's work are (1) analysis of changes and (2) comparison between countries or between periods. While not giving the reader the entire history of the evolution of socialist systems, the first characteristic probably maximizes the amount of interesting and relevant information that one can obtain within the limits of Professor Spulber's essays. The comparisons, on the other hand—especially the comparisons between the evolution in Soviet Russia on the one hand and in Communist China on the other—allow the reader to see the subject more en relief than one could otherwise." Jaroslav Vanek

Ann Am Acad 398:217 N '71 390w

"This is an informative volume, well filled with detail about recent changes in the socialist countries (including China as well as Eastern Europe), with special reference to changes in planning and management under the reforms of economic mechanism of the last decade. It can perhaps be said to be, both in design and execution, richer in description than in analysis or in novel judgments and ideas. As a survey it is objective and impartial in the main, without much indication either of sympathy or antipathy, and its cited literature is fairly comprehensive and balanced as between East and West." Maurice Dobbs

Pol Sci Q 87:282 Je '72 310w

SPULER, BERTOLD. History of the Mongols; based on Eastern and Western accounts of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries; tr. from the German by Helga and Stuart Drummond. (The Islamic world ser) 221p maps $8 Univ. of Calif. press

950.2 Mongols—History
ISBN 0-520-01960-1 LC 68-8720

The documents collected here provide a . . . description of the founding of the Mongol empire and . . . offer an account of the Mongols as seen through European eyes. The extracts deal with the exploits of Chinggis Khan and his immediate successors, with the Ilkhan Dynasty in Persia, the Mongol Khans in China, and the empire of the Golden Horde. The documents . . . are preceded by an Introduction which gives an account of the Mongol advance from the East." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

"Semipopularized documentary history of the Mongol conquests by one of the leading contemporary Mongolists. The historical summary in Spuler's introduction and the editorial notes to the documents are, however, too brief to illumine fully the nearly 200 pages of primary sources which constitute the bulk of the work. . . . The texts and excerpts from them are judiciously selected. The reports of European envoys and the works of West Asian historians predominate. The Drummonds' translation reads smoothly. . . . The English speaking reader may be somewhat inconvenienced by the untranslated references to titles of sources following each selection which requires frequent consultation of the list of sources near the front of the book. Recommended for college and comprehensive general libraries."

Choice 9:1022 O '72 200w

"[Professor Spuler] applies traditional methods in a refreshingly novel way. Instead of reproducing once more one of the well-known texts and adding new footnotes to it, he selects excerpts from a number of sources and arranges them by a combination of chronology and topic. . . . By this method, when it is time to introduce a particular topic, the most detailed or the most vivid source may be cited, without writing a composite account. A legitimate complaint, however, is that while this compilation is attributed to 'Eastern and Western accounts', not a single Chinese source is drawn on, though many are available. . . . There is one curious error for so good a scholar as Professor Spuler: the . . . statement [on the origin of the word 'China']."

TLS p887 Jl 28 '72 600w

SPYERS-DURAN, PETER, ed. Advances in understanding approval and gathering plans in academic libraries. See Advances in understanding approval and gathering plans in academic libraries

SQUIRES, RADCLIFFE, ed. Allen Tate and his work; critical evaluations; ed. with an introd. by Radcliffe Squires. 355p $10.75 Univ. of Minn. press

818 Tate, Allen
ISBN 0-8166-0627-7 LC 78-167297

This volume's "emphasis in three of the four sections is upon Tate's works. . . . [thirty-five essays] offer a range of introductory ideas as well as some advanced consideration of the- matics and techniques." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This selection is solid and comprehensive [and] presents various views at several levels of response. . . . There is helpful biographical and critical material here for the undergraduate, but there is also a wealth of material for the advanced student. The bibliography alone is awesome. Excellent; recommended for all libraries."

Choice 9:973 O '72 130w

"In 1959, the Sewanee Review published a 'Homage to Allen Tate.' Eight essays from that issue, along with 27 from other sources, are republished here. Like its predecessor, this collection is more akin to 'homage' than to 'critical evaluation' in general tenor. One searches in vain for a nasty little essay charging Tate with some sort of medievalism or cryptofascism. Instead, one finds Tate's friends—Ransom, Van Doren . . . Cleanth Brooks, and the like—almost competing with each other in their search for the best way of lauding Tate. In the end, the unanimity of opinion begins to seem rigid and, worse, too self-satisfied. Tate is too important a writer to be subjected to such killing kindness." P. A. Dollard

Library J 97:199 Ja 15 '72 120w

SREJOVIĆ, DRAGOSLAV. Europe's first monumental sculpture: new discoveries at Lepenski Vir. (New aspects of antiquity) 216p il pl col pl $20 Stein & Day

913 Lepenski Vir site, Serbia. Art, Ancient. Serbia—Antiquities
SBN 8128-1451-7 LC 72-183187

This is a "report of the archaeology of a culture of obscure origins [Lepenski Vir] but already well-developed by 5410 B.C. It is . . . [an] account of the site and its ecological setting, the development of the culture with its planned architecture and varied sculpture, everyday life and economy, and succeeding civilizations. The . . . appendixes treat vegetation (past and present), vertebrate fauna, geology, human osteology, and radio-carbon dating results." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The readable translation is complemented by clear diagrams and excellent photographs. 13 in color. There are some troubling discrepancies; these, however, may be the responsibility of the translator. There are also a few typographical errors. Nevertheless, the work is valuable, for it is one of the few available site reports in English from Eastern Europe. Recommended." J. W. Hall

Library J 97:2093 Je 1 '72 230w

"This handsome book tells what has been found [at Lepenski Vir] and introduces us as well to a powerful and creative scientific community of which we readers in English know all too little." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 227:122 O '72 1300w

STABB, MARTIN S. Jorge Luis Borges. 179p $5.50 Twayne

861 Borges, Jorge Luis
LC 77-110704

The author sees his task of introducing the Argentinian writer to North American readers "as a prolix summary of the themes of his poetry, the ideas of his essays, and the plots of his short stories. Consequently, he divides his book into the five chapters—the Man, the Poet, the Essayist, the Writer of fiction, and the Critics." (Mod Lang J) "Annotated bibliography." (Choice.)

"Since the book . . . is organized generically, generalizations about style and theme are obscured. This arrangement may be useful to students seeking basic understanding of individual works, but one might desire an integrative chapter on general characteristics of Borges' writing. Where Stabb discusses Borges' major themes (refutation of time, solipsism, God as jester, etc.), his explanations are more biographical than previous interpretations. . . . The chapter on critical reception and the usual Twayne apparatus (chronology and annotated bibliography) make the book a convenient reference. Since relatively little criticism of Borges is available in English despite his strong influence on contemporary writers, Stabb's book fills a real need."

Choice 7:1667 F '71 160w

"An over-all survey of Borges' literary production, such as the one attempted by Martin Stabb, is a double-edged undertaking. It could succeed in reaching the very bottom of a rich, complex and often elusive work, or, conversely, it could just remain on the glittering surface. When the latter is the case, one begins to wonder about the value of such surveys. In commenting on the story 'El Aleph,' Professor Stabb subscribes to A. Prieto's contention that 'the realm of the fantastic, viewed from the outside . . . is simply absurd; Mr. Stabb concludes that in stories like 'The Garden of Forking Paths' and 'The Zahr' the 'insertion of the fantastic into an essentially realistic narrative is unconvincing and defective'. Yet, it is precisely this insertion of the fantastic into the real that makes fantastic literature function effectively as such. . . . In other places Stabb seems to be too concerned with the fact that many stories don't quite fit the pattern of 'the traditional short story' which, for him, is 'the true short story.' . . . [But he] does not explain what he understands as the 'true' . . . short story."

Jaime Alazraki

Mod Lang J 56:247 Ap '72 1000w

STACEY, MARGARET. Hospitals, children and their families; the report of a pilot study [by] Margaret Stacey [and others]. 188p $7.50 Fernhill house

362.7 Children—Hospitals
ISBN 0-7100-6783-6 LC [75-527698]

This "work aims first to test the validity of the major findings of the Platt Committee on the Welfare of Children in Hospital (1959). Specifically, the finding that 'separation in hospital of young children from their parents results in some emotional disturbance' was investigated and substantiated. Secondly, it probes the difficulties of implementing certain recommendations of the Platt Committee which aim to minimize the separation trauma by restructuring various roles (particularly that of the nurse) in the hospital subculture. . . . A sample of children was studied before, during, and after hospitalization. The characteristics of the most vulnerable children are discussed and recommendations made." (Am Soc R)

"[[This is a] clearly written and informative [study]. . . . Most of the information about the children prior to their hospital admission was collected from interviews with the mothers, not observation of the children. The objectivity and reliability of such data is questionable. . . . This study is not clearly related to any identifiable body of sociological or psychiatric theory. . . . The primary contributions of this book are that it points out many potentially useful sociological areas of research in the long neglected field of child health care, and that it makes many practical suggestions to improve the nature of the care available to children in hospitals today. It will be useful to researchers in the field of medical sociology as well as those interested in hospital administration." L. P. Malik

Am Soc R 36:1152 D '71 600w

"[[This is the] first in a series of British studies dealing with patients and their medical care. . . . As the subtitle suggests, this volume is a pilot study of an area of great importance, but it is only a pilot study. . . . A summary of two master's theses and a doctoral dissertation, it contains the hallmarks of graduate theses: 51 tables in 160 pages of text, and nine methodological tables in the appendix. The senior author, who edited these studies, has done a creditable job of making the whole readable, yet it still seems stilted and technical. The dramalogical model, so frequently referred to with appropriate citations to Goffman, just does not compensate for the realms of data and the well arithmetized chi-square. The subject matter of patient care is terribly important. May the next volumes be focused more on meaning rather than on data."

Choice 8:482 My '71 240w

STADTFELD, CURTIS K. From the land and back; drawings by Franklin McMahon. 202p $6.95 Scribner

630.1 Farm life—Michigan
SBN 684-12944-2 LC 76-38946

"This is the story of my farming forefathers, of how they picked a somewhat inhospitable portion of central Michigan, put their roots down, made farms and homes and futures, and how all that they built for generations was swept away almost overnight by technological change. . . . This book tells, besides, of what it was really like to live on the land." (Introd)

"Not merely one man's nostalgic memories of growing up as a farm boy, this book also relates a vital chapter in the saga of decaying rural America. Stadtfeld tells lovingly and without rancor the tale of his farming forefathers. . . . Readers who read carefully can learn from this book. . . . Stadtfeld has produced a classic that should stand alone for decades. Buy it, recommend it, read it—it's a book for all libraries." Andy Armitage
Library J 97:3145 O 1 '72 200w

"[This book] radiates . . . enlightened pessimism. . . . [Stadtfeld's] story of close-knit, though mutually respectful, family life on the farms recalls the gentleness, the loneliness of solitary work, the caution bred of handling animals and tools—and the turns of luck like a $500 cow dying from a swallowed bit of wire: 'The owner stands by helpless. It is a nice time to believe in God.' If there is lament here, it is dry-eyed, fatalistic as farmers are." S. K. Oberbeck

Newsweek 80:105 D 18 '72 190w

"We have heard a lot about the death of the family farm. This is a simple, luminous account of its life. . . . Reading the book, one suspects that times were often bleaker than Stadtfeld remembers them, but he does stress, for the benefit of back-to-the-soil romantics, that 'it is not in nature to support man very well.'" Time 100:109 O 23 '72 230w

STAFFORD, PETER. Psychedelic baby reaches puberty; an assemblage; il. by Robin Barnitz. 271p $6.95 Praeger

613.8 Drug abuse
LC 71-159413

A collection of interviews with and monologues by regular users of psychedelic drugs.

"Readers who puzzle over the title of this book will puzzle even more over the contents. Stafford, coauthor with Bonnie H. Golightly of a stimulating defense of psychedelics, LSD: the Problem-Solving Psychedelic says that in this book he is concerned with the social implications of mind-affecting drugs. After reading this . . . only the most sympathetic reader will be able to agree with the author that the use of these drugs is 'a tremendous mid-twentieth-century experiment in inner-directed socialism.' Isolated interviews strung together without philosophical defense are hardly enough content for a book with so ambitious a theme. Not recommended." R. H. Lipsett

Library J 96:3152 O 1 '71 160w

"[This volume] stimulates no thought of any kind. It may, however, impress those who have contributed to it, or those who think, to use an inappropriate word, as they do. The straights, if anyone does, still control the development of society, and such books produce explosions of straight wrath that are more likely to delay the time when an equitable decision about the part that drugs are to play in our future can be reached. On the evidence so far, it is a pity that psychedelic baby ever reached parturition." TLS p1012 S 1 '72 100w

STAGG, J. M. Forecast for Overlord, June 6, 1944. 128p il $5.95 Norton

940.542 World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles—Normandy. Meteorology. Weather forecasting
ISBN 0-393-05335-0 LC 72-1779

This is an account "of weather predicting and its effect on military policy prior to the Allied invasion of Hitler's Festung Europa in June 1944, related by General Eisenhower's senior weather forecaster. . . . [The book deals with] the weathermen's conflicting auguries . . . [and] the high-level strategy conferences which made decisions based upon their forecasts." (Library J)

"The excerpts from Stagg's diary show how very human was the reaction in SHAEF [Supreme Headquarters of the Allied Expeditionary Force]. As Admiral Creasy remarked, 'There goes six foot two of Stagg and six feet one of gloom.'" Edward Weeks

Atlantic 230:133 O '72 750w

"[This story] is so fascinatingly told, and involves such personal thoughts and imbroglgios that it will interest any class of reader. . . . To a sharp mind, the book is exciting. It is vital history, and interesting too. An index would have made re-study easier. The charts are intelligible and sufficient." Elbridge Colby
Best Sell 32:311 O 1 '72 400w

"Stagg's diary notes reflect vividly the agony of making the decision to begin the greatest military venture in history, which involved hundreds of thousands of lives. . . . The author, who judiciously avoids specialist jargon and concentrates on the big picture, has written a work for all military historians and buffs. Academic, public, and military libraries will want copies." L. E. Spellman
Library J 97:2594 Ag '72 160w

"[This is] a red-lined footnote to history." N Y Times Bk R p38 O 1 '72 180w

STALLEY, MARSHALL, ed. Patrick Geddes: spokesman for man and the environment. See Geddes, P.

STAMBLER, IRWIN. Golden guitars; the story of country music [by] Irwin Stambler and Grelun Landon. 186p il $5.95; lib bdg $5.62 Four Winds

780.973 Music, American. Music, Popular (Songs, etc.)
LC 77-161022

This is the "story of the origin and development of Country and Western music. . . . [The authors cover] the Nashville and Bakersfield influences . . . the effects of blues and gospel on Country and Western artists . . . the introduction of new instruments and playing styles . . . the Grand Ole Opry . . . the Bluegrass breakthrough . . . Country and Western music and the rock 'n' roll revolution . . . [and the] personalities of Country and Western music from the original Jimmie Rodgers to Glen Campbell and Johnny Cash. The authors also isolate the qualities that make Country and Western music what it is today." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[The] authors present a somewhat monotonous [account] . . . with lots of pictures to please the reader. Sections on techniques and instrumentation are too detailed for the ignorant, and not professional for the music student. Life on the circuit doesn't sound as dreary as it is, when the aspiring 'star of the future' reads Golden Guitars." Mrs. J. G. Gray
Best Sell 31:567 Mr 15 '72 90w

"The junior and senior high school students for whom this book was primarily written will get a generally accurate albeit superficial understanding of country and western music from it. . . . [It includes] an excellent treatment of western music's influence on rock 'n' roll; many quotes from magazine articles and books are included. The author's treatment certainly isn't a spirited one, but the book does present new material for the grade range and has use for high school assignments." Jack Forman
Library J 97:788 F 15 '72 130w [YA]

STAMPFER, JUDAH. Face and shadow; approaches to the modern revolutionary impulse. 254p $7.95 Simon & Schuster

301.6 Power (Social sciences). Social conflict. Social conditions
SBN 671-20984-1 LC 77-156162

"Taking as his framing metaphor the notion that social dynamisms create reverberations which, in turn, impel social groups and ideologies to positions of power (Face) and then cause them to fade out (Shadow). [the author] analyzes the current world scene. . . . He inveighs against anti-Semitism, student strikes, Soviet Russia, Freudianism, the pernicious effects of advertising, the assimilation of Jews, and what he sees as corruption of the mind as well as the air. In the process, he refers . . . to examples taken from literature, the theater, movies, and the arts in general." (Library J)

"Description rather than prescription becomes [Stampfer's] central theme as he verbosely attempts to explain the modern revolutionary impulse. There is little that is new or original. . . . [His] attempt to explicate the plight of the modern Jew—both in the U.S. and in the Soviet Union unfortunately . . . reads as a false historic consciousness. This book, written as though it had been commissioned for the New Yorker, contains no index, no bibliography, and no footnotes. Recommended only for very large, general collections."

Choice 9:282 Ap '72 120w

"[Stamper] who presently teaches English at the State University of New York at Stony Brook . . . is also an ordained rabbi, and it is in this persona that he has launched his jeremiad, using appropriately purplish prose—often eloquent, sometimes strained. . . . In general, he is on the side of the angels. But he is a man filled to the brim with prejudices, some not very agreeable ones. And finally he is expressing only a metaphor, not a full-blown theory." A. L. Fessler

Library J 97:1340 Ap 1 '72 160w

STANCU, ZAHARIA. Barefoot; ed. by Frank Kirk. 456p $5.95 Twayne
LC 68-24278

"This is the first U.S. publication of a 1948 Rumanian novel concerning the peasants' uprising of the early 1900's. The narrator is Darie, a young boy, eyewitness to the violent revolution against the local boyar (landowner). Darie knows that education will be his only means of escape from the wretched peasant life, and he struggles to become literate. . . . At 15, he leaves his village and starts down the Danube to Bucharest, living in various households along the way. He arrives, still full of hope, amid the turmoil and uncertainty of January 1914." (Library J)

"The author's use of this first-person narrator and of a lively style which shifts tenses easily adds wonder to the sometimes trivial, often grotesque material and makes it enjoyable. The universal thrust of the novel is to show the freedom of the human spirit under conditions of life affording the least possible physical freedom." J. T. Gilboy

Best Sell 31:479 F 1 '72 410w

"[This] is, in many ways, a beautiful and arresting novel, a Romanian national classic that few Americans seem likely to read. Originally published in 1948, it appears now—in a somewhat stiff, respectable, and unforgettably anonymous translation—as part of 'the Cultural Exchange program between Romania and the United States'. . . . Stancu is a story-teller in the tradition of Sholokov, and the narrative that unfolds is therefore deserving of such review-ruined adjectives as sweeping, lyrical, inspiring. . . . For all the romance and rhetoric of its genre, I came away from it with the feeling that I'd attended a fierce and powerful celebration." Sara Blackburn

Book World p13 D 19 '71 380w

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ja 6 '72 50w

"A fascinating evocation of the rhythms and rituals of peasant life, the book is also of considerable stylistic quality, and a ripping good story." S. A. Haffner

Library J 97:216 Ja 15 '72 120w

STANLEY, DAVID T. Managing local government under union pressure [by] David T. Stanley, with the assistance of Carole L. Cooper. (Stud. of unionism in gov.) 177p $6.95 Brookings

331.88 Labor unions. Local government
ISBN 0-8157-8102-4 LC 73-183218

This book "discusses the effect union pressures are having on local government administration. Mayors, councils, city managers, and department heads have always been influenced in their decision making by the views of interested citizen groups. Now they are sharing more and more of their authority with organized employees as well. What this means for civil service systems, for pay-setting processes, for budget planning, and for decisions on manning and work-loads is explored here." (Foreword) Bibliography. Index.

"[This] scholarly, well-documented report . . . is based on interviews with all interested parties in a sample of 15 cities and 4 urban counties; they have been carefully selected to give representation to regional and population differences as well as to differences in the form of government, the age and general strength of their collective bargaining systems and the nature and extent of unionization. . . . [This book provides] source material in an area whose problems local governments are at present ill-prepared to meet. The officials and the unions with which they will be dealing will find much of value in . . . [this] Brookings report. . . . Students of labor law, political science and union-management relations will also profit from studying [it]." Philomena Mul-lady

America 126:271 Mr 11 '72 130w

"[This] work at times [becomes] overly involved in details that might be considered superfluous by all except highly trained labor relations specialists. In addition, the tone adopted by the author tends to be unnecessarily impersonal. The reader . . . gets the impression that collective bargaining is a highly mechanized, complicated process, but none of the political background of unionism or the personality characteristics of the participants is included. . . . On balance, however, the value of the book greatly exceeds [its] shortcomings." R. D. Feld

Ann Am Acad 403:230 S '72 260w

"[This book is] reflective and challenging . . . delving into the complex legal and political questions posed by this new phenomenon [of public employment unionism]. . . . Its chief general conclusion is that '[management] is in the saddle, but the straps are loosening.'" Robert Cassidy

New Repub 166:31 Mr 18 '72 400w

STANSKY, PETER. The unknown Orwell [by] Peter Stansky and William Abrahams. 316p $8.95 Knopf

B or 92 Orwell, George
ISBN 0-394-47393-0 LC 72-2245

This is a "study of the . . . process that produced the writer, that transformed Eric Blair into George Orwell. . . . The journey from Blair to Orwell . . . included boarding school, Eton, the Burma Police . . . forays into poverty and working-class life, and a . . . difficult period of trying to become a writer. It culminated in 1933 with the publication of Down and Out in Paris and London [BRD 1933] and the taking of the pseudonym." (Library J) Index.

Reviewed by Melvin Maddocks
Atlantic 230:122 N '72 1900w

Reviewed by J. J. Murray
Best Sell 32:417 D 1 '72 750w

"[This is a] meticulously documented probe into a famous writer's past. . . . [The authors'] work may be likened to the process of returning gold to its native ore. What Orwell refined, heightened, highlighted in his brilliant but slanted prose, Stansky and Abrahams present as raw fact, impure, unglistering, drab. A thankless task one might almost suggest, were it not for the insights they provide into the curious alchemy by which life is transmuted into art, by which an author's face is converted into the mask through which he speaks to his reader." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p9 O 25 '72 750w

"[This account] makes for fascinating reading from cover to cover. . . . Orwell had a deep need to cover the traces of his 30 years as Eric Blair, and the authors are to be commended for recapturing so much. More than that, they are expert at presenting the curious psychic drives that went into the making of England's modern spokesman for decency and reasonableness. . . . [The book] is written with a clarity and intelligence befitting its subject. It is the first detailed account we have of Orwell's years as Blair, and it is not likely to be superseded." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:2723 S 1 '72 220w

Reviewed by F. Russell
Nat R 24:1365 D 8 '72 170w

Reviewed by John Russell
New Repub 167:26 N 11 '72 1250w

Reviewed by Francis Hope
New Statesman 84:555 O 20 '72 1650w

Reviewed by Stephen Spender
N Y Rev of Books 19:3 N 16 '72 2800w

"Stansky and Abrahams have written the 'psychological interpretation' that Sonia Orwell so delicately anathematized in her introduction to The Collected Essays [BRD 1968].

Yet they were right to take that tack, for there is no other way of resolving the paradoxes of Orwell's thought, his mixture of radical analysis and conservatism. Stansky and Abrahams have defined Orwell's formative tensions without psychologizing mechanically, and they have given a comprehensive unity to what might otherwise seem to be a series of inconsistent attitudes and gestures connected only by the force of Orwell's style. In revealing the unknown Eric Blair, Stansky and Abrahams show that the achievement of the known Orwell is even more surprising and impressive than we had realized." Roger Jel-linck

STANSKY, PETER—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p7 N 12 '72 3400w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 80:127 N 6 '72 600w

"[The authors] write with delicacy and without falling into Anglophile clichés; they are very sensitive to the half-tones of English life. . . . So many things in . . . [Orwell's] life, can be only conjecture, but Stansky and Abrahams must be praised for having gone carefully and penetratingly into the process by which an unpushing, unlikely, but dedicated young man severely fashioned himself to become an outstanding figure in his generation."
V. S. Pritchett

Sat R 55:71 N 4 '72 3700w

"Not altogether unknown and not completely Orwell, one is inclined to say. And the paradoxes that begin with the title continue throughout the book. . . . Unsatisfactory when seen as a whole, it still leaves us grateful to the authors for their assiduity in research, their often acute perceptions, and the neutral modesty of their tone. . . . [Certain] deficiencies were inevitable, but they are compounded by the authors' own errors. Their idea that Eric Blair became George Orwell by an act of will, that Blair was the man to whom things happened; Orwell the man who wrote about them, is superficially attractive. . . . The kind of distinction made here between 'the patriot and the radical' is simply wrong. Patriot and radical cohabited happily during Orwell's last decade. The other error of interpretation relates to the question of class attitudes. . . . [But] any future writer about Orwell's life and attitudes will have to take account of the chapters about Burna and the return to England, and they are in themselves a justification of the book."
TLS p1253 O 20 '72 1250w

STANTON, PHOEBE. Pugin; pref. by Nikolaus Pevsner. (A Studio bk) 216p il $7.95; pa $3.95
Viking

720.9 Pugin, Augustus Welby Northmore
SBN 670-53216-6; 670-02021-4 (pa)
LC 78-172898

This book contains "illustrations covering most aspects of Pugin's . . . career in architecture, together with summary evaluations of some of the . . . high points, some biographical details, and a . . . list of 'buildings and some other works.'" (TLS) Bibliography.

"Stanton does well at describing [Pugin's] architecture and the incidents surrounding its design and construction. She could have written more, however, about his interior decoration at which he seems to have demonstrated greater genius than he did in the general plans of his churches and houses. Mainly we miss a careful analysis of his theory. . . . The photographs of the exteriors of buildings seem mainly to have been taken on rainy days. The illustrations of interiors are mostly clear and informative. A list of Pugin's buildings and some other works is a useful guide as is the short, though complete, bibliography. A readable reference work."

Choice 9:501 Je '72 140w

Christian Century 89:176 F 9 '72 40w

"[This volume] introduces a promising new series, Pioneers of Modern Architecture, published simultaneously in England and the U.S. . . . [It is] well written and fully illustrated. . . . Recommended for academic and public libraries." M. E. Landgren

Library J 97:2176 Je 15 '72 110w

"[This book] is gravely disappointing. . . . It is, as Sir Nikolaus Pevsner reveals in his preface, 'only an earnest of a much bigger book'. . . . Since it is the only book on Pugin now in print, it is bound to have a wide sale. And its virtues should not be disregarded. There is, in the first place, a certain amount of accurate, though somewhat thin, architectural criticism. . . . [It also contains] a new and useful classification of the exterior form of Pugin's churches. . . . [What makes] the book as a whole tantalizingly inadequate is the nearly complete failure to relate purely architectural criticism to the deeper issues of Pugin's theology. . . . No references are given, quotations are unacknowledged or unidentified, and the recipients of letters for the most part not mentioned."
TLS p42 Ja 14 '72 1600w

STANZEL, FRANZ. Narrative situations in the novel; Tom Jones, Moby-Dick, the Ambassadors, Ulysses; tr. by James P. Fusack. 186p $6.95 Ind. univ. press

823 Fiction—History and criticism. English fiction—History and criticism. American fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 263-33970-7 LC 70-130411

The author examines "the first-person novel, characterized by the identity of the narrating self and the experiencing self (typified by Moby-Dick); the authorial novel, in which the personality of the narrator is . . . not a figure in his own fictional world (Tom Jones); and the figural situation, in which the world of the novel is seen through the eyes of a character within the fictional world itself (James' The Ambassadors). . . . A novel may have characteristics of more than one type, as the author [seeks to] . . . demonstrate in his . . . chapter on Ulysses." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"This readable translation . . . by a well known German scholar . . . [contains] added chapters clarifying the 'rendering of consciousness' in narration and distinctions between the lyrical, dramatic, and epic modes. Readers who think the work repetitive of recent works should realize that it precedes these works. . . . Of singular importance is Stanzel's consideration of early German theorists rarely met in American scholarship (Petsch, Hamburger, Zeller, Kayser, and others) and the comparative inclusion of familiar theories (James, Lubbock, Forster, Muir, others). . . . Bibliography primarily valuable for its German sources."

Choice 8:1455 Ja '72 210w

"[This study was] originally published in 1955 as Die typischen Erzählsituationen im Roman, and updated only through very sparse editorial comments. . . . Stanzel's discussion of the interrelationships between the three main types of narrative point of view should prove interesting to specialists in the field.

However, his determined indifference to matters of content explains both the abstractness of his arguments and his failure to consider why one narrative mode might be better than another in a given context. The same is true of his treatment of the novels mentioned in the title. Though he discusses them to varying degrees, they serve him mostly as entry into the respective narrative modes."

Marshall Deutelbaum
Library J 96:2086 Je 15 '71 160w

STARK, WERNER. The sociology of religion; a study of Christendom; v4, Types of religious man. 340p $8 Fordham univ. press

301.45 Religion and sociology
SBN 8232-0855-9 LC 66-27652

This fourth in a projected five volume series "is an exercise in micro-sociology. Stark explores here the inner life of religious bodies (communities and associations) and . . . the roles and role patterns constituting and carrying that life. . . . [He] starts with the concept of personal charisma . . . and postulates a charisma of the collectivity. To the individual charismatic call there is the corresponding charismatic response, and between them they create the charismatic circle—the germ cell of a church." (Am Anthropol) For volumes one and two see BRD 1967; for volume three see BRD 1969.

"Stark's work is stimulating and original, encompasses the scholarly handling of a wide range of humanistic erudition, and is characterized by a high degree of theoretical sophistication. . . . The book is challenging and provocative. One does not have to agree with all of Stark's interpretations and conclusions to find its study very much worthwhile and stimulating to his own sociological predilections. It is a worthy successor to the three previous distinguished volumes in the series." W. S. Salisbury

Am Anthropol 74:12 F/Ap '72 330w

"What Stark describes is more an idealized version of what the Christian community ought to be than what it demonstrably is. Many statements, as well as the style and emphasis in Stark's work, are entirely alien to the character and aims of a rigorously disciplined sociology of religion. At some points they appear to interfere seriously with his capacity to use sociological categories sociologically. . . . From what he writes, it is clear that Stark wishes deliberately to dissociate himself from a sociology that is rational or scientific in the sense of trying to cast its 'truths' in the form of propositions about religious phenomena which can and must be subjected to some kind of verification by others competently trained in social science methods—and bound to respect the norms of social science discourse." A. W. Elster

Am Soc R 36:734 Ag '71 750w

STARK, WERNER. The sociology of religion: a study of Christendom; v5. Types of religious culture. 453p $12 Fordham univ. press
301.45 Religion and sociology
ISBN 0-8232-0935-0 LC 66-27652

In this fifth and final volume Stark "studies the cultures historically connected with Catholicism and Calvinism; the one the product of community life, the other of associational society. Catholicism sustained, practically without interruption, the Hebrew tradition of thinking in holistic terms: the Church is a form of being which is prior to its members. The author shows how there develops, from this germinal attitude, a whole array of cultural phenomena. [He] then demonstrates that Calvinism led to a transformation of values . . . [and shows] that man, in his human and cosmic loneliness, has a perennial need for religion as a complement and corrective to his material strivings." (Publisher's note) Index. For volumes one and two see BRD 1967; volume three BRD 1969, 1970; volume four BRD 1972.

"[This] book continually contrasts collectivism-individualism, contemplation-action, and ultimately real Christianity-contemporary deistic secularism. Stark's most stimulating statements come in the last fifty pages when he specifies the inner and outer conditions of Christianity in modern times. . . . Although writing in a sometimes turgid style, Stark concludes with a lucid reaffirmation of Pius XII's notion of the Mystical Body of Christ. . . . [His] erudition in analyzing the cultural elements of art, painting, music, architecture, literature—in short, symbolic forms—limits his readership." A. J. Prosen
America 127:299 O 14 '72 300w

"The scholarship and logical coherence of the work are beyond question, and it is written with deep feeling and often with a moving eloquence. . . . Quoting from Pope Pius XII's encyclical Mystici Corporis Christi, Werner Stark comments that the passage 'may sound strange to the secular sociologist, yet it is essential to the sacred sociology of Catholicism.' Are we, then, to consider the present work as a study in sacred sociology? And, if so, is there one sacred sociology only, or are there potentially as many as there are religious systems? Some of Professor Stark's best pages are those in which he illustrates the poetic pan-symbolism of the Catholic faith. One is likely to agree with him that 'only art offers an appropriate language to religious sentiments.'" TLS p1026 S 1 '72 700w

STARKE, CATHERINE JUANITA. Black portraiture in American fiction: stock characters, archetypes, and individuals. 280p $6.95 Basic bks.

813 Negroes in literature and art. American fiction—History and criticism
SBN 465-00699-X LC 76-158444

Starke "classifies black fictional characterization since 1800 into three large groups of stock characters, five major archetypal patterns, and two general kinds of individuals. Within each of the three categories, she reveals the shifting cultural values that have influenced black portraiture." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"Categorizing by stereotype, archetype, and individual. [The author] cites examples of the Accommodative Slave, Counter Images, Brutes and Buffoons and Mulattoes, Sacrifice Symbols, Mammies and Primitives. Since these types have appeared previously in scholarship (as have most of her examples), this large portion of her book [is repetitive]. . . . Miss Starke trusts herself only far enough to produce a humdrum catalogue of characters laboriously introduced and briefly evaluated. The book becomes an annotated bibliography, useful primarily for those who seek a quick description of black characters in American fiction. . . . [The author's] focus on narration and factual detail provides objectivity but a dearth of evaluation and generalization. . . . Miss Starke appears to be a thorough scholar, [and] a sound and objective critic." N. M. Tischler

Am Lit 44:172 Mr '72 450w

"[This is an] excellent analysis of the patterns and trends of black portraiture in a wide range of 19th- and 20-Century American popular fiction. Starke traces the slow evolution of the black character from stereotype to complex individual. . . . Her attention to aesthetic symbols of culture and personality makes an exciting contribution to the study of the black personality in American literary history. She dramatically reveals the emergence of black pride and assertion in recent fiction and ends her study with a plea that the new black ethnocentrism be reconciled with cultural pluralism. Highly recommended for readers interested in American cultural history and black studies." Mary McBride
Library J 96:3761 N 15 '71 130w

STARKIE, ENID. Flaubert the master: a critical and biographical study (1856-1880). 390p pl $10 Atheneum pubs.

B or 92 Flaubert, Gustave
LC 75-139328

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Choice 9:374 My '72 200w

Reviewed by Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p13 Ap 6 '72 400w

Reviewed by E. S. Brook

Nation 214:154 Ja 31 '72 900w

New Yorker 47:64 Ja 1 '72 140w

STAROBIN, JOSEPH R. American communism in crisis, 1943-1957. 331p $12.95 Harvard univ. press

329.8 Communist party of the United States of America. Communism—U.S.
ISBN 0-674-02275-0 LC 79-172326

In this history of American Communism the "author begins with the passing of party leadership from Earl Browder to William Z. Foster in 1945 and the subsequent reconstitution of a militant party. Next he describes the tensions and frustrations that plagued the party during the cold war, and, finally, the . . . impact of Khrushchev's revelations about Stalinism at the 20th party congress of the CPSU in 1956." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. J. Parente

Best Sell 32:177 Jl 1 '72 700w

"The great value of this book lies in the author's close acquaintance with several key Communist figures. The point of view is one of critical judgment and sympathetic understanding, a stance seldom achieved in the writings of former Communists. . . . Starobin's work is an essential source for students and for general readers interested in radical movements, the Old Left generation, and the cold war."

Choice 9:1199 N '72 150w

"This outstanding contribution to the history of American Communism is a rare fusion of independent scholarship and insights that could only come from an insider. . . . The work is documented with vivid impressions of the leading personalities of the party and of the inner struggles over policy and power. One reads the notes as avidly as the text for the 'hidden history' they contain. The book is important for anyone who shared in the expectations and failures of American Communism, and is even more important for the new generation as a reminder of Santayana's caveat: 'He who ignores history is doomed to repeat it.'" George Charney
Library J 97:1809 My 15 '72 200w

"Starobin draws on personal experience as well as critical documents, such as the transcripts of debates held by the National Committee and National Board of the American Communist Party. Why such a book, at this time, on the fortunes of a political sect long acknowledged to be both morally and politically bankrupt? Starobin provides the answer: there is a need for a 'sober reassessment of the American radical past' that will reach a new and largely ahistorical generation. This includes the New Left which, Starobin says, fails to understand the lessons of communism, but which seems to recapitulate all of the American party's 'historic weaknesses.'" Ronald Radosh
Nation 215:343 O 16 '72 1600w

STAROBIN, J. R.—Continued

"Most American readers will probably find [this book] . . . like some exercise in Byzantine exegetics made weirdly familiar by references to events they remember and to places they know. . . . Starobin differs from professional ex-Communists who, as he says, are often more concerned to 'recant' than they are to 'reveal.' His book deals with issues which are contemporary because they are timeless. The story is only more moving because it is personal as well as political. . . . [His] account is not without faults; even in retrospect, Starobin exaggerates the potentialities of the American Communist party . . . [but he] has captured the mood of the Communist party at the end of World War II. . . . Starobin's verdict on the party can stand: it was 'a movement of genuine Americans engaged in trying to square the circle.'" W. C. McWilliams

N Y Times Bk R p2 Ap 16 '72 1800w
Va Q R 48:clii autumn '72 160w

STARR, CHESTER G. The ancient Romans. 256p il col il $7.95 Oxford

937 Rome—History
ISBN 0-19-501455-3 LC 73-161892

Starr, professor of history at the University of Michigan, gives an "account of the main political, military, cultural, and (sometimes) economic developments during the lifetimes of Hannibal, Caesar, Hadrian, and Saint Augustine." (Choice) Glossary. Annotated bibliography.

Reviewed by E. S. Gruen
Am Hist R 77:754 Je '72 450w

"Starr covers over 1000 years of Roman history . . . and at the same time avoids summaries so condensed as to be unintelligible. In fact, the book is a marvel of compression. . . . Much space is devoted to maps, charts, photographs, a carefully chosen selection of ancient sources in translation, notes for further reading, and even a glossary. The interpretation is accurate and up to date. . . . A good buy for high school or junior college libraries."

Choice 9:263 Ap '72 120w

"A 'getting-started-on-the-Romans' book—popularization by an expert. A reliable guide with excellent illustrations."

Christian Century 88:1362 N 17 '71 20w

STARR, CHESTER G. Athenian coinage. 480-449 B.C. 97p il pl $10.50 Oxford

938 Numismatics. Greece—History
ISBN 19-814285-4

In this monograph on coinage dealing with "fifty years between the Persian defeat in Greece and the start of the Peloponnesian War, Starr infers . . . that Athens was not at all wealthy during the two decades after Salamis. Thus, 'imperialism' is inadequate as an explanation of the iron policy which led the Athenians to force liberated states into the Delian League and to force the return of those who seceded." (Class World)

"An important segment of the book (chs. 2-4) is devoted to a description and systematic classification of the coinage into five groups covering 480-449, and general remarks about the vast but relatively unchanging bulk of material from 449 to the end of the century. . . . Stylistic arrangement can be impressionistic and arbitrary, but this classification is a clear, internally coherent system based on careful analysis of the numismatic evidence and broad historical perspective. . . . The book is a lucid and valuable contribution demonstrating how historians and numismatists can combine their special areas of study to broaden knowledge of classical Greece." C. D. Hamilton

Am Hist R 77:1421 D '72 700w

"An important work of numismatic and historical research. . . . This is a highly technical work designed for specialists in the field. Thus it must be admitted that it has a rather heavy style. It is, however, an important addition to the articles and books which deal with the same period. There is no doubt but that it will be referred to most frequently in the secondary literature that will appear in the future."

Choice 8:596 Je '71 110w

"This fascinating little monograph may change our thinking on some important aspects of [the period covered]. . . . Starr attempts to bring order to the chaotic state of our knowledge of the sequence of Athenian coin types in this period. Numismatists will debate his system, which rests on his vision of an internal evolution of stylistic features (Athena's hair, the owl's legs and tail position, the angles of the leaves on the olive twig, etc.) but historians will have to take his work very seriously." J. J. Farber

Class World 65:97 N '71 310w

STARR, S. FREDRICK. Decentralization and self-government in Russia, 1830-1870. 386p $15 Princeton univ. press

320.947 Russia—Politics and government.
Russia—History
ISBN 0-691-03090-1 LC 73-173761

"The author is concerned with the whole problem of how imperial Russia was governed. More specifically, the book deals with 19th century theories of government, the development of administrative reforms, and the elaboration of the 1864 zemstvo statute. Starr's work [deals with] . . . most of the major problems of 19th-century Russian history, as well as [the] . . . reforms of Alexander II." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This is] a welcome addition to the small number of serious, scholarly works on Russian history. . . . Starr has made extensive use of archives in the Soviet Union, as well as utilizing published materials. Despite its importance, the book does not always escape the danger of dullness . . . and the relationship of bureaucratic shifts to broader issues may be difficult for the inexperienced student to grasp. Highly recommended for large collections and graduate schools; may be too advanced for a strictly undergraduate library."

Choice 9:1193 N '72 180w

"Starr interestingly and persuasively argues that prereform provincial Russia was undergoverned rather than (as the usual version has it) overgoverned by the ubiquitous bureaucracy of Nicholas I. Though arcane, the subject is important. Russian history is not merely a record of what went on in St. Petersburg or Moscow. Starr writes with a lively style, and his scholarship is impressively meticulous." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:3156 O 1 '72 140w

STARR, STEPHEN Z. Colonel Grenfell's wars; the life of a soldier of fortune. 352p $10.95 La. state univ. press

B or 92 Grenfell, George St. Leger. U.S.—History—Civil War
ISBN 0-8071-0921-5 LC 71-142339

This is an account of the life and military career of "Colonel George St. Leger Grenfell, self-proclaimed veteran of wars on four continents [who] arrived in the Confederacy [in 1862]. . . . Within two short years he served on the staff of John Hunt Morgan, Braxton Bragg, and 'Jeb' Stuart and took part in the ill-fated Chicago Conspiracy. This last led to his arrest, trial, conviction, and finally to his death during a daring escape attempt." (Va Q R) Bibliography.

"The general reader should find the book both entertaining and enlightening. There is some good material on cavalry tactics. Furthermore Starr is judicious in his evaluations of not only Grenfell but others like Basil Duke and Joseph Wheeler. But there is little here for the scholar of the Civil War. No maps; limited bibliography. Excellent popular history. Recommended for public libraries."

Choice 8:1503 Ja '72 200w

"Cincinnati businessman Stephen Z. Starr, who has also written for scholarly journals, has produced an admirable, objective biography of this mysterious British soldier of fortune who served the Confederacy both on the battlefield and in the sensational, abortive northwest conspiracy. . . . This is no flashy, hack, over-adventurous treatment that such characters too often receive. . . . The author is generally careful to say when he does not know exactly what happened at certain times in Grenfell's life. In a few instances he speculates, but wisely and only when it is necessary. . . . Writers could well emulate Starr's methods when dealing with erratic and imaginative characters who, as the author puts it, have 'a cavalier attitude toward mere facts.'" E. R. Long

J Am Hist 59:148 Je '72 480w

"All Grenfell has lacked is a biographer and now he has found one. Stephen Starr is obviously fascinated with his subject and he transmits his fascination to the reader. But Starr works under a handicap. As with all legends, Grenfell is in large part a shadow and even extensive European and American searches could not fill all the gaps. Most of these Starr handles well with the aid of collateral materials, but not all. The exception is the period during which Grenfell underwent trial for his part in the Chicago Conspiracy. . . . The historian will profit from its new vantage point while the Civil War buff will enjoy its story."

Va Q R 48:lviil spring '72 200w

STAVELEY, E. S. Greek and Roman voting and elections. 271p $9.50 Cornell univ. press

324 Elections—Greece. Elections—Rome
ISBN 0-8014-0693-5 LC 75-37004

"After a discussion of the origins of the vote in early Greek city-states, Dr. Staveley surveys the changing methods of electing magistrates and jurors in Athens and Sparta. . . . He then outlines the origins and structure of Rome's different voting assemblies. . . . [He offers an] examination of more technical questions—formal procedure, the mechanics of the voting process itself, and the rules governing the determination of results in multiple elections. Additional chapters cover the canvass, various forms of electoral malpractice, and the conduct and decline of elections under the Roman Empire." (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This work] provides a very helpful account of the evolution of classical political institutions covering many centuries of Greek and Roman history. . . . Staveley is everywhere concerned about the realities of procedures. How could thousands of Romans vote and count the votes in one day? How could a plenary Assembly in Athens do business with a minimum of 6,000 citizens sitting in the open air near the market place? How could voters first select panels of candidates for offices and then by drawing lots get a sufficient number of appointees to fill all vacancies? These questions and other technical problems are well handled. . . . The over-all impression of the book is excellent. . . . All students of political history of Greece and Rome should read." A. R. Hogue
Ann Am Acad 404:271 N '72 650w

"[The author] has performed a most valuable and needed task in the field of Greek and Roman constitutional history. . . . Staveley's expertise in this field is clearly exemplified by his use of the best primary and secondary source material, contained in 28 pages of notes. Three brief appendices on voting in notes. Rome; nine appropriate illustrations. Highly recommended for all liberal arts college libraries for students of political science, history, and constitutional law."

Choice 9:1023 O '72 210w

"Everyone knows that the ancients voted incessantly, but few know much about how they did it. Dr Staveley rightly hopes that his book will be read as much by modern psephologists as by students of ancient history. They should indeed find it interesting, but they must be warned. The subject is one of surprising complication; the evidence is scrappy; and the doctors disagree. The book is hard going, from the nature of the subject. . . . The striking thing about this book, taken as a whole, is how widely each [voting] system varied from the other."

Economist 243:72 Ap 22 '72 490w

"Staveley had decided right from the beginning that his book is not intended solely for students of the classics, and has proceeded accordingly. . . . The psephologists and the political scientists . . . [will] be able to test, and to some extent perhaps, revise, the assurances they received at school that Athens was the cradle of modern democracy. Admittedly they will not find in this book an attempt to apportion the credit, or blame, between ancient Greek and Teutonic institutions. But if they follow up the references to the 'representative principle' in Dr Staveley's index, they will, after some labour, be able to learn more about the fundamental difference between the 'primary' Assemblies of ancient times and the parliaments of today."

TLS p797 J1 14 '72 1000w

STAVINS, RALPH. Washington plans an aggressive war [by] Ralph Stavins, Richard J. Barnett [and] Marcus G. Raskin. 374p $7.95 Random house; pa $1.95 Vintage
959.704 Vietnamese Conflict, 1961- —U.S. U.S.—Military policy
ISBN 0-394-47576-3; 0-394-71697-3(pa)
LC 72-185189; 70-71367

This "study of the Vietnam War—to be followed by a companion volume, Washington

Wages an Aggressive War—is . . . divided into three sections—on the planning of the war, the national security bureaucracy, and the question of Congressional power and official responsibility. . . . [The authors seek to] answer the question: How and why did the war happen and what can be done to make the men accountable?" (Library J)

"The authors have written with two admitted biases: first, that 'the war was politically and morally wrong from the outset'; and, second, that 'the lawlessness of the nation-state constitutes the greatest threat to peace and human survival.' After one reads this book, one finds it hard not to agree with their conclusions. . . . The third section, by Raskin, illustrates the criteria by which the U.S. prosecuted militaristic and ultranationalistic leaders in Germany and Japan in World War II. His conclusion is that these criteria . . . are quite applicable to our nation's conduct in Vietnam. . . . His proposals are detailed and written in legislative and judicial jargon of limited use to the average layman. His purpose, however, is clear. . . . The book is extremely valuable from many points of view. . . . Its revealing character studies are interesting and enlightening. But most of all, its indictment of American guilt and its call for a personal accounting by governmental officials is quite clearly a shocking, sobering proposal."

B. P. J. Przekop

Best Sell 31:374 N 15 '71 550w

"This important study . . . [is] the result of nearly two years of close study by members of the Institute for Policy Studies. In preparing it, the authors drew not only on the Pentagon papers but on nearly 300 interviews, many with top national security officials. . . . The book is best described as advocacy scholarship. . . . The authors have brought considerable scholarly skill and critical insight to their task. . . . The authors argue coherently for their belief that the war is politically and morally wrong and that the top civilian leadership did execute an aggressive war. (In particular, Barnett's chapter on the national-security establishment is a brilliant analytical portrait of bureaucratic dynamics). . . . On the other hand, there are occasional excesses in judgment and language and an unfortunate indifference to considering alternative hypotheses. . . . [Nonetheless] this study is essential reading for informed citizens of all persuasions."

H. J. Steck

Library J 96:4099 D 15 '71 270w

"Stavins does a fine job of . . . exposing J.F.K.'s secretiveness, unwillingness to take responsibility and desire to escape the limits of normal political institutions. . . . But Stavins mars his analysis by referring to Kennedy's regime as a 'budding totalitarian state under the control of a leader,' a statement which a friend might call impassioned nonsense and an enemy malicious libel. . . . Scholarly analyses and political polemics which assail the assumptions of our foreign policy are desperately needed. . . . The zeal, the passion and the research that produced [this book] are welcome in the task of political education, even in leading Americans to a greater sensitivity to political crimes. But in relation to any conviction in a court of law, the verdict on the authors' case will have to be, 'Not Proven.'" W. C. McWilliams

N Y Times Bk R p5 S 26 '71 1500w

STEAMER, ROBERT J. The Supreme Court in crisis: a history of conflict. 333p $9.50 Univ. of Mass. press

347.73 U.S. Supreme Court—History
LC 74-123544

"Steamer studies the Supreme Court as a contradiction in American theory, an oligarchy in a democratic polity. . . . [His] thesis is that given the popular nature of the elective branches of the government, as opposed to the exclusive character of the appointive branch, intermittent constitutional crises are inevitable. The majority opinion is often at odds with the judicial interpretation of the Constitution, causing the American system to enter periods of instability as judges are pitted against legislators and Presidents in public debates." (Publisher's note) Index. Table of cases.

"Steamer, in less than 300 pages (80 of which are minibiographies of justices), steams through 180 years of American political history. . . . He does so in a manner that does not get to the essence of politics in America; further, errors of substance and omission mar the quality of the book. . . . One looks hard, and must then misconstrue political reality to find 'periodic crises' and a 'history of conflict' when examining the Court—even when reading Steamer's book!" Howard Ball

STEAMER, R. J.—Continued

Ann Am Acad 401:201 My '72 400w

"[Steamer's] approach to this oft examined topic is . . . unique. [This book] should be of great interest to all students of the Supreme Court and of American law in general."

Choice 9:134 Mr '72 150w

"[This is a] well-written and interesting book. . . . The work's only shortcoming is its lack of a bibliography; it is especially recommended for academic libraries." J. J. Fox

Library J 96:4018 D 1 '71 220w

STEARNS, GERALD EMANUEL, ed. Broken image; foreign critiques of America; sel. & ed. with notes & introd. by Gerald Emanuel Stearns. 298p $8.95 Random house

917.3 U.S.—Foreign opinion

ISBN 0-394-46876-7 LC 73-159380

In this collection, "ranging in time from 1770, only six of the 25 pieces predate the Civil War. . . . All but two are by travelers to our shores. The exceptions are V. I. Lenin, writing of the growing imperialistic urge of the United States and its tendency to try to shape others in its image, and Adolph Hitler, represented by a World War II propaganda pamphlet displaying the defeats in America's democratic pretensions." (Library J) Annotated bibliography.

"[These] impressions of America . . . [make] clear that not all Europeans were bamboozled into the belief that glitter necessarily proved the presence of gold. Twenty-five selections, covering a period of two hundred years, peel off horny layers of national smugness like the action of hot lye on dead varnish. This book . . . is not apt to be passed from hand to hand at a weekly meeting of the Boosters Club—unless lynching the editor is the business at hand. What emerges is a composite image of America as hypocritical, thieving, snobbish, violent, boorish, and downright ugly. . . . The prospect is not very pretty, but if a patient is to be cured he must first recognize that he is ill. Better a cheerless report from the clinic than an autopsy." Cecil Eby

Book World p4 Mr 19 '72 600w

"For those accustomed to the seemingly endless collections of foreign commentaries with their emphasis on the nobility of our institutions and national purpose, this grouping will come as a shocker. To quote the editor, it is 'a biased, distorted, unfair, arbitrary and slanted collection of foreign critical views of the American experience.' Stearns has made a good selection and provided helpful introductions. . . . A significant contribution to help us 'see ourselves as others have seen us.'" W. E. Parrish

Library J 97:1322 Ap 1 '72 270w

STEARNS, MONROE. Louis XIV of France: pattern of majesty. (Immortals of hist) 183p il $4.50 Watts. F.

B or 92 Louis XIV. King of France—Juvenile literature. France—History—Bourbons. 1589-1789—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-00962-9 LC 77-137152

In this account of the life and political career of Louis XIV, the author deals with "absolutism, militarism, and nationalism" . . . [as well as the King's] decisions in (politics, economics, religion, warfare, the arts), all geared toward building an absolute monarchy and a powerful nation. The famous people of the time in all of the above fields are described . . . [with their] characteristics and contributions to the era. . . . The toll taken [of the 'people'] by warfare, etc. is discussed. [Bibliography, Chronology, Index.] Grades nine to twelve." (Library J)

"The subject is of concern to high school students and it is here presented in an appealing readable style." S. M. C.

Best Sell 31:523 F 15 '72 40w

"This book presents a less flattering picture of the Sun King than is found in many other titles. Stearns critically scrutinizes Louis and his era . . . [and] shows that Louis did indeed epitomize his age and the ideal of absolute monarchical power. . . . This book will be valuable even in libraries having [N.] Mitford's The Sun King [BRD 1966] which emphasizes the era's more romantic aspects by concentrating on the magnificence and splendor of Louis' court, and stressing the gossip material." Anitra Gordon

Library J 96:2142 Je 15 '71 140w [YA]

STEARNS, PETER N. Revolutionary syndicalism and French labor: a cause without rebels. 175p $9 Rutgers univ. press

335 Syndicalism. Labor and laboring classes—France—History. Strikes and lockouts—History
SBN 8135-0688-3 LC 71-152719

The author attempts to show "that syndicalism was a doctrine and a movement that affected but few of the workers, and that workers generally were a conservative and pragmatic labor force, seeking improvements within the existing system rather than its overthrow." (Choice) Annotated bibliography. Index.

"Stearns fails to make sufficiently explicit the criteria by which he is gauging the insignificance of syndicalism, and this is unfortunate because syndicalism professed to be a philosophy of labor practice and did in fact have much in common with it, including the ordinary strike for higher wages. Moreover, he does not develop in a systematic fashion his crucial comparison between the behavior of syndicalist unions and nonsyndicalist ones." S. H. Lytle

Am Hist R 77:527 Ap '72 440w

"Stearns purports to show what workers really wanted—amelioration, not revolution. The argument is highly provocative, but often not proven in this book, and what he cannot demonstrate by evidence Stearns attempts to prove by sharp and forceful assertion. Nonetheless, a stimulating addition to the literature."

Choice 8:897 S '71 150w

Reviewed by R. W. Fox

Nation 215:247 S 25 '72 330w

STEBBINS, ROBERT A. Commitment to deviance; the nonprofessional criminal in the community. 201p $9.50 Greenwood pub. corp.

301.1 Deviant behavior. Crime and criminals
ISBN 0-8371-2339-9 LC 75-95504

In this study of "the impact of a formal deviant identification on professional and non-professional criminals . . . Stebbins documents some of the . . . tragic effects on nonprofessional criminals who often find themselves pushed into a deviant commitment because of reactions to their exconvict status. . . . [He also deals with a] number of the many 'social' penalties an exconvict is subject to upon release—and their implications for rehabilitation. . . . The book closes with several recommendations for facilitating the readaptation of convicts to a 'normal' identity. . . . Index." (Choice)

"One of the main currents in the American sociological tradition—the significance of the subject's definition of the situation—is applied in this study to the analysis of criminal careers. . . . One looks with favor on an exploratory study which sets forth in detail a conceptual scheme for understanding the social psychological processes involved in the continuation of a deviant role . . . [but] the research design falls short of producing convincing evidence." A. L. Wood

Ann Am Acad 401:214 My '72 420w

"[The author's] contribution is a rather small scale, somewhat limited empirical study which attempts to build on the seminal contributions to the understanding of deviance made by Lemert, Goffman, Becker, Matza, et al. It is comparable in this respect to [L.] Humphreys' Tearoom trade [BRD 1971] and similar recent works. College libraries which already possess the basic theoretical writings of the above mentioned authors should consider this addition to their collection."

Choice 8:1254 N '71 200w

STEEGMULLER, FRANCIS. Stories and true stories. 276p $7.95 Little 818

LC 73-170167

Some of the pieces in this collection of the author's articles and fiction are recent and some date back to the 1930's. "The stories are placed first in the book and make up more than half its contents. . . . The 'true stories' that make up the rest of the book lead off with a . . . reminiscence which returns to the New York scene of much of the fiction. . . . [There are] short articles on James Jackson Jarves, the collector . . . on Christina of Sweden, on the painter, Jacques Villon, and . . . an interview with Villon's brother, Marcel Duchamp [as well as] two reports from Italy, on the devastating aftermath of the 1966 flood in Florence and on the Stravinsky funeral in Venice last April." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by Bernard Weinstein
Best Sell 32:6 Ap 1 '72 480w

"Steegmuller is a sublime biographer and translator and deserves a little patience. The stories are hard to take. . . . Nor are the biographical sketches . . . or the recollection of Steegmuller's first wife's tall tales much more involving. Only in the essays on Christina of Sweden and . . . Cocteau does the material hold one's interest, and only here does Steegmuller tighten up his surprisingly rambling style. They almost justify the gathering together of this collection." J. A. Avant
Library J 97:877 Mr 1 '72 140w

"[The stories] are enjoyable, but a good many of them in a rather predictable way. . . . Then out of the blue comes a story utterly different in content, style and human quality. 'A Real Saint' is a long tale put together from the diary entries. . . . This is a wonderful, greatly comic story and, since it is dated 1970, one hopes that more in this genre will follow. . . . Every reader of Steegmuller's 'Cocteau' [BRD 1970] will value the three articles: 'A Meeting With Cocteau,' 'A Visit to Barbette' and 'In search of True Cocteau,' which illuminate both the background of that book and its subject. . . . Most memorable to me, however, are the author's notes on 'Translating Madame Bovary,' six pages which every aspirant translator should learn by heart." Elizabeth Janeway
N Y Times Bk R p4 F 27 '72 1350w

STEELE, WILLIAM O. The wilderness tattoo; a narrative of Juan Ortiz; il with old prints. 184p $4.95 Harcourt

B or 92 Ortiz, Juan—Juvenile literature. Indians of North America—Juvenile literature. Soto, Hernando de—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-15-297325-7 LC 77-167838

When Pánfilo de Narváez sailed from Spain in 1527 to explore Florida, seventeen-year-old Juan Ortiz was a member of his expedition. One year later, he was captured by Timucuan Indians on the shores of Tampa Bay. This is an account of his life with the Indians and of his later participation in Hernando de Soto's expedition through what became the southeastern United States. [Bibliography.] Ages ten to fourteen." (N Y Times Bk R)

"[Juan Ortiz] was tattooed both literally and symbolically by wilderness living. . . . His experiences are plausibly reconstructed in a vivid, fast-paced narrative, which alternates semi-fictionalized biographical chapters with explanatory 'Interludes' describing Timucuan culture, sixteenth-century Floridian topography, and the attitudes of the Conquistadores. So skillfully is primary source material blended with speculation and imagined conversation that the reader is aware of these interludes not as interruptions but rather as a necessary element in the effective re-creation of the past. A dramatic, engrossing narrative." M. M. B.
Horn Bk 48:62 F '72 300w

Reviewed by J. E. Gardner
Library J 97:1610 Ap 15 '72 150w

"The narrative of Juan Ortiz is based upon four accounts, three of them by members of the de Soto expedition, all of whom are in disagreement about what took place. Mr. Steele solved this problem, he says, by selecting only the most reasonable versions. He tells the story in barebone prose, an occasional overabundance of rhetorical questions and pleasant asides. . . . [This book] with its maps and woodcuts, is a handsome tribute to Juan Ortiz and to all of Spain's brave young men." Scott O'Dell
N Y Times Bk R p8 Mr 26 '72 500w

STEGNER, PAGE. Hawks & harriers. 247p $6.95 Dial press
LC 75-163588

Twenty-eight-year old Californian Jack Crowe "back-trails to New England in search of a more acceptable reality than he knew whilst perched in Monterey on Frontier's End. Searching for himself, this improvident son of a dead, dreaming fisherman finds Sandy, the idealistic daughter of a wealthy manufacturer of business machines." (N Y Times Bk R)

Reviewed by D. F. Lawler
Best Sell 31:479 F 1 '72 350w

Reviewed by Robert Buckeye
Library J 97:1348 Ap 1 '72 190w

"Crowe is stupidly, stubbornly, perversely self-and-other destructive for reasons not clear to himself—or me. . . . [He] is not only a downer, he's the narrator. . . . [and he] is a crushing boor. . . . The worst literary quality is the incredible speeches that Stegner wrings from his hero. . . . This is not a novel to dismiss with a contemptuous snort, but its strengths make the weaknesses even more irritating. . . . If Stegner is poor at dialogue, his handling of descriptions is deft, and he has a novelist's dramaturgical talent for making atmosphere work for him. He also has the native California writer's way with grotesquerie and absurd explosions of event." John Seelye

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ja 23 '72 950w

"Mr. Stegner writes beautifully, vividly, with dazzling sweep, but the heart of his novel—Crowe's disaffection—is unexplained, unpersuasive."

New Yorker 48:114 Mr 4 '72 90w

"A superficial sounding could lead one to think that Page Stegner's new novel . . . is merely a replay of the old identity theme (Who am I? What am I doing here? Where am I going?) but this would be anything but a fair appraisal of Mr. Stegner's intention or his considerable talent. . . . [Crowe] is sick to death of his meaningless California existence, sick of the drug culture and the constant change he sees around him. . . . [Sandy] is looking for exactly what Crowe has forsworn: change, freedom, even poverty. . . . Mr. Stegner works hard to sustain the gravity and essential horror of their very real problem, and he does it with integrity and grace." W. C. Hamlin
Sat R 55:41 Ja 15 '72 450w

STEIG, WILLIAM. Amos & Boris. unp col il $4.50 Farrar, Straus

Mice—Stories. Whales—Stories
ISBN 0-374-30278-2 LC 72-165403

A "story about the friendship between a mouse (Amos) and a whale (Boris). Amos, off to adventure on the high seas, falls off his boat (the Rodent) and is rescued by Boris. The two become fast friends . . . and years later Amos is able to rescue Boris in return. . . . Preschool to grade two." (Library J)

Reviewed by M. J. Bandler
Book World p2 (children's issue) N 7 '71 40w

Reviewed by J. F. Smith
Christian Science Monitor pB3 N 11 '71 120w

"Ample pages accommodate wide seascapes and beach scenery, the background for a satisfying story of friendship. . . . It is a delight to receive from the artist-storyteller another picture book in which a genuine story builds its atmosphere and mood with freshness, compassion, and child interest, and is enhanced by the illustrations." V. H.
Horn Bk 48:[42] F '72 220w

"Lovely watercolor pictures and a funny, well-written text which presents its plot coincidences in tongue-in-cheek manner . . . fit together admirably in this faintly Aesopian tale, and children will respond to the true-blue twosome with much pleasure." A. D. Schweibish

Library J 97:769 F 15 '72 160w

"Immediately apparent here is this author's progress as a writer for children. . . . Before, it was illustrations that offered the primary gratification; now it is description and thoughts expressed that are most noticeable and sustaining. . . . The reader, too, is given some words to nibble on: sextant, plankton, phosphorescent; yet the blend of fantasy and fate is preserved. Steig's illustrations for 'Amos and Boris' are deceptive. There's not the posed balladry of 'Roland the Minstrel Pig' [BRD 1968], not the volcanic splash of 'The Bad Island' or the colorful romanticism of 'Sylvester and the Magic Pebble' [BRD 1969]. . . . Here the palette is muted . . . soft grays, greens and blues predominate for the two friends and the eternal sky and sea." G. A. Woods
N Y Times Bk R p8 O 17 '71 550w

STEIG, WILLIAM. Dominic; story and pictures. 145p $4.50 Farrar, Straus

Dogs—Stories
ISBN 0-374-31822-0 LC 70-188272

The tale of a piccolo-playing young hound-dog who "leaves home to see more of the world and has many . . . adventures: caring for a dying pig who leaves him a fortune, escaping time after time from a gang of bandits after the treasure, helping those in need and, at last, falling in love." (Publishers' Weekly) "Ages eight to twelve." (Book World)

"A young hound dog of incurable good cheer nonetheless, Dominic is full of an existential wisdom sure to entertain any adults called upon to read this work aloud. Plagued by the machinations of The Doomsday Gang—an ill-assorted group of ferrets, foxes, weasels, and tomcats—Dominic has a ready explanation for their unregenerate wickedness: 'Being evil was what they were best at; everyone enjoys being best at something.' . . . [This] is a touchingly innocent work. . . . For children of the TV age, whose experiences often consist of the passive absorption of 'Life' second-hand, Dominic's headlong philosophy of going out to meet trouble halfway may provide a refreshing new model for action. Whatever happens—bad and good—simply deepens the hound's appreciation of life's beauty and infinite mystery." S. G. Lanes

Book World p15 (children's issue)
My 7 '72 330w

"Cartoonist William Steig's first full-length novel for children is a likely candidate for classic status at least in part because, from a current (and even more likely, a future) parent's point of view, it radiates a miraculously old-fashioned faith in the overall wonder and worth of living. . . . [It] is a picaresque fairy tale and philosophic odyssey for . . . children who read both for entertainment and for expansion of their knowledge of what life is all about. . . . The abiding charm of Steig's work for children lies not so much in the originality—or even the drama—of his plots as in the curious touches, the idiosyncratic crotchets and convictions he somehow injects into each work. There is, among Steig's other gifts, his uncanny sense of how children view the world." S. G. Lanes

Harper 245:122 O '72 2550w
Horn Bk 48:470 O '72 400w

Reviewed by Diane Gersoni-Stavn
Library J 97:2954 S 15 '72 200w

"Dominic remains a cheerful Charlie, whose swashbuckling enthusiasm is matched by his creator's prodigality. Having seemingly gone golliwompos, William Steig has doggedly stuffed into this novel not only too many drawings, some of them fussy, but enough ingredients for a pint-sized 'War and Peace.' You name it, he's included it. Sermons, fairy tales, the Greek alphabet, romance . . . endless catalogues . . . and cosmic contemplation. While portions of the book are crisp and funny or inventive or moving, much of it bogs down in solemn overwriting." N. L. Magid

N Y Times Bk R p8 J1 ■ '72 750w

STEIN, GERTRUDE. Fernhurst. Q.E.D. and other early writings. 214p $8.95 Liveright

818
SBN 87140-532-6 LC 71-148663

This volume contains three of Stein's early works. "Fernhurst a previously unpublished fictional episode based on a Bryn Mawr scandal in the early 1900's, explores the labyrinth of love—between man and woman and between woman and woman. Q.E.D. fictionalizes an early Stein romance—an affair complicated by her frustrated attempt to fathom the soul of the woman she loved, and doomed finally by the existence of a rival. . . . The unpublished early draft included here of The Making of Americans . . . is al study of a 'decent family's progress.'" (Publisher's note)

"Not a major addition to the Stein canon, this first gathering of apprentice fiction, all preceding Three Lives [BRD 1910], provides new and useful material for the tracing of Stein's thematics and stylistic progression. . . . The introduction makes a good case for dating the beginning of The making of Americans three years earlier than has been supposed. In an appendix, Donald Gallup sets straight the details of the first publication of that book. Fascinating for enthusiasts, but specialist material; of limited value to undergraduate libraries."

Choice 9:62 Mr '72 160w

"Miss Stein has never been exactly a 'success' on the commercial market, her recent revival notwithstanding, and one can reasonably ask what possible attraction such diligent dredging might exert on anyone other than the Stein aficionado. The answer is not quite ■ discouraging as one would expect, for the collection . . . is . . . a superb initiation into the mysteries of Miss Stein. . . . [Gallup] becomes irritating in 'A Note on the Texts,' which he fills with data about the measurements of her notebooks and their folios, and in the appendix, a ponderous account of the difficulties Miss Stein encountered in trying to publish 'The Making of Americans.' . . . Aside from a few colorful quotations, this section yields mostly laborious correspondence. . . . Of the writings themselves, all three share a quaintness of tone that recalls Jane Austen, a convolution of style that recalls Henry James, and a liturgical cadence that recalls the Bible, all of which characterize her later work in more extreme forms. . . . Her obsessive penchant to realism in her search for truths about relationships is already apparent in these works." Diana Loercher

Christian Science Monitor p6 O 7 '71
700w

"Students of the American novel will certainly find this collection a valuable aid toward understanding Stein and the early-20th-Century novel, and anyone interested in the texture of the American cultural experience will find Stein's exploration of middle-class attitudes, especially the inability to accommodate the 'singular' individual, a compelling theme in all three of these early works. Both scholars and general readers will benefit from Professor Katz's discussion of the autobiographical basis of Stein's fiction and his clarification of the chronological sequence of her artistic development." Mary McBride

Library J 96:2548 Ag '71 300w

"[This] is an extraordinary exercise in devotional publishing [which starts] with ■ tortuously reverent introduction . . . while the appendix includes the appalling reviews the novel [The making of Americans] finally received. Judging by these pieces, Miss Stein's youthful literary circle must have been passionately humourless." Peter Buckman

New Statesman 84:169 Ag 4 '72 200w

STEIN, M. L. Blacks in communications; journalism, public relations, and advertising. 191p il $4.95; lib bdg $4.79 Messner

331.6 Negroes—Employment—Juvenile literature. Communication—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-671-32511-6; 0-671-32512-4 (lib bdg)
LC 78-182947

This is an "overview of black men and women in such communications fields as journalism, public relations, radio television, and advertising. Following an assessment of the status of blacks in the media and a survey of past and present trends in the black press, the author presents a chapter-by-chapter round-up of writers, journalists, reporters, magazine editors, executives, producers, wire service reporters, and public relations managers. [Bibliography. Index.] Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"By relating the success stories of dozens of black persons in . . . [communications] Stein hopes to appeal to high school and young college students to consider a career in the mass media. . . . The style is hortatory and Stein admits that though more black persons are working for the media, their numbers still are not large."

Choice 9:1146 N '72 180w

"Stein relies on quotes from the people involved, including Lerone Bennett, Earl Caldwell, Ernest Dunbar, for biographical information and for personal and philosophical statements on their roles as blacks in the media. Broad, accurate coverage along with a good index and bibliography make this an excellent ready reference tool for school reports." R. K. Goddard

Library J 97:3456 O 15 '72 140w [YA]

"Apart from being overly-objective (point-of-viewless), there is the great danger that any teen-ager trying to read [this book] would be bored into oblivion. Everything about the author's approach is wrong, including his diction: 'subjectivity,' 'objectivity,' 'fair play,' 'race matters.' He states a conclusion (we almost said a confusion) in the beginning of each chapter and then commences to prove those opinions through some blacks working in the communications media. The blacks he chooses to support his findings don't even appear to be real. Perhaps that is why someone added a few photographs as an afterthought." Fred and Lucille Clifton N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p30 My 7 '72

110w

STEIN, SOL. The magician; a novel. 258p $6.95
Delacorte press
LC 70-163084

Ed Japhet, "a 16-year-old amateur magician, is badly beaten by one of his classmates, Urek, who later makes an attempt on his life while he is still in the hospital. Thomassy, a clever lawyer, wins acquittal for the young attacker, who then attacks Ed again. In this encounter, however, Ed remembers what he learned in a single karate lesson and kills his opponent. As the police arrive, Ed's father goes to telephone Thomassy." (Library J)

Reviewed by L. J. Davis
Book World p2 S 12 '71 600w

"This novel can be read for its fast-moving, attention-grabbing story or for the ideas about destruction, creativity and legerdemain presented. Four-letter words are used in appropriate contexts and there is one bedroom scene, but the unusual plot and good writing make this a worthy addition to YA collections." Alberta Hankenson

Library J 96:3489 O 15 '71 130w [YA]

Reviewed by A. L. Fessler
Library J 97:700 F 15 '72 130w

"The good things about 'The Magician' are very good indeed. The author works the language beautifully. Clean, precise narrative sentences. Pictorial descriptive passages. Dialogue that comes from speech. . . . It may be Stein's very skill as a storyteller—the gripping quality of the novel—that prevents 'The Magician' from rising above its genre and becoming more than entertainment. If three or four minor characters gas up the plot, then 10 should make it zoom. . . . The author dismisses key members of his cast—the newspaper editor, the stringer, the psychiatrist—after setting them up as pivots. They go nowhere. While he tells us a great deal about everyone, he seldom shows them to us feeling pain, regret, love, sorrow. None of this diminishes the pleasure of reading [this novel]. Rather, it defines the limits of thriller fiction." Webster Schott

N Y Times Bk R p53 S 26 '71 750w

"America may or may not be 'a country on the decline after only two centuries' but this dramatized presentation of the corruption, apathy, and assorted prejudices supposedly characteristic of those primary social prisms—education, and the legal process—proves, in trying to make the charge stick, too ambitious for its own good. This is a pity because Sol Stein's novel contains the makings of an exciting yarn. . . . Unfortunately, Stein's style lacks the special edge necessary for his slashing social indictment. . . . In addition, [his] characterization tends to be thin. . . . Despite radical blemishes, however, The Magician is thoroughly readable, at times tense, and tantalizing for what it might have been." Peter Gardner

Sat R 54:46 S 18 '71 300w

TLS p1427 N 12 '71 210w

The STEIN and Day international medical encyclopedia [by] J. A. C. Brown; rev. by A. M. Hastin Bennett; with drawings by Margot Cooper [Eng title: Pears medical encyclopedia, illustrated]. 464p col pl $17.50
Stein & Day

610.3 Medicine—Encyclopedias. Medicine, Popular
ISBN 0-8128-1430-2 LC 73-165481

This reference work is intended to provide medical information to help the layman cooperate with his family doctor in dealing with problems of health and disease.

"This present book is a group-revision of the British 'Pears Medical Encyclopedia.' . . . The introduction states that [it] is designed for the layman, assuming no medical knowledge on his part. That may be the reason why there are no Latin and Greek derivations given (a sad loss) and very little medical history and biography. The volume is lavishly and attractively embellished with all sorts of pertinent illustrations but, alas, there are also many not-so-pertinent ones which undoubtedly contributed to the high cost." F. J. MacEntee

Best Sell 32:35 Ap 15 '72 180w

Reviewed by R. K. Harris
Library J 97:2173 Je 15 '72 40w

"[This book] has articles on the body's structure, its organs, their functions and ailments; on mental ills, heredity, birth, death, acupuncture (with a full-column picture of an ancient chart used in its practice), population, sex, surgery, drug addiction—what not? Readable, modern in viewpoint, beautifully illustrated in color, black-and-white, and transparencies, this is one of the most usable compact works in the field." D. M. Glixon

Sat R 55:76 My 6 '72 90w

STEINBERG, MARGARET MOHAN, jt. auth.
Riding. See Mohan, B.

STEINER, CLAUDE. Games alcoholics play; the analysis of life scripts. 173p il $5.95 Grove

616.86 Alcoholism
ISBN 0-394-47853-6 LC 74-139254

An account of the use of transactional analysis in the treatment of alcoholics. Bibliography.

"Eric Berne [author of Games People Play, BRD 1966] wrote the introduction to this optimistic transactional-analytic probe into the lives of alcoholics. It should offer hope as well as help to people who live or work with alcoholics."

Christian Century 88:1175 O 6 '71 30w

"As one of Eric Berne's close associates, Steiner has devoted more than 13 years to the problems and treatment of alcoholics. Being an honest practitioner . . . [he] makes no claim for sudden or spectacular cures. Instead he presents the psychiatrist, psychologist, and rehabilitation counselor with what appears to be a very handy vade mecum for effecting constructive changes in the alcoholic's behavior. Permanence of positive behavioral change, unfortunately, is not discussed, so there will be many practitioners clamoring for proof that 'alcoholism is not incurable.' [The book] deserves a place in public libraries as well as in treatment centers." W. R. Knievel

Library J 96:3620 N 1 '71 120w

STEINER, GEORGE. Extraterritorial; papers on literature and the language revolution. 210p $7.95 Atheneum pubs.

401 Language and languages. Literature—History and criticism
LC 78-152044

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by Richard Freedman
Book World p13 Ja 2 '72 950w

Reviewed by Angus Calder
New Statesman 83:646 My 12 '72 950w
TLS p567 My 19 '72 1650w

STEINER, GEORGE. In Bluebeard's castle; some notes towards the redefinition of culture. 141p $5.95 Yale univ. press

301.29 Civilization, Modern
ISBN 0-300-01501-1 LC 70-158141

These essays by the author of Language and Silence (BRD 1967) were originally given as the T. S. Eliot Memorial Lectures, 1970. They are entitled The Great Ennui, A Season in Hell, In a Post-Culture, and Tomorrow. They discuss 19th-century ennui, 20th-century holocaust and the possibility of new languages and a new culture by the 21st century.

Reviewed by J. B. Breslin
America 125:355 O 30 '71 750w

Reviewed by Malcolm Bradbury
Ann Am Acad 403:222 S '72 1000w

Reviewed by Gabriel Gersh
Canadian Forum 52:33 S '72 1250w

"Brief analysis of Western culture, fashionably Freudian with updating dashes of Marcuse and McLuhan, brimming with allusions, absorbed in cultural fracture and decay. . . . Steiner is provocative and evocative; he knows all the comments reviewers will make about him. He just wants to tell how bad everything is, and why. As cultural theory, it is a bit monstrous; but so were the death camps. . . . Here his metaphor runs away with him—that last door of Bluebeard's you know: artistic as a conclusion, but not prescriptive. Recommended as ground for arguments, lots of them. No index.

STEINER, GEORGE—Continued

Choice 9:49 Mr '72 160w

Christian Century 88:1175 O 6 '71 30w

Reviewed by Irving Howe

Commentary 53:96 F '72 3350w

Reviewed by Roy Fuller

Encounter 38:43 D '71 270w

"In defining culture in small compass, Steiner... touches all bases.... He is most interesting when he dwells upon a new electronic age of communications in which music and science based on mathematics may give rise to a new wordless culture absolutely valid on its own terms. . . . He offers cogent discussions of literature, music, science, and theology. . . . Highly recommended." C. W. Mann

Library J 96:4103 D 15 '71 160w

Reviewed by R. S. Picciotto

Nation 214:53 Ja 10 '72 1250w

Reviewed by Eliseo Vivas

Nat R 23:1477 D 31 '71 1600w

"I propose to say some unfriendly things about [this] book because (though it may command respect at this point and that) it's not a companion I should care to go strolling with, arm in arm, through mild October sunshine. It appears on the whole an ingenious piece of opportunism. . . . [It] is not a critique of literature except in some unfortunate passages. It is Some Notes - 'my sub-title is of course intended in memoriam of Eliot's Notes of 1948' Towards the Re-definition of Culture. . . . Integrating, and opportunist. The charge embraces many items, from the words in this book, so arithmetically combined, to all that they deliver. 'There is a comprehensive decline in traditional ideals of literate speech.' There is; and in George Steiner's exceptionally illiterate manipulation." Geoffrey Grigson

New Statesman 82:545 O 22 '71 1600w

Reviewed by Christopher Ricks

N Y Rev of Books 17:27 N 18 '71 2650w

Reviewed by C. E. Schorske

N Y Times Bk R p8 N 7 '71 2150w

New Yorker 47:156 O 30 '71 60w

"Short though it is [this] is a strikingly uneven work. Dr Steiner is at his best in the first lecture, 'The Great "Ennui"', a brilliant, impressionistic survey of nineteenth-century cultural history, which he sees as the 'imagined garden of liberal culture.' . . . In the last two lectures, 'In a Post-Culture' and 'Tomorrow,' Dr Steiner offers a characteristic mixture of sharp aperçus and deep intellectual confusion. . . . [He] has imprudently exposed himself in these lectures; their principal offense is that they contain such an intricate combination of sense and non-sense that an excessive amount of gleaning is necessary to separate the two."

TLS p1565 D 17 '71 2650w

Va Q R 48:lii spring '72 140w

STEINER, HEIRI, jt. auth. Necklace for Laurie. See Ehmscke, S.

STEINMETZ, DAVID C. Reformers in the wings. 240p $8.50 Fortress press

270.6 Reformers—Biography. Reformation
ISBN 0-8006-0051-7 LC 75-135266

The author presents biographies of "a number of lesser known men [who] forwarded the 16th century Reformation. . . . He divides them into four groups: (1) late medieval Catholic reformers, (2) Lutherans, (3) Calvinists and (4) Radicals. Selecting five men as representative of each group. . . . he describes their works and their significance." (Christian Century) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Devoting an essay of eight to twelve pages to each of the reformers, Mr. Steinmetz presents his study in an attractive and lucid form. . . . Although the reformers discussed are men of very diverse tendencies, the author skillfully avoided the danger of publishing only a collection of disparate essays . . . [by] concentrating on the theological issues, thus providing a connecting link between the essays. . . . [This book] may be used to great advantage in courses on Reformation history. Most textbooks mention these reformers only in passing." C. P. Clasen

Am Hist R 77:771 Je '72 600w

"The contribution made by each of these 20 individuals is summarized clearly and with scholarly insight in as many essays, averaging ten pages in length and followed by a selected but useful bibliography. This book will serve as a valuable teaching aid in church history. . . . The price of the book seems overly high . . . which will put an otherwise worthwhile [work] out of the reach of many students and ministers." Stephen Benko

Christian Century 88:1390 N 24 '71 350w

STENDHAL. Travels in the south of France; tr. by Elisabeth Abbott; introd. by Victor Brombert. 276p il $12.50 Orion press

944 France—Description and travel
LC 77-114947

"This is not a finished book but sketches and notes for a book that Stendhal never polished or published. They record a tour he made in the spring of 1838, which can . . . be described as coming and going and doubling back between two big cities, Bordeaux and Marseilles." (New Yorker)

"Stendhal was not just any traveller; he cannot help being entertaining, whether he is listing the forgeries in the Montpellier art museum, describing a terrible play that nonetheless moves him to tears, or finding out how everybody makes money (which he does not take seriously) and how everybody makes love (which he takes very seriously indeed)."

New Yorker 46:209 N 14 '70 200w

"[Stendhal was] a travel writer in the classic tradition that extends from Smollett and Sterne through Henry James to V. S. Pritchett. . . . I'm afraid this book may be too concise in style," he wrote. . . . "its real emptiness horrifies me. . . . The notes, now well translated and exquisitely illustrated with contemporary drawings make fascinating reading. . . . Stendhal the traveler is always the servant of Stendhal the novelist. His strength is as a connoisseur of human beauty and foibles." A. Alvarez

Sat R 54:17 Ja 2 '71 1100w

STENERSON, DOUGLAS C. H. L. Mencken: iconoclast from Baltimore. 287p il $7.95 Univ. of Chicago press

B or 92 Mencken, Henry Louis

ISBN 0-226-77249-7 LC 78-158683

This account of the career of the American philologist, editor and satirist, who founded The American Mercury in 1924 and wrote The American Language (BRD 1919) is concerned with his writings, ideas, and prejudices.

"[This account] is magnificently researched. Mencken may have laughed at his country and its puritan heritage but, maybe, his writings were born with controversy in mind. If he got his generation to think and read he accomplished much. Regardless of what one thinks of Mencken, Professor Stenerson has written a fair, scholarly, and impartial study of a professional muckraker." F. C. Brown

Best Sell 31:350 N 1 '71 500w

"This latest entry in the field of Menckiana offers little that is new to readers of the Baltimore Sage and will cause those who are not knowledgeable in the field to wonder what all the shouting is about. In his effort to give a 'balanced' view of HLM as iconoclast Stenerson has succeeded only in drawing a colorless portrait of one of the most volatile writers in the language. Mencken's great gusto, his erudition, his widely varied interests, his enormous influence on American letters and thought, and above all his scintillating prose style have all been shunted aside (or simply overlooked) by Stenerson."

Choice 8:1588 F '72 230w

Christian Century 88:1271 O 27 '71 10w

Reviewed by Guernsey Le Pelley

Christian Science Monitor p11 O 16 '71 250w

Reviewed by A. A. Ekirch

J Am Hist 59:189 Je '72 400w

"In parsonical prose, Stenerson . . . gives us a clean and competent but far from exhaustive study of Mencken's salient ideas and prejudices. The author provides little new biographical material. . . . [We] get a fairly complete account of Mencken's social Darwinism and of the reasoning that led to his advocacy of liberty to the 'limits of the bearable.' In his disputes with the genteel tradition and the bravos of the old censorship, Mencken was superbly and absolutely right; and Stenerson's drably observed and quietly argued book must be honored partly for presenting us with yet another version, even if only partly original, of Mencken's brand of ideology. For my taste, however, the argument with and against Mencken's ideas is not nearly sustained, detailed, passionate, or complex enough." P. W. Boytinch

Library J 96:3750 N 15 '71 320w

"This book," announces Mr. Stenerson, 'examines and evaluates Mencken's part in precipitating and perpetuating the great quarrel within American culture which developed between his boyhood in the 1880s and '90s and his heyday in the 1920s.' And he concludes: 'On balance, the two aspects of his work which seem most durable are his libertarianism—his affirmation of the right to dissent—and the gusto and artistry with which he expressed it.' In between the two statements lies a sane, restrained study, only incidentally biographical, of the formation of a mind and a style, and of their impact on an America that needed and was ready to welcome both." Clifton Fadiman

Sat R 54:54 O 30 '71 500w

TLS p792 J1 14 '72 300w

Va Q R 48:viii winter '72 100w

STENTON, DORIS MARY, ed. Preparatory to Anglo-Saxon England. See Stenton, F. M.

STENTON, FRANK MERRY. Preparatory to Anglo-Saxon England: being the collected papers of Frank Merry Stenton; ed. by Doris Mary Stenton. 425p $14 Oxford

942.01 Great Britain—History—To 1066.
Great Britain—History—Norman period.
1066-1154

SRN 19-822314-5 LC [77-487556]

This volume "contains a selection from papers published over the years by the late Sir Frank Stenton. All except three of them have been previously printed. . . . [Included are] the essays on Norman London and on The Development of the Castle in England and Wales, . . . The Road System of Medieval England . . . St. Frideswide and her Times . . . [and] The Changing Feudalism of the Middle Ages. . . . The present volume also contains a reprint of . . . seven presidential addresses to the Royal Historical Society." (TLS)

Reviewed by V. H. Galbraith
Am Hist R 76:1116 O '71 750w

Reviewed by P. H. Blair
Engl Hist R 87:392 Ap '72 340w

"[This is a] superbly produced volume. . . . It is impossible in brief compass to do justice to the scholarly riches contained in these pages. . . . This volume stands as a monument to a man who represented the finest traditions of scholarly integrity and achievement." Michael Altschul

Social Studies 62:337 D '71 340w

"Despite their variety, an inherent unity pervades these papers, and this goes part of the way towards justifying the curious title which has been given to this volume. Anglo-Saxon England [BRD 1944]. Stenton's notable contribution to the Oxford History of England was not (as is claimed here) 'a landmark in English historiography' but it did mark an epoch in the study of England during the Anglo-Saxon period, and many of the papers here re-issued can be considered in relation to that comprehensive and magisterial work. . . . These miscellaneous papers are moreover, all highly individual. It was a cardinal part of the teaching of Stenton that topography, genealogy and the study of local antiquities were all essential to the proper treatment of national history. . . . It is astonishing how well [these articles] have stood the test of time."

TLS p801 J1 23 '70 750w

STEPAN, ALFRED. The military in politics: changing patterns in Brazil. (Rand ser) 313p $10 Princeton univ. press

981 Brazil—Politics and government
ISBN 0-691-07537-9 LC 73-132242

"In 1964 civilian government broke down in Brazil, and a military government came to power for the first time in the twentieth century. . . . Stepan examines the nature of the military institution in Brazil, its relations with civilian governments before the coup, and its use of power since 1964." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Students of Brazilian political history may well dispute some of Professor Stepan's emphases and interpretations, while lay readers may have difficulty following his occasionally unchronological presentation. All in all, however, he has produced a sound and objective study, indispensable for historians concerned with the evolution of the political process in Latin America and highly recommended for those dealing with military governments, past or present, in other areas of the world." R. E. Poppino

Am Hist R 77:606 Ap '72 340w

Reviewed by Byron White

Ann Am Acad 401:182 My '72 330w

"Stepan combines an impressive collection of data and bibliographical sources with the systematic approach of a political scientist in relating the interaction between the Brazilian military and political system. . . . [His] framework seems very relevant to the study of the military role in other Latin American countries, especially those with interesting ideological cleavage and growing military concern for the goals of national development and internal security. His analysis of the priority given to goals of institutional integrity and survival likewise lends itself to application elsewhere in Latin America. A valuable addition to the still limited number of scholarly studies on the military in specific Latin American countries."

Choice 8:1241 N '71 200w

"The author probes and discards some concepts of military leadership. . . . [He] shows that when it comes to running a country, the military is subjected to the same kinds of political pressure that sometimes create divisions in civilian governments. For academic libraries." Garold Cole

Library J 96:3143 O 1 '71 70w

"Stepan's argument, though occasionally obscured by excessive reliance on social science jargon, is basically clear and persuasive. . . . [He] has had access to official military sources (including interviews and archival materials) previously unavailable to scholars [and] uses them intelligently. While his indictment may sometimes seem too harsh, he argues his case capably."

Va Q R 48:lxviii spring '72 220w

STEPHAN, JOHN. Sakhalin: a history. 240p 11 pl maps $12 Oxford

957 Sakhalin—History

ISBN 0-19-821550-9

LC 72-854481

"Using Russian, Japanese, and Chinese sources, Stephan has written a detailed history of this rich and strategic island. He writes about the early history, including Chinese contacts, as well as about the later voyages of exploration. Over half of the text is devoted to the period since 1905, including . . . postwar developments." (Library J) Bibliography.

Choice 8:1497 Ja '72 80w

Economist 240:63 J1 10 '71 390w

"The island of Sakhalin off the eastern coast of Siberia has for many years been a place of mystery. It was the site of one of czarist Russia's most dreaded prisons; and while it was under Japanese domination (1905 to 1945) few foreigners were granted visiting permission.

This is a well-balanced and well-written history which, because of its specialized subject, is recommended primarily for larger libraries. The bibliography is extensive, and the illustrations and maps are useful additions to the text." C. W. Stucki

Library J 96:4093 D 15 '71 130w

Reviewed by D. J. C. Brudnoy

Nat R 24:110 F 4 '72 220w

"This painstaking survey . . . is a useful work of reference. . . . [It] is a melancholy story, told with proper impartiality. . . . Against [its] balanced historical background, [however], one may regret that in describing the economic development of Sakhalin during the Soviet period, the author does not seem to introduce the reservations that are often applied to Soviet statistics by sophisticated economists." Michael Futrell

Pacific Affairs 45:293 summer '72 350w

STEPHAN, JOHN—Continued

"A weakness of the book is the undue weight it accords to some kind of Chinese 'loose sovereignty' that may once have existed over the island. In the first place, the references are principally to periods in which non-Chinese (the Mongols and later the Manchus) conquered China and also explored or raided as far as Sakhalin. . . . This minor criticism should not be read as a detraction. Mr Stephan's book does much to fill a real gap in our knowledge. . . . The work has a further value for those who are interested in the options that are open to Japan to escape from a dependence on the United States . . . by developing a policy of participation in the economic development both of the Soviet Far East and of China."

TLS p744 Je 30 '72 190w

STEPHENS, CLARENCE W., Jr. auth. College and university student work programs. See Adams, F. C.

STEPHENS, EVE. See Anthony, E.

STEPHENS, J. E., ed. Aubrey on education. See Aubrey, J.

STEPHENS, PEGGY, jt. auth. Killer whale. See Stephens, William M.

STEPHENS, ROBERT. Nasser; a political biography. 631p maps $12.50 Simon & Schuster B or 92 Nasser, Gamal Abdel, President United Arab Republic. Egypt—History SBN 671-21224-9 LC 79-183762

An account of Nasser's life and political career, by the foreign editor of the (London) Observer. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Sister J. M. Anderson
Best Sell 32:86 My 15 '72 500w
Choice 9:710 J1/Ag '72 200w
Economist 241:53 O 2 '71 650w

Reviewed by R. M. Burrell
Encounter 39:69 J1 '72 200w

"This sympathetic but objective synthesis of selected information about Nasser, his role in Near Eastern politics, and his efforts to bring Egypt into the modern world, virtually ignores his personal life and omits rather too many political and international issues. However, it contains some fine descriptions and some enlightening, perceptive analysis—the chapters on the 1967 June war, its prelude and aftermath, and on the Eisenhower doctrine of 1958. The author's 'Conclusions' about Nasser beautifully place the late Egyptian ruler in perspective." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:196 Ja 15 '72 70w

Reviewed by J. Burnham
Nat R 24:806 J1 21 '72 210w

"This is a comprehensive survey of [Nasser's] epoch, and it provides a serious analysis of his mentality. If I have a criticism, it is that perhaps an account of such an exciting personality as Nasser might itself have been written rather more excitingly. . . . His most lasting achievement was not exactly what he intended: this was the great increase of Soviet influence in the Middle East, which caused disquiet to millions of Arabs, Israelis, Americans, British and French. I am not sure that Stephens gives sufficient emphasis to the point. . . . It is hard to fault Stephens's analysis of Nasser's political qualities." Geoffrey McDermott

New Statesman 82:549 O 22 '71 800w

Reviewed by Miles Copeland
N Y Times Bk R p2 My 21 '72 390w

"A superbly detailed and clear account."
TLS p56 Ja 21 '72 1000w

STEPHENS, W. P. The Holy Spirit in the theology of Martin Bucer. 291p $14.50 Cambridge

270.6 Bucer, Martin, Holy Spirit
SBN 521-07661-7 LC 79-96100

The author seeks to "reveal the way in which the doctrine of the Holy Spirit was fundamental to all of Bucer's teaching. . . . Bucer is—with Luther and Zwingli—in the front rank of evangelical thought and action in the first generation of the Protestant Reformation." (J Religion)

"Stephens has produced the first major scholarly English treatise on Martin Bucer's thought. Indeed, there is no parallel work in any language with regard to comprehensiveness and sympathetic understanding. It will bear special interest for students of Calvin. Many of Calvin's teachings are clearly heavily influenced by Bucer—e.g. predestination, predestination as a work of the Spirit, the third use of the law, the cooperative role of church and state in maintaining religion, etc. . . . [The author stresses] Bucer's unreserved Biblical reliance, that predestination underlines and shapes all his theology, and much more. A provocative, well-written study, essential for both undergraduate and graduate libraries of institutions offering courses in 16th century history, philosophy, or religion."

Choice 8:85 Mr '71 140w

"This book is a study of greatest perception and thoroughness. It will be primarily of use to systematic theologians and specialists in the sixteenth-century Reformation. . . . Until very recently, Martin Bucer has been a neglected figure. His writings—of great quantity and variety—are just now being issued in critical edition; Stephens has used the first five volumes available. . . . The author sets out to treat the role of the Holy Spirit in the whole of Bucer's theology, and in doing so to let Bucer speak for himself—not in the shadow of Erasmus, Luther, Calvin, or another party leader. Stephens fulfills his pledge." F. H. Littell

J Religion 52:327 J1 '72 650w

STEPHENS, WILLIAM M. Killer whale; mammal of the sea [by] William M. Stephens and Peggy Stephens; il. by Lydia Rosier. 47p lib bdg $3.95 Holiday

599 Whales—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8234-0188-X LC 74-151752

This book "opens with the birth of Killer Whale off the California coast and shows him learning . . . how to breathe above water and take care of himself. As he grows up he enjoys playing with his father and hunting salmon and squid for food. Sharks bring danger into his life, and the death of his mother from harpoon and bullet wounds leaves him on his own. Finally he finds a mate." (Publisher's note) "Grades two to four." (Library J)

"Elegantly attired in black and white, the killer whales [have] . . . proved to be docile, affectionate, and perhaps the most intelligent of all non-human species. . . . [This book] presents their life cycle in easily read text, with colored pictures that provide a splendid accompaniment." Julian May

Book World p3 (children's issue) N 7 '71 80w

"[The book] omits specific geographical distribution, economic importance and the ecological significance of killer whales. [It is] clearly written for beginners and employs no technical terms." D. J. Schmidt

Library J 96:3457 O 15 '71 60w

STEPHENSON, JOHN B., jt. ed. Appalachia in the sixties. See Walls, D. S.

STAPP, ANN. The story of radioactivity; il. by James Barry. 127p $4.50; lib bdg $4.39 Harvey house

539.7 Radioactivity—Juvenile literature.
Atomic energy—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-8178-4851-7; 0-8178-4852-5 (lib bdg)
LC 77-159976

This is a "study of the uses and misuses of nuclear energy. . . . Contrasting peaceful applications of nuclear energy to its devastating wartime power, the author shows how it helps control crops, minimize disease in cattle, and preserve food. She . . . looks at its medical applications . . . its ability to generate power for electricity and travel . . . (and its future uses. She deals also with) the problems of disposing of radioactive waste materials." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Glossary. Index. "Grades seven to twelve." (Library J)

"There is enough material—ranging from dithering nonsense to raw superstition—currently circulating on the subject of radioactivity and atomic power to make any reasonably accurate discourse on the matter worth reading. . . . [The] book suffers somewhat from oversimplification, but . . . Miss Stepp's judgment may be better than mine; she certainly should know the age group she is writing for better than I do." H. C. Stubbs

Horn Bk 48:168 Ap '72 230w

"This is a well-researched, straightforward account. . . . Stepp stresses that although the hazards are real, knowledge of them and the ability to evaluate risks do much to ensure safety. This book will be especially useful since not much has been published to help students on the junior high level arrive at an intelligent position in the controversy over nuclear power." O. V. Fortier
Library J 97:1619 Ap 15 '72 110w [YA]

STEPTOE, JOHN. Train ride. unp col il $3.95
Harper

SBN 06-025773-3 LC 70-146001

"In the hot Brooklyn summertime, when 'Everybody be sittin' around on the stoop,' Charlie tries to impress the kids with his knowledge of the 'city' (Manhattan) and is challenged to take them all on a train ride there. They get to 42nd Street and wander goggle-eyed among the stores with 'dynamite clothes,' the dirty movie houses, the penny arcade . . . shoeshine boys, weirdos and a lot more white people than they're used to seeing. Late at night, having blown all their money, they have to prevail on the token booth man to let them catch the train home. . . . Grades three to six." (Library J)

"Next day Charlie says, 'We'll probably do it again . . . cause it was a boss time.' Young readers are sure to agree, so vividly does John Steptoe portray, in Harlem idiom and strong, brilliant pictures, an exciting childhood experience." Polly Goodwin

Book World p10 (children's issue) N 7 '71 130w

"The author-illustrator's first book, Stevie [BRD 1969], was hailed as a brilliant new venture in picture-book realism; and the story was close to the natural world of childhood. The second book, Uptown [BRD 1972], suffered from a lack of this universality; but now in a third book the author returns to a basically childlike theme. . . . Although the colors are somewhat muted, the paintings are similar to those in the previous books. One cannot but wonder how the young author's talent will mature and develop and in what direction it will take him." E. L. H.
Horn Bk 47:477 O '71 200w

"Train Ride runs midway between Stevie and Uptown . . . it lacks Stevie's really striking color paintings but it's a much better read than Uptown. . . . The color paintings have a dusky, blurry quality which doesn't do justice to either the kids or the city. But Charlie's fast-moving narrative is totally unself-conscious; there are no wasted nor fake words in the teasing/bantering/name-calling dialogue; and New York is described exactly as it would appear to a bunch of impressionable kids whose vitality and energy match the city's own." D. G. Stavn
Library J 97:781 F 15 '72 210w

Reviewed by J. B. Mercer

N Y Times Bk R pt 2, p46 N 7 '71 70w

STERN, FRITZ. The failure of illiberalism: essays on the political culture of modern Germany. 233p $7.95 Knopf

943.08 Germany—History
ISBN 0-394-46087-1 LC 71-136317

The author, Seth Low Professor of history at Columbia University, presents a collection of essays, most previously published, on various aspects of modern Germany history. The linking theme is that the Germans have not since 1870 tolerated open discussion, the testing of theories and policies, or living with contradictions. Index.

"[Stern's] first major work, The Politics of Cultural Despair [BRD 1962], has been a classic virtually since its appearance 9 years ago. . . . There are a few mini-classics, not to mention other goodies, now available in this collection of Stern's essays too. . . . Holding the collection together are premises, stated and unstated, about how German history should be written, and why Americans should take an interest in it. The answers are almost an inversion of the conventional wisdom. . . . Despite its best efforts, the collection also periodically reflects that heavy German index finger, itself so characteristic of the great tradition. But historians are not, and not meant to be, prophets. And the author sometimes points the admonitory finger at himself." David Schoenbaum

Book World p11 Ja 30 '72 700w

"Of course, Stern's general observations, combining history with sociology, have a certain attractiveness, and it is not hard to bolster up his concept of 'illiberalism' by obvious evidence from German history since Bismarck. The trouble with some of his verdicts is that they do not give sufficient weight to those facts which might make the reader wonder if this illiberalism was really all-pervasive. . . . I do not necessarily disagree with many of Stern's observations, but I regret his often too sweeping judgments. Of these essays, those dealing with Bismarck's banker Gerson von Bleichröder . . . and with Chancellor Theobald von Bethmann Hollweg will be most important for historians. His moving report, 'Germany Revisited: Berlin 1954,' though dated, will appeal to general readers." F. E. Hirsch
Library J 97:498 F 1 '72 290w

Reviewed by Geoffrey Barraclough

N Y Rev of Books 19:25 N 16 '72 7950w

N Y Times Bk R p40 F 6 '72 60w

"[Stern is] one of our finest interpreters of the German past. . . . Such collections [as this] are frequently haphazard; this one is not. Throughout his book Stern reveals a fine sense of continuity in his thinking. Furthermore, the lucidity of his prose makes his insights into both the history and people of Germany accessible to professional and amateur German-watchers alike. . . . [This is] an example of the very best in American historiography." L. L. Snyder
Sat R 55:65 Ja 29 '72 450w

STERN, J. P. Idylls & realities: studies in nineteenth-century German literature. 232p $8 Ungar

830 German literature—History and criticism
ISBN 0-8044-2830-1 LC 72-157095

In this study "German literature is seen against the background of German history and thought [and] German drama, lyric poetry and novel are seen against the background of the European realistic tradition. . . . The book also includes essays on nineteenth-century German dramatists, and on Heine, Mörike, Stifter, Raabe, Fontane and Nietzsche. It demonstrates . . . the place these writers occupy in the history of European realism and stresses particularly their successful portrayal of aspects of inwardness and isolation that were to be further explored in the literature of the twentieth century." (TLS) Bibliography. Index.

"[Stern] supplies an introduction, and presents some new insights and an occasional new focus, but no major reorientation to the material. The chapters on Raabe and the self are the most original. Intended as a sequel to the author's earlier Re-interpretations: seven studies in nineteenth-century German literature, the style is heavy, aimed at a schooled, literate audience. Footnotes for each chapter are supplemented by a selected reading list on both the period and the individual authors. This list is largely of books, with few articles, even when excellent ones might well be included. . . . Quotations given in German and English. Suitable for larger college libraries." Choice 9:512 Je '72 130w

"The individuality of the writers whose works are described shines the more brightly because of contrastive reference to the work of others. Once or twice such comparisons fail to illuminate. . . . Dr Stern's European comparisons (such as that between Keller and Stendhal) open our eyes to differences in national and cultural traditions as well as in the range of individual talents." TLS p1311 O 22 '71 300w

STERN, MADELEINE B. Heads & headlines: the phrenological Fowlers. 348p pl $8.95 Univ. of Okla. press

920 Fowler, Lorenzo Niles. Fowler, Orson Squire. Fowler family. Phrenology
ISBN 0-8061-0978-5 LC 77-160506

The author "has produced a family biography of the Fowlers who from the 1830's

STERN, M. B.—Continued

to the 1910's were the chief practitioners, publicists, and publishers of the science of phrenology. . . . [Stern deals with] the relationships between popularized phrenology and various reforms: women's rights, diet, temperance, . . . spiritualism [and] sex education. . . . [Included are] discussions of the development of characterology in American civilization and specific information about literary relationships, especially as publishers of Walt Whitman." (Choice) Index.

"[This] book makes it clear that the vogue of phrenology in America cannot be understood without a knowledge of Orson Squire Fowler, his brother Lorenzo, and other Fowlers, men and women. Among literary authors, Poe, Whitman, and Mark Twain appear most prominently in this biography of the Fowler clan."

Am Lit 43:632 Ja '72 $0w

"Although . . . [Stern] excludes most of the technical content, and fumbles the pre-Fowler history, she delineates vividly the popularized version purveyed by members of the family. Concentrating on the personal activities of the Fowlers . . . [her] story is incredibly richly documented. Use of rare, out-of-the-way, and unobvious materials suggests that the book is the result of many years of collecting."

Choice 8:1360 D '71 210w

"This is a sympathetic and eloquent study. . . . The author shows the influences and contributions of these educated, indefatigable Fowlers who lectured, wrote, published, and crusaded for nearly a century. . . . Highly recommended." Shirley Heppell

Library J 96:3751 N 15 '71 170w

STERN, PHILIP VAN DOREN. Henry David Thoreau: writer and rebel. 183p $4.50 Crowell
B or 92 Thoreau, Henry David—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-690-37715-0 LC 74-139108

This portrait of the nineteenth-century American focuses on "Thoreau as Original Ecologist and man-of-the-woods, as anti-war protester and companion to Emerson, Alcott, and Hawthorne. [Chronology. Bibliography. Index]. Ages twelve to fourteen." (Christian Science Monitor)

"This study of a much quoted, little understood American is of definitive value. Thoreau . . . was writer, naturalist, and—pencil maker. . . . Behind a gruff 'loner's' exterior is revealed the complex character of a man possessed of that goodness that children and animals sense instantly. . . . Here is a richly embroidered introduction to Thoreau and his philosophy. One sure to further a reader's interest in the man from Walden's Pond. . . . Junior high to adult." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 32:151 Je 15 '72 100w [YA]

"[The author] is at his best when he discusses 'Walden,' claiming it 'truly belongs to the realm of magic prose.' For readers who want an introduction to Thoreau's life this will probably suffice nicely; for those who want a broader hint of his admittedly obscure personality it will not." Marilyn Gardner

Christian Science Monitor pB5 My 4 '72 130w

STETLER, RUSSELL, ed. Palestine: the Arab-Israeli conflict: phot. by Jeffrey Blankfort. (A Ramparts press reader) 297p $6.95; pa $2.95 Ramparts press

320.95694 Jewish-Arab relations
ISBN 0-87367-018-1; 0-87367-X (pa)
LC 72-75810

This collection of articles by various authors concerns "the confrontation between Israel and the Palestinian resistance. Part 1 of the book sketches in the background and offers a critique of contemporary Israel [and] . . . its entanglements in Africa. . . . Part 2 attempts to unveil the Palestinian resistance movement, through reportage and primary documents from the major groups who struggle for leadership of the resistance. . . . [Part 3] seeks to shed some light on the causes and effects of the September [1970] events, as seen from a number of Palestinian viewpoints." (Introd)

"The goals and viewpoint of the Palestinian guerrillas are well documented in Stetler's book. A collection of essays about various parts of the Fedayeen movement, this work abounds in detail about the history, philosophy, and structure of the revolutionaries. The major problem with the book, however (and this makes it almost useless for understanding the over-all picture of the situation), is that it is written from a purely dogmatic Marxist direction. Every author makes every attempt to twist and turn every event so that it fits the Marxist schema. The result is twisted history and an interpretation which only true believers of the left can accept. Anyone else will be turned off from the start." D. Schmiel

Best Sell 32:273 S 15 '72 190w

"An unbalanced collection of previously published materials, including Isaac Deutscher on the Six-Day War, Matzpen theoretician Haim Hanegbi et al. on 'The Class Nature of Israeli Society,' and the Africa Research Group on 'Israel's Mission in Africa' (i.e., as a lackey of U.S. imperialism). The last two-thirds of the book consists of six documents on the Palestinian guerrilla groups and their programs, and six items on the September 1970 war between the guerrillas and Jordanian troops. Of some use as source material in special collections." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 97:2194 Je 15 '72 90w

STEVENS, JOHN O. Awareness: exploring, experimenting, experiencing. 275p $7; pa $3.50 Real people press

155.2 Gestalt psychology. Individuality.
Communication. Personality
ISBN 911226-10-9; 911226-11-7 (pa)
LC 76-160266

The book's "purpose as stated by Stevens is to . . . help you to discover your own reality, your own existence, your own humanness. . . . It consists of more than 100 self-directed experiments which the reader can try either with himself or others." (Choice)

"The experiments are based on Gestalt therapy and group experiences and are possibly successful in trained hands but it is doubtful whether a naive reader will gain much more than some insight into the human potential movement. In spite of this limitation relative to the book's stated purpose, Awareness does make interesting reading and may give a sensitivity training group leader many ideas to enhance his own skills. Several pages are directly aimed at such a person. Will be popular on library shelves. No index."

Choice 9:286 Ap '72 160w

"Based upon the work of Fritz Perls, founder of Gestalt therapy, these exercises require that you be your clenched fist, that nervous smile, or a character in your dream. . . . At moments the array of exercises is overwhelming, and I appreciated the transitional pages which give more insight into Gestalt therapy per se. For the responsive reader, Stevens provides a good jab into consciousness of self and others." M. B. Preese

Library J 97:508 F 1 '72 160w

STEVENS, LEONARD A. Explorers of the brain. 348p il $7.95 Knopf

612 Brain. Nervous system
ISBN 0-394-42968-0 LC 69-10709

The author surveys the discoveries which explain the function of brain and nerve. The period he covers extends from the time of the Greek physician Galen, who lived from A.D. 130 to about 200, to 1971. Index.

"An uncritical historical account for the informed layman of neural and cerebral electrical activity from Galvani and Volta to the present. The author, a skillful free-lance writer . . . succeeds in explaining, in an Arthur Koestler or Isaac Asimov style, a difficult subject to the intelligent lay reader or interested undergraduate student."

Choice 9:232 Ap '72 90w

"Considerations of the brain are fascinating to the layman, and this book is one of the most comprehensive to appear for the non-scientist. . . . The title is really too narrow, for Stevens emphasizes the nervous system in general (except for sense organs). Some of the discussions may provide a little more detail than the nonbiologist may crave, but they are rewarding presentations of some very important aspects of the history of science." J. H. Zar

Library J 97:510 F 1 '72 80w

"Stevens describes various theories of brain function from the ancients on up (the Egyptians, for instance, thought it an inconsequential mass). . . . Later experiments with electric excitation differentiated the functions of various brain areas. Contemporary experiments with rats showing that the cortex actually grows [are included]. . . . Stevens's approach is largely physiological. . . ."

N Y Times Bk R p14 F 13 '72 120w

STEVENS, LEONARD A. The town that launders its water; how a California town learned to reclaim and reuse its water; phot. by the author. 122p maps lib bdg $4.49 Coward, McCann & Geoghegan

628 Santee, California—Water supply—Juvenile literature. Water—Purification—Juvenile literature
LC 71-132606

"In 1959 Santee decided that water was too expensive to be used only once. The town set out to develop methods for cleaning and recycling waste water for such purposes as irrigation and recreation. . . . [This book] tells how Santee began its novel experiment: how a site was chosen, a cleaning plant set up, funds obtained from state and federal agencies for research . . . [and] what psychology was used to gain full public acceptance of the lake water." (Publisher's note) Index. "Grades five to eight." (Library J)

"The conception and implementation of this system [of reclaiming and reusing water] from the initial idea to the problems of convincing the authorities and the public of its worth are described by Stevens in a very clear, readable manner; numerous photographs and diagrams elucidate the text. Even high school students and adults would find this book interesting, and it's a useful supplement to the many more general and theoretical ecology books on the market." M. I. Purucker

Library J 97:781 F 15 '72 150w [YA]

"[This book is a] hopeful note in the depressing story of water pollution." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:61 N 13 '71 110w

STEVENS, ROSEMARY. American medicine and the public interest. 572p $18.50 Yale univ. press

610 Medicine. Medical care
ISBN 0-300-01419-8 LC 77-151592

The author of Medical Practice in Modern England (BRD 1967) who is an assistant professor of public health at Yale University School of Medicine "describes the background and development of American medicine . . . [and] the evolution of medical specialties, then develops the background of modern medical care and reexamines and reassesses the political and professional aspects of medicine. Finally, she evaluates the potential for alternative developments in the future, sorting out what she terms the maelstrom rather than the crisis in American medical practices." (Library J) Bibliography.

"Stevens's solution is a program of national health insurance that would provide the kind of control over specialists and GPs that England has. . . . The idea is not new; it is, indeed, the focus of a well-publicized proposal for a national health insurance program. What [she] brings to the proposal is a mass of historical detail that is cumulatively overwhelming. Every legislator who works on national health insurance should get and read this book, if only to learn the mistakes that have been made until now. The reading is not difficult. . . . If the book has a weakness, it is a lack of medical details. It is entirely an organizational history. . . . [But] by telling us where we have been and why we are where we are, Rosemary Stevens offers an invaluable guide to where we should go." Edward Edelson

Book World p3 O 24 '71 1350w

Choice 9:97 Mr '72 130w

"Since [Professor Stevens] doesn't suffer from the journalist's compulsion to show that she is more outraged than everybody else, she was able to go about her job in so reasoned a way that I ended up not only prepared to accept her diagnosis, swallow her medicine, and forgive her sentence structure, but to nominate her for the post of Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. [Her] book appears at a propitious time." Walter Goodman

Commentary 53:90 Ja '72 2950w

"By intelligently and incisively connecting and relating the numerous professional, social, and legislative influences upon the practice of medicine in the U.S., the author builds a sound framework for considering future implications. This thorough, scholarly study contributes appreciably to the understanding of contemporary health issues affecting the nation. Anything but a popular volume on the topic, this effort will be of considerable value to serious collections in the areas of public policy and health affairs." Paul Wasserman

Library J 96:4022 D 1 '71 180w

"As Rosemary Stevens argues in her somewhat mistitled [book] today's health care chaos is a direct result of the lack of early organization of medical treatment in this country. . . . The bulk of the volume is a sometimes fascinating history of American medicine and, especially, the development of the specialties. By virtue of the mass of historical data it is an important book. Still, it is somewhat disappointing. Events have passed Miss Stevens by. Granted, there is always a need for cogent histories, but historiography has gone beyond Miss Stevens. It is now respectable for a historian to draw conclusions, graceful political and social exempla for the rest of us." Ed Cray

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 23 '72 310w

Reviewed by Charles Rosenberg

Science 176:901 My 26 '72 1750w

STEVENSON, CHARLES A. The end of nowhere; American policy toward Laos since 1954. 367p $8.95 Beacon press

327.73 U.S.—Foreign relations—Laos. Laos —Foreign relations—U.S.
ISBN 0-8070-0252-6 LC 70-179156

"America has spent some $3 billion on economic and military aid for the purpose of 'saving' Laos from Communism. But today more areas in Laos are under Communist control than when the U.S. began its aid. An exploration of that paradox is the subject of this work." [Stevenson examines] the evolution of American policy from the time of the Geneva Agreements of 1954 to the present, discussing the objectives of this policy, the mechanism developed to implement it, and its achievements and failures. . . . Bibliography. Index." (Library J)

"Stevenson has drawn upon all official sources, supplemented by extensive talks with personalities involved in Laotian affairs in Washington and Laos. The book is carefully researched and a welcome addition to the literature on Laos." B. G. Gokhale

Library J 97:1023 Mr 15 '72 250w

"Stevenson covers the surreptitious mechanisms of economic and military intervention in great detail, e.g., which factions the CIA and State Department were backing at which moment (sometimes opposing ones) and how aid funds were used to support them. He attributes the origins of US policy to nebulous 'career policymakers,' 'bureaucratic roles,' and 'conflicting instructions,' etc. This is one of the best accounts available on the cast of characters and the events of this war."

N Y Rev of Books 18:35 Ap 6 '72 200w

STEVENSON, CHRISTOPHER SINCLAIR. See Sinclair-Stevenson, C.

STEVENSON, FRANCES. Lloyd George; a diary; ed. by A. J. P. Taylor. 338p il $15 Harper

B or 92 Lloyd George of Dwyfor, David Lloyd George, 1st Earl. Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century

This "account, compiled between 1912 and 1943 by the woman who was Lloyd George's secretary and mistress, and later his wife, . . . [portrays] Lloyd George the man and the politician. . . . [and also gives] an inside account of the cabinet sessions of World War I, as explained and interpreted to Stevenson by Lloyd George." (Library J)

Reviewed by V. A. Lapomarda

America 126:547 My 20 '72 60w

Reviewed by S. E. Burke

Best Sell 32:69 My 1 '72 550w

Reviewed by E. M. Yoder

Book World p8 Ja 30 '72 750w

Choice 9:271 Ap '72 160w

Reviewed by Anne Fremantle

Commonweal 96:338 Je 16 '72 750w

STEVENSON, FRANCES—Continued

"The renewed interest in David Lloyd George, which was heralded by the recent opening of the Lloyd George papers in the Beaverbrook Library, is reflected in the publication of [this] book. . . . The picture it gives of the famous British prime minister is obviously not an objective one, but it is warm and fascinating. . . . The diary is enhanced by Taylor's excellent job of editing." J. H. Thompson

Library J 96:3602 N 1 '71 140w

Reviewed by Francis Russell

Nat R 24:290 Mr 17 '72 1050w

New Repub 167:32 N 4 '72 360w

"[This] is not—and this has to be said—in any sense an important historical document. . . . Miss Stevenson turns out to be far from a natural diarist. In no sense an egotist, she presents her comments on the passing scene in a sensible, downright manner without any . . . flashes of self-exposure. . . . Inevitably her interest throughout is focused on one man. . . . In fact, most of the diary entries consist of no more than a faithful transcription of the various remarks made at the end of a working day by Lloyd George—all set down without the benefit of any form of critical faculty. . . . One is entitled to ask for . . . some kind of easily recognisable impression of the author. And here again Miss Stevenson, at least initially, fails to do herself justice." Anthony Howard

New Statsman 82:272 Ag 27 '71 1300w

"To anyone who enjoys political gossip the diaries are obsessive reading. But they are not deep. Occasionally one comes across one of those percipient insights which made Lloyd George so much more interesting than his contemporaries in the House. . . . But any book about Lloyd George in the end provokes the reader to ask whether it helps to answer the riddle about the man." Noel Annan

N Y Rev of Books 18:22 F 10 '72 2050w

Reviewed by Peter Stansky

N Y Times Bk R p4 Ja 30 '72 1250w

New Yorker 47:85 Ja 8 '72 160w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons

Newsweek 79:62 Ja 10 '72 700w

Reviewed by R. G. Martin

Sat R 55:61 Ja 29 '72 900w

"[This book] lays the foundation for a firmer understanding of recent political history by telling the story from within. No one could fail to admire the candour of Lady Lloyd George's diary and her bearing in a highly dangerous role which might at any time have been revealed by the countless enemies of her lover. Her position in that strangely decorous age is happily compared by A. J. P. Taylor with the conflicts of a heroine drawn for us by H. G. Wells. If it is necessary to suggest that, for all the clarity with which the picture is drawn and for all the affectionate strokes, the result is starkly unfavourable, such adverse comments will be remembered against a background of admiration for the frankness and quality of the diarist."

TLS p117 S 17 '71 950w

STEVENSON, JANET. The Montgomery bus boycott, December, 1955; American Blacks demand an end to segregation. (A Focus bk) 64p ll lib bdg $3.95 Watts. F.

301.451 Negroes—Segregation—Juvenile literature. Montgomery, Alabama—Race relations—Juvenile literature
SBN 531-00994-7 LC 73-161072

An "account of the Montgomery bus boycott of 1955-56 which effectively challenged the legality of segregation. Covered are the history of 'Jim Crow' laws, the unsuccessful protests against the bus company prior to 1955, the organizing of the black community and the subsequent efforts to keep up the momentum of the strike and deal with counter moves by the city. Such leaders as Martin Luther King, Jr. and E. D. Nixon, who proposed the boycott, are discussed, and the legal aspects of the strike are . . . presented. [Index.] Grades five to nine." (Library J)

"[The] subject matter is well summarized and reported . . . beginning with Mrs. Rosa Parks' refusal to surrender her seat on a public bus to a white man. . . . Particular attention [is] paid to the almost impossible task of organizing thousands of Negroes for effective resistance." Mrs. J. G. Gray

Best Sell 31:434 D 15 '71 120w

"A good, brief account. . . . Stevenson indicates that segregation is a comparatively recent institution, but her assertion that after the Civil War blacks were free to exercise their civil rights both under the law and in practice is questionable. . . . Otherwise, however, this is a straightforward, informative outline of the events in the strike for younger readers than would attempt Martin Luther King's Stride Toward Freedom [BRD 1958, 1959]." Laurel Franklin

Library J 97:286 Ja 15 '72 170w

STEVENSON, ROBERT LOUIS. Collected poems; ed. with an introd. and notes by Janet Adam Smith. 2d ed 572p il $10 Viking

821
SBN 670-22909-1 LC 79-144343

The author has revised her 1950 edition of Stevenson's poems "on the basis of recent scholarship and new manuscripts adding two new poems . . . and some dates of composition, correcting editorial and textual errors. . . . [Included are] reproductions of the . . . woodcuts Stevenson did for the little pamphlets and broadsides of his poems printed by his young stepson Lloyd Osbourne." (Choice)

"[This edition contains] a fine introduction, full scholarly notes, and an index of first lines. . . . Stevenson's reputation as a minor but worthy poet seems to be rising, particularly as a poet in Scots, and all libraries should have either the first or revised edition of this book; only university or research libraries need the revised edition if they already have the first."

Choice 8:1455 Ja '72 170w

Library J 97:62 Ja 1 '72 40w

STEVENSON, RONALD. Western music; ■■ introduction. 216p $5.95 St Martins

780.1 Music—History and criticism
LC 79-185854

The author seeks to "relate the history of Western music to social, religious and political history and to parallel movements in the allied arts, philosophy and science. Though the book's subject is Western music, Oriental and African musics are also considered. . . . [Stevenson describes music's origins], the development of folk-song, troubadourism, the Gothic, Baroque and Rococo styles, European classicism and romanticism, and . . . the many modern schools, including jazz, pop, the folk revival and electronic music." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"The book jacket informs us that 'this brief introduction to Western music is addressed to the general reader who likes music but feels he doesn't know much about it, and to the student who knows something about it but wants to know more.' Unfortunately, both groups will be disappointed for the book abounds in factual distortions, historical inaccuracies, far-fetched conclusions, and oversimplifications. Typical distortions: 'Corelli was the father of the violin.' . . . Some of the author's statements are completely acceptable; 'The first movement of Haydn's Sonata in E flat as the title tells us, in E flat.' And his summation of Schubert's Quintet in C; 'What a work!'" William Shank

Library J 97:2402 Jl '72 300w

"[This brief book] makes virtually no attempt to analyse how music functions [or] to distinguish between the musical conventions of groups of composers. . . . None the less, the book serves a purpose; and does so, quite simply, because it is the creation of ■■ remarkable man. As composer, pianist and teacher Mr Stevenson has high technical competence. . . . The impressive range and passionate human commitment of his musicianship cannot be ignored. . . . So when he writes a history one knows that—however inadequate, even perfunctory, it must inevitably be—it will none the less offer pointers that will stimulate through their very quixoticism. . . . Those who think they know most that they need to know about the history of Western music will find themselves thinking again; those who don't pretend to know will be encouraged to approach 'history' with open ears and unblinkered eyes."

TLS p131 F 4 '72 400w

STEWART, J. W. The snakes of Europe. 238p il $10 Fairleigh Dickinson univ. press

598.1 Snakes

ISBN 0-8386-1023-4

LC 77-163307

This work contains an "account of snake evolution from lizards emphasizing locomotion, prey capture, fang development, and sense organs. Part of a chapter explains the effect of Pleistocene glacial movements on the European snake fauna. . . . [The book includes] descriptions of the color variations of a species throughout its range, and behavior. There are 36 distribution maps of species and families, lists of common names in 13 languages, and 99 reference items." (Choice)

"[This is a] useful general reference and handbook. . . . Most photographs are of good quality. They are referred to in the index, but not in the text. This work is much more specific for the area than [A.] Bellairs' The life of reptiles [BRD 1970] and is readable by anyone interested in snakes and their habits."

Choice 9:391 My '72 150w

"This is the first full-scale survey to be made of [Europe's snakes] for nearly 60 years. . . . But it is all very impersonal; not the sort of book that tells you how to emerge with credit from an eyeball-to-eyeball confrontation with four to six feet of offended grass snake taking the spring sun on top of the compost heap that it calls home."

Economist 238:64 Mr 27 '71 150w

STEWART, DESMOND. The Middle East; temple of Janus. 414p $8.95 Doubleday

956 Near East—History

LC 70-132513

In this account of the Middle East's "past 90 years the emphasis is on Egypt, but the early Zionist movement is [also] covered, as are the Turkey of Abdul-Hamid II and of Kemal Atatürk, the relations of the Arab states to Britain and to each other, and the background of today's Arab-Israeli conflict." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The history which Mr Stewart recounts in a vivid, colourful and immensely readable style is enlivened by long digressions into the backgrounds and personalities of the men who fashioned it. A worthwhile book for the general reader."

Economist 243:83 My 13 '72 90w

"There are a number of footnotes, but by no means are all of the quotations documented. This book is neither for the neophyte nor the specialist. The style is rambling and the material highlights personalities. Not a necessary purchase for any but the largest collections." E. P. Stickney

Library J 96:1267 Ap 1 '71 120w

STEWART, J. I. M. Thomas Hardy; ■ critical biography. 249p $5.95 Dodd

823 Hardy, Thomas

ISBN 0-396-06338-1

LC 78-159830

In this study the author "analyzes the art and craft of . . . [Thomas Hardy], probes the private life and intellectual background of his subject and relates them to the prose and poetry that he wrote." (Publisher's note) Chronology. Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by Richard Freedman

Book World p12 N 28 '71 600w

Choice 9:648 Jl/Ag '72 130w

"Whatever led Mr Stewart to subtitle his book 'A Critical Biography'? It is nothing of the sort. The only attempt to trace Hardy's life-story is a two-page-long chronological table annexed to the text. . . . More than four-fifths of the book, in fact, is straight literary criticism. Its author's familiarity with the whole file of Hardy studies is abundantly evident, but his contribution differs from most of the worthy discourses in its relaxed and often humorous tone. . . . Anyone who enjoys reading Hardy's fiction will get a great deal of pleasure and stimulation from reading the commentaries on the novels; and he will be reminded that no balanced estimate of Hardy's achievement is possible if the poetry is disregarded."

Economist 242:54 Ja 15 '72 360w

"[This] study of Hardy is characteristically straightforward, unpretentious, and excellent. . . . The author has no axes to grind; he makes a persuasive, judicious case for Hardy's greatness without overlooking his obvious limitations. If this volume is somewhat similar in scope and intent to Irving Howe's critical survey, Thomas Hardy [BRD 1967], it seems superior in its attempt to address itself centrally to Hardy's literary qualities. Too often the Victorian sage or the observer of the changing rural social order have obliterated the artist. Students and teachers of Hardy will find this to be one of the most useful and sensible studies available." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:877 Mr 1 '72 170w

"[This] study is concise, elegant and witty; . . . [Stewart] assumes the soundest approach to reside in comment and description rather than in more radical assessment. . . . As a novelist himself, Stewart has a straightforward insight into the problems of the craft which, in the case of Hardy, can be more revealing than critical ingenuity. . . . Hardy's poetry suffers from the . . . perplexing evasions of the reader's normal response to a form. Stewart points out that most of them are intended to be read in isolation, and that it is the prolonged and unnatural exposure to Collected Poems [BRD 1920] which baffles and dulls the reader's sensibilities. . . . Stewart is inclined to under-value, I think, the recent discoveries or speculations about Hardy's life and background, although his second chapter—'Private Life'—is a masterpiece of sceptical lucidity." John Boyley

New Statesman 82:398 S 24 '71 500w

"[Stewart's] approach is biographical, but biographical in an intelligent and flexible way that avoids the dogma implicit in the sets of consistent philosophy or structural criticism. . . . [His style is] quick, graceful [and] perceptive. . . . [The book is not] definitive . . . [nor does it] exhaust the possible biographical treatment of Hardy's work. . . . [Stewart] has not really handled the sexual conflicts in the final novels, particularly in 'Jude the Obscure.' . . . [But he has written a] highly praiseworthy and provocative book." James Gindin

Va Q R 48:153 winter '72 550w

Reviewed by Alexander Welsh

Yale R 61:459 Mr '72 850w

STEWART, JACKIE. Faster! a racer's diary, by Jackie Stewart and Peter Manso. 239p il $7.95 Farrar, Straus

796.7 Automobile racing—Personal narratives

ISBN 0-374-15370-1

LC 72-76337

This is an account of the racing career of Jackie Stewart who in "1969, after only four years of Formula 1 competition, . . . won the World Drivers Championship. He won the championship again in 1971. But [in] 1970, the year Stewart relives in Faster!, . . . because of the machinations of racing politics, he was left with an uncompetitive car. During the year his two best friends, Jochen Rindt and Piers Courage, were killed while racing. . . . [He re-examines] his motivations . . . [takes a] look at big-time auto racing . . . [and] goes behind the surface of . . . [his] career to show why a man is compelled to risk his life in the quest for victory." (Publisher's note)

"[This] is a speedy introduction in diary form to Jackie Stewart's complex world of big-time automobile racing. Rather than just capsuling what it takes to get car and driver ready for a season, Stewart hangs his personal feelings on a clothesline of truth. He exposes his emotions as boldly as a TV-sold detergent airs a clean, white sheet. . . . Stewart's book is a formidable story, simply told, but with an undercurrent of danger which frequently leaps out from the printed page. He does not, in so many words, answer the question why men put their life on the line to battle with anything as intangible as speed. But there are pieces of the answer on practically every page for the reader who looks for them." Phil Elderklin

Christian Science Monitor p13 Jl 5 '72 430w

"Stewart and coauthor Manso . . . are able to avoid much of the hoopla found in similar accounts and to concentrate instead on the problems and frustrations which are inevitably experienced in this dangerous and expensive sport. Like his driving, Stewart's prose is cautious and disciplined; and in the face of all the glamour, traveling, and money, he shows remarkable restraint and tenacity, as if he had somehow managed to anesthetize himself from much of the pain and futility which he admits permeate the sport." Charles Farley

Library J 97:1823 My 15 '72 210w

STEWART, ROBERT. The politics of protection: Lord Derby and the Protectionist Party, 1841-1852. 240p $12.50 Cambridge

329.942 Conservative party (Great Britain). Derby, Edward George Geoffrey Smith Stanley, 14th Earl of. Great Britain—Commercial policy. Free trade and protection ISBN 0-521-08109-2 LC 177-152628J

"This book explains the conduct of those Tories who broke with Robert Peel, and who, in the fighting to save the Corn Laws, preserved the foundations of the modern Conservative Party. . . . [The author] stresses the importance and prevalence of anti-Catholicism among Tory Protectionists, and shows how differences were broad enough to make the 1846 split permanent, and for the Protectionists to organise themselves into a separate party under Lord George Bentinck and Lord Derby. After . . . [an] analysis of these two leaders the author examines Disraeli's successful campaign for the leadership of the House of Commons. He devotes the second half of the book to the failure of the Protectionist Party either to win back the support of the Peelite free-traders, or to gain a majority in the House of Commons." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Stewart's subtitle . . . is misleading: the book is less a biography of Derby in these years than it is a detailed, chronological account of top-level party politics. Accordingly Peel tends to eclipse Derby, and later Derby shares the stage with Bentinck and Disraeli: at the end we still know Derby less well than we do the others. This is disappointing. At some point in the book, a thorough examination of Derby's personality and ideas would have been welcome . . . Generally Mr. Stewart does less well with the social and economic context of his political narrative than he does with the narrative itself. . . . [The author, however,] has produced an attractively written book, surprisingly so, in view of its origins as a doctoral dissertation." David Spring

Am Hist R 77:1125 O '72 700w

"As there has been no history of the Protectionist party written in the 20th century this monograph will be especially welcome to students of early Victorian politics. . . . As one of the first historians to have access to the bulk of the Derby papers, Stewart is able to trace the role reluctantly played by Lord Derby as the only established political figure in the Protectionist party. For this phase of Derby's career this book supersedes Wilbur D. Jones' Lord Derby and Victorian conservatism [BRD 1957]. Essential for libraries with serious collections on 19th-century British politics." Choice 9:708 J1/Ag '72 180w

"After so much recently celebrating or conceding Peel's contribution to the Conservative party, a word on behalf of the dissenting thesis is a reassuring sign that the debate is by no means closed. Mr Stewart thinks that the current Peelolatry of the historians is at bottom sentimental: 'Peel did not so much give the Conservative party a new life, as set some Conservatives on the road which led to the Liberal party.' . . . After [R.] Blake's Disraeli, [BRD 1967] this book comes as a logical complement." Economist 241:61 O 9 '71 550w

"Dr Stewart will earn much gratitude for the illumination his researches have brought to [his subject]." TLS p10 Ja 7 '72 650w

STEWART, WALTER. Trudeau in power. 240p $6.95 Outerbridge & Dienstfrey

320.9 Trudeau, Pierre Elliott. Canada—Politics and government ISBN 0-87690-048-1 LC 71-178904

The author attempts to prove that the government of Prime Minister Trudeau is "marked by authoritarianism and inhumanity. . . . [He analyzes the] style with which the Prime Minister exercises mastery over his party, the Canadian media and Canada as a whole . . . [and] describes how Trudeau's special advisers (the 'Supergroup') insulate him from public opinion, and how they have seized decision-making power from Parliament and Cabinet." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The most startling thing about the book is the fact that a book academic journal such as this has requested a review of it. The book is of very little relevance to academics and has very little to do with social science. However, if Trudeau in Power is read as a nonacademic and anecdotal polemic, it is certainly entertaining. . . . Its unacademic and lively style . . . will appeal to a much wider audience than any academic piece. If there is a message in Trudeau in Power it is a simple one—Pierre Elliott Trudeau is a political 'supervillain.' . . . The only strong part of the book is the analysis of the relationship between the national press and the Prime Minister. . . . To Americans unfamiliar with the Canadian system, [this book] will give a very distorted and hopelessly inaccurate picture. To those who will not be fooled in that respect, the book may be viewed simply as a vitriolic diatribe of one journalist against one politician." M. S. Whittington

Ann Am Acad 402:175 J1 '72 420w

"Stewart undertakes to establish two principal theses: First, that Trudeau has cowed would-be dissenters in governmental ranks and has concentrated in his own hands the elements of power normally wielded by the cabinet, the parliament, the civil service, and the political parties. Second, that none of the major legislation enacted in the past four years represents any threat to the status quo. On neither point does he make a convincing case. . . . [But] despite the serious drawbacks inherent in the polemical orientation of this book, it can be a valuable tool to the student of Canadian politics. . . . It is particularly useful for its exposition of the legislative streamlining effected under Trudeau, for its insights into the decision-making process, and for its delineation of the differences among party programs." E. M. Corbett

Best Sell 31:492 F 1 '72 900w

Reviewed by Brian Moore

Book World p13 Ja 30 '72 900w

"This book is to be welcomed as the first comprehensive damnation of Pierre Trudeau and all his works. . . . Stewart, a perceptive journalist, overstates his case, too rarely noting that all of the problems facing Canada cannot be blamed upon the prime minister. Surprisingly, he predicts another electoral victory for Trudeau this year (the book is remarkably up-to-date). In contrasting Trudeau and company with their political opponents, Stewart provides an added service by describing men and parties hardly known at all in this country." J. A. Boudreau

Library J 97:881 Mr 1 '72 100w

Reviewed by Donald Cox

Nat R 24:291 Mr 17 '72 1100w

"The book is a well-documented, powerful condemnation of Canada's . . . French-Canadian leader and his government's record the first three years. It should make fascinating reading for those Americans who are interested in the Trudeau phenomenon . . . [as well as] for anyone interested in the democratic political process. For it amounts to an essay on the implications of image politics. . . . Stewart's account is essentially that of an eyewitness. One of Canada's top journalists, he is a member of the parliamentary press gallery and an associate editor of Maclean's magazine. His style is brisk, colorful, and marked by refreshingly direct personal statement. . . . [His] most serious charge is that Trudeau is destroying parliamentary democracy in Canada, substituting an 'elected dictatorship' with himself as head." Clive Cocking

Sat R 55:30 Ja 8 '72 1300w

STICKNEY, TRUMBULL. The poems of Trumbull Stickney; ed. and with an introd. by Ambers R. Whittle; foreword by Edmund Wilson. 316p il $17.50 Farrar, Straus

811

ISBN 374-23537-6 LC 78-139342

This volume, which includes Stickney's early lyrics and fragments of verse drama, is based "upon the edition brought out in 1905 [Poems, BRD 1906] by George Cabot Lodge, William Vaughn Moody, and John Ellerton Lodge [and] . . . follows the arrangement of the earlier work. Minor textual errors have been corrected and 'unreprinted,' and unpublished poems have been added in separate sections." (Library J) Bibliography. Index of titles and first lines.

"Most libraries with a copy of the 1905 edition of Stickney's poems will have little reason for ordering this book. . . . Whittle's edition is part of a series, sponsored by Edmund Wilson, aimed at rescuing 'the work of certain now neglected American poets whose work seems to be superior to that of many now in vogue.' . . . Of those who sample the late lyrics and dramatic verse poems, more than a few will be moved to have their library order a copy of Stickney's poems." Choice 9:1295 D '72 170w

"Neither Wilson's foreword nor Whittle's careful editing will result in a wide reading of Stickney's poems, but no collection of American literature should be without them. This edition is designed for the scholar's library; it contains notes [and] references." Walter Waring
Library J 97:3163 O 1 '72 120w

"This is a long overdue book. Trumbull Stickney, who died at 30 in 1904, left behind him a largely ignored book of verse and some remarkable poems in manuscript. His poems, all sonnets and strophic lyrics full of a romantic Hellenism and a formal sense sometimes stronger than their rhetoric, needed half-apologizing-for under the strictures of modernism. With the current rediscovery of American romantic-verse tradition, his work appears more central than ever." John Hollander
N Y Times Bk R p5 J1 16 '72 1150w

STIENNON, JACQUES, jr. auth. The legend of Roland in the middle ages. See Lejeune, R.

STILL, ATHOLE. Competitive swimming [Eng title: Swimming]. 128p il $3.95 St Martins

797.2 Swimming
LC 71-16557

This "is a manual of instruction and advice . . . [for] swimmers whether casual or competitive. All strokes are . . . explained and illustrated, and . . . advice is offered on training techniques and diet. The opening chapters deal with all the major strokes—front crawl, breast-stroke, butterfly and backstroke—analysing each part of the swimming action from leg action to breathing." (Publisher's note)

"A well written handbook on competitive swimming that should interest anyone starting in the sport. The pictures are excellent and effectively illustrate the techniques. The material is not new, but is in keeping with presently accepted techniques and principles of competitive swimming. . . . The book is limited because it deals mainly with the author's personal experience and opinions. Some of the information, specifically on race day, diet, and board diving, is rather elementary and superficial."

Choice 9:536 Je '72 100w

"One can learn only so much about swimming from a book, but what can be learned is here in a few pages. . . . [The] chapter on diving . . . is hardly more than an introduction for the spectator. . . . For a young reader [there] is some sound advice about the dangers of overtraining." J. H. Whittaker
Library J 97:1456 Ap 15 '72 130w

STILLINGER, JACK. The hoodwinking of Madeline, and other essays on Keats's poems. 185p $6.95 Univ. of Ill. press

821 Keats, John
SBN 252-00174-5 LC 70-147924

"Keats's later poems most often dealt with 'hoodwinked dreamers.' Stillinger contends that Keats finally condemned dreamers such as Madeline and Lycius when he realized that the real world must be faced and accepted. These essays, which focus on the fundamental Keatsian conflict between imagination and reality, include a discussion of the subject and arrangement of Keats's poems published in 1817, the relationship of themes in Endymion, the realistic tendencies of Isabella, the place of human concerns in the Hyperion poems, and Lamia, skepticism in the Eve of St. Agnes and The Eve of Saint Mark, the structure and meaning of the odes, and Keats's relation to Wordsworth in the concept of 'Romanticism.'" (Publisher's note) Index

Choice 9:648 J1/Ag '72 170w

"Of the eight essays and four appendixes gathered in this volume, almost all were written within the past 11 years; and most were published in various books and journals during the same period. Yet all of the pieces are informed by a consistent view of Keats's poetry and poetics. . . . The book on the whole is a worthy addition to Keatsian criticism, and its clarity of writing and argument will recommend it to any reader of Keats." F. P. Riga
Library J 97:199 Ja 15 '72 190w

"These essays, covering in one way or another most of Keats's poetry, are modest in expression and conclusion. . . . [The author's] unpretentious conclusions and gently-phrased warnings—for example, to remember that several themes in Endymion can coexist without contradiction—are so undogmatically expressed, that this is a fair guide to critical attitudes over the past few decades. One might, in fact, even object that Professor Stillinger sometimes relies too implicitly on the interpretations of other critics, instead of going direct to what Keats himself actually wrote or said."

TLS p741 Je 30 '72 300w

STILLMAN, ELLEN. Ski country cook book. 144p il $4.95 Houghton

641.5 Cookery, International
ISBN 0-395-12724-6 LC 78-158151

A collection of recipes geared for hungry skiers.

"[This] is a queer mélange of attractions (another homemade mûsli and a farmhouse apple relish) and absurdities (canned bouillon, gilded, becomes Memories-of-Kitzbühel soup). A runny hot chicken pie is supposed to be portable to a winter picnic, and slush with two exclamation points fun for a kitchen party. The snacks are pleasant and so are the resort dishes." Nora Magid

Book World p8 F 20 '72 50w

"A rather ordinary cookbook, but those who do follow the ski circuit may be happy to find recipes from various resorts identified. Of course there's a chapter on fondue, made up mostly of sauces. An interesting recipe is one for Birchermuesli, a Swiss cereal similar to Familia, which is available in America. Chapters on breakfasts and pancakes may provide new ideas for brunches. These are recipes to try when you are going to be quite active; they are of the 'stick to the ribs' variety. Recommended for large collections; may be too specialized for small libraries." Barbara Marconi

Library J 96:3136 O 1 '71 130w

"Excellent international recipes that are not difficult." Nika Hazelton
N Y Times Bk R p36 D 12 '71 10w

STIRNER, MAX. The ego and his own; ed. and introd. by John Carroll. 266p $7.95 Harper 320.01 Individualism. Right and left (Political science)

SBN 06-014131-X LC 70-156573

In this book "Stirner totally rejects external authority and advocates self-realization. He criticizes the socialists and liberals as eleutheromaniacs and 'zealots . . . for reason.' As Carroll indicates, he anticipates not only Nietzsche but part of Marcuse's radical critique of modern society." (Choice) Bibliography.

"This new edition of S. T. Byington's translation of 1912 is most welcome. . . . The Stirner literature is meagre. The classical analysis is John Henry MacKay's Max Stirner: sein leben und sein werk. (Berlin, 1898). The most comprehensive study in English is R. W. K. Patterson's The nihilistic egoist (1917, o.p.). . . . As undergraduate reading, Carroll's edition compares most favorably with . . . these works."

Choice 8:1512 Ja '72 190w

"The editor admits that 'the case for including Stirner in the 'roots of the Right' is not watertight', since 'Stirner is one of the men who defy political classification', but he points out that The Ego and His Own has right-wing as well as left-wing implications and has in fact inspired fascists as well as anarchists. . . . This selection [from The Ego and His Own] reproduces about half of it as well as a few passages from Stirner's shorter writings, with some alterations and occasional footnotes. Dr. Carroll contributes an introduction which is useful but not entirely reliable."

TLS p355 Mr 26 '71 170w

STITES, RAYMOND S. The sublimations of Leonardo da Vinci; with a tr. of the Codex Trivulzianus. by Raymond S. Stites; with M. Elizabeth Stites and Pierina Castiglione. 422p il $14.95 Smithsonian inst. press

759.5 Leonardo da Vinci
ISBN 0-87474-101-7 LC 70-104774

"The interdependence between Leonardo's work as a scientist and artist is sought by Stites . . . as he explores the tensions within the 'family constellation,' the social and economic background, and the sequence of events of Leonardo's time." (Choice)

STITES, R. S.—Continued

"The chapters present for the first time in English a translation of the Codex trivulzianus, and Stites' interpretation of their curious word lists on the assumption that they represent psychoanalytically important material is a major step toward the correction and enlargement of Freud's pioneering study of 1917, Leonardo da Vinci and a memory of his childhood [BHD 1966]. A much fuller and healthier image of a man emerges from Stites' study than from Freud's early provisional one. . . . The 312 illustrations are fully analyzed and form an integral part of the argument that reassesses and corrects the Leonardo legend. Should be in any library with holdings in Renaissance art."

Choice 8:1006 O '71 270w

"This is a remarkable book, the result of decades of firsthand study of Leonardo's mechanical drawings, sketches, paintings, sculptures, and writings. . . . In reconciling the artist with the scientist, Stites has brought to his task a rare constellation of abilities: dedicated scholarship, competence in art history, artistic sensitivity, psychological insight, and a fascination with his elusive subject, instantly communicated to the reader. In the course of his investigation, Stites challenges Freud's hypothesis that Leonardo was emotionally disturbed and that he deliberately or unconsciously avoided philosophical-psychological issues." J. H. Di Leo

Library J 96:2301 J1 '71 390w

STOBBS, WILLIAM. The crock of gold. See Jacobs, J. The crock of gold

STOCK, BRIAN. Medieval Latin lyrics; tr. & introduced by Brian Stock; original woodcuts by Fritz Kredel. 75p $12.50; deluxe ed $25 David R. Godine

874 Latin poetry. Latin poetry—Collections
ISBN 0-87923-027-4 LC 79-104913

"The seventeen poems comprising this anthology represent the . . . period of the Latin lyric in Europe between the 9th and 12th centuries. [The selections are] gathered from sources as various as Peter Abelard and the Carmina Burana. . . . The primary theme running through this book is that of passion, both sexual and sentimental, romantic and religious." (Publisher's note)

"Book lovers should not try to resist this book. Beautifully produced, it may be displayed as a proud competitor on any bookshelf. But it is not a book merely for display. Its . . . poems, each with the English translation facing the Latin, reveal . . . [a] richness of variety and complexity of mood. . . . At many points, Classical and Biblical echoes deepen the tone—Propertius and The Song of Songs are especially clear. And, finally, not least of the book's virtues is the truly illuminating discussion of the poems in the introduction." R. D. Sider

Class World 65:276 Ap/My '72 140w

"The translations are not, strictly speaking, literal, but here that is a virtue, for they have the mark of a translator who both knows and appreciates his materials. . . . Kredel has provided superb woodcuts capturing the spirit of the lyrics. Though the book is more limited in its selection than other collections of medieval Latin verse, it is elegant in every way." E. G. Schreiber

Library J 97:1329 Ap 1 '72 100w

"The selection of seventeen Latin lyrics . . . is thoughtful, but the whole undertaking is somewhat precious. . . . The translations themselves are neither accurate nor poetically faithful enough to warrant the lavish care with which they are presented. They are neither cribs nor do they attempt to convey any idea of the concentration of language and the syntactical ingenuity imposed on the originals by metres, rhythms and rhythm schemes. The poetic register is often clear, but the reflections of the originals are too pale, and even the meaning is imperiled."

TLS p884 J1 23 '72 300w

STODDARD, TOM. Pops Foster. See Foster, P.

STOFFEL, LESTER, L., jt. auth. Public libraries in cooperative systems. See Gregory, R. W.

STOLL, JOHN E. The novels of D. H. Lawrence; a search for integration. 263p $9.50 Univ. of Mo. press

823 Lawrence, David Herbert
ISBN 0-8262-0110-5 LC 76-158077

The author "takes issue with the traditional Freudian and Jungian interpretations of Lawrence's work and offers his own thesis, that 'the conscious intention of the writer may conflict with the emotional experience the work of art conveys . . . that the very means he [Lawrence] uses to overcome duality—the theory of consciousness—perpetuates the disproportion in the novels between idea and form, intention and performance.' The study then offers a consideration of the imagery in some of the novels and 'the biographical connection between the artist and his work' in all the major works." (Choice) Bibliography.

"[A] provocative and intelligent study. . . . Because of its rather esoteric approach, [it] is limited in usefulness; it is therefore recommended only to those libraries which support graduate programs in English or to those that have extensive holdings in contemporary literary criticism. The bibliography, though useful, is somewhat out of date."

Choice 9:648 J1/Ag '72 160w

"As one might suspect, a study that relentlessly finds Lawrence's 'development as an artist . . . revealed in his progressive mastery of the thematic and technical conflict between the known and the unknown self' is at last overly schematic and reductive. Stoll's thesis often seems too much in the saddle, as when he finds The Rainbow 'aesthetically incomplete' and rejects 'star equilibrium' in Women in Love because it is 'neurotically conditioned.' Nevertheless, if this volume cannot be taken as a final guide to Lawrence's novels, the originality of its approach and the carefulness of its readings do provide fine new insights into works that have been widely discussed." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:502 F 1 '72 150w

STONE, DONALD DAVID. Novelists in a changing world; Meredith, James, and the transformation of English fiction in the 1880's. 381p $13.50 Harvard univ. press 823 English fiction—History and criticism.

Meredith, George. James, Henry
ISBN 0-674-62830-6 LC 75-169861

The author seeks to show "that Meredith represents the last grand Victorian attempt to make fiction serve society and that James is the first major artist-centered modern." (Choice)

"Stone's study had the organization of a doctoral dissertation in its systematic covering of the decade's literary scene. . . . The book is recommended nevertheless, for Stone puts to good use the recent scholarship on the period. In his extended analyses of the novels he avoids the pitfall of labored summaries. . . . and his critical comments are frequently incisive and witty. Needed in college and university libraries."

Choice 9:818 S '72 170w

"This ambitious study of the transition from the Victorian to the modern novel begins with a general discussion of the breakup of the old order and of the forces and novelists that led to modernism. . . . The primary achievement of the study is its fresh and compelling perspective on [Meredith and James]. Stone contends that Meredith's contemporary neglect is largely because his key ideas . . . are all part of a last-ditch attempt to maintain the Victorian equilibrium and are consequently alien to our own sensibility. Many readers will share my own belief that this doesn't tell the whole story, but nevertheless Stone makes a persuasive case for taking Meredith seriously. . . . [He] makes use of both literary history and criticism in developing his impressive argument. The net result is original and challenging." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:1812 My 15 '72 300w
TLS p1198 O 6 '72 1150w

STONE, EDWARD F., jt. auth. Schools are for children. See Hertzberg, A.

STONE, GERALD. The smallest Slavonic nation; the Sorbs of Lusatia. 201p il maps $12 Oxford

914.3 Lusatia—History. Wendes
ISBN 0-485-11129-2 LC [72-181314]

This is an account of the "history and culture of the Wendes or Sorbs. The Sorbs, one of the Western Slav peoples, today number no more than 70,000 and live in the southwest corner of the German Democratic Republic bordering on Poland. The account . . . documents both the assimilation (Germanization) and revitalistic nationalism of this . . . ethnic group. Chapters cover: history, literature, language, folkways and folklore, music, and the position today." (Choice) Bibliography. Index.

"[This account] is scholarly and readable. . . . It is a pity more illustrations were not employed in this first venture into English. Select bibliography for those wishing to go into the considerable German and Slavic sources; adequate index. An interesting addition for most libraries." (Choice) 9:1052 O '72 130w

"This is a thoroughly satisfactory book, which meets a need. . . . The ordinary amateur slavophile knows remarkably little about the Sorbs. Even their name is a bit of a puzzle—who invented it? Mr Stone does not say. . . . [But he] has studied the Sorbs deeply, and has provided an excellent general account of them, which gives everything that the ordinary slavophile will want to know." TLS p512 My 5 '72 1450w

STONE, GREGORY P. Social psychology through symbolic interaction [by] Gregory P. Stone [and] Harvey A. Farberman. 783p $11.95 Ginn-Blaisdell

301.1 Social psychology
LC 79-83731

The editors "attempt to clarify symbolic interactionist principles and to display their application. To this end, sixty-nine articles and extracts are presented; these are divided into ten parts, each with an editorial preface on the universe of theoretical and empirical content which the articles sample." (Am J Soc)

"Symbolic interactionist principles receive their sharpest exposition and illustration in the sections on deviance, definition of the situation, and motivation. . . . The least adequate parts of the book include the section on interaction process. Major omissions here are the ethnomethodological, dramaturgical and game-theoretical perspectives and, most important—and this is a major failing of the book—the monumental work by Goffman on the properties, structure, and dynamics of face-to-face interaction. . . . Unfortunately, one of the weakest points in the book is the introduction, which sets for itself the goal of isolating the definitive characteristics of the symbolic interactionist framework. . . . Other sections of the book, namely, situations and social world, the self, socialization, and symbolic mediation of interaction, seems to be fairly adequate in respect to content and organization." Barry Schwartz

Am J Soc 77:153 J1 71 450w

"[The] selections are explicitly arranged so as to convey coherence and development within the theoretical framework. . . . This is an exciting and extraordinarily—readable book. I suspect its happiest utilization will be in the graduate seminar, providing topics for discussion and research." Sol Tannenbaum

Am Soc R 36:1135 D '71 1300w

STONE, P. A. Urban development in Britain: standards, costs and resources, 1964-2004; v. 1: Population trends and housing. (The nat. inst. of economic and social res. Economic and social studies, 26). 411p $10 Cambridge

309.2 City planning—Great Britain. Housing
SBN 521-06932-7 LC [70-100029]

"This volume, the first of two . . . [attempts] to clarify social issues and choices before British society with respect to buildings, roads, and other civic engineering works and the way these are related to one another in settlements. Part I deals with the projection of future population, first for Britain as a whole and then for twelve selected regions. . . . Part II estimates housing needs and costs, using 1961 Census data for England and Wales and 1964 field survey data. Part III uses the estimates to determine the need for dwellings, including cost and land requirements. Part IV focuses on the current projected output of the construction industry and analyzes the finances available for housing in terms of future supply and public demand. Part V outlines a variety of possible government housing programmes, focusing on alternative projected supply and demand levels based on population, demolitions, and upgrading, relating policy alternatives to particular levels of finance." (Am Soc R)

"The author is to be commended for his prodigious effort. Politicians and economists concerned with housing may find this an excellent resource. However, the volume does not offer much to social scientists concerned with the human impact of the built environment, the quality of urban life, or the redesign of the environment. [It] does not clarify the concept of urbanism . . . [and] fails to take into account any social or psychological variables with respect to housing. Stone does make statements about behavior, attitudes, and values, but either assumes an answer without supporting data or else considers such problems outside the purview of the study. . . . This demanding exercise in data collection and analysis within a very narrowly defined framework reveals the need for interdisciplinary research to guide public policy and action in the complex field of urban development." George Kupfer

Am Soc R 36:1155 D '71 500w

"[This study] has had during its six or seven years of life a considerable influence not only on other academics in the field but on public thinking. . . . Needs rather than demands, statistics rather than policies, are the meat of this study, and pretty chewy stuff it is. . . . The trouble is that what appears on [the book's] charts and tables as orderly curves and logical progressions are more likely to emerge in practice as a series of bumps, surges and setbacks. But at least government and industry will now have a reference point against which to measure progress and policies. Since it is all carved up beautifully into five year periods the author cannot really be accused of taking too long a view for practical purposes, assuming that his model can be adjusted in the light of experience."

Economist 235:56 My 2 '70 650w

STONE, PETER BENNET, jt. auth. The great ocean business. See Horsfield, B.

STONE, RONALD H. Reinhold Niebuhr: prophet to politicians. 272p $8 Abingdon

230 Niebuhr, Reinhold
ISBN 0-687-36272-5 LC 71-172813

This book is an "account of Niebuhr's . . . public career and of the ethical and pragmatic convictions that shaped it." (Library J)

"It is to Niebuhr's political relevance that [the author] . . . addresses himself. It is his expressed intention to focus on Niebuhr's political reflections despite his reservations . . . about the feasibility of isolating politics from other facets of man's thought. . . . This reviewer questions the organic unity of this book. . . . The research . . . has the merit of being complete and thorough. . . . It is a critical evaluation in that it points out the areas Niebuhr missed and his tone (polemical) so as to aid the reader of the original. In large it is an appreciative evaluation in that it deals with Niebuhr on his own terms and does not subject him to extensive analysis critical of his premises. It is a worthwhile study that failed to reach its full potential." S. J. Casey

Best Sell 31:510 F 15 '72 650w

Reviewed by G. N. Schuster

Commonweal 96:218 My 5 '72 450w

"This book is a scholarly but sympathetic [account]. . . . The author, who has read all of Niebuhr's books, his correspondence in the Library of Congress, and most of the secondary material about him, writes very clearly and has organized his findings so well that the book will appeal to the general reader as well as to the philosopher or theologian. Recommended for academic and all but the smallest public libraries." J. A. Clarke

Library J 96:3751 N 15 '71 170w

"Stone is a good interpreter. Niebuhr's intellectual history during the years 1915-71 is clearly told. . . . The lightly sketched biography presents the experiences on which Niebuhr was constantly reflecting. Stone draws, too, on the journalism, in which Niebuhr's concrete intelligence was often more alive than in his books. And the relationships between the shifting polar lodes in Niebuhr's intellectual life—those 'motifs' again—are clearly and convincingly laid out. . . . Stone, in my view, walks often on the light side; but he lets the dark Niebuhr speak." Michael Novak

STONE, R. H.—Continued

N Y Times Bk R p30 Mr 5 '72 550w

STONEHOUSE, BERNARD. Animals of the Arctic; the ecology of the Far North. 172p col il $10.95 Holt

574.998 Natural history—Arctic regions
ISBN 0-03-086699-5 LC 74-162304

The author "begins with an explanation of the Arctic and Subarctic as a geographical region and talks about the parts of the globe it includes—Greenland, Iceland, Northern Europe, Siberia, Alaska, Canada, and the Arctic Islands. He discusses the plant and animal life of the region, explains the geological history of the Arctic, mentions the prehistoric animals which once inhabited the area, and describes the entrance of man. The chapters on the Arctic seas, sea birds, and the tundra illustrate the very delicate ecology of the Arctic." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

Horn Bk 48:165 Ap '72 50w

"The author, an English biologist, has worked on polar and sub-polar ecology and spent four winters and many summers in the Arctic and Antarctica. . . . Not until the last chapter does [he] express anger over the destruction of the ecological balance by man. The text is supported by exceptionally lovely color photographs, charts and drawings. One possible hindrance to American students is the use of meters and centigrade; nevertheless, the book is a beautiful and useful source of information for YA's." Carol Coon
Library J 97:794 F 15 '72 180w [YA]

"Altogether this is a book for many readers, for its visual richness and for its thoughtful text. It is . . . 'designed and produced for the publisher by Eurobook Limited,' . . . Eurobook has done a first-class job, but it is no cavil to enter one complaint. The numerous painting and photographs each carry the surname of the artist responsible. . . . We are told nothing else, however, of the sources or circumstances of the illustrations. . . . For a volume that owes so much to its images, that presents so many arguments in visual form, this is not acceptable." Philip Morrison
Sci Am 226:123 Mr '72 700w

"Animals of the Arctic, with at least one good colour plate on every page, is as enticing in its way as any travel brochure and leaves no doubt that natural splendour is possible without vegetation, or at least with very little of it. . . . [The author] imparts a great deal of information in a readable form." TLS p45 Ja 14 '72 440w

STORM, HYEMEYOHSTS. Seven arrows. 371p il col pl $9.95 Harper

SBN 06-014134-4 LC 77-184216

"This book launches the 'American Indian Publishing Program,' a . . . series by and about native Americans from which all profits are going to 'support special projects designed to aid the Native American People.' . . . Storm, a Cheyenne shield maker who learned the Medicine Wheel and Sun Dance Way from tribal elders, relates the . . . oral history of his tribe. The allegorical stories . . . teach the meaning of tribal philosophy and religion; these are combined with new stories created by Storm, all within the framework of a . . . 'novel' about the Indian." (Library J)

"Fine photographs of Indians and animals are placed where they are pertinent to the narrative, but it is frustrating that none of the handsome individuals portrayed is identified—even by tribe. The elaborate color plates, which are presented as paintings of the sacred shields described by the author, are completely un-Indian and strike a bizarre note with their gilt, day-glow colors, and realistic naked maidens. Interesting as the book may be, students should be advised that the religion described is probably a valid personal interpretation but it differs at many points with descriptions of Cheyenne belief and ceremony recorded by [other observers]. . . . Could be recommended as a novel which presents an inside view, but probably not as an ethnography."

Choice 9:1213 N '72 300w

Reviewed by William Kittredge
Harper 245:120 N '72 550w

Reviewed by L. B. Oliva
Library J 97:2436 J1 '72 220w

Reviewed by Terri Ilirt
Library J 97:4097 D 15 '72 160w [YA]

"Religion is conceived of and presented by Storm as a continuing presence of powers and the ways that these powers identify with and involve the people. When we consider that most other religious statements are concerned with proving historical facts, . . . the startling statements of Seven Arrows take on a deep meaning. . . . Some people have remarked that [the] pictures [of shields] are hardly the rigid figures to be found on traditional paintings of religious themes by American Indians. It is this objection that indicates a misunderstanding of the book in a dreadful and total sense. Seven Arrows is not . . . an explanation of what the religion was or how it is practiced today. Seven Arrows is a religious statement, not a statement about religion." Vine Deloria

Natur Hist 81:96 N '72 2200w

Reviewed by S. K. Oberbeck
Newsweek 81:69 Ja 15 '73 130w

"Simple things and great ideas, the tonic chord of the Indian world. One of the basic ideas, the idea of cosmic duality, serves as takeoff point for what is likely to be one of the bigger selling Indian books of the coming year. . . . The book is a novel interlarded with 'Teaching Stories' as the author calls them. . . . The novel is set in the heart of the wild Old West, and the teaching stories stem from the author's reflections on the basic idea, the mirror-duality in every personality. There are some good things said around this notion, although there is no serious discussion here of Cheyenne thought. . . . For the rest, Seven Arrows is an attractive book, . . . [but it] is rather mishmashed by its confusing arrangement, the novel is wobbly, and the teaching stories and their interpretations much too lengthy and sermonic." William Brandon

Sat R 55:50 J1 1 '72 500w

STORR, ANTHONY. The dynamics of creation. 248p $7.95 Atheneum pubs.

153.3 Creation (Literary, artistic, etc.)
LC 72-190400

The author explores "a psychoanalytic approach to the process, the background, and the motivation of the creative act and the creative personality. Why does the artist choose his particular activity to express, celebrate, or sublimate his emotions? What is the connection between creativity and play—or madness?" (Publisher's note) Index.

"[This study is] comprehensive and interesting, without being prolix. . . . The author finds . . . Freud's interpretations of art and his comments about artists . . . wanting, for Freud did not have 'the feel of the thing' and many of his followers tried by Procrustean methods to fit obstinate facts onto the bed of analysis. Works of art were considered products of the sublimation of primitive sexual and possibly aggressive instinctual processes. In a carefully reasoned examination, Dr. Storr explodes these theses. . . . This book is an excellent presentation, carefully researched, informative and readable. It can be highly recommended." F. J. Braceland
America 127:244 S 30 '72 500w

Reviewed by J. A. Szuhay
Best Sell 32:384 N 15 '72 900w

"The book is full of wise and humane understanding. . . . There is a little psychoanalytic jargon, and psychiatrists will get more from the book than the general reader; but for the latter, too, it is rich and rewarding. The subject is huge and this book is a suitable tentative beginning."

Economist 244:60 S 9 '72 550w

Reviewed by S. L. Pomer
Library J 97:3996 D 15 '72 120w

"Storr is not . . . clinical enough in his new volume to satisfy professional psychoanalysts; he is certainly not literary enough to satisfy literary critics. . . . He thinks that just as play can be thought of as essentially an adaptive activity . . . so artistic activity is or at least can be a more positive physical and psychic activity than the Freudian notion of sublimation suggests. In short, Storr is trying to take creation out of the sick bay where he feels Freud put it. But so, frequently, did Freud."

New Repub 167:30 O 14 '72 $50w

"This [is a] very odd and strangely old-fashioned book. . . . [The author] appears to have acquired at least two surplus identities on his way from the elsewhere into the here. One of them seems to have been a figure in the advertising game, the other somebody's right-thinking old nanny with a taste for anecdotal biographies of people in the news. They are always at Dr Storr's elbow, grabbing his pen whenever the occasion arises and slipping in as many sentences as possible. . . . Trite and obvious behind its facade of scholarship, this is, in short, precisely the slack-jointed, flabbily thought-out sort of thing which gets the idea of interdisciplinary studies a bad name." Anthony West

New Statesman 84:400 S 22 '72 $50w

Reviewed by D. W. Harding

N Y Rev of Books 19:21 D 14 '72 $2500w

TLS p1091 S 22 '72 1200w

STOVER, LEON, jt. auth. Stonehenge. See Harrison, H.

STOW, JOHN. A survey of London; reprinted from the text of 1603; with introd. and notes by Charles Lethbridge Kingsford. 2v 352p;476p set $27.25 Oxford

942.1 London—History. London—Description
ISBN 0-19-821257-7 LC 75-26010

This reissue of Stow's "Survey" "incorporates the editor's Additional notes, separately published in a pamphlet in 1927. The introductory account of Stow's life and his Survey is followed by notes, documents, and a bibliography with an account of Stow's collections and manuscripts. The text of 1603 is followed by a collation with the first edition of 1598, showing all the variations of the two editions." (Choice) For the earlier edition see BRD 1909.

"Notes supply references to sources and modern works of authority where further information may be found. Maps, glossary, and indices. As a vivid picture of London based upon 60 years of observation, the work is recommended highly."

Choice 8:1240 N '71 220w

"When John Stow undertook his Survey in the later sixteenth century . . . [it] was a great achievement for a self-taught scholar who had spent his working life as a tailor. When Stow produced this remarkable book in 1598, he was a man in his mid-seventies. . . . This classic now makes a welcome reappearance."

TLS p666 Je 11 '71 450w

STRATHERN, ANDREW. Self-decoration in Mount Hagen [by] Andrew and Marilyn Strathern. 208p il col il Can$17.50 Univ. of Toronto press

391 Costume. New Guinea—Social life and customs
ISBN 0-8020-1790-8 LC 71-163824

"The people of the New Guinea Highlands . . . decorate themselves with bird of paradise plumes, animal furs, ochre paints, leaves and grasses. This book describes styles of decoration prevalent in the Mount Hagen area . . . and the occasions on which they are worn." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"One of a new series which is to be guided by several basic considerations. First, it will be concerned with art forms which are in danger of being lost or radically altered due to cultural change. Second [it] . . . attempts to understand the esthetic products in relation to their cultural context. Finally, [each] will concentrate on the specific art forms of specific cultures, giving us books more limited but more intensive than the usually very general book on 'primitive art.' The Stratherns' book fits these prescriptions admirably. . . . The authors concern themselves with both description and meaning. The result should be of interest to both artists and social scientists."

Choice 8:1654 F '72 130w

Reviewed by E. H. Gombrich

N Y Rev of Books 18:35 My 4 '72 1150w

"The Hagens use colours and other decorations not to submerge the personality but rather to enhance it. This is not representational art, like a mask. The aim of decoration is not 'impersonation of some other identity, but the aggrandizement of [the wearer's] own'. . . . The work done by the authors is particularly important because of the ephemeral nature of the art. . . . [This volume is] scholarly, highly informative and beautifully produced. There is, however, one criticism to make. . . . It would be easier to appreciate the body designs if we were given some impression of what a Hagen pig feast is really like. Such descriptive writing is always eschewed by anthropologists, presumably as unscientific, but unless anthropologists are prepared occasionally to adopt such an approach they will continue to write for a closed professional circle."

TLS p620 Je 2 '72 430w

STRATHERN, MARILYN, jt. auth. Self-decoration in Mount Hagen. See Strathern, A.

STRATMAN, CARL J., ed. Restoration and eighteenth century theatre research; a bibliographical guide, 1900-1968; ed. by Carl J. Stratman, David G. Spencer, and Mary Elizabeth Devine. 811p $25 Southern Ill. Univ. press

016.822 English drama—History and criticism—Bibliography. Theater—England—Bibliography
ISBN 0-8093-0469-4 LC 71-112394

This work "is made up of some 6,560 entries. The bibliography is divided into subject headings, arranged alphabetically, the categories of more than 400 being devoted to specific actors, actresses, architects, composers, musicians, playwrights, scene designers and painters, stage managers, and others involved with theatrical activity. The remaining categories include such topics as . . . ballet, burlesque . . . foreign influence. . . . pantomime. . . . toy theatres, and type characters. Among these latter categories are also sections devoted to dramatic activities in . . . cities in England, Scotland, and Ireland." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Items are arranged by date; 81.6 percent are annotated. Although based on the annual bibliography beginning in 1962 in Restoration and 18th century theatre research, of which Stratman is editor, other entries have been added and the time range extended; this bibliography is a great time saver, but it does not exhaust entries in, for example, PMLA and the MHRA bibliographies. It must be used with care: there are no cross references, and a surprising variety of subjects appear under 'miscellaneous'. . . . The type is clear and easy to read, the layout is pleasing, but the printing of the 18-page index with three columns per page calls for a magnifying glass. Recommended for university libraries; at the cost, college libraries should consider whether other available bibliographies and college curriculum justify the expense."

Choice 9:628 JI/Ag '72 220w

"Some subdivisions are unnecessarily confusing. To locate material on theater architecture, one must consult 'Architecture,' 'Theatre Buildings,' 'Theatre Construction,' and specific locations such as 'Richmond.' To learn about directing, one must think instead to consult 'Staging'. . . . The most troublesome problem is inconsistency. Occasionally, works are placed in incorrect subdivisions: The Beggar's Opera (edited by Benjamin W. Griffith Jr.) is listed under 'biography and criticism' rather than 'individual plays'. . . . This guide is not sufficiently reliable or well arranged." E. G. Schreiber

Library J 97:670 F 15 '72 200w

STRATTON, ARTHUR. Sinan. 299p il $12.95 Scribner

B or 92 Sinan. Architecture. Turkish
SBN 684-12582-X LC 70-162777

A biography of the 16th-century Ottoman architect who was originally a Greek slave. "First a Janissary and then commanding officer of the Sultan's bodyguard, he was made Royal Chief architect by Sultan Süleyman the Magnificent. In fifty years, until his death at ninety-nine, Sinan built more buildings than any other architect who has ever lived. All the best still stand, among them the Imperial Friday Mosques [in Constantinople]." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Stratton's criticism does not get to the fundamentals and his photographs show gray but no black, yet if you want to know what life and politics were probably like in the Seraglio and don't mind having it repeatedly pointed out to you that domes and minarets have rough counterparts in human anatomy, this is your book." David Park

STRATTON, ARTHUR—Continued

Book World p4 Ja 30 '72 600w

"Most of the narrative is based on uncritical assumption, conjecture, and probability interspersed with outdated historical interpretations and artificial translations from the Turkish. Finally, the style is a bit pretentious and distracting. Is there any reason to buy this book, then? Yes, since there are certain insights to be gained from its reading, the 46 photographs are nice, and it is, for the time being, the only biography of Sinan available in English."

Choice 9:501 Je '72 190w

"Although a biography of Sinan, [this] fascinating volume is as much the story of Suleiman, of Turkish history and customs, and of that breath-taking city astride the Golden Horn and the Bosphorus. For either an actual or would-be visitor to Istanbul, this book will make invaluable and pleasurable reading." J. G. Harrison

Christian Science Monitor p11 F 10 '72 650w

Reviewed by David Gebhard

Library J 97:1006 Mr 15 '72 260w

"A long, slow-moving lovingly detailed biography. . . . There really isn't enough factual material available for a proper biography; as a result the author deals in romance and historical gossip. The best parts of his book are his own close observations of the buildings."

N Y Times Bk R p25 F 20 '72 80w

STRAUSS, ANSELM L. The contexts of social mobility; ideology and theory. 263p $8.50 Aldine pub.

301.44 Social change. Social classes
ISBN 0-202-30067-6 LC 78-123588

The author's "portrayal of some of the historical influences upon social mobility in American society brings together . . . material on the significance of the frontier, of rural America, of urbanization, and of immigration and ethnic diversity. . . . [Strauss considers] industrialization as yet another background influence." (Ann Am Acad)

"Strauss argues that much sociological writing on mobility up to the present time has been 'unduly restricted and simplistic'; the emphasis upon studies of individual mobility, and upon the statistical representation of rates of movement, has led to a neglect of the psychological and historical background, and the institutional context, of mobility. The criticism is well made. . . . [However] the book does not really make a theoretical contribution. . . . The analysis is confined to the historical experiences of a single society. What is most valuable . . . [is] the vivid description of popular attitudes and responses to the changing conditions of American society, and the indication this gives of an array of new questions to be explored concerning diverse forms of mobility and their connection with the development of a whole social structure." T. B. Bottomore

Ann Am Acad 378:207 N '71 550w

"Strauss has a place in American sociology as an advocate of 'grounded theory.' If this is his best example, grounded theory will lose advocates whatever it merits as a scientific methodology. The concept of 'images' is central to Strauss' analysis of how people view their social mobility; in application it becomes little more than a classifying rubric for observations and unsystematic quotes. Strauss could have broken new ground; instead he presents a few ideas and a lot of trivia. The subject is important, the book is not. Systematic studies on mobility are ignored. . . . There is not a single table in a research field which is rich in research. Name and subject index."

Choice 8:921 S '71 130w

STRAUSS, CAROLYN NORTH. Earth below, heaven above; a portrait of India. 180p il $6.95 Scribner

915.4 India—Social life and customs. India—Description and travel
ISBN 684-12770-9 LC 71-37220

An account of life in India as seen by the author, a young American volunteer nurse. Her "focuses are three: the agonizing illness and eventual death of a servant's son, Rudra; the pregnancy of Rudra's wife and the birth of her son; and a night-long ceremony of raga music offered as a prayer to Shiva." (Library J)

"This is an unusual and much out-of-the-ordinary book, totally engrossing even for one who is not by nature or interest an armchair traveler. It is written by an American woman, but written as though she were Indian, written from the inside out, not as a viewer. It is in no way a travelogue and yet gives enormous uncommon insights into the ways and thinking of the people of India. It is so highly descriptive as to be written at times in almost purple prose and yet there is rarely a false note sounded. . . . I feel that I have watched rather than read this book. . . . The third section is a tour de force in my opinion. . . . This is not only visual but also auditory writing—and more."

E. C. Howley

Best Sell 32:274 S 15 '72 350w

"[In these] finely wrought evocations of life in India . . . [the author's] emotional identification with the Indian milieu is intense. . . . The description of the [raga] ceremony is a triumphant re-creation of an overwhelming musical event. These chapters, fervid but not sirupy or condescending, draw the reader into the felt life of humanity in north India." B. W. Fuson

Library J 97:2182 Je 15 '72 100w

STRAWSON, JOHN. The battle for the Ardennes. 212p il maps $8.95 Scribner

940.54 Ardennes, Battle of the, 1944-1945
ISBN 684-12945-0 LC 72-644

The author "analyzes the strategic context of the battle [for the Ardennes], the errors of the opposing high commands, and the subsequent controversies surrounding the encounter." (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

"The 'Battle of the Bulge' or the misnamed Rundstedt Offensive has been so well worked over by military analysts and historians as well as by novelists and film-makers that another book on the subject might seem superfluous. Yet Major-General Strawson's account of the battle certainly is not. By viewing this final attempt by Hitler to reverse the inevitable outcome of the war in its historical context and examining in language and terms the layman can understand the moves and the blunders of the generals on both sides General Strawson has produced a book that will fascinate anyone interested in military strategy."

Economist 244:55 Ag 26 '72 400w

"Writing with the same lucidity demonstrated in his earlier The Battle for North Africa [BRD 1970], the author vividly captures the essence of what a battle looks like to those at both high command level and at platoon level. . . . Especially interesting is Strawson's scrutiny and criticism of the generalship of the opposing commanders. . . . [He] implies that the Americans were not as flexible as the British and looked upon tactical withdrawal as strategic defeat. This informative and interesting narrative is admirably supported by excellent maps. In breadth as well as depth of treatment, this is a superlative piece of military history." A. S. Birkos

Library J 97:3156 O 1 '72 200w

STRAWSON, JOHN. Hitler's battles for Europe. 256p $10 Scribner

940.54 World War, 1939-1945—Campaigns and battles. Hitler, Adolf. Germany—History, Military
ISBN 684-12379-7 LC 70-143944

This book is "an analysis of strategic direction given to the war by Hitler. . . . [The author devotes] one-third of the book to a discussion of diplomatic events preceding the outbreak of war. . . . [He also considers] the personality of Hitler as commander and the motives and consequences of the German war campaign." (Choice)

"The illustrations and maps plus Mr. Strawson's clear and concise writing present an excellent picture to the average reader of Hitler's enormous influence in the daily conduct of the war itself." B. D. Williams

Best Sell 31:328 O 15 '71 390w

"The battles and campaigns supply little more than a thread upon which to discuss the German war effort. . . . The reader will find little new about Hitler's direction of the war. . . . Strawson pays only small attention to the Allied side of the war and adheres to well established British points of view. The book is derived from well known published sources using appropriate quotations, but without identifying them. . . . Recommended for large and small libraries. . . .

Choice 8:1504 Ja '72 190w

STRAYER, JOSEPH R. The Albigensian crusades. (Crosscurrents in world hist) 201p $7.95 Dial press 944 Albigeneses
LC 70-150404

For descriptive note, review excerpts and other review citations see BRD 1971.

Reviewed by J. B. Russell
Am Hist R 77:1433 D '72 400w
Choice 8:1504 Ja '72 170w

Reviewed by David Knowles
N Y Times Bk R p40 F 13 '72 450w

STRAYER, JOSEPH R. Medieval statecraft and the perspectives of history; essays by Joseph R. Strayer; with a foreword by Gaines Post. 425p $13.75 Princeton univ. press
909.07 Middle Ages—History. Strayer, Joseph Reese
ISBN 0-691-04602-6 LC 74-112995

This is a collection of published studies and essays by Joseph R. Strayer now presented to him as a Festschrift. They are concerned with "the problems of the history of Normandy, France, England, feudalism, kingship . . . the rise of states . . . the crusades (which in the thirteenth century were related to the development of France under the kings), and . . . the philosophy and teaching of history." (Foreword) Bibliography of J. R. Strayer's works. Index.

"Strayer has a nice variety of strategies and tactics for getting at the heart of a subject. He is especially good at using the comparative method of study and, for materials on feudalism, he sometimes reaches as far as Japan. Above all he shows balance, good sense, and independence of judgment when dealing with a controversial subject. . . . The editors wisely included some essays reflecting Strayer's belief in the value of historical studies as a way of extending ordinary experience. . . . [This] is a delightful book to read." A. R. Hogue

Ann Am Acad 399:206 Ja '72 750w

"A collection of well written essays by one of the leading institutional historians of the Middle Ages; all but one of which have been previously published. It will be especially useful for undergraduate libraries which do not have extensive periodical holdings. . . . As in most books of collected essays the theme is not entirely clear. Teachers, however, will find it valuable for assigning selected readings. . . . The advanced student will find the footnotes in some of the chapters particularly helpful for bibliographic information on medieval France. The essay, 'Introduction to the Interpretation of History,' should be required reading for all liberal arts student. . . . Recommended."

Choice 8:1077 O '71 140w

"It is, indeed, wrong to regard Joseph Strayer's book as a unified whole . . . however, it has sufficient consistency of thought to be treated as a real contribution to understanding of the way the medieval polity operated. . . . Strayer is at his best when dealing with a fairly broad topic, such as the constitutional development of late thirteenth-century France, where there is a great deal of evidence to be sifted, but a clear general theme does emerge. . . . It is refreshing, and salutary, to read the work of a medievalist who is no bad scholar and yet dares to speculate beyond the strict confines of his period and area."

TLS p636 Je 2 '72 240w

STREATFEILD, NOEL. Beyond the vicarage. 214p $4.95 Watts, F.
B or 92
ISBN 531-02018-5 LC 77-169824

This is the last volume of the author's autobiography. Written in the third person, the book describes "her life in England during the Second World War. The author had a career as an actress on tour, and then success as a writer." (Sat R) For the first volume, A Vicarage Family, see BRD 1964.

"[This volume] deals with surface details of a life that should be exciting and stimulating. The book is neither. Too many words are used to record incidental information . . . of interest only to neighborhood gossips, not the general public and certainly not to teenage readers. . . . Characterization of others is well done; description of her own career as a successful author is painfully self-conscious." L. E. Savage

Best Sell 32:151 Je 15 '72 100w

Horn Bk 48:483 O '72 60w

"[This] is a detailed, humorous, and thoughtful record. . . . The blitz in London was particularly dangerous and dramatic. Noel Streatfeild is a storyteller par excellence, as the many readers devoted to her stories already know. This book is exciting and sad and funny and touching. Ages 13 and up." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 55:83 My 20 '72 70w [YA]

"[This volume] starts with Victoria—Miss Streatfeild's pseudonym for herself—as a successful actress touring in Australia. Her beloved father, now a bishop, dies; and she returns to England and her mother. There is a brilliantly sharp picture of Mother as a widow. . . . [The author] is remarkably clear-sighted about her own shortcomings. . . . She knows too that she does not write particularly well, in the academic sense. . . . She is realistic, too, about her strong points, such as, in the literary sphere, her ear for dialogue. . . . There are countless examples of this authentic gift in [this book]."

TLS p1252 O 15 '71 1100w

STREET, PHILLIP. Animal weapons; with line drawings by Megan Di Girolamo. 176p $7.95 Taplinger

591.1 Animals—Habits and behavior
ISBN 0-8008-0265-9 LC 74-153075

This book surveys the "variety of both offensive and defensive weaponry adopted by species from all the principal branches of the animal kingdom in order to assure their continuation." (Publisher's note) Index.

"Taxonomically technical, morphological, and physiological explanations are in adequately nontechnical language. Behavioral comments tend to be anthropomorphic. . . . Inadequate for the professional biologist, this book will appeal to the reader, general or student, who enjoys possession of bits of unusual information."

Choice 9:529 Je '72 110w

"[This book] is a wide-ranging and up-to-date though superficial review intended for a general audience. Its appeal may be somewhat limited by the author's pedestrian style. For larger public libraries." J. F. Husband
Library J 96:2783 S 15 '71 110w

"The title is perhaps misleading, for in addition to stings, claws, teeth, hoofs, horns, poisons and electricity, Mr Street discusses protection by burrowing, camouflage, mimicry, and calcareous, chitinous or other armour. Complex structures and processes are described clearly and accurately. The stock zoological curiosities are here, but also a host of lesser known animals such as the apparently unique blood-sucking moth of Malaya. It is a pity that the book has no plates . . . and that the line drawings are sparse and rather crude and illustrate so few of the ingenious weapons described. There are no references, which is tantalizing for those who might want to probe more deeply."

TLS p1611 D 24 '71 160w

STREETEN, PAUL, ed. Commonwealth policy in a global context; ed. by Paul Streeten and Hugh Corbet. 232p $11.50 Univ. of Toronto press

382 Commonwealth of Nations—Economic policy
ISBN 0-8020-1793-2 LC 75-163825

"This book consists of a collection of essays, originally prepared for a seminar at Marlborough House in May 1969 . . . [and] since revised. . . . The contributors explore the various ways of enhancing internal Commonwealth relations from the point of view of international co-operation, in the fields of trade, capital, manpower resources and administration—in particular such . . . topics as the effect upon the Commonwealth of Britain's application to join the Common Market, the role of sterling as a world currency and the effect of Soviet seapower on Britain's decision to sell

STREETEN, PAUL—Continued
 arms to South Africa." (Publisher's note) Index.

"The strength of the book lies in nine papers on Commonwealth trade and commercial problems. Whilst these illustrate the dependence of the Commonwealth on world economic trends they nevertheless suggest that Britain is unwisely neglecting Commonwealth trade. . . . The authors are recognized authorities and their views have usually been stated in greater detail elsewhere. However, . . . the book draws these views together in survey form. Well indexed; the papers are usually documented. Of limited value to specialists the book has value as a survey for international economics, the British Commonwealth, and British foreign policy."

Choice 8:1497 Ja '72 160w

"The value of this collection . . . is that it examines the reality of the modern Commonwealth under various headings, ranging from Britain, Russian sea-power and Commonwealth connexions, to the effects of closer British links with Europe on trade with the Third World. . . . Lionel Gelber comments that Britain . . . [needs] a network of overseas connexions, and remarks that these are incompatible . . . with membership in the Common Market because what the latter demands . . . is economic and political unification. . . . Michael Lipton shows in the final chapter . . . [that] the approach to negotiation with Europe by the British Government has been irrational, in that it has involved throwing away, unnecessarily, real advantages. . . . At the very least, the [authors] show that embracing Europe need not—but all too often does—imply giving the Commonwealth a kiss of death."

TLS p1622 D 31 '71 470w

STREIB, GORDON F. Retirement in American society; impact and process, by Gordon F. Streib and Clement J. Schneider. 316p $10.50 Cornell Univ. press

301.43 Retirement. Aged—U.S.
 ISBN 0-8014-0669-2 LC 71-162539

"The Cornell Study of Occupational Retirement covers a period of seven years (1952-1959). . . . The authors' focus is on the consequences of role stability and change over time. They investigate three main areas: health, economic situation, and social psychological dimensions. A great many commonly accepted notions regarding retirement are shown to be without substance, and some reasons why retired persons return to work are investigated. The report concludes that 'retirement does not have the broad negative consequences for the older person that we had expected.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Name index. Subject index.

Reviewed by Otto Pollak

Ann Am Acad 402:192 Jl '72 440w

"The study selected approximately 2,000 participants who were employed males and females between the ages of 60-64 and followed them into retirement. Periodic questionnaires and contacts were used to obtain their attitudes toward approaching and occupying the retirement category. The results are significant in that they challenge some of the previous concepts of role loss and disengagement. It is quite plausible that too much significance has been placed on these two concepts. In fact, they may have been more conceptual than theoretical as the results of this study suggest. . . . A must for classes in gerontology."

Choice 9:142 Mr '72 170w

"This work is a pioneering factual study of retirement from the perspectives of sociology and social psychology. . . . This summary presentation is addressed primarily to the solution of policy and programmatic problems rather than to the problems of the individual retired person. . . . An important scholarly study that should be of interest to academic libraries." William Gihelman

Library J 96:3152 O 1 '71 180w

STREIKER, LOWELL D. Religion and the new majority: Billy Graham, Middle America, and the politics of the 70s; [by] Lowell D. Streiker and Gerald S. Strober. 202p $5.95 Assn. press

277 Graham, William Franklin, U.S.—Religion. Fundamentalism. U.S.—Politics and government.—1961—
 ISBN 0-8096-1844-3 LC 79-189009

The authors "argue that a new political majority is developing on the American scene.

This majority is symbolized by the personal friendship of President Nixon and evangelist Billy Graham, and emerges from a coalescing of a revived fundamentalism and American 'civil religion.' The authors suggest that this new force, especially if tempered by the social responsiveness of liberal Protestantism, might well provide the basis for a revitalized faith in [America's] national heritage." (Library J) Index.

"[Streiker and Strober] obviously want their subject, Billy Graham, to look good. But it is difficult to tell what else they are trying to do. The point of the book is almost impossible to discover. They construct an elaborate thesis that suggests that Billy Graham is the standard bearer for middle Americans who were disturbed by the social problems of the 1960s. They further suggest that Graham's thoughts on social problems in general and racial and political issues in particular merit attention. Both of these assertions may be true, but the authors manage to obscure their point by trying to weave a complicated connection between these assertions and the 1972 elections. . . . [Their] book reminds one of a rather unsophisticated sermon, and Graham's views are used as a vehicle which brings the authors' own ideas on the proper role for religion in American life to the reader. . . . Students of American politics deserve better." P. J. Han-non

Ann Am Acad 404:281 N '72 240w

"The thesis of this work . . . that there exists in America a new political majority which is conservative in its theological beliefs as well as its political attitudes . . . can be argued . . . but the implication that America has acquired a symbolic 'high' prophetic priest is even more debatable." F. V. Mills

Christian Century 89:876 S 6 '72 450w

"Streiker, an assistant professor in the religion department of Temple University, and Strober, a consultant in interreligious affairs with the American Jewish Committee . . . point to a neglected but important phenomenon and provide much valuable material, but it appears to me, from a vantage point very much in the midst of what they are talking about, that the consensus they describe is actually falling apart after peaking during the last decade or two."

D. W. Dayton

Library J 97:2413 Jl '72 140w

"[This book] focuses on Billy Graham and Protestant fundamentalism to sketch out the Nixonian religious potentials. . . . [The authors] overlook the huge part of Middle America (Catholic white ethnic, and the like) never really touched by Protestant fundamentalism. They have set out to be soft on Graham-Nixon. Or, at least, hard on the detractors of what they see Middle American religion to be." M. E. Marty

N Y Times Bk R p7 Ag 6 '72 350w

STRINGFELLOW, WILLIAM. Suspect tenderness; the ethics of the Berrigan witness, by William Stringfellow and Anthony Towne; with a pref. by Daniel Berrigan. 177p $5.95 Holt

241 Christian ethics. Conscience. Berrigan, Daniel, Trials

ISBN 0-03-086581-6 LC 74-155534

This is "a collection of personal writings and legal documents containing a poem and a preface by Daniel Berrigan; . . . [an] account of the events leading up to his capture written by Stringfellow and Towne, who were sheltering him at the time; a series of the authors' theological musings on the significance of the 'Berrigan witness'; the documents related to their own (successful) court fight against the charge of harboring a criminal; and their letter of support to the Berrigan brothers." (Library J)

Reviewed by W. F. Gavin

Best Sell 31:454 Ja 15 '72 200w

"A growing band of persons sees a prophetic significance in the witness of Daniel and Philip Berrigan, both of whom are serving prison sentences for their antiwar activities. To those who have followed the evolution of their thought and their present grapplings with the government, this work will prove of special interest. [The book] combines the arts of the poet and the theologian in a fascinating analysis of the significance of the witness of the Berrigans. The book also bears witness to the resilience of the nonviolent community of resistance—the community of risk among which William Stringfellow and Anthony Towne deservedly take their place." R. S. Kennedy

Christian Century 89:205 F 16 '72 420w

"[The title] leads one to expect a book which will either suspect tenderness or discuss in a rigorous way ethical questions of destructive, nonviolent (to persons) resistance and the Berrigans. Unfortunately the book is about the Stringfellow and Towne experience.

A better title for the volume would be The Block Island Two. The book deserves to be read by those interested in the Stringfellow-Towne case, but it is not a significant contribution to the study of the Berrigan ordeal." R. H. Stone
Commonweal 96:149 Ap 14 '72 650w

"[This is] a motley collection of material as varied in style as it is in content. The Alice-in-Wonderland convolutions of legal language and maneuvering highlight the near impossibility of moral witness in the courtroom. The authors' refined, ironic, Anglican reserve allows their readers (and perhaps themselves) a comfortable, 'liberal' distance from the disturbing topics of Jesus as criminal, or religion as a threat to the state, of the Church as a community of resistance. In contrast is the open power of Berrigan's preface, the richness of his biblical vision and the passion of his rock-edged Christian optimism. An interesting, though not essential, addition to the growing body of literature by and about the Berrigans." Jim Langlois
Library J 97:694 F 15 '72 190w

STROBER, GERALD S., jt. auth. Religion and the new majority. See Streiker, L. D.

STRONG, ANN LOUISE. Planned urban environments; Sweden, Finland, Israel, the Netherlands, France. 406p il maps $20 Johns Hopkins press

309.2 City planning. Cities and towns
ISBN 0-8018-1245-3 LC 73-134204

This is a "study of European planning methods and [of] planning accomplishments particularly those of Sweden, Finland, Israel, the Netherlands, and France. [The author offers an] overview of administrative, legal, economic, and planning techniques which some of the most advanced European countries employ to cope with the problems of rapid population growth, urbanization, land development, and resource management." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"[This book] does have much hitherto unavailable and welcome material on, in particular, France, Israel and the Netherlands. . . . A book of this rare quality—from the point of view of underlying research, intelligent presentation, and meaningful subject matter—is clearly headed for a leading position among the growing literature on new towns."

Choice 8:1487 Ja '72 160w

"[The book] is well written and illustrated, and should prove of interest and of value to professionals and laymen concerned with environmental problems, and especially with new cities as a possible solution." E. B. Murphy
Library J 97:189 Ja 15 '72 120w

"Strong's view is that only by a major commitment to national environmental planning can our urban crisis be resolved, and her objective in this book is to describe the trials and lessons learned in physical and resource planning abroad, so that we may benefit from the experience and sophistication of others. . . . Though like a legal brief in its close wording and fine print, [the book] is nonetheless highly readable, weaving narrative with commentary through separate sections on each of the five countries. . . . Unfortunately, despite all the detail, the encyclopedic scope, and the meticulous drafting, the author's objective is not reached. There is little analysis of the data and information that relates the European experience to our problems." Mahlon Appar IV
Science 176:649 My 12 '72 800w

STRONG, SIR KENNETH. Men of intelligence; a study of the roles and decisions of chiefs of intelligence from the World War I to the present day. 183p pl $6.95 St Martins

355.3 Secret service
LC 78-183881

The author "surveys the professional careers of a dozen German, French, British, and American intelligence chiefs in the period 1914-1965. Strong knew many of these men personally. He . . . defines intelligence as the 'co-ordination of raw, uncolated and unevaluated information,' as well as 'the structure responsible for producing this end-product.'" (Library J) Bibliography. Index.

Reviewed by J. G. VanDeusen

Ann Am Acad 404:258 N '72 400w

"In Intelligence at the Top [BRD 1969], Strong, who until 1966 was Britain's director-general of intelligence, dealt mainly with his personal experiences. [Here] he . . . is not concerned with the cloak-and-dagger agent, but rather with the political and military implications of intelligence. . . . A thoughtful analysis likely to interest the military strategist rather than the James Bond fan." Norman Horrocks
Library J 97:2394 Jl '72 170w

"This book reflects Strong's character and modus operandi: much common sense, a constant preoccupation with the proper functioning of the intelligence machine, insistence on as objective and cool assessment of the available information as is humanly possible. . . . [He] defines with clarity what intelligence is and is not. . . . He allocates one short chapter to spies. . . . [The book] ends with all kinds of constructive and stimulating suggestions. . . . The style is readable throughout, generally matter-of-fact but with sparkles of a nice dry wit." Geoffrey McDermott
New Statesman 81:54 Ja 8 '71 1000w

N Y Times Bk R p20 Jl 30 '72 110w

"In this sequel [to his earlier book, the author] ranges more widely over the field in which he was so long a master. . . . Between the wars both the French and German military intelligence services were excellent in General Strong's opinion, and he was well acquainted with both. . . . The chapter on espionage is outstandingly sensible. . . . [and] the final [one], on how intelligence works, is suitably discreet. . . . A point on which [the author] lays justifiable emphasis is the value to an intelligence service of 'long professional memories'. General Strong provides in himself an outstanding example."

TLS p7 Ja 1 '71 700w

STRONG, ROY C. The English icon; Elizabethan & Jacobean portraiture. (Stud. in British art) 404p il $30 Yale univ. press

757 Portrait painting. Great Britain—Biography—Portraits
LC [71-85489]

The author, "director of London's National Portrait Gallery . . . [covers] the story of the artists between Holbein and Van Dyck and offers a catalog of their works. The outstanding names include Scrots, Eworth, Hilliard, Gower, and Robert Peake." (Library J) Bibliography. First published in England in 1969.

"Beauty is always there to be enjoyed, but we are too gummy-eyed to see it; it takes a theatrical shock to awaken us. This book provides one. With the professional skill of which he is a virtuoso, . . . [the author] has pulled the coverlets off a branch of painting which has lain for years wrapped in unattentive familiarity. What he reveals is seductive, a rare addition to art's cabinet of curious beauties. . . . [This is] a specialist study . . . [in a] well-produced volume [which] combines edification with a reasonable sprinkling of seduction. The spell of neglect which has lain over a whole era has been broken by a scholarly embrace which is both well-timed well-aimed and warm."

Nigel Gosling

Book World p9 D 27 '70 1000w

Choice 8:824 S '71 160w

Economist 233:51 D 20 '69 110w

"Strong . . . a most knowledgeable expert of the period unfolds [his story] in a richly and excellently illustrated and well documented scholarly work" J. L. Dewton
Library J 95:4246 D 15 '70 170w

Reviewed by Robert Melville

New Statesman 78:905 D 19 '69 1050w

TLS p1440 D 18 '69 450w

STROUP, HERBERT. Like a great river; an introduction to Hinduism. 200p $5.95 Harper

294.5 Hinduism
SBN 06-067757-0 LC 72-78049

"The author begins by exploring the geography of religion in general, noting those characteristics shared among all of the world's religions. He then distills the qualities unique to Hinduism, examining the nature of its gods and goddesses, its philosophical developments, the festivals and rituals, and the concepts of person, family, and society." (Publisher's note) Glossary. Annotated bibliography. Index.

STROUP, HERBERT—Continued

"An elementary work that makes accessible to the general reader the complex world of Hindu mythology, philosophy, history, ritual, and social structure."

Christian Century 89:853 Ag 30 '72 30w

"With his title aptly suggesting the broad cultural flow of Hinduism, the author, a sociologist, aims to give the beginning reader in the subject a glimpse of the depth and breadth of the Hindu way. The format follows the section on Hinduism in Stroup's Four Religions of Asia [BRD 1969], but with great detail and with new topics. This results in an 'objective,' i.e., uncritical, interpretation, covering not only historical, philosophical, and popular religious aspects, but social and personal ones as well. . . . Stroup's analysis, in bringing into focus many of the distinctions of Hindu values, will give the reader not only a better idea of Indian culture, but of his own as well." G. W. Manning

Library J 97:2622 Ag '72 230w

STRUGGLE for justice; a report on crime and punishment in America prepared for the American Friends service committee. 179p $4.50; pa $1.95 Hill & Wang

365.973 Prisons—U.S. Crime and criminals—Rehabilitation. Justice, Administration of ISBN 0-8090-8927-0; 0-8090-1363-0 (pa)
LC 76-170942

This study of prison reform attempts "to show that the 'individualized treatment model' was initially [and] is now . . . a means of maintaining maximum control over the convict population while assuaging the public conscience with the promise of 'imprisonment-for-rehabilitation' as opposed to 'imprisonment-for-punishment.' . . . [It advocates] the reverse of the 'individualized treatment model' and a return to an earlier concept: Let the punishment fit the crime." (N Y Rev of Books) Bibliography.

"[The book] confines itself to the treatment-punishment dichotomy with a dualistic fervor that sometimes keeps it from showing many other important pretexts that we use to justify destroying human beings. For instance, I do not think that police brutality occurs or is countenanced because it is an attempt to cure or punish a young black whose head is being smashed in as he sits in his own living room. Treatment-twaddling is not the only reason we give for our injustices. The book often seems to make it so. . . . [This work] is a monumental contribution to our understanding of the horrors of our criminal justice system. Whatever 'justice' in general may be (and the book, thank God, does not try to define the word), victims of deliberate wrongdoing must be seen and listened to, or we shall destroy one another in the act of destroying our own integrities. This passionate, radically innovative book contributes immensely to our awareness of the fire." P. P. Hallie

Am Scholar 41:674 autumn '72 1750w

"[This is] a very important study on prison reform. . . . The American Friends Service Committee studied causes and effects in some detail and then made some very pointed suggestions. They insist that prisoners be given truly humane treatment, and they ask that their civil rights be protected. They also reveal the extent to which police power is used to contain the minorities, the poor and those who want to change the status quo. It's a frightening picture! . . . This is a powerful volume that deserves to be in every public and academic library." Father Charles Dollen

Best Sell 31:409 D 15 '71 190w

"After more than a century of persistent failure," say the authors . . . 'the reformist prescription is bankrupt.' . . . In this short book the authors (of whom several are convicts) have cut through all the benevolent-sounding verbiage [of reformist prescription] . . . [and] say if there were a choice between prisons as they are now and no prisons at all, they would choose the latter, but they do not believe this is a realistic option in the US. . . . [They] approach their suggestions for change in somewhat gingerly fashion. They offer them not as a blueprint but as 'crudely spelled out principles . . . ways of reducing somewhat the impact of prejudice and discrimination,' for 'the construction of a just system of criminal justice in an unjust society is a contradiction in terms.'" Jessica Mitford

N Y Rev of Books 18:29 Mr 9 '72 2300w

STRUGHOLD, HUBERTUS. Your body clock; foreword by Charles H. Roadman. 94p $5.95 Scribner

612 Biology—Periodicity
SBN 684-12557-9 LC 70-162753

Strughold has been "concerned with the effects of intercontinental jet travel and space flight on the human body; here he examines how rapid travel throws the biological clock out of balance and subsequently affects the body's functioning." (Library J) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"[This monograph] . . . describes the physiology, chemistry, and biology of the clock mechanism, the circadian rhythm, time-zone effects, sleep requirements, the strain and fatigue and their remedies. Strughold is an eminent authority—the 'father of space medicine.' Apart from earth-bound travel, he discusses the effects on the body of trips into space, to the Moon, and to Mars. Easy, very informative reading for anybody who might go from anywhere to any other place far away." Choice 9:78 Mr '72 180w

"The so-called biological clock, the timing mechanism in the human body which controls sleep and wakefulness, has generated intense activity among biologists and is of considerable interest to laymen as well. . . . [This book] presents in nontechnical language the pertinent considerations of human circadian rhythms." J. H. Zar

Library J 97:1818 My 15 '72 130w

STRUİK, DIRK J., ed. Birth of the Communist manifesto. See Marx, K.

STRUNK, WILLIAM. The elements of style, by William Strunk, Jr.; with revisions, an intro, and a chapter on writing by E. B. White. 2d ed 78p $3.50; pa $1.25 Macmillan (N Y)

808 Rhetoric
LC 75-188776

To Strunk's four chapters entitled: Elementary rules of usage; Elementary principles of composition; A few matters of form; and Words and expressions commonly misused, co-author White added a fifth called An approach to style, 'setting forth my own prejudices, my notions of error, my articles of faith. . . . For this new second edition, Chapter IV has been enriched with words and expressions of a recent vintage [and] fresh examples have been added to some of the rules and principles of the earlier chapters.' (Intro) For an earlier edition see BRD 1959.

"The revisions retain the vigor, the boldness, and brevity of the original work. A fresh example or two has been added to the seven rules of English usage; the eleven principles of composition have been enlivened with new references (John Cheever is cited in place of Willa Cather; Faulkner, in place of Carlyle); a few matters of form have been slightly trimmed; and the list of commonly misused words has been expanded to include a few modern oddities—samples of pomposity and ambiguity." M. S. Cosgrave

Horn Bk 48:496 O '72 240w

Reviewed by R. R. Harris

Library J 97:2175 Je 15 '72 80w

"A new edition of the brief, practical guide to writing good English prose. . . . Mr. White has made the necessary alterations unobtrusively (alas for our language, he has had to put in more instances of common bad usage than he was able to take out), and the publishers have made the type bigger. The work remains a nonpareil: direct, correct, and delightful."

New Yorker 48:95 Je 24 '72 70w

STRYJKOWSKI, JULIAN. The inn; tr. from the Polish by Celina Wieniewska. 205p $5.95 Harcourt

ISBN 0-15-144415-3 LC 78-184121

"Old Tag's inn is a place of rest and refuge for Jews escaping from the Cossacks who were invading east Galicia at the opening of World War I. The advancing Cossacks strike fear in the minds of all the characters, who remember the pogrom at Kishinev in 1905. . . . The action covers one day and night in the lives of these Jews, and as the threat of invasion becomes the reality of occupation, the quality of their lives becomes increasingly surrealistic." (Library J) Originally published in Poland under the title Austeria.

Reviewed by R. J. Rafalko

Best Sell 31:567 Mr 15 '72 380w

"The novel is nostalgic—rich in Jewish ritual and romance—but sad, for the reader continually feels the past pressing upon the present. As characters flash back into their lives, he flashes forward to the 'final solution.' The richness of life evoked in the novel is tempered by the terror of history. As a result, the novel, first published in Poland in 1966, is gently powerful." H. F. Babinski

Library J 97:1349 Ap 1 '72 150w

"This [novel] . . . has the stylized aspect of legendary Jewish drama. . . . Asya, the photographer's daughter, is hit by a stray bullet and dies in the arms of her sweetheart, Boom, the bookbinder's son. Boom is summarily executed while accompanying Asya's body to a cemetery with the Catholic school chaplain ('the one who liked Jews'). The town is put to the torch. While the transients at the inn await the apocalyptic pogrom, a fugitive hussar . . . finds sanctuary and 10 refugee Hasidim reach ecstasy in a ritual dance. . . . Mr. Strykowski creates colorful prototypes rather than characters, whose tragedy is misted over in a Hebraic twilight." Martin Levin

N Y Times Bk R p23 Ap 2 '72 150w

"The past and present of these people is built up slowly, often very funnily. The narrative comments on the action, atmosphere, and religious background in the tone of one of its own characters, a device which rapidly and completely admits the reader to the ethos of the novel. He can enter wholly into the pathos and irony of the closing scene, when Tag sets off in company with the local Catholic priest, to tell the Cossack executioners that Boom was innocent, that his blood might fall like a stone on their souls. This delicate and moving novel cannot have been easy to translate, but verbs like 'to hightail,' or phrases like 'you can say that again,' do not inspire confidence."

TLS p265 Mr 10 '72 300w

STUART, FRANCIS. Black list, section H; with a pref. and postscript by Harry T. Moore. 442p $10 ill. univ. press

Stuart, Francis—Fiction

ISBN 0-8093-0527-5 LC 72-156788

This is a "fictional autobiographical memoir of Stuart's life from the time of his marriage in his late teens to Iseult Gonne, the daughter of Maud Gonne . . . through a series of travels involving several lands and several women, to his teaching post at the University of Berlin in 1939, and finally to his disposition as a war prisoner of the same peculiar sort as William Joyce (Lord Haw-Haw) and Ezra Pound. Stuart, or 'H' in the novel, was a political naïf who made radio speeches for Goebbels. . . . [The novel] deals in its first half with many actual figures from the literary world of Dublin and London including Yeats, Pound [and] Liam O'Flaherty. . . . [Stuart offers] a portrait of the artist emerging from a cocoon of hesitation and self-doubt." (Best Sell)

"H moves through most of the book with all the speed and conviction of a tree sloth. He is a kind of literary Victor Mature. . . . One finishes the book wondering what it is that H has been doing for the last twenty-five years. . . . Stuart's new novel is motivated by moral force and a genuine sense of what it means to try to be an artist. It is a book which one respects even while noticing its lapses. Libraries with good holdings in fiction will want to buy it." R. J. Thompson

Best Sell 31:480 F 1 '72 600w

"[This] must be Stuart's longest book, though not quite his best. . . . Much of it conveys the same impression of painful honesty as the earlier books of Rousseau's Confessions. Many people now dead, including Yeats, Maud Gonne, and Iseult Stuart, appear under their own names; so do a few who are still living, including Liam O'Flaherty and Ezra Pound. . . . The great value of Black List is that Stuart bears witness to two dilemmas which he shared with many of his generation: those presented by love and art. . . . Much of . . . [this book] attempts to offer rational justification for H's espousal of irrationality as a way of life. He often seems not a dunce exactly but a sort of holy fool who once in a while blunders into the truth." Vivian Mercier

Book World p8 Ja 2 '72 1350w

Reviewed by D. H. Greene

Nation 214:246 F 21 '72 2400w

Reviewed by Lawrence Durell

N Y Times Bk R p36 Ap 9 '72 700w

"[This] novel is perhaps . . . [the author's] most timely. Its title derives from the fact that . . . Stuart has been blacklisted by his countrymen, or at least neglected, for his supposedly fascist views. In sixty-five rambling episodes spanning the period from 1919-1945 . . . [he] attempts to shape his disparate experiences into a significant form. . . . Today, once again, Ireland is in arms, and Stuart's description of 'the troubles'—of Irish 'lads' who engage in senseless bombings and night raids, of wildly reckless revolutionaries (those motivated by violent idealism and those who simply love violence)—has a painfully contemporary ring. Unfortunately, by keeping his novel aloof from the suffering caused by the political upheavals that he uses as a historic background Stuart seems monstrously detached from human values." Diane Fortuna

Sat R 55:31 Ja 1 '72 900w

STUBBS, HARRY C. The moon. See Gamow, G

STUCKENSCHMIDT, H. H. Germany and Central Europe. See Twentieth-century composers, v2

STUDENTS in conflict: L.S.E. in 1967, by Tessa Blackstone [and others]. 320p $10 Humanities press

378.198 London School of Economics and Political Science—Students. Students—England

ISBN 0-297-0028-4 LC [79-859235]

This volume concerns the sit-in and lecture boycott at the London School of Economics. It is based on a questionnaire sent by the authors "to all L.S.E. students in residence at the time, asking them questions in 'three main areas' . . . . They got an 80 percent response. The main body of the book is an analysis of this response." (TLS) Bibliography.

"The book is an excellent sociological analysis, all the more valuable because of the general lack of such data for England. Compares favorably to two more political analyses, P. Hoch and V. Schoenbach's LSE: The natives are restless, which is pro student, and [H.] Kidd's The trouble at L.S.E., 1966-1967 [BRD 1970], which is proadministration."

Choice 7:1544 Ja '71 160w

"The students and situation in LSE have changed so fast since [1967] . . . that any such research is inevitably somewhat out of date, but this is a fascinating dissection of LSE's political way of life."

Economist 236:55 Jl 4 '70 80w

"Those in search of instant solutions to the problem of student unrest should avoid this book; likewise those who have developed a taste for graphic literary reconstructions of campus hooliganism. The former can take their pick among educational journalists; the latter have wide choice among the precocious publications of the young rebels. [It] is a very sober, very academic study, based on the feeding of a mass of information into a computer. . . . Anyone seriously concerned with the state of our universities can benefit by reading at least some of it—even if no more than the very short last chapter. . . . Less valuable than the text, but nevertheless highly perceptive and full of common sense, is Professor David Donnison's preface, in which he is bold enough to produce some recipes for dealing with student unrest."

TLS p1158 O 8 '70 750w

STUDIES in diplomatic history: essays in memory of David Bayne Horn; ed. by Ragnhild Hatton and M. S. Anderson. 384p $11 Archon bks.

327 Europe—History. Horn, David Bayne. Europe—Politics

ISBN 0-208-01039-4 LC 73-18965

This "volume includes 18 essays, a short biographical sketch of Horn, and a bibliography of his works. Most of the essays deal with some aspects of 18th-century European diplomatic history: the British diplomatic service, Britain and the rise of Prussia, Italy in European diplomacy during the 18th century, Danish diplomacy, Dutch diplomacy as well as French. Four of the essays are concerned with diplomatic policies and problems in the 19th and 20th centuries. . . . [The] final essay [deals with] the development of diplomacy." (Choice)

STUDIES in diplomatic history—Continued

"Some [of the essays] are concerned with episodes that have been little known or at best misunderstood, and they rest upon fresh archival research as well as wide-ranging command of printed sources. Notable among these are the study by Andrew Lossky on Dutch diplomacy and the trade negotiations between France and Russia in 1681; . . . [Ragnhild Hatton's] study of John Drummond . . . and Stewart Oakley's account of the thwarted plans of Gustavus III for war with Denmark in 1783-84. . . . The volume is rounded off by a characteristically sagacious essay by Sir Herbert Butterfield on the significance of diplomacy in the relations of states and peoples. . . . [The other essays] display the same qualities of excellence of research, intelligence, and perceptiveness." H. H. Rowen

Am Hist R 77:773 Je '72 500w

"These excellent essays are quite technical and highly specialized. Consequently only larger libraries with extensive collections in European diplomatic history will wish to purchase this book."

Choice 7:1728 F '71 160w

"[This] is a volume somewhat more homogeneous than is always the case with such collections. It also contains some contributions of distinction." J. M. Roberts

Engl Hist R 87:192 Ja '72 460w

STUDIES in the economic history of the Middle East; from the rise of Islam to the present day; ed. by M. A. Cook. 526p il $11.25 Oxford

956 Near East—History. Near East—Economic conditions.

SBN 19-713561-7 LC [72-495272]

"Half the book pertains to the period to 1800, the rest to the period to date. The papers . . . cover aspects of economic history such as the medieval guilds, European-Middle Eastern trade, and Egyptian economic policy in the Middle Ages; the Ottoman economy; the modern economies of Egypt, Iran, Iraq; the relationship of sociological studies to economic history; the discipline of Middle Eastern economic history." (Library J)

"Five articles are in French. Essential for special collections on economic history and the Middle East." D. W. Littlefield

Library J 95:2909 S 15 '70 130w

"This volume of papers submitted to a conference at the School of Oriental and African Studies in 1967 appears as the first of its kind, in presenting us with samples of research currently being undertaken and in pointing to fundamental questions of approach. The pioneering nature of the conference is responsible for the lack of an overall framework or dominant theme in the volume, and the publishers are careful to point out that this is neither a comprehensive history nor a systematic inventory. . . . In view of the infancy of the subject dealt with by these papers, it would be unfair to be disparaging about their miscellaneous character. The appearance of this volume is timely for marking out the present state of the subject and indicating the many gaps which remain to be filled."

TLS p811 Jl 23 '70 500w

STUDY OF CRITICAL ENVIRONMENTAL PROBLEMS. Man's impact on the global environment. See Man's impact on the global environment

STYRON, ROSE, jt. ed. & tr. Modern Russian poetry. See Carlisle, O. A.

SUBBIAH, B. V. The tragedy of a papal decree (in a crowded world). 144p $3.95 Vantage 261.8 Birth control. Birth control—Religious aspects. Population. Paul VI (Giovanni Battista Montini) Pope—Humanae vitae
LC 78-28072

"A Hindu scholar, now professor of political science in West Virginia State College, presents an . . . analysis of the papal encyclical Humanae Vitae." (Nation)

"A sincere plea . . . asking the pope to reverse Humanae Vitae. However, Subbiah shows little sophistication in his discussion of the population problem. In reviewing the pill, for example, which . . . he favors, he mentions loss of sex drive, mental depression, blood pressure, diabetes, jaundice, and cancer as possible side affects. An entire chapter is devoted to exhorting the U.N. to become active a year after it had done so. In sum, the author is well meaning, deals with a significant problem, but has made no contribution to the literature. The style is hortatory, often flowery and given to exaggeration."

Choice 9:543 Je '72 120w

"What makes the volume of special interest is the author's view of how India's one-time wealth and unparalleled prosperity were eroded by a growing population and the consequences that engendered." Carey McWilliams

Nation 213:346 O 11 '71 60w

SUCKSMITH, HARVEY PETER. The narrative art of Charles Dickens; the rhetoric of sympathy and irony in his novels. 374p $9.75 Oxford

823 Dickens, Charles

SBN 19-811688-8

LC [73-143173]

This "analysis of Dickens' style centers on revisions in manuscripts and proofs, as well as on letters, prefaces, notes, and acknowledged or possible influences on his work. Based on a 1967 University of Nottingham doctoral thesis, this study proceeds from a defense of the rhetorical mode in fiction to consideration of 'the complex effect' by which Dickens achieves a unified moral vision through a balance of interacting effects of sympathy and irony." (Library J)

"Of the many books published during the centenary year of Dickens' death, this is probably the most important contribution to Dickens scholarship . . . Sucksmith's opening discussion (as well as the subtitle) is unpromising, since it suggests that what follows will be just another study of various verbal patterns in the novels. The main argument is much more subtle, and ground-breaking. . . . There are penetrating analyses of the individual novels (particularly impressive is the handling of the complex effects of Great expectations) and cogent discussions of such side issues as sentimentality in the Victorian Age. Highly recommended."

Choice 7:1513 Ja '71 210w

Economist 237:xxi N 21 '70 50w

"[The author] finds in Dickens' vision of life as 'an ironic tragi-comedy of deception' a kind of determinism that we more often associate with Hardy than with the external novelists. Strengthened immeasurably by the author's willingness to acknowledge frankly Dickens' stylistic excesses as well as his successes, this important book merits purchase by academic and research libraries collecting in the field of English literature." T. J. Galvin

Library J 96:80 Ja 1 '71 150w

"Surprisingly many of the finest touches in familiar passages turn out to have been second thoughts. The transcription and elucidation of many such passages constitute the finest part of this book, sometimes suggesting, too, lines of thought which Dr. Sucksmith does not follow. It is striking, for example, how often Dickens's revisions improve his prose-rhythms (an element in his style that has not been much discussed). Dr. Sucksmith also makes many thoughtful incidental remarks about Dickens's art, but his larger paraphernalia about sympathy and irony are less worth the carriage, often being a cumbersome way of demonstrating the obvious. His book would, indeed, have been much the better for severe pruning."

TLS p1521 D 25 '70 450w

SULLIVAN, EUGENE. Where did the $13 billion go? 205p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

368.2 Insurance, Automobile

ISBN 0-13-957084-5 LC 75-168489

In this study of the auto insurance industry, the author "points out that the insurance establishment is in great need of reform and that in the last 20 years rates have steadily increased while the availability of insurance has decreased." (Library J) Bibliography.

"The sample cases along with the great many facts and figures presented illustrate the insurance industry's inconsiderateness and irresponsibility. However, not all insurance companies are so callous according to Sullivan. . . . Although there is no index and more footnotes should have been used, this book should prove to be popular with concerned motorists." D. F. Burlingame
Library J 96:3312 O 15 '71 130w

"Eugene Sullivan displayed the cool technical knowledge of an industrial engineer in an earlier consumer volume, Sanitation in the Meat Industry. In [this book] he is equally sane and knowledgeable, but his statistics and case studies read like horror tales. His main target is the auto insurance industry, but he also gives the back of his hand to car manufacturers and trial lawyers. . . . [He] has no utopian solutions, but he plugs for no-fault on the grounds that it offers more safeguards to bamboozled and harassed motorists than any competitive plan. . . . The book steers neatly between sensationalism and pedantry, and is most useful."

New Repub 166:21 Mr 11 '72 310w
N Y Times Bk R p34 Ap 9 '72 180w

SULLIVAN, GEORGE. The complete book of autograph collecting. 154p il $4.95 Dodd

091 Autographs—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-396-06385-3 LC 70-153891

This guide to autograph collecting "tells how to choose a specialty, what collectors' organizations to join, and what publications to read. It contains tips on soliciting autographs from celebrities, how to compose letters of request, and how to obtain meaningful letters. Names and addresses of more than one hundred of the world's notables are listed in the appendix. Purchasing from autograph dealers is treated in detail, including how to read dealers' catalogs and how to recognize bargains. The popular field of presidential autographs is [also] reviewed. . . . How to store and display autograph material are also explained." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index. "Grades six to twelve." (Library J)

"The text is generously illustrated with photographs and examples of various types of autographs. . . . This hobby will enable young people to meet others (albeit on a relatively impersonal basis) and should lead to much incoming mail for them." J. G. Russell
Library J 97:2491 J1 '72 140w [YA]

"[The sections] on the autopen and on the legal aspects of letters are engrossing. And from one dealer, here's a chilling commentary on the times. 'A great many people who are popular today are almost certain to be forgotten in the years to come. There is no real value to their work. They are terribly temporary.' The celebrity list (with home or business addresses) is mesmerizing: George Abbott makes it, but not Mike Nichols. Harry Truman but not Lyndon Johnson. Jackie but not Ethel. Ralph Nader, Susan Sontag and Fidel Castro also run." N. L. Magid
N Y Times Bk R p8 N 21 '71 250w

SULLIVAN, GEORGE. The gamemakers; pro football's great quarterbacks—from Baugh to Namath. 255p il $7.95 Putnam

796.33 Football—Biography
LC 76-163418

This account of the careers and achievements of 17 players covers "their psychological and physical attributes, their unusual skills and talents, their key games, [and] their life statistics." (Library J)

"The book is a well written account of personalities who have played and are currently playing the position of quarterback. It is difficult not to read it in one sitting. The author smartly recounts anecdotes about each of the quarterbacks he reviews. Records and play diagrams for the quarterbacks are included. This is a fine book that should be helpful to the layman and to aspiring quarterbacks."

Choice 8:1611 F '72 80w

"Writing in a breathless, you're-a-grand-old-star style, [the author] profiles the careers of 17 'gamemakers'. . . . Some readers might quarrel with his selection of greats, and his reverential tone toward the NFC and the 'stars' dates the work early 1950's—when sports books sold like square footballs. Are quarterbacks really this uncomplicated? Is pro ball this civilized, humane, humorous? Since the books by Meggysey, Parrish, Oliver, and others, we know better." Rozanne Knudson

Library J 96:3774 N 15 '71 100w

SULLIVAN, PEGGY. Problems in school media management. 245p $9.95 Bowker

027.8 School libraries. Instructional materials centers. Library administration
ISBN 0-8352-0427-8 LC 78-126023

"Drawing upon her experiences in the field and as director of the American Library Association's Knapp School Libraries Project [the author] presents thirty case studies as an introduction to 'problems within a specific context' for 'discussion and/or analysis by present or potential school media personnel in a teaching situation.' Using the setting of both traditional library programs and unified media programs, the problems include issues dealing with scheduling, duplicating policies, copyright laws, extended hours of service, use of volunteers, use of technicians, facility planning, discipline, reference service, circulation policies, and selection of materials. Many of the cases focus on or indirectly deal with relationships between media specialists and [others in the system]." (Library Q)

"The paradox presented by this book . . . is that to deal with these case studies effectively, students in the classroom, or participants in workshops, institutes, or conferences would need sound theoretical background and research findings on which to formulate viable alternative solutions. . . . [But] at this time there is a void in the field of school librarianship in presenting both theoretical background and research findings. What is needed is a scholarly book, dealing with these facets of the profession. Then Miss Sullivan's book could best be used as a supplement to such a text. . . . [Nevertheless] the book is innovative and stimulating. . . . A vital contribution to the study of librarianship and belongs on the list of necessary books for instructors of school library services." Margaret Chisholm
Library J 96:4169 D 15 '71 800w

"[There are cases which] focus on problems shared by public and school librarians and have potential for use with either group or for joint meetings. These comments are not to imply that the cases are inappropriate for school media personnel but rather that they are not limited to that audience. The settings for the cases further indicate a breadth of audience, as one is set in a K-8 rural school, one in a junior high school, seven in elementary schools, twelve in high schools, and twelve are set in a district level or combined with work at other levels. This coverage strengthens the potential use of the cases with school media personnel at various levels of education and/or experience. . . . [I agree with the] series editor that 'the depth and complexity of the problem situation she describes . . . seems to me to distinguish Miss Sullivan's case studies most clearly from the work of other writers'." Phyllis Van Orden
Library Q 42:270 Ap '72 900w

SULLY, FRANÇOIS, ed. We the Vietnamese: voices from Vietnam; ed. by François Sully, with the assistance of Marjorie Weiner Normand; pref. by Donald Kirk. (Voices from the nations) 270p il $7.50; pa $2.95 Praeger

915.97 Vietnam
LC 75-95693

The French correspondent who covered Vietnam's wars for twenty-two years until his death there in a helicopter crash last year, gathered together this collection of articles from the voices of both north and south. Bibliography. Index.

"This is a work of exceptional scope and quality; for the first time, selections from a large number of writers, most of them Vietnamese, have been collected under one cover. The result is a mixture of Communist propaganda, South Vietnamese rhetoric, profound peasant philosophy, historical insights, and interesting sidelights, such as Ho Chi Minh's will and descriptions of a Saigon marketplace. . . . This valuable book will be especially useful for those seeking a deeper introduction to Vietnam than is usually presented in works specifically covering the war; its acquisition will enrich all libraries."

SULLY, FRANÇOIS—Continued

J. L. Buelna

Library J 96:2933 S 15 '71 120w [YA]

"[This collection provides] incoherent, spotty, uneven, tantalizingly incomplete series of flashes and insights into the Vietnamese character and personality. [It] badly needs re-editing. As much as one-fifth of it should be cut out and new material substituted if it is to do justice to the various categories . . . . [Despite its] failings, this is a valuable and interesting book, simply because it does attempt to cope with areas ignored by most of the books in the enormous bibliography on Vietnam. Some basic facts about the land, the people, their customs and beliefs, their history and literature, their food, clothing, religions, views on love, friendship, marriage, family relationships, are presented in a number of thoughtful pieces and some fascinating vignettes." David Schoenbrun

N Y Times Bk R p8 Ag 1 '71 1000w

SUMMERS, ROBERT S., ed. More essays in legal philosophy; general assessments of legal philosophies; sel. and ed. by Robert S. Summers. 161p $6.50 Univ. Calif. press

340.1 Law—Philosophy

ISBN 0-520-01971-7 LC 77-149939

Each of these essays offers "a general assessment of a major thinker in the history of legal philosophy. They address themselves to questions such as the following: What is the nature of Bentham's critique of law, and what are its limits? How might Dean Pound's main contributions to jurisprudence be characterized and evaluated? What criticisms may be made of Hans Kelsen's concept of a legal system? Is Professor Lon L. Fuller's theory of 'technological' natural law viable? What are the strengths and weaknesses of Professor H. L. A. Hart's analysis of law as a 'union of primary and secondary rules'?" (Publisher's note)

"Especially written for this volume is Summers' excellent introductory essay, 'Notes on criticism in legal philosophy.' . . . The collection reflects the concerns and critical standards of modern analytical philosophy, for in varying degrees all the writers included here are its products. Strongly recommended for specialized libraries in the social sciences and the law."

Choice 9:884 S '72 170w

"[These] five essays [were] all previously published during the 1960s. . . . Apart from Kelsen, no continental philosophers or schools are examined. Nor are all the trends in Anglo-American legal philosophy represented, the most notable omissions being John Austin and the American Realists. Yet there is no doubt that the theorists discussed are among the most eminent legal philosophers in Britain and the United States, and the editor has on the whole succeeded in choosing the best essays discussing major aspects of their work. . . . The main merit of these essays is that they demonstrate how wrong is the assumption that analytic jurisprudence is narrowly confined." J. Raz

J Philos 69:498 S 7 '72 1400w

SUMMERSCALES, WILLIAM. Affirmation and dissent; Columbia's response to the crisis of World War I. (Columbia univ. Teachers college. Studies in educ) 159p $7.25 Teachers college press

378.7471 Columbia University
LC 76-137393

"This study deals with educational developments at Columbia University during the Great War of 1914 to 1918, with major emphasis on the nature of internal relationships among Columbia College and the three Graduate Faculties, and the extent to which national opinion on the War affected decisions dealing with academic governance." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"As America prepared for war and President Butler and the trustees pledged Columbia's energies for the war effort, they precipitated a battle over academic freedom which involved the dismissal or resignation of Professors H. W. L. Dana, J. McKeen Cattell, Charles A. Beard, and others. . . . This book constitutes a valuable historical inquiry into the origins of our current crisis in higher education. It is based on thorough research and is free of the emotional jargon so often found in books on current problems of the universities. Highly recommended."

Choice 8:716 J1 '71 170w

"To the extent that historians still regard the campus repressions of [the World War I] period as discrete and anomalous misadventures, chargeable to war-shock and nothing else, a contextual approach of this sort serves an important corrective purpose. While the author may not acknowledge the thesis, his archival researchers support the argument that the unhappy events of 1971 were more often denouements than lapses." W. P. Metzger

Teach Col Rec 73:599 My '72 1400w

SUNDELL, ABNER, jr. auth. Modern art in America. See Myron, R.

SUNY, RONALD GRIGOR. The Baku Commune, 1917-1918; class and nationality in the Russian revolution. (Columbia Univ. Russian inst. Studies) 412p maps $15 Princeton univ. press

947 Baku. Russia—History—Revolution, 1917-1921

ISBN 0-691-05193-3 LC 76-155966

This study of the Russian "Revolution in Baku, [the] . . . capital and oil center of the Russian empire, [deals with] . . . Baku's national and class conflicts, Bolshevism as it developed in the city, and the failure of the Commune in 1918. . . . Mr. Suny addresses himself to these questions: What was the nature of Bolshevism in the city? How did the Bolsheviks attempt to give shape and direction to the spontaneous actions of the workers? What were the reasons for the Revolution's 'delay'? What were the problems of the nationalist struggle in the city? What was its relationship to the class struggle? Was the insurrection in March 1918 the result of class or national antagonism? Finally, why did the Baku Commune fail?" (Publisher's note) Glossary. Bibliography. Index.

"Suny has given us a detailed and graphic record of the Baku experience. His prose is lucid and his organization is largely a straightforward chronological narrative with a few minor topical digressions. The author does occasionally presume on the reader who does not know Russian by supplying words and phrases without either translation or seeking to find an adequate English language equivalent. He uses his sources carefully and tries along the way to resolve some historical debates such as that of the British intervention in Baku which he finds to have been motivated initially by a desire to keep the Eastern and Caucasian fronts intact. Both the specialist in Russian history and the general reader will profit from this generally well-handled study." F. A. Miller

Ann Am Acad 404:272 N '72 550w

"[This is the] product of research at Columbia University, London, Moscow, and Erivan. It is a thoroughly researched, well written analytic study. . . . Recommended for four-year institutions."

Choice 9:708 J1/Ag '72 120w

"In the non-Russian parts of the Empire, the appeal of the Revolution was as much to national, potentially anti-Russian sentiment, as it was to feelings of proletarian solidarity across national lines. Suny tests the validity of this confrontation in revolutionary Baku. . . . [He] has skillfully shown how the small stage of Baku related to the revolution raging elsewhere in the Caucasus, and how this particular part of the peninsula became caught up in the wider conflicts of the World War. The monograph will have a limited appeal to scholars; but it is impressively argued, with a wealth of Russian and Caucasian material." R. H. Johnston

Library J 97:2093 Je 1 '72 220w

SURET-CANALE, JEAN. French colonialism in tropical Africa, 1900-1945; tr. from the French by Till Gottheiner. 521p 11 maps $17.50 Pica press

325.3 France—Colonies

ISBN 0-87663-702-0 LC 75-95756

The author's "thesis is that colonialism has had a direct bearing on the degree of unrest pervading contemporary Africa. . . . He uses French colonialism from 1900 to 1945 as a case study . . . [and] links the French takeover of colonies to both military and economic penetration. He traces the character, methods, and techniques of trade used by the French; discusses . . . aspects of French direct administration . . . used in the colonies to implement French political and economic goals; and dispels the notion of humanitarianism as having been an overall colonial objective." (Library J) Bibliography.

"[The author is] a good French Marxist . . . [and must assure his readers] that there was no good whatever in French colonialism, that the African societies which it found were in a flourishing condition, and that everything was the fault of 'monopoly-capitalism.' . . . Suret-Canale's point of view can be divined from his opinion that World War II only became 'a people's struggle for national independence and democracy' after the German attack on the Soviet Union, and much of what he has to say is as easily refuted." Anthony Hartley
Book World p13 D 19 '71 750w

"Because of its explicitly negative estimation of the political, social, and economic impact of French colonial administration, the book lacks the balanced and measured evaluation which would be useful to a broad readership, its style is scholarly, its presentation detailed. Generally a readable translation, amply documented, and supplied with a 17-page bibliography of (largely) French sources. Recommended for medium to large size college and public libraries, and for all collections specializing in African studies, modern history, and colonial administration."

Choice 9:115 Mr '72 160w

"Canale's discussions of economic exploitation shed considerable light on the nature of French colonialism, and his unveiling of political and administrative oppression is also interesting. But it is his linking of the weak foundation inherited from the colonial era and the resulting lack of infrastructure necessary for the new states to survive which needs to be most commended." Kofi Ankomah
Library J 96:4093 D 15 '71 270w

SUSKIND, RICHARD. The sword of the prophet; the story of the Moslem Empire; il. by Enrico Arno. 90p $4.50 Grosset 953 Arabs—History—Juvenile literature.
Islam—Juvenile literature
ISBN 0-448-21422-9 LC 75-130854

"Beginning with the account of the revelations described by Mohammed in 610 A.D., the author traces the origins of Islam; discusses its political, spiritual, and cultural impact during the medieval period; and considers the reasons for its decline as a political entity—in contrast to its . . . survival in the realm of ideas." (Horn Bk) "Grades five to seven." (Library J)

"[This book] merits consideration as a brief but comprehensive introduction to a significant subject. Although no complete bibliographic citations are given, the sources for most quotations (many from Moslem historians) are acknowledged in the text." M. M. B.
Horn Bk 48:159 Ap '72 180w

"Facts about battles and conquests are balanced by analysis of the forces and discords within the empire and its traditions and culture, especially under Harun al Rashid. The combination of short text, clear, fairly simple writing, large type, numerous subheadings, and decorative line illustrations will appeal to even reluctant readers." Vicki Merrill
Library J 97:1610 Ap 15 '72 160w

SUTTLES, GERALD D. The social construction of communities. 278p $9.50 Univ. of Chicago press
301.34 Sociology, Urban, Community. Social groups
ISBN 0-226-78189-5 LC 74-177310

The author "identifies various types of communities: the 'defended neighborhood' or community, in which vigilante groups of adolescents or adults impose what order they can, but which often become 'defeated communities'; the 'community of limited liability,' whose residents do not fully commit either themselves or their capital; and the 'contrived community,' especially as set up by big operators (developers, housing authorities, etc.). Suttles suggests some individual strategies, alliances and public programs to improve communities, ending with a not too hopeful analysis of the local geographic community as 'communion.' (Choice) Index.

"Suttles, author of the prizewinning Social order of the slum [BRD 1969], attempts to combine the ethology of Lorenz, Ardrey, and Morris, the sociology-ecology of Burgess and the Chicago school of urban sociologists, and his own research (also done in Chicago) into a theory of community building. Territoriality and aggression theories, supportive of the idea of the natural community, but oblivious to, or callous of, the role of planning, choice, external influences, or political activity, Suttles regards as inadequate for the modern community. . . . Thoughtful and well written, the book will enhance collections in sociological theory."

Choice 9:726 J1/Ag '72 180w

"[The book] is repetitious and disjointed, with number of essays only tangentially related to the main theme. Yet these flaws are unimportant alongside the book's considerable achievements. . . . Suttles shows that there is no necessary discontinuity between how we experience neighborhoods, communities, cities, and so on and the sociological concepts needed to describe them. Neighborhoods are not primarily segments of real estate but collective representations existing in the minds of inhabitants, and attaining reality through social consensus. This is a stimulating viewpoint of great heuristic value. . . . Suttles translates the concept of territoriality, so foolishly caricatured in the work of Ardrey, Morris, and others, into its proper human context. [His] book is a work of considerable originality and insight." Stanley Milgram
Science 178:494 N 3 '72 2100w

SUTTON, ANTONY C. Western technology and Soviet economic development, 1930 to 1945. (Stanford Univ. Hoover inst. on war, revolution and peace. Publications, 90) 3v v2 401p $12.50 Hoover inst. press

338.91 Russia—Industries. Russia—Economic conditions. Technical assistance
SBN 8179-1901-5 (v2) LC 68-24442

In volume two of a projected "three-volume series, . . . Sutton analyzes a large number of cases of Western technical assistance to the U.S.S.R. Organization is primarily sectoral, with separate chapters for irrigation, nonferrous metals, ferrous metals, fuel, machine-building, electric power, motor vehicles, railroads, shipbuilding, aircraft, etc. . . . Case studies provide . . . [an] account of Western involvement in Soviet industrialization during the period." (Choice) Bibliography. Glossary. Index. For volume one, Western Technology and Soviet Economic Development, 1917 to 1930, see BRD 1970.

"[The author has used] highly detailed information from widely scattered sources, particularly files of the U.S. Department of State and private firms. . . . The book's merit is in its assembly of hitherto inaccessible information, rather than in the quality of analysis of the technological aspects of Soviet industrialization. . . . Recommended for research libraries, rather than those serving primarily undergraduate students. Well documented. . . . Many tables and engineering drawings."

Choice 8:1622 F '72 240w

"[Sutton has] provided a major contribution to our knowledge of Soviet industrialization despite his marked prejudices, which, although they limit and to some extent bias his work, have at the same time perhaps inspired him in his thorough and ruthless examination of Soviet technological borrowing from the West. . . . [He] touches only lightly on the question of how far Western technology was adapted or even transformed to make it suitable for Russian conditions. . . . [and he has a] marked tendency to underestimate the extent to which Soviet industry became independent of the West during the later 1930s."

TLS p453 Ap 21 '72 900w

SUTTON, FELIX. The big show; a history of the circus. 176p il $4.95; lib bdg $5.70 Doubleday

791.3 Circus—History—Juvenile literature
LC 73-103778

"The account centers on the various American circuses which achieved national and international reputations. Several types of circuses (e.g., dog and pony, western, etc.) and many of the outstanding personalities in circus life (e.g., General Tom Thumb, 'Buffalo Bill,'

SUTTON, FELIX—Continued

Gargantua, etc.) are examined. [Index.] Grades six to nine." (Library J)

"An entertaining history of the circus from its earliest beginnings to present day spectacles. . . . Sutton emphasizes the continuing thrill and excitement of the event." W. D. Edwards

Library J 96:3480 O 15 '71 100w

"Despite more than a hint of throbbing prose, The Big Show provides a fascinating survey of circus history, from the many small touring troupes of its early days to the colorful showmen and stars of today's giant spectacles. Approximately half the book is devoted to the history of the circus, and the rest focuses on its various attractions: animals, clowns, acrobats, street parades, and sideshows. How can it fail to be alluring? It can't." Zena Sutherland

Sat R 54:27 Ag 21 '71 70w

SUTTON, GEORGE MIKSCH. High Arctic; an expedition to the unspoiled north; ill. with colorplates by the author and with phot. by David F. Parmelle [and others]. 116p $12.95 Eriksson

574 Natural history—Northwest Territories, Canada. Northwest Territories, Canada—Description and travel
ISBN 0-8397-3300-3 LC 72-151434

This book describes the author's experiences "as a member of an expedition sponsored by the National Museum of Natural Sciences in Ottawa to study the behavior, life history, and distribution of Arctic shorebirds. . . . [Some of the] birds and mammals . . . [found on Bathurst Island included] muskoxen, Peary's caribou, white wolves, lemmings; snowy horned owls, purple sandpipers, long-tailed jaegers, rock ptarmigan, ivory gulls." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by Edward Weeks
Atlantic 229:108 F '72 450w

"Sutton, renowned ornithologist [is the] . . . author of eight other bird books. . . . The text, written with engaging charm, is highlighted by eleven of the author's paintings in full color. Even if you can't tell a cuckoo from a canary, you will derive great pleasure from reading this one." F. J. MacIntee

Best Sell 31:423 D 15 '71 60w

"Anyone with polar experience will enjoy the work and it will appeal to all who take vicarious pleasure in the work of an able ornithologist and artist. It does not purport to be a comprehensive account of scientific findings but could serve instead to stimulate young people to field studies."

Choice 9:82 Mr '72 160w

"In a chatty style, [Sutton] describes the reasons for the trip, the birds and animals they encountered, and the situations out of which the watercolors were created. He excels as a bird portraitist, especially in subtleties of plumage and coloration. His Arctic watercolor landscapes . . . capture the brown-and-white vastness of the tundra with its snow, clouds, fog, and sparse vegetation. . . . The photographs are satisfactory." H. T. Armistead

Library J 97:690 F 15 '72 120w

SUTTON-SMITH, BRIAN, jt. auth. The study of games. See Avedon, E. M.

SUYIN, HAN. See Han, S.

SUZUKI, DAISSETZ T. Sengai, the Zen master; with editorial and prefatory notes by Eva van Hoboken [and others]. 191p ill $10 N.Y. graphic 741.09 Sengai. Zen Buddhism
ISBN 0-8212-0319-3 LC 68-25738

The author comments "on 128 of the paintings of Sengai (1750-1837), the Zen abbot." (Library J)

"Sengai's paintings were in the Zen suiboku style, cryptic, undetailed sketches accompanied by equally cryptic notes or verse, containing essential fragments of the Zen Buddhist philosophy. No one was better suited to comment on them than Suzuki, an authority on Zen. An exceptionally fine example of printing and design, with beautifully sharp type and reproductions, this specialized but very meaningful work is recommended for Japanese art or Zen collections." D. J. Pearce

Library J 96:4000 D 1 '71 70w

"There is no standard by which to judge this book, as Zen intends, and some will say it is great stuff, and some, great humbug. But there is no escaping the charm of Suzuki's introduction. It is his last book, written in his own limpid English. The account of Sengai is in fact a brief chronicle of Zen itself. . . . The casual touch of Sengai's style is miraculous and writing and pictorial forms conjugate more closely in the paintings than in Chinese work, for all the Chinese talk of the identity of writing and painting. . . . Suzuki's running commentary touches on most things in heaven and earth."

TLS p762 J1 7 '72 550w

SVEICS, V. V. Small nation survival; political defense in unequal conflicts. 271p $8.50 Exposition

355.02 Military policy. World politics—1965-
ISBN 0-682-47163-1 LC 76-136980

The author's "concern is with unaligned small nations involved in conflicts with militarily superior powers. . . . He analyzes a variety of unequal conflicts. . . . [and] concludes that it is perfectly possible for a small nation successfully to defend itself against even a vastly superior military power, provided it knows how to do it and has willpower enough to go through with it. The way to resist overwhelming force effectively, Professor Sveics argues, is to transfer the struggle from the military to the political level." (Am Pol Sci R) Bibliography.

"Admitting his deep commitment to the cause of small states struggling to retain or regain national freedom. . . . [Sveics] sets out to explain the correct strategy for these states. With passion and determination he strives to convince his readers and to persuade them to act on his instructions. The book is essentially prescriptive—offering directions to intellectuals, administrators and others about their roles in resistance to the occupation power, making suggestions for Sweden, Switzerland, and other small unaligned states how best to prepare their defense, and so on. As a guide to resistance movement leaders, and as a warning to statesmen who contemplate subjugating a small nation by superior force, it is a persuasive piece of work. . . . In the minds of the more skeptical readers this book may leave a few queries." Carsten Holbraad

Am Pol Sci R 66:287 Mr '72 900w

"While making a useful point that it is extremely difficult for a large country both to occupy a smaller country militarily and politically convert its population, Sveics is ineffective in substantiating and expanding upon the point. Historical evidence provided is incomplete. . . . very few primary sources [are] used, and both [Sveics] and the 'authorities' he cites often seem politically biased. . . . Falling back on Clausewitz and others who argue that war is basically political and cannot be won militarily, the author fails to define 'political defense' precisely in various contexts, to give criteria for judging 'political victory,' to state the specific goals of parties to various historical wars, and to analyze carefully the distinctions between such wars. Unsystematic and unsatisfying."

Choice 8:917 S '71 160w

SWAIM, KATHLEEN, jt. auth. Concordance to Milton's English poetry. See Ingram, W.

SWANBERG, W. A. Luce and his empire. 529p ill $12.50 Scribner

B or 92 Luce, Henry Robinson
SBN 684-12592-7 LC 73-162778

This is the biography of the 20th century journalist who "created a publishing empire and acquired enormous political power. Swanberg recounts . . . the career of Luce and the impact of Time Inc. on our world." (Publisher's note) Index.

Reviewed by R. D. Evans
Best Sell 32:311 O 1 '72 1300w

Christian Century 89:990 O 4 '72 40w

Reviewed by Pamela Marsh
Christian Science Monitor p11 O 11 '72 900w

"[Luce] until now has remained an enigmatic character; but Swanberg, who has researched his book meticulously, has come up with the first lucid (if uncomplimentary) portrait of this dynamic man. Swanberg sees Luce as an American chauvinist who, as part of his megalomaniacal desires, boldly attempted to change American political policies via Time and Life. . . . While much space is spent on the history of Time, from its haphazard beginnings, huge gaps are left in the background of other parts of the 'empire,' such as Life and Sports Illustrated. But these gaps can easily be overlooked; Swanberg's absorbing portrait of Luce and Time is unparalleled. For its scholarship, this is a worthy addition to any library; and for its readability, [it] is an entertaining book that will certainly prove popular among readers." M. S. Lasky

Library J 97:2723 S 1 '72 190w

Reviewed by Peter Rowley
Nation 215:406 O 30 '72 1600w

Reviewed by R. T. Elson
Nat R 24:1188 O 27 '72 1400w

"[Swanberg] does a workmanlike job for about half [this book's] length. He makes bows to the complexity of his subject and gives an adequate inventory of Luce's personal characteristics. . . . The book is sprinkled with good vignettes and Luce's relations with many individuals [including] both his wives. . . . But what bulks largest is the running indictment Swanberg mounts against Luce's motives, beliefs and achievements. . . . Swanberg's view is presented with so little subtlety or balance, and with such a tin ear for historical contexts, that later and more discriminating biographers will find it almost valueless. . . . The liveliest parts of this book are the quotes from Luce's own letters and memos. The rest is strewn with errors and tiresome repetitions, but its major error is to put Luce into the wrong historical niche." J. K. Jessup
New Repub 167:26 S 30 '72 2300w

"What emerges from Mr. Swanberg's labors is a mass of raw material that will be invaluable to some future biographer who writes the illuminating book Mr. S. hasn't. . . . Overwhelmed by his research, he shovels in cartloads of information that is trivial or repetitious or both. . . . There's a lot I don't want to know about [Luce]—which Mr. S. copiously provides. As a critic, I'd say this indiscriminate plethora of detail . . . destroys the structure; or would have had there been one in the first place. It isn't exactly a narrative in time: The author skips back and forth chronologically like a clumsy antelope. . . . His Luce becomes a consistent, and rather boring, heavy villain. The one I knew was more complex." Dwight MacDonald
N Y Times BK R p1 O 1 '72 4200w

Reviewed by Walter Clemons
Newsweek 80:91 O 2 '72 1200w

Sat R 55:78 O 21 '72 450w

SWARTZ, MARVIN. The Union of Democratic Control in British politics during the first World War. 267p pl $10.25 Oxford

329.9 Great Britain—Politics and government—20th century. Union of Democratic Control
ISBN 0-19-827178-6 LC 72-570257

"Swartz's book is about what the UDC did during the war years. . . . [He furnishes] chapters on organisation, membership . . . finance, propaganda techniques. . . . [He also discusses the UDC ideas which] 'became an integral part of the outlook of the Labour party'; and . . . 'contributed to the revolutionary changes by which Britain adjusted to mass democracy.'" (Economist)

Reviewed by Barbara Malament
Am Hist R 77:521 Ap '72 400w

Reviewed by Frank Bealey
Ann Am Acad 402:152 Jl '72 250w

"Like many recent accounts this volume assumes the Liberal party was doomed and supplies its own particular explanation of the final downfall. [It is] a brief but clearly written narrative. . . . The book is also useful as an account of wartime dissent and the rather cautious repressive measures of the government. Swartz tends to claim somewhat more significance for the Union than his evidence seems to indicate but he has made a significant addition to the rapidly increasing body of specialized information on British wartime politics."

Choice 8:1240 N '71 180w

"[A] question that suggests itself is whether enough work has been done on preliminary foundations to allow this book to stand securely and convincingly on its rather narrow and cramped site. The roots of the UDC extracted their nourishment from a deep bed of political and ideological compost. This book starts virtually on August 5, 1914, the date the union was founded; the rootlessness makes for a sense of dissociation, of being historically adrift. . . . [This] painstaking book is to be welcomed with the reservation that it would look much better buttressed with equivalent studies of origins and consequences."

Economist 238:58 Mr 13 '71 950w

"Swartz has told [the] story well, though his book carries the mark of its origin as an academic thesis. He has written a compelling history of the UDC . . . fully based on the surviving records. He has provided also new information from the Cabinet papers concerning official reactions: from Milner, who saw a Bolshevik under every bed, to more cautious ministers who feared that prosecution of the UDC would merely bring it additional publicity. Such Intelligence papers are usually denied to researchers, and it is agreeable that these few have slipped through the net. They provide a story which would be comical if it were not contemptible. Dr Swartz is not content to let the narrative carry itself. He has also a theme. In his view the UDC ruined the Liberal Party." A. J. P. Taylor

New Statesman 81:307 Mr 5 '71 750w

"The story of the Union of Democratic Control is a contribution to the history of the decline of the Liberal Party and the rise of the Labour Party. That, Dr. Marvin Swartz clearly sees, is the essential element of interest to be found in it. . . . The great merit of his book lies in the honesty with which he presents the leading figures, warts and all. . . . [His is an] able study."

TLS p146 F 5 '71 1250w

SWEENEY, JAMES B. A pictorial history of oceanographic submersibles. 310p il $9.95 Crown

623.82 Submarines. Diving vehicles. Oceanography—Research
LC 75-108071

This is an "account of devices, past and present, and [of] vehicles for underwater work or travel." (Library J)

"If the early history of oceanography is sketchy, Mr Sweeney has little difficulty in finding ample illustrations. But he is unable to get into full tilt until the birth of the naval submarine. . . . [He] devotes eight chapters of often interesting text (if somewhat identical illustrations) to the last 100 years of submarine warfare. This is not quite what oceanographers might expect from an illustrated history of their pet science, but it is a reminder that most of the hardware of underwater technology is still financed by defence budgets. Sweeney gives scant coverage of the French—or indeed any European—deep sea submersibles, and the last pages read like advertisements for America's biggest corporations."

Economist 243:suppl 16 Ap 8 '72 350w

"[This] absorbing, stimulating, and satisfying [account] would be important if its only purpose were to equip the reader to cope with developments now being reported almost daily in the press. As a stimulus to the imagination of younger readers who will inherit problems that can be solved below the surface of the sea, its value is far greater." Vernon Tate

Library J 95:3794 N 1 '70 130w [YA]

SWENGROS, GLENN V. Fitness with Glenn Swengros, by Glenn Swengros with John J. Monteleone; introd. by James A. Lovell. 150p il $6.95 Hawthorn bks.

613.7 Exercise. Physical fitness
LC 73-130737

"The exercise program is . . . outlined with diagrams and pictures and includes exercises for pregnant (and post-pregnant) women. . . . [Included are] chapters on muscle discomfort." (Choice)

"A good exercise book geared to meet the needs of the working man as well as the housewife. . . . The complete index . . . [is] very helpful. Recommended for the office worker to use as a guide in an office exercise routine."

Choice 8:1480 Ja '72 80w

SWENGROS, G. V.—Continued

"This volume claims to be different from all the rest in being 'the first complete exercise book with something for everyone.' This is literally the case. Young or old, male or female, athletic or not, in shape or out of shape, there is an exercise program for all. Programs include aerobics, isometrics, and so on. Clearly laid out, this even has a calorie chart." H. R. Downey

Library J 96:3342 O 15 '71 100w

SWENSON, LOYD S. The ethereal aether; a history of the Michelson-Morley-Miller aether-drift experiments 1880-1930, by Loyd S. Swenson Jr; with a foreword by Gerald Holton. 361p il $10 Univ. of Tex. press

535 Ether (of space). Relativity (Physics). Optics
ISBN 0-292-72000-9 LC 74-37253

"The fame of the 1887 Michelson-Morley aether-drift test on the relative motion of the earth and the luminiferous aether derives largely from the role it is . . . supposed to have played in the origins, and later in the justification, of Albert Einstein's first theory of relativity. . . . As a case history of the intermittent performance of an experiment in physical optics from 1880 to 1930 and of the men whose work it was, this study describes chronologically the conception, experimental design, first trials, repetitions, influence on physical theory, and eventual climax of the optical experiment." (Publisher's note) Bibliography. Index.

"Physicists, historians of science, and philosophers of science will enjoy this book. About 1,000 books and papers are listed in the useful bibliography, and even the footnotes—over 500 of them—are literate."

Choice 9:833 S '72 110w

"Swenson's book is the culmination of ten years' study and research. . . . He has been indefatigable in his search for historical facts and letters and papers, both published and unpublished, bearing on the century-long search for the ether, and he has written with remarkable objectivity. The book deals in greatest detail with the interferometer experiments of Michelson and Morley and Miller. . . . The original papers of Michelson (1881) and of Michelson and Morley (1886; 1887) are reprinted as appendices, and a photograph of the original apparatus used in Cleveland in 1886-1887 is printed in the book for the first time." R. S. Shankland

Science 176:652 My 12 '72 1750w

"[This is a] meticulous history of the Michelson-Morley-Miller experiments. . . . Swenson is a historian, not a physicist. He succeeds very well in making it plain that the familiar naive pseudo-history, in which Einstein's special theory was created to explain away the Michelson-Morley null result, is not part of the real time sequence at all. Einstein was mining a far richer lode. . . . This readable book includes the famous table from the modern textbook by W. K. H. Panofsky and Melba Phillips, which does something like justice to physicists' views." Philip Morrison

Sci Am 226:114 Ap '72 700w

SWIFT, PATRICK, jt. auth. Lisbon. See Wright, D.

SWIGER, ELINOR PORTER. Mexico for kids; drawings by Claude Martinot. 64p $4.95 Bobbs

917.2 Mexico—Description and travel—Juvenile literature
LC 78-156114

"The author tells young readers (addressed as 'you') what to see, eat, wear, and do in Mexico, how to say everyday Spanish words and how to handle Mexican money. Such sites as the ancient Pyramids of Teotihuacan, the silver city of Taxco, and Mexico City's parks, museums and bullfights are described. . . . Grades two to five." (Library J)

"This little guide might make a nice gift but at almost $5 it's not a good choice for libraries. . . . [Written] in simple, lively language, [the book] does pick those high points a restless youngster would enjoy. However, few libraries will want to pay for information which can be obtained for less than $5 or for free—e.g., material from tourist bureaus—and which can be adapted for this age range by parents or teachers." E. F. Anderson

Library J 97:769 F 15 '72 180w

"The prose is as corkscrewed and straited as the pictures, and gracelessness of approach is matched by that of style. . . . The American child comes through as a dedicated and energetic big spender, the Mexican kid as mercenary and lazy. Mexican kids have a lot of ideas for making money. They are always ready to sell you something, and/or 'if you were a Mexican kid, you wouldn't go out and pick one of those bunches of bananas. You couldn't even carry it! What you would probably do is sit under the big wide leaves of the tree, in the shade.'" N. L. Magid

N Y Times Bk R p10 N 21 '71 160w

SWIGG, RICHARD. Lawrence, Hardy, and American literature. 368p $16.25 Oxford

823 Lawrence, David Herbert. Hardy, Thomas. American fiction—History and criticism
ISBN 0-19-212552-4 LC 72-179681

This "study takes on two major Lawrentian topics—his relationship to tragedy" and his "imaginative engagement with the work of Hardy, Poe, Hawthorne, Melville, and Cooper"—and argues that these two "areas of his creative interest" are intimately connected." (Library J) Index.

"[In the concluding chapters] Swigg pulls together the diverse influences of Hardy's tragic vision, Melville's whiteness and Ahab, Hawthorne's Pearl, Poe's maelstrom and fissure, and shows clearly how they are metempsychosized in Lawrence's prophetic fiction. Hardy and American literature as they are interpreted and re-presented by Lawrence (and further by Swigg) become not only monuments from our past but signs to our future. Index useful. Recommended for any college or university library."

Choice 9:1133 N '72 100w

"Swigg not only analyzes the appropriate works of Lawrence (the novels through Women in Love plus the 'Study of Thomas Hardy' and the two versions of Studies in Classic American Literature [BRD 1923]), but he also independently examines Hardy's and Hawthorne's major novels, Poe's stories, Moby-Dick, and the Leatherstocking tales in order to recover what he feels Lawrence must have extracted. The net result is intensely suggestive, but not totally persuasive. . . . The final tableau strikes me as that of a critic entangled in his own machinery, especially as revealed by the wild overstatement of Lawrence's debt to his American predecessors. . . . [This study] is forceful, original, deeply serious—and somewhat erratic." Keith Cushman

Library J 97:2188 Je 15 '72 200w

"It is no criticism of [this book] but a compliment, to try to visualize for whom it is written. The examination of the subject is intensive. The treatment of three of Hardy's novels and five of Lawrence's . . . demands of the reader either a remarkable memory or a careful rereading of them. Clear as the argument is, it is sustained and closely woven. . . . Swigg has penetrating and original critical insights. This can be acknowledged without full agreement with his conclusions. If only one or two of the novels he studies are reread in the light he brings to bear on them, the reader will be rewarded."

TLS p95 Ja 28 '72 900w

SWINFEN, D. B. Imperial control of colonial legislation, 1813-1865: a study of British policy towards colonial legislative powers. 202p $8 Oxford

325 Great Britain—Colonies. Legislation
ISBN 0-19-822333-1 LC 74-576055

"The Colonial Office and the Secretary of State possessed considerable authority over colonial legislatures. One important means of control over the colonies was the process of colonial law review. . . . Swinfen's book is divided into four parts dealing with the review process; imperial law and colonial laws; imperial policy and colonial laws; the Colonial Office and the Colonial Laws Validity Act. In appendix A is the text of the Colonial Laws Validity Act, appendix B contains the statistical tables of colonial acts, 1813-65, and appendix C lists the colonies whose acts passed through the Privy Council from 1813 to 1865." (Am Hist R) Bibliography.

"In this excellent monograph Swinfen carefully explains how the process of colonial law review actually worked. He also tells us a great deal about general trends and principles and the administrative organization of the Colonial Office. With excellent illustrations and superb analysis, he shows who was in fact responsible for shaping a large part of colonial policy. . . . [Of particular value] is the careful examination of the slowly changing attitudes of the British government to the legal relationships of Britain and her colonies in the years before the passage of the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 that re-defined the powers of the colonial legislatures. Swinfen's sound and scholarly work will be read with interest and profit by all scholars interested in the growth of British Colonial Office policies and procedures between 1813 and 1865." Goldwin Smith

Am Hist R 77:144 F '72 340w

"Swinfen shows how the legal advisors of the Colonial Office—most notably James Stephen and Sir Frederic Rogers—exercised their control with caution, humanitarianism, and firmness, and with conformity to the wishes of the white colonies on matters of local concern. . . . The chapter on the influence of humanitarianism is excellent. The Colonial Office intervened when principles of justice and public morality were involved. . . . The final chapter is significant in proving that the Colonial Laws Validity Act of 1865 was, in its original concept, not restrictive but emancipatory. The author concludes with an excellent analysis of the act. The bibliography and appendices are extremely useful." S. C. McCullough

Social Studies 63:226 O '72 410w

SWORTZELL, LOWELL, ed. All the world's a stage: modern plays for young people; decorations by Howard Simon. 610p $12.50 Delacorte press

808.82 Drama—Collections
LC 76-12362

This "collection ranges from Thornton Wilder's Childhood and Bertolt Brecht's He Who Says Yes and He Who Says No to the theater miniatures of Ruth Krauss, Langston Hughes' Soul Gone Home, and William Saroyan's The Man with the Heart in the Highlands. Other contributors include Rabindranath Tagore, Luigi Pirandello, Sean O'Casey, Federico Garcia Lorca, Gertrude Stein, and August Strindberg." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"A collection of twenty-one plays suitable for children's or high school theatre or for reading. The book . . . has been carefully edited and is noteworthy for its excellent selection." Horn BK 48:166 Ap '72 50w

Library J 96:3494 O 15 '71 20w [YA]

"An extremely imaginative anthology . . . here are many of the major figures in contemporary drama . . . but Swortzell has chosen unusual examples of their work. . . . Even those plays written for children—Robert Bolt's The Thawing of Baron Bolligrew or Eugene Schwartz's Little Red Riding Hood—can be read with interest by theater enthusiasts of any age. Swortzell has provided brief introductions for all the selections. In some cases (Strindberg, Pirandello, Wilder), they are too heavily biographical. The editor's comments on the plays themselves are most useful. . . . His introductions fail, however, where they could be most valuable; he gives very little information about the kinds of theater for which the plays were written." Gerald Weales

N Y Times Bk R p8 Je 12 '72 250w

SYKES, GERALD. The perennial avantgarde. 239p $6.95 Prentice-Hall

709.04 Art criticism. Modernism (Art)
ISBN 0-13-657197-2 LC 74-128086

The author "suggests that the consumer of new art is being gulled as badly and as often as the consumer of other overpromoted, shiny-new products. . . . He claims that avantgardism has become the runaway technology of the arts—as exploitative toward talent and audience as greedy industrialists are toward land, water, and air." There is an exact parallel between our predominant attitudes toward nature and art. A healthy avantgarde will respect the ecology of both." (Christian Science Monitor)

"The title is a misnomer. It is not about the avant-garde at all; it is only about Sykes. The book is a coupling of fictional conversations. A la Frank Harris, and just as random, that show the compiler's brilliant lights. Everybody already knows the stuff of this book—Sykes just does not know we know it yet."

Choice 8:1328 D '71 80w

"Pollution of the arts is a difficult problem, to which 'Back to cottage industry' is not the answer, though everything in Mr. Sykes cries out at hard-pressed moments to pretend it might do. The nearest he can come to a solution is to imply that maybe the artist should drop out of the overorganized, regimenting avantgarde just as once he dropped out of the rest of overorganized, regimenting society to found the avantgarde in the first place." Melvin Maddocks

Christian Science Monitor p5 Ja 28 '71 550w

"Sykes might best be called a 'civilizationist,' for he tackles nothing less than the core problems and philosophies of our total cultural picture. His Alienation: the Cultural Climate of Our Times [BRD 1965] was roundly jeered by critics for being too vague and arbitrary. In The Cool Millennium [BRD 1968] he successfully delineated the impossibility of remaining aloof from all of the problems and emotional vortexes of our modern world. In this present volume he takes on another vast subject, that of overall creativity, including everything from handicrafts to architecture to serial music. His thesis is couched in modern Socratic dialogues, many of them witty and novelistic, and he makes one central point: artists of all kinds must come out of their pigeonholes and communicate with each other. . . . Recommended." B. L. Wimbles

Library J 95:4265 D 15 '70 110w

"[This is] a curiously schizophrenic book that alternates fictional episodes with think pieces, each apparently intended to illuminate the other. . . . The author, a three-time novelist, among other things, says he has chosen the fiction-cum-essay format to accommodate both 'readers who like stories about action and those who like commentary about stories about action.' The something-for-everybody device really doesn't work, and what we have here, essentially, are two separate books. . . . For the most part . . . Sykes readers will not find anything startlingly new in the Time magazine insights with which this book is studded, often more revelatory of the author's reading than his thought." Grace Glueck

N Y Times Bk R p46 Mr 21 '71 1250w

SYME, SIR RONALD. Emperors and biography: studies in the Historia Augusta. 306p $10.50 Oxford 937 Historia Augusta. Roman emperors.

Rome—History—Empire 30 B.C.-476 A.D.
ISBN 0-19-814357-5 LC [70-22066]

This is a study of the "crisis in the third century which transformed the Empire. . . . [Syme's] point of departure is . . . the Historia Augusta, to which he has already devoted a study (Ammianus and the Historia Augusta [BRD 1969]), which argues for a date of composition c395. In the present work Syme builds on this to give a panorama of literary and political ideas in late antiquity." (Choice) Bibliography.

"The eighteen essays of Emperors and Biography lead in many directions. . . . Syme urges that researchers take a fresh start by recognizing the [Historia Augusta] as a production unified by characteristic usages and structure. . . . The essays overlap, though to some extent necessarily; it is a more serious objection that in some cases the component parts of an ideally coherent argument emerge in different connections through the book. These disadvantages, together with the restriction of the index to an index nominum and the choice of chapter titles that do little to disclose the breadth of topics treated in each study, make a valuable series of explorations less accessible than they should be." Peter White

Am Hist R 77:1101 O '72 600w

"As usual [the author's] style is terse, clear, entertaining, and elegant; careful analysis of earlier scholarship and a concluding chapter on theoretical matters make this a valuable model for all students of source criticism. Useful notes and bibliography. Highly recommended for all collections emphasizing classical literature and history. No other work in English covers the field apart from the relevant chapters in volume 12 of the Cambridge ancient history [BRD 1939]."

SYME, SIR RONALD—Continued

Choice 8:719 J1 '71 160w

"Despite Sir Ronald Syme's obvious delight in his subject, this book will be heavy going for one not thoroughly familiar with post-Flavian Roman history. . . . In format, this book is a collection of essays. It does not have a fully unified and closely articulated structure to carry the reader along, although an overall design does emerge. . . . No one interested in the H.A. or Roman history of the third century A.D. can ignore this book." A. M. Ward

Class World 65:100 N '71 750w

"No fewer than six authors . . . are traditionally alleged to have compiled [the Historia Augusta] between them. . . . [In 1889 Hermann Dessau] argued that all six authors were in fact one and the same man, a rogue scholar . . . writing not over a period of years during the third century, but within a comparatively short space of time at the very end of the fourth. This is the basic thesis which Sir Ronald—with a wealth of wit, ingenuity, happy irreverence and quite stunning cumulative documentation—now reargues. . . . [He] comes at the problem from all angles, with tireless delight: structure, sources, authorship, the author's personality, the genre attempted and the purpose of the attempt—all are subjected to the same minute and highly resourceful scrutiny. . . . This is not all one gets from Emperors and Biography by any manner of means; the chapters composing it began life as independent articles, or papers delivered at the Bonn colloquia, and range widely over a whole complex of related topics."

TLS p672 Je 11 '71 1550w

SYME, RONALD. The travels of Captain Cook [by] Werner Forman [and] Ronald Syme. 179p il $12.95 McGraw

910.9 Cook, James. Voyages and travels. Islands of the Pacific
SBN 07-062650-2 LC 70-150463

Syme has "made selections from the actual logs of Captain Cook . . . in telling [the] story of three [voyages]. . . . Photographs by Werner Forman, taken as he traced the same routes followed by Cook, provide a . . . visual backdrop. [The book also recounts Cook's] contributions to the scientific world." (Publisher's note) Bibliography.

"[This] handsome volume is heavily sprinkled with color plates and gravure illustrations and line drawings, which take up almost as many pages as the text. . . . The effect is somewhat like reading a series of magazine articles which have been combined into a book. The account moves swiftly, however, and gives a clear idea of the contribution that Captain Cook made not only to world knowledge but to the technique of living aboard ship. . . . [This] is by no means a definitive work on the great explorer and navigator but rather furnishes an enjoyable introduction that will inspire the reader to look more deeply into the life of this famous man." R. B. Wathen

Best Sell 31:449 Ja 1 '72 420w

"Syme's knowledge of the South Pacific has enabled him to bring to life Cook's famous voyages to Australia and other areas in the South Pacific. . . . [He] has captured much of the flavor of the famous captain by quoting liberally from [his journals]. . . . A delightful recounting of life in the South Pacific which provides a feeling for the daring 18th-Century explorer and the men who sailed with him." T. L. Welch

Library J 97:1014 Mr 15 '72 120w

SYMMONS-SYMONOLEWICZ, KONSTANTIN. Nationalist movements; a comparative view. 91p $5.50 Maplewood press

320.5 Nationalism
LC 78-21378

"As a sequel to his earlier book, Modern Nationalism: Towards a Consensus in Theory, in which he gave a . . . typology of nationalism, Symmons-Symonolewicz presents a comparative analysis of nationalism as a social movement. He seeks to fill a gap by considering nationalism as a social movement. He uses his focus the factors that underlie the origin of nationalist movements, shape their development, and determine their source or failure." (Am Hist R) "Bibliography." (Choice)

"[A] modest but scholarly study, . . . [this] is a welcome addition to the growing literature on nationalism, certainly the finest sociological study since Florian Znaniecki's Modern Nationalities [BRD 1953]. . . . Historians will be pleased by the author's approach: he is sensitive to nationalism in time and space. Unlike other sociologists he uses language readily understandable by scholars in other disciplines. He knows the enormous literature of nationalism well, and he uses it effectively. He concentrates on essentials, and his interpretations are rational and impressive. . . . [His] study is encouraging to historians of nationalism who favor a multidisciplinary approach. It does much to help clarify an ism suffused with paradox, inconsistency, and contradiction. Above all, this first-rate study reveals that there is still merit in the Rankean goal: to tell it 'wie es eigentlich gewesen ist.'" L. L. Snyder

Am Hist R 77:743 Je '72 550w

"Nationalism, Symmons-Symonolewicz believes, is a direct result of (1) the erosion of religious and monarchical loyalties, (2) the growth of popular democracy, and (3) the 'ever-present phenomenon of imperialism.' He adds little to what is known either in fact or theory. The book probably places too much stress on the effect of alien rule as it stresses the experience of Eastern and Southeastern Europe. But it is a serious study and undergraduates might read it with profit."

Choice 8:1250 N '71 100w

SYMONS, GERALDINE. The workhouse child; il by Alexy Pendle. 221p $4.95 Macmillan (N Y)

LC 76-133560

"While vacationing with her schoolmate Atalanta at the beach, 10 year-old Pansy exchanges clothes with Leah, an orphan from the Workhouse, so that the poor girl can take a swim. This triggers a chain of adventures for all three girls that results in reforms at the Workhouse and a new home for Leah. . . . Grades five to seven." (Library J) First published in 1969 in England.

"A rich and engrossing story that rises to a spellbinding climax. A school holiday away from London in 1911 takes Pansy [to a] fashionable bathing beach. . . . [The book] is offbeat in its originality." V. H. Horn

Bk 47:392 Ag '71 180w

"Some American children may be put off by many 'Britishisms' and a fair amount of hard-to-understand dialogue. Nevertheless, this pleasant story of England in the early 20th Century features realistic, well-drawn characterizations and should be considered for larger public library collections." Sharon Karmazin

Library J 96:1808 My 15 '71 80w

"[This novel] is enormously civilized, perceptive and entertaining, with an effortless sense of period, and a style and wit to shame many an adult novel. Moreover, thanks to the publisher, the production and layout make it a pleasure to handle. The illustrations are almost distinguished. . . . The story seems smaller in the end than it has promised to be. Perhaps it is partly that, beautifully delineated as the characters are, they do not grow much. . . . In any event the merits of Geraldine Symons ought to be much more recognized."

TLS p1187 O 16 '69 340w

SYMONS, JULIAN. Mortal consequences; a history from the detective story to the crime novel. 269p $6.95 Harper

823 Mystery and detective stories—History and criticism
SBN 0-06-014187-5 LC 72-138767

The author "explores the origins of the detective story . . . and traces its evolution in response to social change, from the milestone appearance of Sherlock Holmes, through the purely intellectual puzzles of the twenties and thirties into what he calls the crime novel." (New Yorker) Index.

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams

Atlantic 229:129 Ap '72 60w

Reviewed by W. R. Evans

Best Sell 32:35 Ap 15 '72 650w

Reviewed by Michael Olmert
Book World p11 My 28 '72 1000w

Reviewed by Henry Veit
Library J 97:2122 Je 1 '72 110w

"There are not many histories of the detective story, and any new one is welcome. [This book] is not as ambitious as [Howard] Haycraft's [Murder for Pleasure, BRD 1941], but for a small book it covers the field very well. And it is anything but blindly adulatory, even toward such figures as Sayers, Queen and Wolfe. Symons considers the great days of the detective story to be the 1920-40 period, and has some highly critical words to say about later practitioners. He also has a few comments about the spy novel, short stories, the crime novel (different from the detective story) and the police procedure novel. His conclusions may be opinionated, but he backs them up in a lively manner, and in this opinion he is almost always right." Newgate Callendar
N Y Times Bk R p42 Mr 19 '72 120w

"Symons, [is] a highly qualified investigator. . . . He is a liberal, rather than a strict, constructionist, but his liberalism has its reasonable limits; 'The crime story may have the character of art . . . [but] even the best crime story is still a work of art of a peculiar flawed kind, since an appetite for violence and a pleasure in . . . sleight of hand seem somehow always to be adulterating the finer skills of a novelist.' . . . Among current writers, he singles out for particular praise Patricia Highsmith, Ross Macdonald, Georges Simenon, and the collaborators Per Wahloo and Maj Sjöwall. He recognizes that the future of the genre is uncertain, for crime fiction is exclusively a product of a liberal society, the left (Russia) and the right (the Third Reich) both finding it decadent and dangerous."

New Yorker 48:107 Ap 1 '72 350w

Reviewed by Haskel Frankel
Sat R 55:86 My 13 '72 110w

SYMONS, JULIAN. The players and the game.
217p $5.95 Harper

SBN 06-014186-7 LC 72-661

"The story involves Paul and Alice Vane, and County Inspector Hazelton with Detective Plender. Three girls disappear and are found murdered after particularly horrible torture. Every so often the narrative of police procedure is interrupted by quotations from a journal written by the murderer; but his or her identity is not revealed until almost the last page." (Best Sell)

Reviewed by Phoebe Adams
Atlantic 230:135 O '72 30w

Best Sell 32:283 S 15 '72 140w

Reviewed by H. C. Veit
Library J 97:3619 N 1 '72 90w

"It is not a Least Likely Suspect ending, and there is good, solid detective work, but the reader is all too conscious of being manipulated by a virtuoso, and the conclusion may be considered too tricky by some. Classical writers took more care to let the reader become acquainted with the criminal. On the other hand, classical detective-story writers seldom had this one's sophistication. And classical writers would never have suggested the kind of abnormal sex with which [this] is impregnated. By the strictest canons of the genre, 'Players' may be a shade unfair. By literary standards and mounting tensions, it is a treat. The sex . . . is omnipresent but handled delicately, almost by indirection." Newgate Callendar

N Y Times Bk R p47 O 22 '72 220w

"[Symons] is a past master of the kind of probing psychological thriller that is all too rare. A poet and scholar, his books can never be classified as mere crime novels. He consistently examines what he calls 'the violence behind respectable faces.' His newest [book] is so very good that I wish I could report it to be without flaw. . . . Symons combines the bizarre and the banal to give us a brooding portrait of the compromise of innocence by evil. Where he lets us down—the fatal flaw—is in the solution. I honestly don't think you will care, but I wish he hadn't thrown it away." O. L. Bailey
Sat R 55:80 S 30 '72 220w

"A clever book, but a very long way from being a pleasant one. Admittedly inspired by the American Lonely Hearts Murders and our own Moors Murders, though in a very middle-middle-class English setting, its major appeal can be only to the like-minded in these and other fields. Certainly the stress on the various sexual incompetences and means taken to remedy them among local males are irrelevant to the major crime."

TLS p1174 S 29 '72 80w

SYMPOSIUM ON ARCHAEOLOGICAL CHEMISTRY, 4TH, ATLANTIC CITY, 1968. Science and archaeology. See Science and archaeology

SYMPOSIUM ON MICROPALAEONTOLOGY OF MARINE BOTTOM SEDIMENTS, CAMBRIDGE, ENGLAND, 1967. The micropalaeontology of oceans; proceedings of the symposium held in Cambridge from 10 to 17 September 1967; ed. by B. M. Funnell and W. R. Riedel on behalf of the Scientific committee on oceanic research working group 19. 828p 11 maps $55 Cambridge

560.92 Micropaleontology. Oceanography—Research

ISBN 0-521-07642-0 LC [71-96089]

In these studies, groups "or parts of organisms ranging from foraminifera and pteropods to spores and pollen are discussed. . . . [The book also provides an] analysis of factors controlling distributional patterns of living marine microorganisms, and distributional patterns of fossil microorganisms in marine sediments. Problems and techniques of systematic analysis of several microorganisms are considered. A selection is devoted to problems of stratigraphic boundaries in the Tertiary and particularly at the Tertiary-Quaternary boundary." (Choice) Chapter bibliographies. Index.

"Represents a landmark in studies of marine microorganisms as it will serve both as a review of present achievements and a basis for initiating future studies in biological oceanography. . . . Literature is copiously covered and the volume is profusely illustrated and filled with tables. For biogeographers, ecologists and paleoecologists there is a gold mine of information. The geochemistry affecting distribution of siliceous and carbonitic microfossils is evaluated as are the effects of anaerobic environments on preservation. Should be a useful addition to any library with current holdings in oceanography or requiring a background source in this diverse subject area."

Choice 8:1207 N '71 200w

"In addition to the more comprehensive papers . . . there are numerous shorter contributions with useful information. . . . This fine volume will become an important reference for all students of deep sea sediments." W. H. Berger

Science 175:509 F 4 '72 1050w

"Piecing together the physical, chemical and biological history of the oceans from minute plant and animal remains is a comparatively new science, marine micropalaeontology, and it is only since the war that it has been recognized as such. Thus the symposium . . . was largely a summary of progress during the past twenty years. . . . The editors must be congratulated on this fine volume. In terms of presentation, it would be difficult to find fault. Mindful that this will serve as a reference-book for many years to come, they have provided not only a general index of topics, but a systematic index (thoughtfully divided into taxonomic sections) and also an index of the first citation of authors in the text. With these and the often very comprehensive bibliographies at the end of each paper, the newcomer will have no difficulty in getting into the subject."

TLS p1007 Ag 20 '71 490w

SYMPOSIUM ON THE CULTURE OF UN-BELIEF, ROME, 1969. The culture of unbelief; studies and proceedings from the First International symposium on belief held at Rome, March 22-27, 1969. symposium sponsors: the Agnelli foundation, the University of California at Berkeley, the Vatican Secretariat for Non-Believers; ed. by Rocco Caporale and Antonio Grumelli. 303p $10 Univ. of Calif. press

211 Belief and doubt. Religion

ISBN 0-520-01856-7 LC 75-138513

Papers presented at the symposium by such "sociologists of religion as Thomas Luckmann, Robert N. Bellah, Charles Y. Glock, Bryan Wilson, and Talcott Parsons . . . [dealt with] current thinking about the nature of religion,

SYMPOSIUM ON THE CULTURE OF UNBELIEF, ROME, 1969—Continued
 secularization, and the problems of defining and studying unbelief." (Library J)

"If the reader hopes to arrive at a clear understanding of the phenomenon of unbelief by struggling through the sociological jargon of the position papers and the résumé of discussions, he will be disappointed, because the participants themselves could not reach a consensus on the nature and definition of unbelief. . . . It clearly emerges from the papers and discussions that we do not know enough about unbelief. . . . If nothing else had emerged from this symposium but the proof of a need for further systematic study of non-belief, time and energy would still have been spent wisely." A. C. Varga

America 125:410 N 13 '71 460w

"The general quality of the essays is good. . . . Possibly the best part of the volume is Bellah's analysis of the phenomenon of the current religiosity of mankind, and the current disease with the institutions of religion. Both for sociology of religion and for the study of the religion of youth today, this volume has much to offer."

Choice 9:382 My '72 190w

Christian Century 88:1271 O 27 '71 50w

"The problem of belief and unbelief . . . is evidently a matter of concern for theologians as well as for sociologists. However, these papers are not adequately representative of the best contemporary theological thought on this question. With the exception of [Harvey] Cox, the theology is essentially French and tends toward an older, conservative point of view. . . . The numerical (and qualitative?) dominance of the sociologists over the theologians is noticeable again and again throughout this book." R. P. McBrien

Commonweal 96:314 Je 2 '72 1050w

Reviewed by Philip Rieff

Contemp Sociol 1:505 N '72 2600w

"Unfortunately, these scholars provided no startling or original insights. Instead, they contributed to a useful compendium of current thinking. . . . The symposium format makes the presentation of ideas somewhat disorganized. Ideas must be chased through presentations, responses to presentations, and transcripts of taped discussions." William Silverman

Library J 96:3335 O 15 '71 110w

TLS p397 Ap 7 '72 860w

SYNAN, VINSON. The Holiness-Pentecostal movement in the United States. 248p $5.95 Berdmans

289.9 Pentecostal churches. Holiness churches
 LC 79-162033

This volume "is an attempt to place the major holiness and pentecostal bodies in America in their proper setting as part of the total social and intellectual history of the United States . . . [as well as] an investigation of the ideas that produced these movements and a treatment of what the men and women who . . . believed in them accomplished." (Pref) Bibliography. Index.

"Despite an encyclopedic coverage, Synan manages to write with a pleasant style. His book will be useful to upperclassmen and graduate students interested in the history and sociology of religion. . . . [However, he] does not sufficiently discuss the relationships of the holiness-pentecostal movement to Populism, Fundamentalism, and the charismatic Movement."

Choice 9:518 Je '72 150w

"Recently intensified interest in America's religious history has produced many excellent works, but few, if any, which deal with 'the third force of Christendom' as directly and authoritatively as this one. . . . Of special interest is the author's discussion of Negro Pentecostals and the social status of the movement. . . . This is a sound and interesting book written from within by one who knows the subject. . . . It contributes to a larger understanding of America's religious history." F. V. Mills

Christian Century 89:175 F 9 '72 480w

Reviewed by Elliott Wright

Commonweal 97:309 Ja 5 '73 110w

"Synan successfully makes the case that almost all the holiness people are heirs of the Wesleyan movement. . . . [His] book grew out of a doctoral thesis; it is generally fair-minded, though far more appreciative of these impulses than most scholarly works are. Literarily it is not outstanding. . . . Most readers who are newcomers to the subject will be informed if not inspired." Martin Marty

Critic 30:90 Ja '72 1100w

"This is one of the most important interpretations of Pentecostalism to appear thus far. . . . [Synan] tends to read the history of the whole movement from the perspective of his own denomination, the Pentecostal Holiness Church (the group that produced Oral Roberts). This results in some forcing of the facts and over-simplification of the historical causation involved. . . . [The book includes] much material about little-known religious groups in the South. A valuable 15-page bibliography is appended." D. W. Dayton

Library J 97:690 F 15 '72 150w

SYNGE, JOHN MILLINGTON. Letters to Molly; John Millington Synge to Maire O'Neill, 1906-1909; ed. by Ann Saddlemyer. 330p il $11 Belknap press of Harvard univ. press

B or 92

ISBN 0-674-52834-4 LC 75-143231

A collection of some four-hundred letters written between 1906 and 1909 to Molly Allgood, an actress with the Abbey Theatre who was the original Pegeen Mike in the Playboy of the Western World.

"This is a handsomely produced book with a useful, if somewhat biased, introduction by Ann Saddlemyer who is an excellent Syngean. Despite the disappointing range and quality of the letters, most libraries should have it."

Choice 9:61 Mr '72 180w

"[Synge and Molly's] love story is preserved, as if in amber, by [these letters]. . . . They never married. . . . Theirs is the story of love in two temperaments: he, older, soberer, racked by fits of jealousy, by turns scolding, keening, cajoling, and then apologizing for his outbursts. She, young, careless, flighty, mercurial, clearly nowhere near as ready as he to sail becalmed into the doldrums of matrimony. . . . Indissolubly mixed with his love for Molly is his love for the unspoiled scenery of his native land. . . . Synge's letters, though on the whole more practical than passionate, offer a privileged peek into another age, an age when a man could still talk about his honor, when courtship was something more than the name for an ethnic custom." Victor Howes

Christian Science Monitor p11 D 16 '71 700w

Economist 244:58 J1 22 '72 130w

"[Synge] carried on an odd sort of distant romance . . . what made it odd were his semi-invalid state and his upper-class worries about his family's acceptance of a girl like Molly. It must be said that these letters will not help Synge's reputation as either a letter writer or a lover. Synge . . . [wrote] prose that is routinely dull and mawkish even while he was writing plays that will probably last forever. There are occasional interesting disclosures, such as those concerning Lady Gregory's exacting influence over the running of the Abbey Theatre and Synge's own lofty coolness during the riots at the time that The Playboy opened." R. J. Thompson

Library J 96:4096 D 15 '71 170w

TLS p306 Mr 17 '72 950w

Va Q R 48:lxii spring '72 120w

SZASZ, BÉLA. Volunteers for the gallows; anatomy of a show-trial; tr. by Kathleen Szász. 244p $6.95 Norton

943.9 Hungary—Politics and government. Political crimes and offenses. Rajk, László
 SBN 393-05447-0 LC [78-163377]

This "account of the experiences of a journalist imprisoned and tortured during the Hungarian purge of the late 1940s was first published under the pseudonym 'Vincen Savarius' in several languages in 1963." (TLS) The "show-trial" of the subtitle was that of László Rajk in connection with which the author was imprisoned.

"If this is the first time the reader has read a description of Communist secret police methods, he may doubt the objectivity of the story and take it for a fictional 'thriller' because it is difficult to believe that human beings could shed their humanity so completely. Yet we know from the testimony of many victims of similar tortures that Szász is not exaggerating. . . . The book is a significant description of the workings of a police state and of the methods used in show-trials. It also sheds light on a very sad and tragic chapter in the history of Hungary, which should not be forgotten." A. C. Varga

America 126:128 F ■ '72 500w

Reviewed by E. J. Linehan
Best Sell 31:511 F 15 '72 460w

Reviewed by Seymour Freidin
Book World p8 Mr 5 '72 950w

"Although relieved by sarcasm, the author's detailed style makes for difficult reading. Nevertheless, the book is recommended." Karen Harvey

Library J 97:1323 Ap 1 '72 160w

"Szász tells his story with astonishingly little self-righteousness. He shows no rancor towards those prisoners, such as Rajk himself, who in their signed statements incriminated Szász as well as themselves. . . . This book is not merely an account of one man's refusal to capitulate to torture, but is also a valuable record of some of the broader political ramifications of the trials. . . . It is perhaps regrettable that the author has not included a postscript bringing the book up to date, for in Kádár's Hungary there have been some interesting developments that bear directly on the issue of the show trials." Adam Roberts

New Statesman 81:882 Je 25 '71 650w

"This book is a moving and terrifying document. Mr. Szász writes with too much reserve, with great modesty and almost exasperating detachment, as though he were relating the story of a third person with whom he felt only scant sympathy. Yet his courage and integrity shine through all these pages." TLS p708 Je 18 '71 120w

SZATHMARY, LOUIS. The chef's secret cook book; il. by Carolyn Amundson; foreword by Jean Hewitt. 288p $8.95 Quadrangle bks.

641.5 Cookery
SBN 8129-0213-0 LC 78-116088

The author is the chef-owner of The Bakery and two other restaurants in Chicago. "At the end of each recipe there is the 'Chef's Secret' paragraph giving the cook the professional techniques that enhance the appearance or the flavor of the finished food." (Library J) Index.

"That title should be read 'the chef's-secret' Cookbook; because Chef Szathmari appends a 'chef's secret' to many of his tried and proven recipes that will help the cook who may despair because the hollandaise has curdled, or did not know that dry gelatine sprinkled on the opening of a pork-chop pocket (for stuffed pork chops) will mix with the juice oozing from the meat and act as a sealer. . . . Diagrams generously sprinkled through the book will be a great help to the home chef. I recommend this cookbook because every recipe is so clearly explained." Friede Gruenrock

Best Sell 31:408 D 1 '71 200w

"Soups! Marvelous soups. In most general cookbooks soups are neglected, but Chef Szathmari, a true Hungarian, has included many of them—a double consommé, Hungarian beef goulash soup, and cold cherry soup, to name a few. For the soup recipes alone, the book is worthy of purchase, but there is more—recipes that range from appetizers to desserts. One of the major cookbooks of the year. Highly recommended for general purchase." Sue Pearce

Library J 96:3136 O 1 '71 100w

Reviewed by N. R. Hazelton
N Y Times Bk R p32 D 12 '71 70w

SZECHTER, SZYMON, jt. auth. In the name of tomorrow. See Karsov, N.

SZELISKI, JOHN VON. See Von Szeliski, J.

SZENT-GYÖRGYI, ALBERT. The crazy ape; written by a biologist for the young. 93p $3.95; pa $1.95 Philosophical lib.

301.24 Science and civilization
SBN 8022-2348-6 LC 75-118313

The author "addresses himself especially to the youth of the world as he pleads for a new beginning in which scientific knowledge is used to elevate human life rather than to devise ever more efficient instruments of destruction." (Publisher's note)

"'Why does man behave like a perfect idiot? This is the problem I wish to deal with.' That is how [the author] starts this small book which contains his rambling, sometimes repetitious, always agonized thoughts on the present world situation. In it, he places himself firmly on the side of the young, the alienated, the horrified and nauseated. He opposes himself to the military, the politicians, the patriots, and the hypocrites. . . . Listening to Szent-Györgyi, one is almost lured into thinking that perhaps one ought not trust anyone under seventy-six." Isaac Asimov

Ann Am Acad 392:226 N '70 480w

"In order to get a book like this published you have to first win the Nobel Prize. We are fortunate that Albert Szent-Györgyi won it because [this] is a valuable human document. . . . [It] is the cry of an aged humanist-scientist who believes that intellect, if applied to concrete problems in a selfless way, can lead man out of his dangerous muddle. In spite of the simplistic (could we say refreshingly naive) analysis presented and in spite of Szent-Györgyi's faith in science which ignores the fact that scientists are part of the machine he condemns, I think the book is important and useful. . . . Szent-Györgyi sets the goals and outlines the resources which must be mobilized to overcome imminent catastrophe. He does not discuss methods or means in any detail, but no prophet ever did." Alexander Alland

Pol Sci Q 87:163 Mr '72 650w

SZULC, TAD. Portrait of Spain; phot. by Jack Manning; special interest guide by Mari de Ojiva and Jill Jarrell. (A New York Times bk) 348p il $8.95 Am. heritage

914.6 Spain—Description and travel. Spain —History. National characteristics. Spanish
SBN 07-062654-5 LC 76-95732

"A general introduction to Spain that combines a brief travelogue, a short historical synopsis and a description and analysis of the present social and political situation." (N Y Times Bk R)

"An intelligent, readable, beautifully produced and commendable piece of haute vulgarisation. . . . The author succeeds in painting a remarkably dispassionate picture of Franco and the Church; a foreign correspondent in Spain for three years, he was immersed in the country's problems long enough to become thoroughly familiar with their complexity and ramifications; and, as a non-Spaniard, he has clearly been able to remain sufficiently aloof to see the country in its global setting. . . . Szulc's book, one of the better popular books on Spain to appear in recent years, should be seriously considered for purchase by general libraries." T. M. Robinson

Library J 97:2731 S 1 '72 200w

"[Szulc's] presentation of the diverse regions of Spain and the character and psychology of Spanish society is written in vivid and attractive fashion. This is a difficult task and easily lends itself to hyperbole and one-sided emphases. Though Szulc is by no means free of such tendencies, his approach is serious and perceptive. . . . [He] has not taken the time to inform himself as fully and carefully about [the general historical background] as about contemporary affairs and makes a number of mistakes. . . . [But he] gives the best discussion of the government and politics of contemporary Spain to be found in a general presentation of this kind. . . . This is much more than a political book. It presents the sights, sounds and smells of contemporary Spain. . . . [and] can be recommended as the best of the introductory non-academic books on Spain on the market today." S. G. Payne
N Y Times Bk R p34 O 1 '72 1000w

T

TABB, WILLIAM K. The political economy of the black ghetto. 152p $5.95; pa $1.75 Norton

301.45 Negroes—Economic conditions
SBN 393-05426-8; 393-00930-X (pa)
LC 70-124347

"The black ghetto is studied [here] as an economic unit which is part of a larger society. The purpose of this work is to describe the economic factors which help explain the origins of the black ghetto, and the mechanisms through which exploitation and deprivation are perpetuated; and to explore strategies for ending them. . . . [Tabb asserts that] racism is perpetuated by elements of oppression within an economic and political system which must be understood as a system. [His] study attempts to isolate key elements which can help us understand the historic role of blacks in the American economy and the nature of contemporary white-black relations. . . . It examines the impact of contemporary capitalism on the black ghetto." (Pref) Index.

TABB, W. K.—Continued

"Tabb's proposition that white America has perpetrated a carefully designed and executed colonial policy . . . is a simplistic explanation of the unseen-elite economic conspiracy theory. [It] will stir the emotions of the reader . . . [but it will not] persuade intellectually." Morris Levitt

Am Pol Sci R 65:1176 D '71 500w

